According to an Associated Press report, Amherst Police Detective Richard MacLean said the four players were arrested by Amherst police shortly before midnight on Thursday. District Attorney Michael Cahillane told The Gazette that the four men were found behind a restaurant on East Pleasant Street in Amherst acting suspiciously. When the police officer who investigated the suspicious activity found the four Minutemen, Viveiros and Mele were found with false identifications and the four men were allegedly in possession of cocaine.

The suspensions come during UMass' bye week. The Minutemen resume play Oct. 10 when they travel to Delaware.

Sophomore Viveiros, a Fall River native, was the lone starter of the four suspended players, starting this season at strong safety. The other three men are all juniors.

Viveiros started in UMass' first game of the season at Kansas State, recording eight tackles and three pass-break ups. The start was the third of his career after he started the final two games of the 2008 campaign for UMass.

Viveiros missed the following game due to injury but has played in the Minutemen's last two contests, including their victory over Stony Brook on Sept. 26 where he recorded his first career interception, returning it 25 yards. The safety has recorded 19 tackles this season as well as a team best four pass break-ups.

McLaughlin, son of former NFL linebacker and UMass football star Joe McLaughlin, recorded three tackles on the year, one against Albany and two versus Stony Brook. McLaughlin's father played from 1979-1984 in the NFL with the New York Giants and Green Bay Packers and helped UMass to its Division I-AA National Title game in 1978. He was also named a member of UMass' Hall of Fame Class of 2009 and will be inducted in this Friday.

Carven saw action in UMass' first two games this season, recording two solo tackles in UMass' win over Albany in week two.

Mele, a transfer out of Syracuse, was in his first year with the Minutemen after starting all 12 games last season for the Orange. Mele has yet to see time this season at UMass.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore defensive back Shane Viveiros was one of four members of the UMass football team arrested for alleged cocaine possession on Thursday night.

$7 million set for Lederle renovations

By Sam Hayes
Collegian Staff

The federal government recently allocated $7 million in stimulus funds to the University of Massachusetts, which is planning to be used to transform 15,000 square feet of outdated research space into state-of-the-art laboratories for the Lederle Graduate Research Center.

With the addition of the $7 million, UMass has already been awarded over $33 million in grants in the fall semester so far.

UMass is one of many large public and private research universities that have recently been enjoying the federal stimulus. Schools like the University of Iowa,

Washington State University and Johns Hopkins University have all been awarded large sums in past months.

UMass was able to win the competitive grants by acting quickly and often in the stimulus lobbying process.

Chancellor Robert Holub said the university "moved aggressively, and the result has been outstanding."

The newly acquired $7 million will be added to $4.7 million in campus funding to renovate and redesign the third, seventh, and eighth floors of Lederle.

The labs will be opened up to allow more space "to be as cross-disciplinary as possible," according to molecular biology and biochemistry professor Jennifer Normanly, head of the Committee to Improve LGRC.

Vice-chancellor of Research and Engagement Michael Malone also commented on the interdisciplinary possibilities in the new space. Malone said that UMass' infrastructure projects will help the university perform better research and garner more grants.

"These infrastructure projects have a very large and sustained impact because modern facilities will enable much more effective research and increase our capacity for extramural funding," said Malone.

Other than the three floors that will be worked on, the basement will be fitted with a nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR) spectroscopy instrument and the abutting Grossman Laboratories will be outfitted to support the researchers while renovations are going on.

"The improvements should make [Lederle] much nicer," said freshman neuroscience major Kevin McGrath, 18. McGrath went on to add that "changing the old chalkboards to whiteboards" would be a switch he would welcome in the building.

This is not the first time Lederle has been worked on by the university. In June 2007, UMass had to clean-up the research tower.

The building had "PCB-contaminated materials that exceed the allowable PCB levels under the federal regulations," according to a letter from the United States Environmental Protection Agency to Director of Environmental Health and Safety Dr. Donald A Robinson.

PCB is a toxic chemical linked to cases of liver cancer which was outlawed by Congress in 1976. Caulk, air, dust and panel wipe samples were tested for PCB from Lederle and the low-rise library a few years ago, and PCB was ultimately found in window glazing.

Since 2007, when initial steps were taken to test the soil surrounding the building for toxicity, the building was approved to be cleaned by the EPA in March of 2009, and sev-

See LEDERLE on page 2

Convocation 'installs' Holub as Chancellor

SAMANTHA WEBNER/COLLEGIAN

Chancellor Robert Holub shakes hands after being installed during Friday's Convocation ceremonies at the Campus Center Auditorium.

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

In his first speech to faculty and students after his official installation as University of Massachusetts Chancellor, Robert Holub addressed how the school plans on rectifying current budget issues while continuing its push to become a top national public research institution. The few hundred in attendance for Friday's Convocation ceremony witnessed a new era of administrative leadership officially beginning for the university, as Holub outlined his plans for generating new revenue to offset future reductions when stimulus funding runs out in two years.

Holub noted some of the brighter aspects of the university's current situation before turning his attention to the budget. He remarked that "although many of you labor patiently in facilities that are sub-standard and in desperate need of improvement or replacement, we have made enormous progress on facilities during the past year," noting the campus renovations at Skinner Hall, the Studio Arts building, the Integrated Sciences Building and the new power plant, amongst others.

Holub also pointed out that for the second year in a row, UMass is welcoming its most academically accomplished freshman class, and that the average GPAs of transfer and Commonwealth College students have never been higher.

See HOLUB on page 2

Tsundue voices hope for a peaceful Tibet

By Benjamin Axelson
Collegian Staff

On Thursday, Oct. 2, Tibetan freedom activist and internationally-acclaimed writer and poet Tenzin Tsundue came to the University of Massachusetts Campus Center Auditorium to speak on the progress of the Tibetan freedom movement, and his own personal struggle to see his homeland liberated.

Tsundue, who is currently on a lecture circuit to several universities in America, had his speech sponsored by the UMass Students for Free Tibet and hosted by Thondup Tsering, Residence Director for Washington Hall and a Tibetan refugee himself.

Tsundue gave details about his life as an activist in the Tibetan exile community, which has operated since the Chinese occupied Tibet in 1949.

"It's a very complicated issue there," said Tsundue. "China needs the natural resources [copper and large permafrost fields] found in Tibet, and Tibet is geographically placed strategically for its military."

But Tsundue says the problem between Tibet and China goes farther back than the 1949 occupation.

"[China claims] that Tibet has been part of China for the last 400 years," he says. "In 1911 when Chinese nationals overthrew the Manchu dynasty, which had representatives in areas like Tibet, they now gained control over these areas." But at approximately the same time, His Holiness the Dalai Lama declared Tibetan independence.

Tsundue's struggle began in India, where he was born to parents who were Tibetan exiles, forced to flee their home in the 1950s.

"It was through my parents and growing up in Tibetan schools that I learned about Tibet," said Tsundue, "and from many Tibetans who escaped from Tibet and the persecution by Chinese people. This inspired me to go to Tibet and see the situation for myself and if possible join the resistance movement." However, he was arrested by Chinese border police and sent to jail for three months. Throughout his lecture, Tsundue jokingly recommended that anyone who wants to become an activist for a cause they believe in, go to jail for their cause because he learned many important lessons from that experience.

"There was a point in time where there was a direct threat on the life of His Holiness, the Dalai Lama," said Tsundue, "so he escaped into India to avoid confrontation between the Tibetan people and the Chinese military. He was followed by other Tibetans who continue to leave Tibet. As of now there are 120,000 Tibetans living in India and about thirty to forty thousand Tibetans elsewhere worldwide which make up the Tibetan exile community. It is our final dream to return home when His Holiness does and Tibet is free."

Tsundue's lecture focused specifically on the year 2008, which is seen to be a turning point in the country's freedom movement.

"We were thinking what we were going to do in 2008 when China was going to play politics with the Beijing Olympics," said Tsundue. "They would show that China was united, but we wanted to show them that this was propaganda and that China was suppressing freedom in occupied countries like Tibet and Mongolia. It was very important that when international attention was on China, we should speak the truth."

Tsundue and his fellow free-

See TIBET on page 2

Arts&Living

Art and Exercise

Learn about the newest type of fitness classes - designed to ease body and mind - offered to University of Massachusetts students.

SEE PAGE 4

Sports

Minutewomen split weekend pair

The No. 9 Minutewomen fell to No. 6 Syracuse, 5-2, Saturday and bounced back with a 1-0 victory Sunday over Yale.

SEE PAGE 8

Editorial&Opinion

Overcrowded classrooms and spill-over

Popular and compulsory classes for some like organic chemistry are crowded and hard to get in. Lauren Rockoff says this should be fixed.

SEE PAGE 3

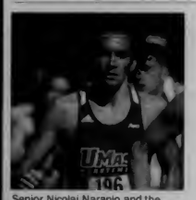
DailyCollegian.com

Log on to www.DailyCollegian.com to view a slideshow of University of Massachusetts students participating in Brazilian Capoeira.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | FRIDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2009

UMass takes on A-10 pair

Bonnies, Spiders up next



MEN'S SOCCER

Senior captain Maude Leclusye and the UMass tennis team started their season with a 7-0 win at Holy Cross yesterday. Leclusye and Candyce Boney earned the win in the No. 1 doubles match, 8-6, which set the pace for the remainining doubles teams, who were the backbone of the victory. The No. 2 and 3 pairs won 8-0 and 8-4, respectively.

SEE PAGE 12

MEN'S HOOPS

Senior Nicolai Naranjo and the Massachusetts cross country teams head to Bethlehem, Pa. this weekend to participate in the 36th Annual Paul Short Invitational. The race also includes five other teams from the Atlantic 10 conference. The meet starts at 11 a.m.

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 20

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jaerk
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zobniert
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamillo
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts Collegiate semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper known as Aggie Life, became the Collegian Weekly in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1960, the Collegian has been broadsheet since 1970. Ad rates and subscription rates are available upon request. Call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Elizabeth Tran

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guanno

PVTA unveils new bike racks on fleet of buses

By Caitlin Soto
Collegian Staff

Seeing an increase in the amount of bicyclists riding public transportation the Pioneer Valley Transit Authorities (PVTA) has recently increased the size of bike racks on its buses.

The PVTA has purchased new three-bike racks to replace the very popular two-bike racks.

The new and improved racks will provide the capability of adding an additional bike, allowing at least one more passenger the opportunity to make use of the bus system with a bike in tow as well. The previous rack system only allowed room for two passengers to load their bikes.

"We like the bike racks. And judging from their constant use, so does the public," said Glenn Barrington, an operations manager for the University of Massachusetts. "We have heard lots of positive comments from the biking community."

Equipping racks on buses is a low-cost way to enable bike riders to cover a greater distance by incorporating public transit into their cycling, and aims to decrease the necessity for personal vehicle ownership, both an economically and environmentally-friendly service.

The new PVTA bike racks are made of brushed stainless steel. Stainless steel's resistance to corrosion and staining, low maintenance, relatively low cost and familiar luster make it an ideal base material for the racks, especially in the approaching harsh winter weather.

"These racks are so much nicer than what I'm used back at my school," said Joe Rubano, a visiting student.

Other benefits of the new and improved bike racks are their relatively light weight and simplicity. Lifting weight to operate the rack is less than 30lbs – this falls well below OSHA (Occupational Safety and Health Administration) and NIOSH (The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health) limits.

The racks also will not require any straps or cords to retain the bike – this translates to quick loading and unloading, keeping it simple for the passenger, and keeping the bus moving along right on time. However, the racks should be closed when not in use. Bike racks that are left open can cause preventable accidents to pedestrians and motorists.

Caitlin Soto can be reached at csoto@student.umass.edu.

Samantha Webber/Collegian

Due to the popularity of the current bike racks, the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority recently upgraded to three-bike racks for its bus fleet, meaning that an extra bike will be able to tag along for each ride.

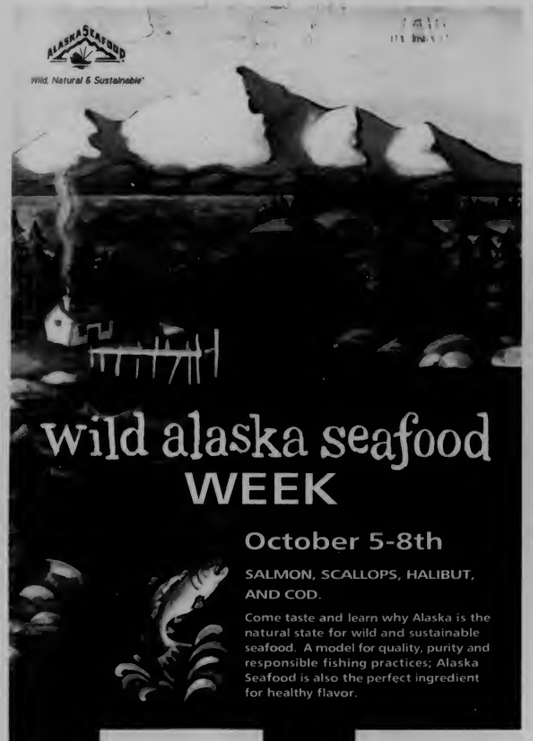
School of Nursing receives a facelift

Matthew Harrison/Collegian

UMass officially opened the newly-renovated Skinner Hall on Friday, after more than a year of construction at the site.

Plea for free Tibet at Campus Center

TIBET from page 1



dom activists organized a massive return march to Tibet, during which they faced much violence from China. Three hundred and sixty people walked for four months, sunrise to sunset, from India to Tibet, telling their story along the way. As they marched, people in Tibet began to protest and sacrifice their own lives to show that they would not rest until freedom was restored.

Tsundue has also organized several of his own one man protests throughout his activist career, including one at Oberoi Hotel in India.

"We went to protest the Chinese Prime Minister who was visiting Bombay," said Tsundue, "but when we asked for permission [from the Indian government] we were told we could, but we had to be about two kilometers away. I thought I would do something a little more interesting. I leapt to the scaffolding on the hotel and slowly climbed. I strapped myself to the scaffolding, hung a 'Free Tibet' banner, and waved a Tibetan Flag while screaming 'Free Tibet and China! Get out!'" His protest was broadcast live on national television by the media who were there to see the prime minister.

Through protests such as these, Tsundue feels he is able to capture world attention in ways that are dramatic, brave, and strategic, but not violent. It is, he says, more effective than sitting two kilometers away on a street corner holding a sign. Tsundue has been wearing a red band around his head for the past six years which he says is the mark of his pledge that he would work for freedom of his country and never take it off until Tibet is free. He has also written several books, the most recent titled "Semshook," which is a collection of essays about the freedom struggle in Tibet.

Benjamin Axelson can be reached at baxelson@student.umass.edu.

Lederle renovations get $7 mil stimulus

LEDERLE from page 1

eral cleanup methods were used in the following months.

Other grant money has been used for scientific endeavors.

$16 million was given from the Department of Energy to create an Energy Frontier Research Center. This funding aims to create efficient non-silicon polymer materials for solar paneling.

Another $1.9 million was allotted to biofuels researcher George Huber, and $7.1 million was given to a large group of 20 different researchers.

Lederle recently made the news when work crews discovered an existing water main leak on September 8, 2009.

The leak caused classes to be cancelled in Lederle for the following two days, since the building's main water line needed to be shut down in order to allow the repair process to take place. Classes resumed as normal on September 11, 2009.

Sam Hayes can be reached at sdhayes@student.umass.edu.

Matthew Harrison/Collegian

$7 million in federal stimulus money will help modernize the research facilities at the Lederle Graduate Research Center.

Holub addresses the future in first Convocation speech

HOLUB from page 1

"In sum," said Holub, "we've never been blessed with the caliber of students that we find attending our campus today."

Holub did not shy away from the difficulties UMass is facing at the moment, however, noting the effect that the economic recession has had on the university's state funding.

"What I tell legislators regularly is that we are not asking for a handout or for charity; we believe that we are a sound investment for the state and its citizens, and we have the data to prove it," said Holub. "But past experience tells me that if we focus solely on the legislature and the executive branch, hoping for adequate funding, we will be disappointed … If we depend on hope, all we'll get is 'all we ever got.'"

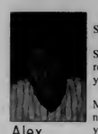
Instead of focusing on continuing state or federal support to balance the budget when the stimulus money runs out, Holub said he is intent on developing additional revenue sources, noting that "every dollar we receive in additional revenue means one less dollar that we have to eliminate in budget reductions."

According to Holub's remarks, this additional revenue could come from a higher ratio of out-of-state students, new five-year masters programs and increasing the school's focus on revenue-generating summer session and continuing professional education classes.

Chancellor Holub seemed at his most comfortable yet since assuming the helm, at many points in his speech challenging students and faculty to rise above their preconceived notions of what the university can achieve.

"We have the future of the University of Massachusetts Amherst in our hands; we control our own destiny, and we have an obligation to the past and a responsibility to the future," he said. "We could choose to wallow in the worst of times, lament our misfortune, and seek to blame others and each other for this fate … The alternative is that we reinvent ourselves, breaking out of familiar patterns, and find ways to cope with our needs and to move forward together."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



Editorial Opinion

Monday, October 5th, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Apathy and SGA voting

Alex Perry

Where should one start fixing the SGA? What is the SGA again?

Can you name a single thing the Student Government Association is responsible for doing in the past year?

I have been at the University of Massachusetts for nearly four years now. I lived in Southwest for two years and have lived off campus for the past year. I consider myself politically aware, but, until about this time last year, I never even knew what the SGA did. How did I find out? I had to embarrassingly ask my peers during a Republican Club meeting what they were talking about when the SGA came up in discussion.

I am not close to being in the minority – most students don't seem to know what they are doing either. At this point, you too are probably reading this wondering, "What does the SGA do?" The campus is rampant with this ignorance towards the SGA's existence and its responsibilities – but frankly that doesn't bother me.

What annoys me is how poorly the SGA is run and how stupid most of these SGA issues I read about are. When I say poorly run, I am referring to things such as the SGA's inability to get a respectable percentage of students out to vote. I'm referring to the fact that up until this semester, the SGA has had a whole committee – the Public Policy and Relations Committee – devoted to, according to the SGA's bylaws, "organize publicity campaigns and employ media outlets to inform students and the campus community of the activities of the SGA."

How is it even possible that the purpose of a committee in the SGA is to "inform students and the campus community of the activities of the SGA," yet still, the vast majority of students have no clue what the SGA does?

From my perspective, it means one of two things. The students on this committee haven't been able to do their job and/or students just don't care to listen. The answer is probably a combination of both.

How is it even possible that the purpose of a committee in the SGA is to "inform students and the campus community of the activities of the SGA," yet still, the vast majority of students have no clue what the SGA does? establish human dignity and freedom.

In fact, I sometimes wonder if members of the SGA even really care about the SGA. Look at this clip from a Collegian article written by Chris Shores on September 28: "Of the candidates running for president, vice president, secretary or treasurer of their cluster's House Council, 17 candidates are running unopposed. There are ten positions that have at least two candidates running, including the entire Webster/Dickinson Cluster in Orchard Hill."

Seventeen candidates are running unopposed? Are these 17 SGA members just by far the most qualified for those positions or does just no one care to bother to run against them? I'm pretty confident it's the latter.

The fact that the SGA is weak and the vast majority of students don't care is what really annoys me about the online voting debate that is taking place in the SGA right now. According to the referendum that was on the back of the ballots during the election this past week, the small percentage of students who did vote actually voted overwhelmingly in favor of online voting.

My response to that would be, obviously students are going to vote for online voting. No one was vindicated here. Why would students who are already voting not want online voting? It's more convenient to vote this way than to vote in person. I think online voting should exist, but that's not why I am annoyed with this debate going on. I'm annoyed that members of the SGA think online voting matters.

What will change at UMass if there is online voting?

Will students suddenly care about the SGA if there is online voting? The answer is, of course not.

Will there be a higher percentage of students who vote? Yeah probably, but people still will only be voting for their friends who ask them to vote.

The election process itself is the problem, not the established way for students to vote. Anyone who really feels compelled to vote can easily do so in the system that stands now. Are members of the SGA seriously thinking, "Wow, there are so many people out there who would like to vote but they simply can't." That notion is utter nonsense.

Look at how dumb the current voting process is. Try to think of what it would be like to vote without someone you know compelling you to vote for a certain candidate. The ballot is just a list of names. What differentiates Joe from Steve?

No voter can look at a random list of names of people they have never heard of and pass judgment as to who will be a good SGA representative and who won't be.

Barely anyone even knows what the representatives will be doing anyhow. This won't change by simply putting the voting online.

The SGA needs to get some leadership with the innovation and courage to make major changes that get all students to understand why they should care – assuming there are actually reasons students should. If the SGA is unable to accomplish this, it will continue to get low voting turnouts and minimal interest from students – with or without online voting.

There is good news for those of us who know the SGA will never get its act together though – no one will notice or care if they don't.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

Classroom overpopulation

Lauren Rockoff

There are those classes at this university which hundreds of students struggle to get into because of the outstanding professors that teach them, the intriguing subject matter, or to fill pre-requisites for applying to graduate school. One such class is organic chemistry.

Even social science majors of the world inhale quickly at the words "organic chemistry." But to take it a step further, should all of us non-science people also know to shutter at the mere enrollment process for the class or at the prospect of simply finding a seat?

For organic chemistry this fall, this is the case. Class capacity: 300. Enrollment total: 356. Three days a week, from 3:35 p.m. to 4:25 p.m. in room 135 of the Integrated Sciences Building, students feverishly take notes, intently listening to the words of their professor, reviewing the "principles of chemical bonding, electronic theory, and acid-based reactions," while discussing "the most common types of organic molecules and their mechanisms."

Whoa.

But even worse than the course description, are the lengths to which students must go to secure a spot in their organic chemistry lecture. If every seat of the 300-seat auditorium is filled – assuming there are no broken seats or TA's sitting down, or spaces in the middle of rows that were left to maintain the appropriate social distance between strangers, that still leaves 56 students completely seat-less.

A few people sitting in the aisles or standing along the sides is usually okay (though it makes note-taking a challenge), but how in the world can 56 additional students fit themselves into an already packed lecture hall?

Hence, the overflow room. Never in my two plus years at college had I heard of an overflow room for a class – before this. If you can't get in, oh well, there's always next semester. But for many University of Massachusetts students who already have demanding schedules as a result of lengthy labs and abounding requirements for their scientific concentrations – or who took time thinking over their decision to apply to medical school – this semester is it.

The question is, is it really that impossible to open another section of organic chemistry or find a larger room to accommodate the many students intent on taking the class?

So, for the first semester, to deal with the high demand for organic chemistry, the school's administration decided to experiment. Wishing to meet the need for the course, the "orgo" professor agreed to the idea. The result has been a little frustrating at times.

UMass junior Christine Brydges arrives twenty minutes to a half-an-hour early to class everyday to secure a spot in the main lecture room – the one in which the professor actually teaches. At least one time, there was a question of whether or not there would even be an overflow room for the next class. Fortunately, the overflow room has so far at least managed to house the extra students.

And down to the logistics of the overflow room itself. After some trial and error, the TA's were able to rig a system using Skype, so that the students could hear the lecture without straining or extendable ears, and over time, Brydges reports, it was even made possible for the overflow students to participate in the class.

A psychology major on the neuroscience track, Brydges plans to attend medical school, like many (if not all) of her peers in the class. Students who need to take organic chemistry include those in the nursing program and anyone who hopes to apply to dental or medical school.

The question is, is it really that impossible to open another section of organic chemistry or find a larger room to accommodate the many students intent on taking the class? With some 18,720 undergraduate students – not to mention graduate students – the allocation of space and resources must be pretty tricky. But situations like this one verge on a little ridiculous.

And though a lot of us do consider our educations a privilege, we usually aren't thinking of it as one which we have saved for or signed-away for, and which we pay considerably for, that can potentially be taken away because of space constraints.

These students want desperately to take this class so that they can work towards becoming the medical professionals of the future. The professor wants to teach as many students as he can to the point where he causes great stress to himself. And the big problem is space?

A tremendously difficult class that students are willing to pull through – even though it means taking their exams on Friday evenings and spending hours in the library trying to understand the difficult material – is a beautiful thing. So why must it be marred by queues of anxious students forming outside of room 135, creating a fire hazard for the students trying to exit the class held beforehand?

Our education is a privilege, but this is a fine institution of higher learning. And as such, every student enrolled in a class should be able to attend that class without fear of ending up in an extra room tacked on to give them the words on their transcript they require, while potentially skimping on the quality of the learning experience they deserve.

Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu

Propaganda surrounding Obama's 'czars'

Two weeks ago, I drove to my hometown of Chicopee to spend Friday night at the Big F with a couple of my good friends. As I approached the intersection of Route 116 and Route 202, I saw groups of people assembled along the sidewalks holding signs decrying over-the-top government spending.

Meghan Boesch

My favorite sign was "Socialist Obama: Hands Off My Capitalism." From the use of the S-word to the decrying of his "czar" advisors, it seems Obama's opponents are always trying to invoke Soviet Russia.

A "czar" is a spin on the word "advisor," and an extremely propagandist one at that. Woodrow Wilson first used the term after the Russian Revolution to refer to his new leading industry advisor. Since then, many presidents have followed suit. Even George W. Bush had these advisors, and some historians argue he had just as many as Obama, though not as early into his term. "Czars" don't have any budgetary control or solid authority, and they spend the majority of their day grappling with other White House staffers. Glenn Beck, who is first and foremost an entertainer, used the term because it was once the title of the Russian monarch. Mr. Beck makes money off of inflammatory rhetoric, and he used czar because the main critique of the President's policy is the claim that he is socialist.

Among conspiracy theorists, it is said our President is secretly moving us towards communism. He will impose a totalitarian government, which will suppress our freedoms and force us to toil mercilessly in communal fields to fill government warehouses with corn for kopeks on the rouble. Glenn Beck isn't stupid; he's clever, and he knows just what to say to get people talking. He's also filthy rich.

Ironically, the office of czar is completely pre-communist. The Russian monarchy was overthrown to create a communist state because Russian peasants were fed up with Nicholas II. It has absolutely nothing to do with communism or its sister-child socialism, and is actually its antithesis. Propagandists picked the most Russian-sounding word they could find that Joe Shmoe would recognize, and they used it scare dumb Americans.

A "czar" is a spin on the word "advisor," and an extremely propagandist one at that.

As far as the admitted communist who resigned from Obama's administration, Van Jones was an advisor. He advised. The three branches of government make policy, and last time I checked, we had a free multi-party system and Joe McCarthy was dead and buried. Van Jones was not going to stage a coup d'état. He most likely sees a lot of inequality in today's world (who doesn't?), and subscribes to an economic creed that theoretically doesn't widen the gap between rich and poor. Lock your doors and keep your children inside till 2012, because we had a socially conscious leftist in the Obama Administration.

Next, let's discuss "spend-a-thon" Obama. This economic crisis is not our President's fault. He inherited this mess due to decades of bad policy making and irresponsible financial management on the part of average Americans. Nixon abandoned the Gold Standard in 1971, which meant that the Federal Reserve could print money without gold to back it up. We could simply print our way out of any debt we might incur.

Our budget was balanced when Clinton left office, and then, President Bush invaded Iraq and Afghanistan two years later. Bush also thought it was a good idea to cut taxes so that he could fund his two new endeavors overseas. Common sense says that if you are going to fund two wars, you better have the revenue to pay for them. As far as the critique of Obama's stimulus package, injecting large amounts of capital into a stalling economy is a core Keynesian principle. The vast majority of economists adhere to it, even conservatives, and it is the basis of modern economic theory. There is a method to this stimulus "madness."

Social Security and Medicare will run out of funds to operate by 2017, which is why I always laugh when I see the elderly holding picket signs lambasting Obama. They're fighting to insure they have to return to work to pay for health insurance in their old age.

By 2017, healthcare costs will consume 20 percent of our GDP, according to the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services. That's roughly $2.5 trillion that would be spent every year on healthcare alone. Diabetes and heart disease cost this country millions of dollars every year, and these figures don't necessarily include the costs of secondary illness that stem from both. If you want to know who is responsible for the conundrum of health care reform, you need only look in the mirror.

The public option of the healthcare plan President Obama put forward was meant to keep private health care companies honest. His intention was to lower health care costs through market competition, but, he had to abandon this because of the "boogie-czar" hiding under our children's beds. A public option does not equal socialism. The government already runs Medicare and Medicaid, so this is old healthcare news.

Merriam-Webster's dictionary defines socialism as "various economic and political theories advocating collective or governmental ownership and administration of the means of production and distribution of goods; a system of society or group living in which there is no private property". The pubic option was simply that, an option. When Obama starts confiscating your land and seizing factories, then you can tell me "I told you so".

The problem with Americans is that they want everything for nothing. If you elect a President for two consecutive terms that thinks war funding grows on trees, and you take out mortgages on houses you can't afford, there are going to be consequences. Obama is going to have to prescribe a strong medicine to straighten this country out. We're not going to like the taste, and we might not agree with everything he proposes, but inaction is completely unacceptable.

Meghan Boesch is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at mboesch@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2009 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Capoeira class blends dance, self-defense

BY REBECCA D'ATTILIO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

For those who opt out of paying high gym membership prices or club dues, there is now another option on campus for students trying to stay fit while having fun.

Capoeira, a mix of martial arts and dancing, is now being taught as a class through the Student Association for Multicultural Brazilian Alliance (SAMBA) on Monday and Wednesday evenings from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. in Flint Hall.

No experience is necessary, nor is any cash for this free class. Students do not need to sign up previously to begin the class, either. The only necessities are some comfortable clothes you are not afraid to sweat in and enthusiasm.

The classes are taught by Emo Ximenes, also known as "Toddynho," a junior management major who learned Capoeira at Artes-Das-Gerais in Framingham, MA. Although the moves he taught initially resembled an up-tempo version of tai-chi, they progressed into a full cardio workout. Between quick breaths and sips of water, student Calvin Archibald, said "It was great...little bit fast paced...looks easier than it is," but that he would "definitely" be returning the following week.

Ximenes taught step by step in order to make sure every student understood the moves. To the sound of traditional Brazilian music, students learned combinations of moves such as the meia-lua (a round kick in front of the body), and the au (a cartwheel).

While teaching, Ximenes explained the significance of each move, and how it could be incorporated into a fight, but continued demonstrating them to the beat of the music. When he asked, "Does anyone know how to do a cartwheel?" there was silence until he said, "Well you're going to learn today," which was followed by a nervous laugh from some of the students.

However, those who appeared to struggle at the beginning of class were keeping up with the rest of the group after just the first half hour. Even Ximenes said, "I looked pretty bad [when I started], like a robot," but there is room for everyone to improve. Ximenes also taught the class the proper way to fall so that they did not hurt themselves, and reviewed what they had learned at the end of class.

Alyssa Soares, a senior communications major and the president of SAMBA, said that the organization hopes to have some of the students perform at the annual Brazilian Carnival held by SAMBA next semester. However, students are not required to perform simply because they attend the class, and that those who do perform would not need to choreograph a routine. She explained that it would be similar to free-style sparring, but without any body contact between the students.

Ximenes described Capoeira as "Brazilian martial arts with African roots involving elements of dancing, gymnastics and yoga."

The history of Capoeira, he said, dates back to a couple hundred years ago when it was created by Brazilian slaves in order to fight. Some would sneak off plantations in order to learn it, but most were captured and returned to their owners. They were able to continue practicing without their slave masters noticing by incorporating the moves into one of the few activities which they were allowed to engage in: dancing, which is why there is a musical element to Capoeira. Ximenes described it as an "underground railroad for Brazilians... a way to liberate themselves."

Students do not need to be Brazilian, or have any familiarity with Brazilian culture in order to enjoy themselves in Capoeira classes. When asked who he thought would enjoy the class, Ximenes said with a smile, "just students overall, anyone looking for a real good workout."

Anyone who is interested in finding out more information about Capoeira or SAMBA can join the Facebook group "UMASS Amherst Capoeira SAMBA" or send an e-mail to sambaumass@gmail.com.

Rebecca D'Attilio can be reached at rdattilio@student.umass.edu.

Badfish concert a good show to catch

BY EMILY V. JENKINS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Hundreds of fans were hudding outside the Pearl Street Ballroom on Saturday night, soggy and shivering under the pale light of street lamps coming through the fog. The crowd surged forward as the doors opened, clothing drenched through to the skin, desperate to get inside. The throng of high school and college-aged students poured in, peeling off dripping layers. Once the music started, though, the discomfort was forgotten.

"Thanks for comin' out in the rain," said Howie Feibusch, lead singer and guitarist of the University of Massachusetts' own Orange Television. The crowd answered with a roar as they exploded into their second song of the opening set, "Slayer with Neon Blood & Heads" banged to the rhythm of the paint-splattered bass drum, as if nodding approvingly at the new sound. If no one knew who they were before the show, there was no question OTV made some new fans by their finish.

Feibusch's unique vocals kept flow with the rest of the band, making it hard to believe that the trio has only been playing together since February. Myles Heffernan's fingers plucked effortlessly on bass, and Alex Lombardi kept a flawless beat despite picking up a pair of drumsticks for the first time just 10 months ago. Citing influences from classic rock, funk, grunge, hip-hop, and jazz, their diverse sound was well received. As for how they got a gig with the rock veterans of Badfish, "By the hand of God," Feibusch said, laughing.

After getting warmed up by OTV, the masses were ready for the punk inspired reggae vibes of Danny Pease and the Regulators. The South Hadley seven piece took over with vigor and brought the energy in the room to the next level with old school ska riffs and spirited vocals from Verbal Kenn and Phaze. Joe Grenier added a distinct percussion section, alternating from the bongos to the tambourine and maracas.

Animated guitarist Pease kept the crowd on their feet, jumping around the stage with Kenn and Phaze. Their set had an unmistakable sense of unity and pure fun, reminiscent of Operation Ivy. Fans sang along to covered reggae verses and gave an appreciative ovation

See BADFISH on page 5

Combining art and exercise

SAMANTHA WEPPER/COLLEGIAN

The newest addition to the University of Massachusetts' extra-curricular offerings works to promote fitness of both body and mind through the Brazilian craft of Capoeira, which involves martial arts and dance.

'Piano King' rocks at Calvin Theater

BY ELLIE RUTON-MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ben Folds rocks so hard, he sometimes breaks pianos.

Such was the case when he played at the Calvin Theater in Northampton on Saturday night. After playing 20 songs lasting over two hours, a pedal on the house piano was so weakened and damaged by the rocking force of his right foot that Folds had to step away from the piano while two men came out and repaired it.

While the men worked on the pedal, Folds sang "Bitches Ain't Shit" sans-piano while the audience sang along before returning to the piano to play four more songs and an encore.

Prior to Folds' set, the crowd met Kate Miller-Heidke with enthusiasm. Fans, visibly eager to see Ben Folds and initially displeased that they should have to wait through an opening act, appreciated her charm and sense of humor, particularly when she played her viral hit, "Are You F*cking Kidding Me? (The Facebook Song)."

Women in the audience were likely envious of her clothes, as she stepped onto the stage in a practical-yet-chic little black dress and the most fabulous pair of boots to match.

Miller-Heidke began her set with a sweet, slow song before her acoustic guitar player, who also contributed backing vocals, joined in and she added her own tambourine. She told little anecdotes from her life that helped explain certain songs, such as her regretting the way she treated a few specific schoolmates in her song "Caught in the Crowd." Some songs had a bit of a hip-hop feel to them as well.

She, like Folds, was unafraid to get silly; during a few songs, she would hold some notes for an extended period of time and, in others, would randomly begin to sing opera-style (Miller-Heidke is classically trained). While interesting and unexpected, the opera singing got a little irritating when repeated. She even threw it into her performance when Folds brought her out during his set to play his song "You Don't Know Me," originally recorded with Regina Spektor.

As with many opening acts, a lot of the audience began to filter into the theater towards the end of Miller-Heidke's set, which is unfortunate for them; they missed a terrific performance.

Shortly after Miller-Heidke left the stage and her keyboard and microphone were removed and packed away, seats were abandoned and the theater drowned in screams as Ben Folds appeared from stage left, took a bow, and sat at the piano.

Where Kate Miller-Heidke had been dressed to the nines, Ben Folds dressed unremarkably in gray pants and a t-shirt, almost unfit to appear on the stage of the beautiful Calvin Theater until beginning to play.

Throughout Folds' set, you could hear him stomping on the ground, keeping time with his left foot – all the way from the balcony, which makes the idea of his foot actually breaking the piano much easier to understand.

Folds also gave short explanations of different songs throughout his performance. He told the story behind the song "Effington," revealing that he had actually gotten the name of the town the song is about wrong when he wrote it. It is about a town called Effingham. He added that, for writing a song about it, the mayor of Effingham had sent him a letter offering him a burial plot in the town.

Folds has recently been writing a few songs with Nick Hornby. He played three new songs for which Hornby wrote the lyrics and Folds wrote the music, including "Levi Johnston's Blues," which were all well-received by the crowd.

The most interesting part of the set was when Folds somehow managed to turn the audience into a four-part chorus. He asked everyone to sing whatever parts they thought fit their vocal range, which miraculously worked out to four almost-equal parts of the crowd. After demonstrating what each part of the chorus would be singing, he flailed his hands in the air, conducting everyone. He taught everyone new parts at the end of his set and erratically conducted everyone, explaining that "this is how you score a movie."

Folds played a perfect mixture of fun, fast songs and slow, serious songs. He played "Not the Same," a song about a friend of his who got high at a party, climbed a tree, and woke up a born-again Christian as well as "The Luckiest," a flows-like-water slow song about being powerfully in love. For the encore, Folds busted out his hit "Rockin' the Suburbs."

If the broken piano wasn't a clear indication that Ben Folds put on a great show, the rejuvenated moods of everyone in the theater afterwards ought to be. Some stayed around the theater, hoping to meet Folds. Those who waited long enough got the chance to get an autograph and a photo with one of the kings

DMCT

Ben Folds made up for his lack-luster attire with a stellar performance at Northampton's Calvin Theater on Saturday night. Folds' set list included some of his recent collaborations with author Nick Hornby.

Asian cinematic auteur wows Flavin

BY MARK SCHIFFER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"The first chapter of my pitiful life," goes the getai, or boisterous live performance, song "Lotus Flower." "Born into a red-light district and life is hard / Life is terrible and I'm in a bad state / I have to slog hard to eke out a living."

These words capture the melodramatic world of Royston Tan's "881," a film which was screened September 30 by the Asian Arts and Culture Program as a part of their New Asian Cinema series. University of Massachusetts students and Amherst community members alike were entertained by this film's lively combination of musical, comedic and over-the-top melodramatic elements, all of which worked to form a very alive whole. Following an introduction by event curator Anne Ciecko, the audience relaxed in their seats for the competitive world of getai in Royston Tan's "881."

"The second chapter of my pitiful life / My life is hard and my heart hurts / My stepmother did not take me into consideration / She only wanted to marry for a meal ticket / Oh how sad, oh how pitiful my life is"

The joyful, catchy melody that drives this song has substantially more in common with the tone of the film than it does with the mournful lyrics. We are told the tale of the Papaya Sisters - who aren't actually sisters. Big Papaya was the valedictorian at her school; Little Papaya is an orphan with cancer who sells papayas at the market.

The two meet at a getai performance, and both discover they have the same dream: to be the top getai performers of all time. They move in with a portly woman that they call Aunty Ling and her mute son, Guan Yin. Unfortunately, they lack the one thing every good getai group needs: Feel.

For the sake of the Feel, they go to the twin sister of Aunty Ling, also known as the Goddess of Getai. It is at this point that they are bound by an oath of chastity in exchange for Feel. Immediately afterwards, they become immensely popular; however, their troubles aren't over yet. With a rival singing group, Big Papaya's infatuation with Guan Yin, and Little Papaya's sickness, audience members are treated to a veritable buffet of melodramatic delights. The story seems to have been crafted from the same source material which fuels the getai songs sung throughout the film.

Getai is an event which occurs every year at the seventh lunar month, during the Singaporean Ghost Festival. Essentially, a group of performers sing upbeat-sounding songs with melodramatic lyrics to entertain the spirits. There are a wide variety of extravagant costumes and brightly colored lights. Although it could be argued that the tone of the film is rather uneven, "881's" alternately joyful and mournful tones perfectly capture the spirit of the event.

Any flaws the film may have containcd were overshadowed by the fact that those who chose to spend their Wednesday night watching "881" were given a glimpse into a world that, for most, was previously a complete mystery.

The Asian Art & Culture Program's New Asia Cinema series will continue to screen films at the Flavin Family Auditorium until December 2, without any charge for admission.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu.

MICHAEL REYNOLDS/COLLEGIAN

Lead vocalist and guitarist for Badfish Pat Downes plays a solo of a Sublime cover song during the group's recent visit to Pearl Street.

Badfish sells as successful substitute for Sublime sound as DPR handed it off to Scotty Don't.

BADFISH from page 4

"While Badfish is busy gettin' drunk, we're gonna play some songs in the meantime," said singer and guitarist Patrick Downes with a smirk.

Badfish's alter egos took over with intensity and a host of original songs. The raw instrumental talent was complimented by Downes' impressive vocals, the hard fast riffs giving the feel of a 90's punk rock show. Bassist Joel Hanks had a perpetual smile on his face while drummer Scott Begin sang along with Downes. A few lucky fans caught the CDs that were tossed out, clutching them in their swaying hands and joining in while Scotty Don't closed it out with the chorus of The Beatles' "Hey Jude."

While taking a few minutes to catch their breath after playing for over a half hour as Scotty Don't, the crowd collectively sang along to Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody," which the band is known for having on the speakers between sets. When the guys came back out for the main event, the kids went nuts.

A distinct smell filled the air as Badfish started it off with Sublime fan favorite "Smoke Two Joints," and everyone was quickly reminded by the management of the no smoking policy. The reprimands did not seem to kill anyone's buzz though, and soon Badfish was off and running, nailing cover after sweet cover. Downes' voice was barely audible as the audience took over during "Wrong Way."

As they played the songs they had so many times before, it was clear that, regardless of the repetition, the group performed with true emotion; particularly during "Badfish" and "Santeria." Its unique way of putting its own spin on the familiar sounds of Sublime added to the energy of the set. After over 20 covers, Badfish left the stage for only a few moments before answering the chanting crowd.

"I f*ing love Pearl Street," said Downes, adding, "Sublime's cool too." The satisfying three-song encore started off with "Caress Me Down." "Doin' Time" came next, and before going into "What I Got," Downes asked the audience sincerely "Keep Sublime alive, alright?" The answer was clear from the fans, as they sang every word.

Emily Jenkins can be reached ejenkins@student.umass.edu.

With new direction, David Gray feels music is 'bulletproof'

BY MICHAEL FRANCO
POPMATTERS.COM

For most artists, releasing three consecutive No. 1 albums in the UK would be reassuring. For David Gray, however, such good fortune was more a reason to be wary. "I don't trust security very much," he says, disdain in his voice. "It breeds complacency."

Complacency is something Gray fears, so much so that he did something few artists would even consider while riding the top of the charts for the better part of a decade: Instead of using the same formula and players that helped him achieve so much success, he scrapped most of his band and assembled a new one, resulting in "Draw the Line," his first album of new material in nearly four years. Moving long-time collaborators Craig "Clune" McClune, Tim Bradshaw, and David Nolte out of the fold, Gray brought in guitarist Neill MacColl and drummer Keith Pyser.

True, music has never been known for its promises of job security, but for Gray, letting some of his band go was difficult. "We had a wonderful time," he muses nostalgically. "Everyone had everything they could have possibly wished for. It all happened. We went around the world and we had a blast ... I don't know what the future holds. I don't know whether we'll do this again. Maybe we will."

Still, though the decision to reconfigure his band was hard, Gray felt his music would suffer if he did not. "I needed to do something different," he says. "It just felt like some vital force was waning, you know? And I needed a new challenge ... we'd been through a lot, and it just felt a little bit like it was reaching the end of its natural lifespan. I just think it was something I sensed. It wasn't like I woke up one morning and felt, 'I've had enough of these bastards. I've got to get rid of them.' It wasn't like that."

And though Gray's decision to begin anew was a bold move, he admits it came with some anxiety. "There's an element of (fear), yeah," he says. "You're stepping into the void. You don't know what's going to happen, but that's what life should be about - taking risk."

As soon as Gray began writing with the new lineup, however, all doubts dissipated - and so did the creative stagnation that had been plaguing him. "The moment we started to work," he explains, "I just realized I made the right decision. I could sense the potency of the music straightaway and I was firing on all cylinders again. It was a wonderful thing."

"Draw the Line" is Gray's first album of new material since 2005's "Life in Slow Motion." The difference between the two is not only noticeable, but also fairly dramatic. All of the classic Gray elements are still intact - lush arrangements, sweeping choruses, introspective lyrics - but the underlying tone is completely different. Whereas Gray sounded like he was hewing to formulas on "Life in Slow Motion," "Draw the Line" sees him combining the songwriting maturity of his successful albums with the insatiable hunger of his early ones.

More than jumpstarting his creative process, Grays notes, his new music has allowed him to step out of the shadow of his own achievements. Though he's grateful for the success of "White Ladder" and subsequent albums, the attention and expectations began to feel stifling. "Draw the Line" - with its combination of new musicians and creative energy - allowed Gray to leave all that behind him; to, as it were, cut lose the albatross hanging from his neck.

"It's allowing me to be far more bullish and outward in everything I do and everything I say. I feel empowered by it. I'm free, liberated from the complexities which I've plagued myself with in the light of all the success and the sort of hall of mirrors that I had been living in in the post 'White Ladder'-world. I've sort of managed to extricate myself from all this worrisome complexity and suddenly life is sort of wonderfully direct and simple again."

But while "Draw the Line" is the result of Gray breaking with his own past, it is not contrived. It is not, in other words, a paint-by-numbers statement, a conscious attempt to create the musical antithesis of his past work. Rather, it is the result of Gray approaching his craft with renewed vigor, unencumbered by his own looming legacy.

"The thing that's wonderful about this album," Gray explains, "is that it's not a conscious anything. It's just an act of surrender to the music. It's a surrender to life and a surrender to the blessing that was everything that happened. It's not like I (was) consciously striving when making this record to be anything or do anything. The record itself will just do that. The music will do that. It's the fact that I'm not self-consciously trying to do it. That's what's liberating. It's like I'm suddenly just enjoying making the music and I've stopped thinking about all that (bull)."

Helping Gray in that process of liberation are some stellar guest vocalists: former Furhythmics singer Annie Lennox and underground American gem Jolie Holland, each of whom sing a duet on the album. Speaking of the former, Gray is so amazed by the collaboration that he can barely find the words to describe the experience. "Unbelievable," he says. "We were blown away by her. She absolutely nailed it." Indeed, listening to the track that Lennox guests on - "Full Steam Ahead" - it's sometimes difficult to even tell which artist is singing which line, their voices are such a natural, harmonious match.

When speaking of Holland, Gray is equally amazed, but more descriptive. "Her voice is the most natural thing I've ever heard – she's got the blues, jazz, the Appalachian logic slugging through her veins. Most people strive for it in some sort of self-conscious way - in a sort of PJ Harvey, Tom Waits-ian (way) - they try to be bluesy. But she just is that stuff ... she's not one to sort of hammer home the melody. She likes to sort of swim around and sort of splash and dive in music's possibility. She feels the swing, the jazz, the blues, (and) she bangs the note. She doesn't sing in any straight lines. There's something so pure about her."

There are other standout moments on the album, of course, and one of them is "Stella the Artist" Channeling classic 60s pop and combining it with modern indie charm, it wouldn't sound out of place on a Belle and Sebastian album. The track stands in stark contrast to the rest of the album, and Gray's mood lightens when discussing it.

"That's the sound of a band having fun. Simple as that. We were just having a ball. We had just played 'Fugitive' the day before and the next morning I came in and that one came out of nowhere. We were just making stuff up. We were having a real laugh. The engineer stuck my Steinway through this massive compressor and put a tremolo on it and it just sounded like crazy. It was like a Marshall stack blasting out of a piano. That's how it felt to play it, through the headphones. So we just had a ball. Everyone was just having a laugh. You can hear this sort of liberation that we were all feeling in the music. Some of the songs are deep and meaningful and blah, blah, blah ... but that one's just the sound of people having fun."

The sound of a band having fun - that, perhaps, is the best way to describe "Draw the Line." No, it's not always an up-tempo affair, but it is always an impassioned one. If Gray's goal was to infuse his music with raw vigor, the gamble has paid off. And, if he wanted to make a statement about taking control of his own career, he has most certainly succeeded.

"That's basically what this album is saying: 'Here I am. I'm looking you right in the eye, staring out of the cover.' That's how it feels. That's how the music feels. I feel very bulletproof within the music."

DAVIDGRAYMUSIC.COM

David Gray recently released his first album of new material since 2005, titled "Draw the Line" after reconfiguring elements of his band.

Badfish drew crowds of high school and college-aged Sublim fans to its performance on Saturday night. Pictured is bass guitarist Joel Hanks.

Go to WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM to view a Slide Show of Capoeira Photos

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Gloss Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

PUBLIC NOTICE: UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACCREDITATION

The University of Massachusetts Amherst will undergo a comprehensive evaluation visit November 1 – 4, 2009, by a team representing the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the New England Association of Schools and Colleges.

The Commission on Institutions of Higher Education is one of eight accrediting commissions in the United States that provide institutional accreditation on a regional basis. Accreditation is voluntary and applies to the institution as a whole. The Commission, which is recognized by the U.S. Department of education, accredits approximately 200 institutions in the six-state New England region.

The University of Massachusetts Amherst has been accredited by the Commission since 1932 and was last reviewed in October, 1998. Its accreditation by the New England Association encompasses the entire institution. For the past year and a half, the University of Massachusetts Amherst has been engaged in a process of self-study, addressing the Commission's Standards for Accreditation. An evaluation team will visit the institution to gather evidence that the self-study is thorough and accurate. The team will recommend to the Commission a continuing status for the institution; following a review process, the Commission itself will take the final action.

The public is invited to submit comments regarding the institution to:

Public Comment on the University of Massachusetts Amherst
Commission on Institutions of Higher Education
New England Association of Schools and Colleges
209 Burlington Road
Bedford, MA 01730-1433
E-mail: cihi@neasc.org

Comments must address substantive matters related to the quality of the institution. Comments will not be treated as confidential.

Written, signed comments must be received by November 4, 2009. The Commission cannot guarantee that comments received after that due date will be considered. Comments should include the name, address, and telephone number of the person providing the comments.

The Commission cannot settle disputes between individuals and institutions, whether those involve faculty, students, administrators, or members of other groups. Individuals considering submitting complaints against an affiliated institution should request the separate Policy and Procedures for the Consideration of Complaints Made Against Affiliated Institutions from the Commission office.

Defenseman David Key chests a ball away from a defender against Colgate last Tuesday. The sophomore has started all eight games this season.

UM fails to capitalize on fouls

Weather made for physical play in Minutemen loss to Rams

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Nobody following the Massachusetts men's soccer team or Fordham would've expected a physical game on Saturday, but that's exactly what happened this weekend with 29 combined fouls and three yellow cards.

Inclement weather made for slippery conditions, especially in the first half, where it rained heavily on the field and played a part in a few injuries.

However, neither coach thought much of the heavy contact that went on during the Rams' 1-0 victory over the Minutemen (3-2-1).

"There's a wet field so there will be some late tackles, but I don't think there was anything malicious," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "They're a clean, hard-working team, but I don't think we're a dirty team. Did they have a couple late tackles? Yeah, but we also had a couple late tackles."

Fordham (3-5-1) scored its only goal early in the game, but coach Jim McElderry stayed uneasy for much of the game because of the Minutemen's recent success and his team's recent struggling.

Even with the Rams controlling UMass' scoring, despite its recent offensive explosion of five goals in the previous two matches, McElderry barked out to his players not to foul despite having a lead.

"Once we got ahead, 1-0, we tried to just grind the result out," McElderry said of why he thought there was so much contact during the game. "I think we're really not an overly physical team."

Both sides complained over the foul calls (and also lack of calls) throughout the game, but McElderry said he doesn't consider the Minutemen to be a physical team in general. In fact, if there was anything he was upset about, it was the amount of penalty kicks midfielder Ben Arikian took because of the Rams' fouling.

Arikian had six shots during the game, three of which, were on goal.

Although Arikian never scored off of penalty kicks, he got very close a few times. His best opportunity came nearly half-way through the first period when Arikian had a penalty kick just outside the 18-yard box in the middle of the field.

The Fordham defense created a wall in front of Arikian to prevent him from having a straight shot, but he countered by trying to bend the shot around the defenders and ultimately had his attempt go off the right post.

"I think we fouled too many times," McElderry said of the Rams' 14 fouls. "And with Arikian taking free kicks, they're dangerous every time. I think [having Arikian take penalty kicks] is a real asset for the UMass team. It's a way they can beat a lot of different teams."

Koch knows what foul trouble can do for a team. In the 2-0 loss to Hartford on Sept. 5, the Minutemen gave up eight chances around the 18-yard box.

On Saturday, the Maroon and White didn't have that same luck that the Hawks had earlier in the season, despite fouls playing a factor in the UMass out-shooting Fordham, 12-6.

The Sept. 5 game was the only one until Saturday where the Minutemen picked up multiple yellow cards (three) throughout the game. Against Fordham, UMass had two.

One came against forward Chris Roswess, who picked up his third yellow card of the season near the end of the first half and was promptly taken out for freshman Brodie Steigerwald. However, Koch said the move had nothing to do with Roswess's foul.

"[Roswess] was tired and I was going to pull him anyhow, it just happened to be after he got the yellow card," Koch said.

As frustrating as the game was physically, Koch found playing a conference opponent to be useful for when the Minutemen actually start Atlantic 10 play next weekend against Xavier and Dayton. He hopes that this game can be used as a wake-up call for the preparation UMass needs against the conference in the upcoming weeks.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

Fordham too much in loss

M. SOCCER from page 8

nents 6-0 in its past three victories.

The Minutemen scored three goals in the first half against Colgate on Tuesday, Koch's 200th career victory at UMass and freshman defender Dominic Skrajewski's first career goal.

Along with Skrajewski, who started his sixth career game in Saturday's loss, forward Brodie Steigerwald and midfielder Tyler Brown tried to jump start the attack off the bench for the Minutemen. Both played substantial minutes, something that Koch believes will help UMass in its conference schedule coming up.

"I think they both played well, they've been playing better in practice, and will hopefully continue to get better as they go," Koch said. "I was pleased with their energy, but both of them at times get confused because it's not what they're used to. You can talk about [the intensity of the game] all you want, but you don't really know until you step on the field."

The Minutemen head to Ohio next weekend in their Atlantic 10 opener against Xavier on Friday and Dayton on Sunday. The contest against the Rams was the Minutemen's final non-conference game of the season, although it was against a conference opponent.

"This was a great wake up for us I think because we're now back in conference games," Koch said. "This game doesn't count towards conference standings, which is great, but it's a wake up to let us know that everyone comes to play, and the next nine games are going to be dog fights.

"We need to be sure we play the whole 90 minutes, because we didn't today," Koch said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Defenseman Jaime Bourazeris chases after a ball in a contest last fall. The junior had a shot in UMass' 1-0 win over Yale on Sunday.

Sowry and Co. bounce back

REBOUND from page 8

games following a loss since breaking a three-game losing streak in the middle of the 2007 season.

The reason for the UMass' success has been the ability to focus after a loss.

"It really emotionally saps the energy from you so we've definitely had to pay close attention to how we deal with losses and refocus. There's no time to dwell, we have to learn from our mistakes and go game to game," Sowry said.

"We just have to focus, put it in the past and look forward to the next day," team captain and leading scorer, Katie Kelly, said. "We can't let games slide by because we're dwelling on a loss."

The teams the Minutewomen defeated after Boston University and Boston College were previously No. 9 ranked Iowa (4-6) and Vermont (1-11), respectively. Though UMass picked up wins, the games were close and competitive. Along with the Yale victory, the three wins coming after a loss have been by one score. Certainly fatigue has played a factor in how well the Minutewomen have been able to play, but Sowry has been pleased with how the team has been able to battle through games.

"No matter what the circumstances are, no matter how tired, they're committed and that shows a lot about their character," she said.

Heading forward into the rest of the season, how UMass responds after losses will be a large determinant of its success and whether it's able to reach its ultimate goal of going deep into the NCAA tournament.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

Minutemen fall in exhibition match

HOCKEY from page 8

"I thought the game really improved as it went, in terms of the integrity of our play. We won some battles, we made some plays, we got some shots. If you look at the shots, you can see it really changed as the game went on. That doesn't solve all of our problems, but it's a pretty good start," Cahoon said.

Despite being outshot by six in the first period, the Minutemen had more on the game, edging out NBU shot wise, 31-28.

The spark that was present in the second period finally turned into goals for UMass. Just under five minutes onto the third period, Casey Wellman knifed through the Reds defense into the slot and fired a shot passed Fullerton to give the Minutemen their first goal.

It looked as though the game was in hand for the Reds until, with a couple minutes left, the Minutemen pulled Dainton and added another score when Syner got one past Fullerton with one minute, 14 seconds left.

The late score brought a sense of urgency to the game that had been absent from the first period. As opposed to the first 59 minutes of the game, the final minute unfolded with the game in the air. Right off of his goal, Syner made a great defensive play, putting a stopper on a New Brunswick breakaway with the empty net behind him to preserve the one-goal lead. Time, though, was not on UMass' side as the Reds held on to preserve the win.

Among UMass' struggles was its lack of success on special teams. The Minutemen were 0-for-5 on power plays with six shots and went shotless on two opportunities while the Reds went 1-for-4 with four shots.

As a precautionary measure, senior defenseman Martin Nolet did not dress for the game to nurse a minor injury.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Split weekend games

F. HOCKEY from page 8

coach Justine Sowry said of the win. "We were making silly mistakes... mistakes coming as a result of us being exhausted. I knew it was going to be a battle for the entire game but thankfully we got through it."

Against the Orange (11-1), the Minutewomen failed to find an answer to forwards Shelby Schraden and Heather Susek. The front-liners scored two goals each on Widdall (six saves) and both of Schraden's scores came off assists from Susek.

The Orange barraged Widdall with 11 penalty corners – six coming in the first half – but UMass pressed Syracuse goalie Leann Stiver (three saves) in its own way. Christine Cutry slipped into the circle at the 16th minute and took a Kim Young pass in past Stiver. Forward Jill Powers scored minutes later when forward Katie Kelly's shot deflected off Stiver and she bounced it off the black for her fourth goal of the season.

The Minutewoman goals came at the end of a first half mired by three goals from the Orange in the opening 13 minutes.

Another factor in UMass' lackluster play was its lack of depth. The Minutewomen used its starting 11 for entire game, perhaps saving players for the long road-stretch ahead.

The absence of Cher King could also play into the fact that the UMass bench isn't deep because its usual reserve players are now starting games. King has one goal and three assists this season and her exceptional field vision and stick skills are things that characterize the finesse-oriented Minutewomen.

However, Sowry reiterated the fact that the team is exhausted and that proper rest is key going into the next few weeks, especially with one of its four remaining non-conference opponents being No. 5 Connecticut (11-1) who until yesterday's loss to Princeton were undefeated.

"We have to look after ourselves," she said. "We really need to get as much energy stored as possible and be ready to go. We just need to get through the next two games and then we'll ease off a little bit."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Junior Katie Kelly changes direction to get to a loose ball in a game last season. Kelly and the Minutewomen will play four straight games on the road.

UMass falls to 2-2 in A-10 play

W. SOCCER from page 8

when she recorded the team's first shot at the 58 minute, six second mark. Saint Louis goalie Hannah Perry saved the shot as well as an attempt by redshirt junior Meghan Gould five minutes later.

Barklage scored the Billikens final goal of the evening with a header off a restart at 66:19. Her two goals and five points are both single-game career highs.

UMass had one last chance to derail the shutout in the game's waning minutes. With 29 second remaining, junior Therese Smith fired a shot that barely missed the net and hit the post.

The Minutewomen's offensive woes continued on Sunday as they became the latest victim of Charlotte's explosive offensive attack as the 49ers won their sixth-consecutive game.

The game mirrored Friday's contest, as UMass lost 4-0 and allowed three goals in the first half. The 49ers (10-2-0, 4-0-0) scored all three first half goals within a 12-minute period that started at the 17:37 mark. After five unsuccessful attempts, senior Hailey Beam scored from 17 feet out and was assisted by sophomore Oni Bernard and junior Sam Huecker.

A little over four minutes later, junior Danielle Mayeaux doubled the 49er's lead by chipping a corner kick from Whitney Bryant inside the near post. Kirby Stenard then put in the final goal of the half at the 28:59 mark. She headed in a pass from Whitney Weinraub inside the far post.

Redshirt junior Sydney Stoll and Hamel combined for all four of the Minutewomen's shots in the first half. Both of Stoll's shots were on goal, but she did not have any attempts the rest of the way.

Therese Smith attempted the first of four second half shots for UMass, but it was saved by Charlotte goalie Lauren Brown. A little over nine minutes later, Brown recorded two more saves on shots by senior Jacquelyn Desjardins and sophomore Rachel Miranda. Miranda's shot was her fifth shot-on-goal in six attempts this season.

The final UMass shot of the game came on a header by Hamel at the 65:19 mark. Charlotte scored for the final time, two minutes and 40 seconds later. Freshman India Winford scored her second goal of the season after deflecting a long pass from Bernard past Cota.

Cota allowed more goals in each of the two games than she had in her previous eight. She also tallied 22 saves over the weekend to raise her total to 52 on the season.

"It was a combination of travel and a hard road trip," UMass coach Angela Napoli said in regards to the team's disappointing weekend. "There were a number of reasons. One was the travel. Two, we faced two good teams playing different systems. It was hard to prepare for the transitions. Three…both teams were able to identify our weaknesses."

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

Junior Kelsey Anderson traps a bouncing ball against Providence earlier this season at Rudd Field. Anderson has played in all 11 games this year for UMass, starting the last 10 of them.

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

Jerk Store by Richard Martelly

ACROSS
1. Unprecedented
6. Clothed
10. Found at the end of an arm
14. Reluctant
15. Puncture
16. Margarine
17. Fragrant oil
18. Colored part of an eye
19. Matures
20. Lozenge
22. A ceremonial procession
24. Wickedness
25. A female deity
26. Overlooked
29. Dry
30. "Smallest particle"
31. Artificial moons
37. Fragrant wood
39. Third person pronoun female
40. Chip away at
41. Emissions
44. Carnival attraction
45. Nonverbal O.K.'s
46. Seamster
48. Pastoral poem
52. Pigeonhole
53. Peanut
54. Evaluate
58. Impolite
59. Indolent
61. Receded
62. They come from hens
63. Fly high
64. This cradles a broken arm
65. You (archaic)
66. Course
67. Cantankerous

DOWN
1. Ado
2. Bit
3. Rodents
4. Political leader
5. Flourish
6. Iciness
7. Old stones
8. Muhammad ___
9. Plunder
10. Stockpile
11. Seaweed
12. Requires
13. Measured amounts of medication
21. Tops of jars
23. Befuddle
25. The color of most grass
26. Ceremonial staff
27. Detail
28. Fizzy drink
29. A Musketeer
32. Comment to the audience
33. Cranky
34. Hard work
35. Cocoyam
36. Fortuneteller
38. Cooktop
42. Someone who travels for pleasure
43. Cease
47. Take into custody
48. Everglades bird
49. A sudden noisy expulsion of air
50. Hostel
51. Overweight
52. The male reproductive cell
54. Winged
55. Nile bird
56. Dispatched
57. Jittery
60. Female deer

radical reels
UMass Outing Club & Alumni Association
Brings you:
Radical Reels Tour 2009!
A part of the Banff Mountain Film Festival
Tuesday, Oct. 6th, 2009
Doors @ 7pm, Films @ 8pm
Student Union Ballroom
$5 Students (with ID)
$10 General Public
Get tickets at TIX:
Student Union 317 (413.545.0412)
The Radical Reels Film Tour complements the Banff Mountain Film Festival World Tour, and focuses on dynamic, high-adrenalin films featuring sports such as skiing, climbing, kayaking, BASE jumping, snowboarding and mountain biking
UMOC

UMASS AMHERST
New Schedule for Winter Session
Earn credits during break!
Online classes begin:
December 21, 2009
On campus classes begin:
January 4, 2010
Sneak peek of class offerings listed at www.UMassULearn.net

SUDOKU

		4			8	1
	9		2	5	4
6			9			8
5			3	1
9	6				2
7		5	1			6		4
	3				6		8
	8					7		3

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The story of Letterman's "sextortion" should not make you hungry.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Technology should scare you. The iPhone will probably get a killer app.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
I got a secret to tell you: this horoscope was delivered by PIZZA HUT!

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You know you're winning at life when you carry a bottle opener instead of a pencil.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Go on an "e" diet. Your world will b much bettr.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Wyclef said it best: "You can't choke away your problems."

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Treat every minute of your day like a montage from "Top Gun."

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Twinkies were only created for post-zombie apocalypses.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Hawaiian shirts often result in a lack of fruitfullness. Irony?

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Every time you fall asleep in class, one of the Keebler elves slowly dies.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Be careful what you wish for. Aladdin learned that hard way with crappy sequels.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
How much wood could a woodchuck chuck if he lived with termites?

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO expenence necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $99 Includes Hotel, Bus, and Clubs montrealexpress.net (781)979-9001

SERVICES

Resume $27 ruby.sc@gmail.com

SPRING BREAK 2010

Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guaranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

In weight lifting, I don't think sudden, uncontrolled urination should automatically disqualify you.
- Jack Handey

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

F. STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Katie Kelly looks on as the ball drifts towards the net in UMass' victory over Kent State last fall in the NCAA play-in game. The junior had an assist and took three shots, two on goal, in UMass' 5-2 loss to Syracuse on Saturday.

No revenge against Syracuse

No. 6 Orange come out victorious again

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Losing games by multiple goals is uncharacteristic of this season's Massachusetts field hockey team. The No. 9 Minutewomen made several changes after its 5-2 loss at No. 6 Syracuse on Saturday and those changes translated into a 1-0 home win against Yale.

Eileen Seffron's first career goal came in the 23rd minute of the game off a rebound from a shot by forward Jill Powers. After the goal by UMass (8-3), the play of the Bulldogs (6-4) changed significantly.

The Minutewomen put Yale – who trailed UMass 5-3 in penalty corners in the first half – on the defensive in the first half but the second half was the exact opposite. The Bulldogs pressed harder after halftime, forcing seven penalty corners and outshooting the Minutewomen 9-5.

"We felt the intensity and urgency come back [in the second half], Seffron said. "We felt that if we used each other, we wouldn't be as tired and we just tried to keep it simple."

Along with four saves, UMass used another shutout from sophomore Alesha Widdall – her fifth of the season – to withstand the 15-10 shot differential from a Yale team that had a substantially deeper bench (six substitutions) than that of the Minutewomen (three).

Syracuse	5
UMass	2
UMass	1
Yale	0

The Maroon and White have several different players nursing minor injuries and the fact that it played on the road Saturday and home yesterday with the first of four-straight away games coming tomorrow on one day's rest can only worsen things.

"From the first minute, it was obvious that our team was very, very fatigued," UMass

See F. HOCKEY on page 6

Reds hold on to defeat UM

Minutemen rally comes late, NBU's early lead too much

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two late goals made it interesting, but a 3-0 deficit in the first period was too much for the Massachusetts hockey team to overcome as the Minutemen dropped their exhibition match against New Brunswick, 3-2.

Sophomores Casey Wellman and T.J. Syner each scored for UMass in the third period to bring some drama to the game in the closing minutes. After the slow start, the Minutemen had several opportunities to score, but early season frustrations, along with the stellar play of Reds goalkeeper Travis Fullerton (29 saves), ended the Minutemen's comeback bid.

NBU	3
UMass	2

"We definitely got better as the game went on, but you can't spot teams three goals," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "We learned a lot about ourselves at this point in the year as to what is going to get in the way."

With three goals allowed in the first period, the Minutemen did not get the performance they had wanted coming out of the gates. Throughout the period, the Reds consistently controlled the puck while converting on UMass mistakes.

The Minutemen tallied only three shots in the period, with none coming on an early power play. NBU, meanwhile, got off nine shots, but picked their spots. The Reds struck when UMass goalie Paul Dainton was out of position and on defensive miscues.

John Scott Dickson had two goals in the period, the second coming on a power play, as the Reds came out strong with the Minutemen back on their heels.

"They just came out ready to play," Wellman said. "They came ready to play right off the bat and as a collective group we weren't and they jumped out on top of us, they were making consistent plays and they caught us off guard."

A miscue behind the UMass blue line led to the final goal of the period as Taylor Procyshen stole the puck darted to the net and snapped a shot past Dainton for the goal.

After the slow start in the first period, the Minutemen came out in the second with a renewed fervor. Starting with a penalty on New Brunswick's Bretton Stamler, UMass regained momentum in the game.

UMass outshot New Brunswick 16-7 in the second period as the physicality of the game shifted and the Minutemen gained control on the offensive end and the flow of the game. UMass did everything it could in the second period. That is, everything but score a goal.

See HOCKEY on page 6

Sowry and Co. perfect after losses in 2009

Maroon and White rebound to beat Yale

BY JAY ASSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Focus is something that Massachusetts field hockey coach, Justine Sowry, preaches to her team and its effect is seen through the unbeatable record the Minutewomen hold in games following a loss.

After dropping its third loss of the season against Syracuse on Saturday, UMass came through yet again with a win against Yale on Sunday.

The Minutewomen traveled to New York to take on the No. 6 Orange in a game that UMass had circled coming into the season. However, the Minutewomen (8-3) trailed 3-0 early, and couldn't complete a comeback after closing the gap to one. Syracuse (11-1) was too much to handle and its offense came through in a 5-2 victory.

"It was very difficult to come back because we got ourselves up emotionally for the Syracuse game and it was a game that the team had targeted for the entire year," Sowry said. "They were let down with a really tough loss and had everyone just leave it all out on the field. It was difficult, it was draining physically and draining emotionally."

The next day, UMass was able to avoid back-to-back losses, edging out Yale (6-4) for a 1-0 win. The lone goal was scored by Eileen Seffron, the first of her career, and was enough with the strong play of the defense and goalkeeper Alesha Widdall.

"They're a tough group of young women and they somehow get the job done even if it's not pretty," Sowry said. "They fight hard for every minute of the game and they're there for each other."

After each of the previous two losses, coming against Boston University (4-8) and previously No. 9 ranked Boston College (8-2), the Minutewomen responded with significant wins.

In fact, UMass has now won 12 consecutive

See REBOUND on page 6

F. STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Senior Jill Powers moves past a defender against Kent State last fall. The forward had two shots in Sunday's 1-0 victory over Yale and ranks third on the team in points (11).

Rams hand UMass first loss in 5 games

BY DAVID BRISCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's soccer team had no trouble generating offense in its past three games, all of which were shutout victories for the Minutemen. However, UMass could not put away any scoring opportunities Saturday afternoon, falling to Fordham, 1-0, at Rudd Field.

"We stunk in the first half, and played better in the second half, [but it was] too late," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

Fordham	1
UMass	0

"We talked about it, and we had to come out ready to play," he said. "They were going to come out ready to play, we knew that, [and] they did. Their goal went in, and we had some great chances, but bottom line, 1-0, and that's the way the game goes."

In a game characterized by physical play, (29 total fouls, three yellow cards) and inclement weather, the Rams (3-5-1) took advantage of a breakdown in the UMass (3-2-3) midfield and capitalized early in the first half.

"We had the ball at midfield, and we played a poor pass that they intercepted, and that set their goal up" Koch said. "The ball should have been played forward, but we played it square, and they intercepted it."

Rams forward Tim Richardson scored his second goal of the season and the only tally of the match on a 20-yard strike that went in below the right post, as midfielder Alex Brunbauer was credited with the assist.

The Minutemen picked up the pace in the attacking zone for the rest of the contest, but their shots could not find the back of the net. Junior midfielder Ben Arikian had three shots on goal and six total shots in the game, equal to the number of total shots from the Rams (6).

"He hit the post on one of them," Koch said. "You give teams chances around the box, and you can't do it. Sooner or later, it's going to go in, it's just a law of averages, and we just didn't have them going our way today."

Along with Arikian, forwards Chris Rowsess and Mark DeSantis, and midfielder Stuart Arnick continued to catalyze opportunities for UMass, but it just wasn't there for the Minutemen.

UMass outshot the Rams, 12-6 throughout the game, and held the advantage in corner kicks, 7-2.

UMass had been on a hot streak offensively as of late, outscoring oppo-

See M. SOCCER on page 6

MAXWELL STARR/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Mark Dangleis outruns a Colgate defender in a contest at Rudd Field last Tuesday. Dangleis has seen time in all eight games this year and started in the past three.

Minutewomen drop 2 games

BY MIKE MASTONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team saw their five-game unbeaten streak come to an end over the weekend as they were shutout in back-to-back games by Atlantic 10 foes Saint Louis and Charlotte.

On Friday night, UMass (3-6-2, 2-2-0 A-10) could not combat a dominant effort by Saint Louis.

Charlotte	4
UMass	0
St. Louis	4
UMass	0

Billiken sophomore Andrea Barklage had a career night as the Billikens shutout the Minutewomen and scored a season-high four goals.

UMass had an extremely difficult time mustering up any sort of offense and did not attempt a shot in the first half. During that period, Saint Louis (5-5-2, 2-1-1) put three shots past freshman goalie Emily Cota. The first came just under 14 minutes into the first half when junior Ashley Brazill tapped in a missed-header by Barklage after a corner kick by senior Ashley Hayes.

Following a foul by UMass, Barklage scored her fourth goal of the season on a long pass from the left side by senior Susan Frederickson to push the lead to 2-0. The Billikens struck again just under seven minutes later when Sally Sinclair put in her first goal of the season on an assist from fellow senior Kelly Waeckerle.

The Billikens then started off the second half with seven unsuccessful shot attempts. Junior Ashley Harnel put the first offensive statistic on the board for UMass

See W. SOCCER on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 66 LOW: 49 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2009

'SuperApp' seeks to ease application stress

MICHAEL TOOMEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Sept. 24, 2009, ConnectEdu launched the SuperApp, described in a press release as "complete, paperless application package for students, parents, high schools and colleges."

The SuperApp aims to solve the fragmentation of the application process with a unified, comprehensive application, as well as dealing with some profound and recurring challenges faced by high schools and guidance counselors working to help low-income and disadvantaged youth attend college.

Applying to college usually amounts to managing a large volume of documents under the pressure of deadlines.

The process often includes school specific questions, varying deadlines and requirements, which can be difficult to keep track of.

The often tedious application process has led to students to increasingly favor the Common Application, a standardized application form which is mostly submitted online that can sent to any number of the nearly 400 participating institutions.

While the Common Application has facilitated student's capacity to apply to many schools without the having to fill out many similar forms from different colleges, students are still responsible for submitting their transcripts, test scores and answers to school-specific questions. Managing school-specific supplements can make the Common Application much less convenient.

The Common Application cannot be sent to any non-member institutions, which excludes many schools that are often attended by low-income students. This is a disadvantage for students at a time when young people are spending more and more time online.

Eleni Bazos, guidance department chair at Central High School in Springfield said, "Online applications work really well for our kids.

The main issue we face again and again in helping students apply to college is they don't always let us know when they've applied. They don't always tell us and then they're upset and ask, 'Why didn't you send out my test results or transcript?' This happens all the time."

"Counselors are responsible for their students but they have no window into the process," said Daryl Slater, ConnectEdu marketing programs manager. "All they know is hearsay from the student, so having a dashboard where they can see all the information, test scores, GPAs, deadlines, allows them to help students stay on track, meet their deadlines and meet up with other requirements."

Craig Powell, President and CEO of ConnectEdu emphasized the importance of making the college application process as reliable and efficient as possible for the benefit of students and universities alike.

"It will drastically reduces the costs of admissions departments just by relieving them from processing lots of disparate information," Powell said.

The SuperApp creates a direct link from high schools to colleges, where universities receive verified high school data, as opposed to self-reported data that may or may not be accurate and get it together in a complete bundle from a single source.

This intends to eliminate issues with losing documents, not receiving transcripts or having difficulty managing a student's application that arrives piece by piece.

Students still need to take the initiative to complete their applications but with SuperApp, the steps are all laid out on a single page, allowing both students and counselors a complete overview of progress and making the next steps easy to identify.

Powell used a Facebook analogy to explain the relationship between a student's application and the counselor's access to that application referenced by Slater.

"Just as when you have your own page on Facebook that allows you to access certain parts of another user's page, and vice versa, students and counselors will have their own page where specific information crucial to the application process is available."

See SUPERAPP on page 3

The University Mental Health Services hopes to reach out to students who are afraid to address their various stressors with the funding provided by a new grant.

MHS receives grant to deter student suicides

ALYSSA CREAMER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

She paces – lights another cigarette. It is clear to this reporter that this is not an easy matter to discuss.

The University of Massachusetts sophomore wishes to remain anonymous during the telling of her story – a personal narrative of struggle, depression and suicide ideation.

Her story deals with some of the elements students can experience when faced with the reality of a close relation's death.

In 2007, her first boyfriend was killed in a car accident on a night when the two were supposed to be meeting.

Before seeking support from friends, family and mental health professionals, this student wrote off the idea of a support system, opting to care for her own needs because she said she thought she would be seen as "weak" if she pursued outsiders' help.

Chain-smoking, a habit she had developed as a coping mechanism, was a habit she said she "still needed to get through the interview."

She said, "I didn't like the idea of talking about what had happened because I was so depressed that I thought people would think the thoughts I was having made me crazy or abnormal."

"When he died," she said, "It was really hard for me to deal with accepting what had happened. I thought that I couldn't be close to other people because then something bad would happen to them too."

During the interview, she acknowledged that she had isolated herself from those who tried to form a support group around her.

"I felt so alone, but it was my choice to be alone," she said.

"Because I thought it would help to handle this on my own, and that I was right in thinking the guilty feelings I was having should not be burdened on others."

Months after her friend's death, this student attempted to take her own life.

The student said that "had [she] sought out help or if someone had just done something to acknowledge [she] was not okay, [she]

See PREVENTION on page 2

UMass wins award for substance abuse classes

ANGELA HILSMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts has received a 2009 Science and Service Award from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) for their efforts in educating students about substance abuse and binge drinking.

The Brief Alcohol Screening and Intervention for College Students (BASICS) is one of only four college programs nationally awarded for their substance-abuse assistance. Last year, BASICS received a federal grant of $200,000 as part of a U.S. Department of Education model program competition. This year, UMass has decided to fund the program due to its success as "a model program".

Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention (CADAP) director, Sally Linowski, said it is "really an honor to receive the Science and Service Award." The award not only recognizes the BASICS program as exemplary but also lauds both staff and students who help the program to reach its goals.

"Our commitment is to provide the most efficient and effective program for our students," Linowski said.

This theory-based program, according to Linowski, focuses on a "harm reduction" philosophy. It is the opposite of the "just-say-'no'" approach in that it takes students who have already said 'yes' and works with them to reduce their intake of drugs and alcohol. The program takes in 1,200 students a year. According to Linowski, the majority of students they take had been mandated to partake in the program due to rule-breaking substance abuse. The program's popularity

See BASICS on page 2

Foliage brightens campus

MATTHEW HARDIN/COLLEGIAN

Autumn has arrived on the University of Massachusetts campus, and as the weather gets cooler, students take notice of the changing seasons.

Professor and student utilize German films

BY RACHEL TUMIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Professor Kyle Frackman and Ph.D. student Victoria Lenshyn, of the University of Massachusetts' German and Scandinavian Studies Department, traveled between Sept. 18 and 20, to Sweet Briar College, in Virginia, to present at an intensive German-language immersion weekend. In attendance were 30 German teachers and faculty from across Virginia, who focused on the collaborative development of teaching materials for high school and college courses.

This annual gathering represents an opportunity for both high school and college German teachers to come together, practice the language and develop new teaching materials for their students.

The conference began Friday morning and continued through Sunday afternoon and was conducted entirely in German.

Frackman and Lenshyn's program focused on using films made in East Germany as teaching tools. East and West Germany were reunified on October 3, 1990, and according to the presenters, a decreasing number of students have any memory of the separated nations. Frackman explains that these younger students need to be aware of history.

"It is important to remind [the students] of the complete image of East Germany," said Frackman.

Frackman and Lenshyn sought to help teachers incorporate these films into classroom teaching for a multitude of purposes.

In addition to critical analysis, Frackman and Lenshyn explained how the films can serve other educational functions.

Frackman said that, "The teachers enjoyed seeing more of East Germany that just the image of the Communist, totalitarian government... more than just the oppression."

Lenshyn elaborated that these films offer a view of "day-to-day life," providing a more complete vision of East Germany.

Frackman and Lenshyn explained that this wider perspective allows these films to be analyzed in broad historical and social contexts, allowing teachers to include lessons on such topics as politics or social change.

Frackman additionally suggested that the films could be used for lessons on language and grammar.

In conjunction with the UMass DEFA Film Library – which is the only archive and study center outside of Europe devoted to films from and about East Germany – Frackman and Lenshyn presented a number of East German films and ways they could be included in various lesson plans.

Those attending the conferences had watched and critically analyzed the films, much in the

See GERMAN on page 3

ARTS&LIVING

ZOMBIES!... AND WOODY HARRELSON

With Woody Harrelson as our guide through "Zombieland," post-apocalyptic wastelands filled with the living dead never seemed so appealing.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

FIELD HOCKEY

The Minutewomen (8-3) travel to Cambridge today to take on the Harvard Crimson in what has become a yearly affair.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL&OPINION

CLIMATE CHANGE COMES TO AMHERST

Collegian columnist Eric Magazu explains the role of Amherst citizens and students in advocating for climate change, awareness and action.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

TOUR GUIDE

Collegian staff member Matt Harrison tours the newly built UMass recreation sports center on dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 2

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Deimer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shavesa Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Annie Keithline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST., ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COMICS Andrew Witts
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Hannah Nelson
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alyssa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jean Heshion
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIDING IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PURCHASED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

ConnectEdu hopes for easy college apps

SUPERAPP from page 1

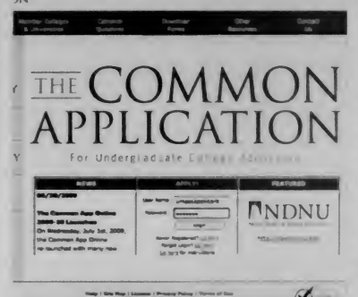
"Right now, we're working with about 1100 colleges and 2300 high schools," Powell said. "Those 2300 high schools represent about 25 percent of the nation's population attending high school."

ConnectEdu has established working ties in regions with many urban high schools with educational access issues including Baltimore Public Schools, Cleveland Public Schools and the Houston Independent School district.

"Our kids [ConnectEdu's network] can apply to very selective institutions with SuperApp, just as easily as to not so selective, even open admissions type Schools," Powell said. "What's important is that access to higher education is as direct and efficient as possible, whether we're talking Yale or Harvard or a local community college."

Students and counselors can also manage fee waiver processes through SuperApp.

"Some of the participating colleges have dropped their admission fees altogether for students who use SuperApp, simply because it saves admissions so much in processing by virtue of its efficiency," Powell said.



The ConnectEdu network includes 70 Massachusetts high schools, and 30 state colleges.

The University of Massachusetts Boston, Lowell and Dartmouth are part of the network but UMass Amherst is not yet signed on.

Kevin Kelly, director of admissions at UMass said, "On a purely hypothetical level, we're for anything that helps receive application materials, review and select candidates, but the devil is in the details – what will new products or technologies cost us, what they will cost students."

Kelly added, "Last year we received 34,000 freshmen and transfer applications. These are very large volumes and we have issues processing them, being timely in our responses, and responsibly considering each candidate. I'm familiar with ConnectEdu. I've attended conferences where they were pitching their products. I haven't learned much about the SuperApp yet, but as I said earlier, anything that helps admissions do a more thorough job is interesting to us, but all of the details need to be considered."

Michael Toomey can be reached at mjtoomey@student.umass.edu.

The "SuperApp" boasts to providing a more comprehensive application process for students with more participating universities.

BASICS class reaps rewards

The University of Massachusetts received the national award on behlaf of the University's efforts to educate students about the dangers of substance abuse and binge drinking.

BASICS from page 1

is growing though because those mandated through the program suggest it to their friends.

Linowski reports that the BASICS program has a high success rate in reducing high-risk drinking. Through the evaluation program, staff is able to follow the students for an additional six-months after their involvement with BASICS. They have found significant reductions in the high-risk behaviors among students.

The program's success is based on the non-judgment atmosphere that tailors to students' unique health behaviors, according to Linowski. She said that this technique works because staffers do not tell students that they should stop their behavior, but rather, you "elicit from the individual things they already know, so they come up with what works for them." This affects students' future decisions so they move "in the direction of lowered risk."

The BASICS team works with students to figure out the circumstances that cause substance abuse, asking questions such as "what happened," "who were you with," "what contributed to the situation" and "how can it be done more safely?" This approach meets the students half-way by assessing and planning with them instead of just ordering them about, Linowski said.

"When people are treated with respect and like adults, they appreciate it," Linowski said.

Many students within the BASICS program, however, disagree about the extent of the program's effectiveness for all students involved. Some of the students in the BASICS program have claimed to have just been "in the wrong place at the wrong time" when they were documented being in rooms with alcohol violations and subsequently ordered to enter the BASICS program.

"I thought BASICS was interesting and that it handed out a lot of interesting data and information to the students, but I don't know that it was exactly helpful for anything but giving back feedback to the students," said Aidan Griffin, a sophomore political science major and former participant in the BASICS program. "It is a program designed to make you think of your own consumption and to get you information about where your consumption puts you in relation to nationwide percentages."

Griffin added, "It shows you were you stand in terms of how your consumption can lead to alcoholism, but for many students it is basically just paying $100 to learn that you really don't have much of a problem."

Linowski said that what makes this program so special is that, not only is it non-judgmental and non-shaming, but it is evidence based. DARE is not an evidence based program, she said. This means there is no proof that going through the program will reduce the likelihood of one trying drugs and alcohol. BASICS, however, has clinical evidence proving it reduces high-risk behavior.

"We're not going to waste the time or money of the students or University on programs that don't work," Linowski said.

She adds that they will continue to run the program until there is no longer a need for it. Right now, according to Linowski, high-risk drinking on college campuses is still a problem.

She hopes that, after educating people, there will not be a need for the BASICS program.

Linowski also said that there has not been much advertisement for the program because of trouble keeping up with the amount of students who showed up for assistance. Now, they are fully staffed and considering advertisement to help as many students as possible.

Students can receive help on the third floor of University Health Services. Appointments can be made either on the phone (413) 577-5071 or online at the UHS Website.

Angela Hilsman can be reached at ahilsman@student.umass.edu

Grant seeks to raise awareness for suicide prevention on campus

PREVENTION from page 1

would not have tried to kill herself."

This year, UMass' University Mental Health Services division received a $300,000 grant towards suicide prevention that will help raise awareness about the serious mental and behavioral health issues facing college students just like this sophomore.

According to a release in 2006, when MHS received a $225,000 suicide prevention grant, they used it to follow what UHS officials have called a "gatekeeper model," developed by Syracuse University.

MHS intends to use this year's grant to continue following this model by further developing the ways in which those who frequently communicate with the student body can recognize at-risk students and get them help.

MHS's plans for the grant involve training campus staff, coaches, administration and students to become first responders – people able to see the signs of mental and behavioral health issues in students and get those students the professional support they need.

In a release sent by UHSCommunications and Marketing representative Karen Dunbar Scully, Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), Acting Administrator Eric Broderick said, "Nearly a quarter of a million students in colleges and universities each year attempt suicide."

Additionally, according to a release sent out in Nov. 2006 by UHS officials, "UMass Amherst surveys have shown that over 80 percent of [students] who sought mental health care said services helped them stay in school and improve academic performance."

"I wish I had talked to someone without an emotional connection to me," said the sophomore interviewed.

She continued by adding that "on top of everything that students have to deal with from family problems to academic issues and all the stresses that go with having a life, traumatic life-changing events can really put a person at dangerous low points.

While it is normal to feel sad at times, it can be hard to recognize when those sad points have gone too far. Training people as first-responders can make all the difference because it can prevent someone else from feeling alone enough to hurt themselves."

While UHS and MHS officials could not be reached for comment, Kerry Morrison, a licensed psychologist working at mental health services and the coordinator of the suicide prevention program, hosted a series of workshops in September training resident life staff on methods to help students who are struggling with mental health issues.

Training included role-playing, group discussions and distribution of facts and data on suicide rates among college students.

At the end of her workshop on Sept. 21, Morrison had stressed that she hoped the workshop would help UMass housing resident directors and resident assistants be more aware of the signs of suicide ideation.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

Kerry Morrison, director of suicide prevention program, lectures.

Autumn kicks off with Big E

New England's fall festival returned to western Massachusetts with its annual traditions of fun, food and games for the awaiting crowds that descended on the fairgrounds in Springfield.

Obama loses bid for U.S. Olympic location

BY PETER NICHOLAS
TRIBUNE NEWSPAPERS

In the run-up to the Olympic vote, the White House was getting a clear message from the architects of Chicago's bid: Balloting would be tight and a personal visit to Copenhagen from President Obama just might lock in a victory.

Leaders of Chicago's campaign for the 2016 Games had done some nose counting and were convinced the International Olympic Committee might well anoint Chicago as host, according to White House officials interviewed Saturday.

"The intelligence that we had from the U.S. Olympic Committee and Chicago bid team was that it was very close and therefore well worth our efforts," said Valerie Jarrett, a senior White House adviser. "The message was that ... a personal appeal from the president would make a huge difference."

In the end, Obama's whirlwind appearance before the IOC proved a disappointment. Chicago lost out to Rio de Janeiro, finishing last among the four finalists. Following the defeat, the White House is defending the trip as a worthy investment of the president's time. But the president and his advisors were not sold on the idea until just a few days before Air Force One took off for Copenhagen.

Earlier, Obama had agreed to engage in some quiet lobbying. Working from the White House, he placed calls to a half-dozen influential people, including IOC President Jacques Rogge. It quickly became clear that other heads of state were doing the same thing — especially the President of Brazil, Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva.

"It was apparent when he made those calls that Lula had been there earlier," said senior White House aide David Axelrod.

Phone calls were the easy part.

A knottier question was whether the president should travel to Copenhagen for the city's presentation Friday.

Within the White House, Jarrett relayed the argument by Chicago and U.S. Olympics officials that a presidential visit might carry the day. Jarrett's views on such matters carry great weight. A close friend of the president, she is also a Chicagoan and a strong proponent of the drive to deliver the Games.

In the spring, Jarrett told an IOC panel that the White House was prepared to lend enormous logistical support to the Games.

A complication was the health-care bill grinding through Congress. Health care is among the president's top domestic priorities. White House advisers wanted to avoid two scenarios. They didn't want the president to be in Copenhagen while lawmakers debated the bill on the House or Senate floor. Nor did they want the president to commit to going, only to pull out.

Rahm Emanuel, White House chief of staff, told U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., that he was reluctant for the president to go with a health care bill possibly headed to a vote.

So Obama hedged his bets.

Several weeks ago, he was in the Oval Office talking by phone with Chicago Mayor Richard Daley. The mayor wanted him to make the trip. The president told him he genuinely wanted to go, but was worried about his workload.

"He said, 'We have a lot of things going on here as you know, and I don't want to make a commitment that I can't keep,' " said Axelrod, who was in the room for the call. " 'So I'm not going to make any final decisions and will keep this open.' "

A few days later, Axelrod said, the president told his staff to send an advance team to Copenhagen just in case.

"It was always in his mind that he wanted to go and would go," Axelrod said. "But he needed to leave himself a little bit of room in case health care was on the floor."

Throughout, the Chicago team was pushing for the president to make the trip. Both Daley and Patrick Ryan, chairman of Chicago 2016, were among those who told the White House that the nose count showed a presidential visit might close the sale, Jarrett said.

"It's a secret ballot. You can't necessarily be certain that the people who tell you they'll vote for you ultimately will," Jarrett said. "So I'm sure they did the very best they could do to get the intelligence they had."

Others were also applying pressure. On Sept. 26, Rep. Bobby Rush, D-Ill., an old campaign rival from Chicago, saw the president at a Black Caucus dinner. When Rush urged him to make the trip, Obama was "noncommittal," the congressman said.

That weekend, the president made his decision. Aides monitoring health care legislation concluded the bill would not be up for a vote in the 24-hour period the president was overseas. So Obama privately told his staff that weekend he would go to Copenhagen, Jarrett said.

The official White House announcement came Monday.

"He felt comfortable based on where we were last weekend that for him to be away for a few hours would not have any impact," Jarrett said.

Jarrett flew back home with Obama on Air Force One. She said he was unfazed by the loss.

"We have plenty on our plate to do," she said. "He called the president of Brazil from Air Force One to offer congratulations, and by the time we landed in Washington, he was talking about health care."

Included in the film series are Wende Flicks: Lost Films from East Germany. The films commemorate the 20th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall, as seen here in ruins.

A German film series rebuilds, recounts wall way students in a classroom would. Programs like this benefit both students and teachers, noted Frackman and Lenshyn.

GERMAN from page 1

These seminars, according to Frackman and Lenshyn, provide new and interesting material for students, as well as provide teachers with opportunities to cultivate and improve teaching approaches.

Frackman had commented on the timing of the intensive German-language immersion weekend, as November 9th, 2009 marks the 20th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall.

The films studied at the conference were all selected from Wende Flicks: Lost Films from East Germany, a film series organized by the DEFA Film Library commemorating the enormous changes that took place in Germany 20 years ago.

Frackman continued on to note that Wende Flicks is part of a series of original events taking place on campus relating to the fall of the Berlin wall.

These will include the construction of a mock Berlin Wall that students will be encouraged to graffiti.

The intensive German-language immersion weekend was the result of a shared effort between the Virginia Chapter of the American Association of Teachers of German (AATG), the Goethe Institute in Washington D.C., Sweet Briar College and the DEFA Film Library.

Rachel Tumin can be reached at rtumin@student.umass.edu

Family tragedy spurs windshied invention

BY GRACE GAGLIANO
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

BRADENTON, Fla. — A family tragedy inspired a Bradenton resident to invent a product he hopes will save lives.

Jack Roe pursued a patent for transitional glass tinting for vehicle windshields after his 34-year-old daughter died in an automobile accident in 2006.

The 72-year-old said his daughter Dawn Roe died in a car accident in Plymouth, Ind., when her vehicle crashed into the back of a semi-truck, because of the morning sun's glare.

Roe said she did not see the semi stopped in her lane to make a turn, and the mother of four died at the scene.

"Every day I think about her," Roe said. "Time may heal some things but time will never heal the death of a child."

Roe couldn't help but think a windshield that automatically adjusts based on changing light conditions could have prevented his daughter's accident.

"It came to my mind almost the same day," said Roe, who is a retired automobile sales manager.

He also previously owned a TV and appliance store in Indiana.

His daughter died in February 2006, and by April of that year Roe was writing U.S. senators about his intent to pursue a patent for transitional glass that could be used for windshields.

"We have transitional lenses for our eyeglasses but not for our windshields," Roe wrote to Indiana Sen. Richard Lugar in April 2006.

Roe spent $110 to apply for a provisional patent last year, and this summer the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office issued that patent to Roe's transitional glass system.

Since receiving the patent-pending status in July, Roe has been pushing his product with major automakers in hopes they will buy into his invention.

"I want this to provide a financial cushion for my grandchildren," said Roe of Dawn's four children who range in age from 10 to 16.

Roe pitched the product to Chrysler, Ford and General Motors about a month ago.

In addition, Sen. Lugar wrote to the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration on behalf of Roe and his pursuit of the windshield system.

Ronald Medford, acting deputy administrator for NHTSA, responded to Lugar's letter in June and said the organization had no knowledge of an existing design for windshields.

"Such a design could have significant safety implications because a high-level of transparency is needed for driving visibility in all types of weather conditions," Medford wrote in the letter.

Rae Tyson, spokesman for the National Highway Transportation Administration, said Monday the organization is aware of Roe's patent but said he could not comment on its safety potential.

"Our safety standards are performance driven," Tyson said.

"If he was able to sell the idea to a manufacturer, it would be up to the manufacturer to determine or come to us with whether the window would meet applicable federal standards."

Roe said he will continue to pursue the transitional glass with automakers, but he may turn to manufacturers if the automakers don't invest in his patent.

Roe is confident his invention will eventually be bought and have significant safety implications for drivers.

"This is a life saver, there's no doubt about it," Roe said. "Anybody that's driven into a bright sun knows what I mean."

PUBLIC NOTICE: UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACCREDIATION

The University of Massachusetts Amherst will undergo a comprehensive evaluation visit November 1 – 4, 2009, by a team representing the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the New England Association of Schools and Colleges.

The Commission on Institutions of Higher Education is one of eight accrediting commissions in the United States that provide institutional accreditation on a regional basis. Accreditation is voluntary and applies to the institution as a whole. The Commission, which is recognized by the U.S. Department of education, accredits approximately 200 institutions in the six-state New England region.

The University of Massachusetts Amherst has been accredited by the Commission since 1932 and was last reviewed in October, 1998. Its accreditation by the New England Association encompasses the entire institution. For the past year and a half, the University of Massachusetts Amherst has been engaged in a process of self-study, addressing the Commission's Standards for Accreditation. An evaluation team will visit the institution to gather evidence that the self-study is thorough and accurate. The team will recommend to the Commission a continuing status for the institution; following a review process, the Commission itself will take the final action.

The public is invited to submit comments regarding the institution to:

Public Comment on the University of Massachusetts Amherst
Commission on Institutions of Higher Education
New England Association of Schools and Colleges
209 Burlington Road
Bedford, MA 01730-1433
E-mail: cihi@neasc.org

Comments must address substantive matters related to the quality of the institution. Comments will not be treated as confidential.

Written, signed comments must be received by November 4, 2009. The Commission cannot guarantee that comments received after that due date will be considered. Comments should include the name, address, and telephone number of the person providing the comments.

The Commission cannot settle disputes between individuals and institutions, whether those involve faculty, students, administrators, or members of other groups. Individuals considering submitting complaints against an affiliated institution should request the separate Policy and Procedures for the Consideration of Complaints Made Against Affiliated Institutions from the Commission office.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Crossing party lines

Matt Kushi

We here in America have a listening problem. No, not the old "Eh, what did you say, sonny?" hearing problem. It is the one that can be summed up in the old saying that "ignorance is bliss." We already know that the latter statement is false more times than not.

Over this past year, as America has hit a rough patch, it has become evident that we are hearing only what we wish to hear, like a child who does not want to go to bed. This is not only in our general society but in our government as well.

The business of politics is a sensitive business, no doubt. The manner in which the United States is to be run is no light matter. There always will be disagreements in the world of politics. That is how the political party system of America was born when this country was in its very infancy.

Though we are still young in age, how do you think we have survived for 233 years? Compromise. We have had disagreements as to how the United States should be run for its entire duration, but we have almost always been able to compromise enough to keep the Union intact.

The one time that we failed to compromise, what happened? The turbulent American Civil War from 1861-1865. It was in those five years that we learned just what kind of nation we were. We learned that we must find a way to reconcile our differences or forever be torn apart by hate and malice. It was then that we found that, as Abraham Lincoln said, "a house divided against itself cannot stand."

In the plight of the health care reform debate, we again find ourselves divided. Not as bad as the mid 19th century when slavery was the big elephant in the living room but one that has still managed to pit American against American on a smaller scale.

Just as we in society must be willing to put ourselves in someone else's shoes and remove the blindfold of ignorance before we judge, so to must our government. Today's officials need to be reminded that, though they may bear the title of Democrat, Republican, Independent or Green, they are still American politicians. In the end, they are part of the same team. They need to realize this.

What both sides of the spectrum, both Democrats and Republicans, must do is be willing to listen to the other side. We have allowed ourselves to become so divided over this matter. We also seem to have issues with the fact that President Barack Obama is indeed the president. We seem to be losing the perspective of who we really are.

Yes, we have our differing views on the role of government in our lives, but that is no excuse to act like spoiled children whether you are a civilian or a Congressman.

We are not Democrats and Republicans. We are Americans. We are represented by the same flag, song and country. Yes, we have our differing views on the role of government in our lives but that is no excuse to act like spoiled children, whether you are a civilian or a congressman.

To be frank, we have been acting like children and lunatics, from a Congressman shouting at the president during a speech to people comparing the Obama administration to Hitler's Nazi Germany. Both parties have been guilty of mudslinging. That is not the America I know. The America that I know is based on logic and debate, not hearsay and malicious accusations.

What we need to do, civilians and politicians alike, is listen to one another. Put yourself in someone else's shoes. Right now we are on two opposite poles on two different fronts.

The first front is the health care reform front. There are those that believe that it is a matter of equality and morality. There are those that think that it is a conspiracy to have more government regulation in our lives.

The second front is President Obama's administration itself. Some think he is the answer to all of the nation's problems and others think that he is a socialist.

What we need to do is find common ground on these issues. You do not have to like President Obama but at least respect the fact that he is our President. He is the American president. Not the Democratic party president but the American president.

As for health care reform, we need to be able to work together to find a solution. Congress needs more bipartisanship and the American public needs more understanding of the issue. Ignorance is not so blissful after all.

In my last column, I mentioned the idea of having one heartbeat. That's what we need in this country today. We need to have that one focus of making America even better than it is today. We must come together so that we are not torn apart.

The time for being childish and unreasonable is over. It is time to act like the men and women that we are, and deal with our differences as mature, responsible adults. It is time to put our country before ourselves.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu

Amherst tackles climate change

Eric Magazu

During this past weekend, Massachusetts Power Shift (MAPS), a coalition of students, professionals and concerned citizens, held a regional climate leadership training at Amherst College. Along with MAPS, Amherst 350, a local subsidiary organization, is seeking to band together Amherst citizens in preparation for Saturday, October 24, which is described as an International Day of Climate Action.

The goal of both of these organizations and their activities is to highlight the need for the government to take legislative, regulative and judicial action on promoting renewable energy. These steps are proposed in response to heightened global climate change concerns.

According to the Amherst 350 website, the foundation of the Amherst 350 campaign is centered on a statement by Dr. James E. Hansen, a prominent climatologist at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA). His statement indicates that the current international consensus on stabilizing the carbon dioxide (CO_2) level in the atmosphere on 450 parts per million (ppm), and that a number of 350 ppm is urgently needed. The current atmospheric level of CO_2 hovers at approximately 390 ppm.

On October 24, there will be demonstrations around the world, including on the Amherst Common, to highlight this information along with proposed list of actions to help address the situation. The Amherst section will feature people dressed up as leaves in order to attract attention to this situation in a visual manner.

According to the MAPS Website, the proposed policies are similar to ideas that have been mentioned in the past. These ideas include retrofitting automobiles and buildings to be more energy efficient, as well as a redistribution program to tax high polluting fossil fuel sites and transfer these funds in the form of rebates to greener energy sources.

These actions are quite similar, and perhaps even less drastic, than other solutions that have been proposed to combat global climate change. The questions that come before informed citizens are the effectiveness of these actions in conjunction with the possible side effects on other policy positions, such as in the areas of personal liberty and private property.

Activists have brought down that the climate situation has reached critical levels and that emergency action is needed immediately.

The necessary data that will need to be publicly presented is the fact that these elevated levels of carbon dioxide are not able to be handled by the current atmospheric situation of the earth. There can be counterarguments made that even with acceptance that human activity is directly responsible for elevated levels of CO_2, that the Earth has not been designed in such a manner that it cannot adjust its climate to accommodate this situation in a non-destructive manner.

The second objection to overcome is the necessary incursions on personal liberty that will inevitably occur as a result of legislative and regulative action. It may at first be assumed that the only people impacted are businesses that operate polluting industries. But in many cases these new regulations could have effects in other areas of life, such as the operation of small businesses, which could be impacted both in the paperwork needed and in higher costs for both energy, as well as certain materials that are priced in relation to energy prices. These policy changes can also have impacts on family farms and individual consumers.

There exists a certain degree of restrictions that will need to be placed on private property under some of these proposals. The traditional model was that private landowners hold stewardship over their own land, and that in general, even in the case of big businesses, it is a right that they retain and a foundational model of American liberty.

These concerns must be weighed against the need for action to be taken on CO_2 and climate change. In previous times, through their elected representatives, Americans have accepted regulative action taken by the government in order that a desirable common good occurs as a result. The benefits and costs must be laid upon the table and reviewed by citizens and legislators in a thorough two-way conversation. It is therefore incumbent upon the organizers of campaigns such as Amherst 350 to effectively make this case.

Activists have brought down that the climate situation has reached critical levels and that emergency action is needed immediately, and they have quoted Dr. Hansen as saying, "If humanity wishes to preserve a planet similar to that on which civilization developed and to which life on Earth is adapted, paleoclimate evidence and ongoing climate change suggest that CO_2 will need to be reduced from its current 385 ppm to at most 350 ppm."

This is obviously being treated as an urgent situation. Therefore it will be up to organizers such as Amherst 350 to present their evidence publicly. University of Massachusetts students and Amherst residents eagerly anticipate the demonstrations that will occur in just over two weeks on Saturday, October 24 on the Amherst Common.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

Where is the respect for our president?

Dan Rahrig

When I was very young, I remember my mother telling me to always be respectful of others, and to treat people with the same kind of basic decency with which you expect to be treated.

This isn't a strange concept. Most people have heard this message from a young age, either from their parents, their teachers or their religion. So why is it now that, in this country of diversity, opportunity and good will that one of the most basic tenets of a civilized society – respect – is being trampled without a second thought?

Today, we are seeing a troubling level of disrespect directed toward our president, a man who, while we can disagree with him on some issues, certainly should command our respect as the leader of the free world. Even George W. Bush, one of the most disliked and ill-regarded presidents in U.S. history, was never interrupted in the middle of an address to Congress by loud outbursts from the opposing party.

In my mind, Congressman Joe Wilson's behavior during Barack Obama's address last month was the height of rudeness and disrespect and is not the kind of behavior we as Americans should ever tolerate from our elected leaders. Yet, when the House of Representatives voted to discipline Wilson, Republicans dismissed it a "partisan stunt."

Partisan? Imagine if a Democrat had disrespected a Republican president in that manner. The GOP would be calling for that person's resignation. It isn't "partisan" to admonish a man who spits in our leader's face; it's just the right thing to do.

But Wilson's actions are only the tip of the iceberg in terms of the disgusting behavior toward President Obama. Even nine months after his inauguration, the Birther Movement, which asserts that Obama was not actually born in this country and therefore does not have a legitimate claim to the presidency, is still alive and well among certain segments of the population.

This movement of ignorance is not confined to a small set of nutjobs, either. It is a belief that is shared even by members in our armed services. In July, U.S. Army Major Stefan Frederick Cook received an order to deploy to Afghanistan, but he refused to go under the pretense that he believed Obama is not a natural-born citizen and, therefore, is not qualified to be commander in chief.

You can disagree with a leader on anything and everything they do or say – that's the beauty of living in a democratic society.

This ideology surpasses stupidity and speaks to something deeper – a current of ignorant bigotry and discrimination running through our country. If Obama was a white man born in Hawaii whose father was from a foreign country, would there really be a movement against his right to the presidency and calls to see his birth certificate (which, by the way, the U.S. government has released copies of multiple times)? I think not.

In politics, people like to refer to any issue of discrimination that is brought up as "pulling the race card" – but the issue of race isn't something that should be trivialized to the point where we believe it is disingenuous to bring it up when a situation warrants it. I'm not suggesting that all of the opposition to Obama and his policies is racist – it's not. But in the case of the Birther Movement, and in the case of weapon-touting protesters outside of Obama's speeches, it is ignorant to believe that there isn't an underlying tone of racism.

Is there anyone who honestly believes that the people with semi-automatic rifles out in front of Obama's town hall meetings on health care are just exercising their Second Amendment rights? If these kinds of things had ever occurred on this scale before, we would have looked upon them with disgust – so why are we allowing this kind of bigotry and disrespect to happen now?

And then of course there is the "fair and balanced" Fox News network, which seems to be on a mission to discredit the president with exaggerations and defamations. Media scrutiny of presidential administrations is not usually a bad thing – it keeps politicians honest. But in the case of pundits like Glenn Beck, who on more than one occasion has compared Obama's administration to the Third Reich and to socialist governments on his show, today's "scrutiny" of the Obama administration is ill-founded and misleading.

The kind of rhetoric used by Beck and others on the network make it clear that their issue is not only with Obama's policies – but with Obama as our president. After all, what has Obama done policy-wise to warrant Beck's claim that he "hates white people?"

While we as a society have been very critical of our leaders throughout our history, the amount of unfounded criticisms and shows of blatant disrespect toward our current president are unprecedented. You can disagree with a leader on anything and everything they do or say – that's the beauty of living in a democratic society. But these kinds of outlandish demonstrations and absurd claims are certainly not suitable (or even rational) forms of protest.

Whether you like it or not, Barack Obama has been elected as our president. Let's at least show him the respect he deserves.

Dan Rahrig is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at drahrig@student.umass.edu.

140 years later, Gandhi's legacy remains

Syed Akhtar

On Oct. 2, India celebrated its 140th birthday of the "Father of the Nation", Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi.

In most parts of the world, Gandhi is known for his non-violent method of fight against the British during India's fight for freedom and for starting Satyaghrah, a philosophy and practice of non-violent resistance. Most of the West knows about his involvement in India's freedom movement, but what people don't usually know about him is that Gandhi spent almost 20 years living in South Africa as an expatriate lawyer.

South Africa at the time was a British colony just like India was. Living in South Africa, Gandhi fought for the rights of Indians living there. To control their colony, British stripped the blacks of South Africa of their rights to own land in their own country, so much so that merely seven percent of the land was owned by them.

Gandhi's stay in South Africa had a huge impact on his life later because of what he saw in the suffering of Native Africans and Indians living there. Gandhi once supported the British in South Africa and believed if Indians living in South Africa supported the British, they would get a favor back from them and might be granted the citizenship and right to vote.

He supported the British at the start of South African War, and volunteered for the Indian Ambulance Corps, which looked after wounded British soldiers during the war. But after the war, the situation for Indians did not change, and discrimination against blacks and Indians continued like before.

Two major incidents in South Africa changed Gandhi forever. Travelling in a first class coach of a train with a valid ticket, Gandhi was asked to the leave the coach and move to the third class to make room for European passengers. Fighting for his self-pride and, in a way, the pride of the whole Indian population living under British Empire, Gandhi refused and was thrown off the train at Pietermaritzburg. He suffered many other hardships like most native and Indians living there at the time did as well. In another incident, Gandhi was asked to remove his turban in a court in the city of Durban and then asked to leave the court because of his color.

After seeing and suffering through the inequality in society, Gandhi had a moment of realization. There was nothing that was going to stop the British from doing things their way. The racism and prejudice were parts of the society. The British felt like they had the right to dictate, in another country, what a person should have or should not have. Along with other major developments, like the formulation of law by Transvaal government which would require the colony's Indian population to register themselves, led Gandhi to organize a mass protest on Sept. 11, 1906 where he adopted the philosophy of non-violence and started preaching Satyagrah.

Gandhi's aim was to take nonviolent, passive resistance to a new level where it would be truly effective.

Satyagrah comes from two Sanskrit words: Satya meaning the Truth and Agrah meaning firmness. Gandhi's aim was to take non-violent, passive resistance to a new level where it would be truly effective.

Gandhi, explaining his ideology, said, "Truth (satya) implies love, and firmness (agraha) engenders and therefore serves as a synonym for force. I thus began to call the Indian movement Satyagraha, that is to say, the Force which is born of Truth and Love or non-violence, and gave up the use of the phrase 'passive resistance,' in connection with it, so much so that even in English writing we often avoided it and instead used the word 'Satyagraha.'"

Gandhi's followers fought the British through Satyagrah. They defied British law and suffered the consequences for doing so instead of replying through violent means. After seven years of struggle in South Africa, the British South African General at the time gave into Indian demands and Gandhi's first successful mission was complete. After returning to India, Gandhi started preaching Satyagrah and helped organize the Indian National Congress to fight British for India's freedom and was a significant factor in forcing the British out of India in 1947.

Gandhi influenced many leaders around the world, but none more than Martin Luther King, who implemented Gandhi's ideology in his work during the Civil Rights Movement, fighting the segregation and inequality suffered by African-Americans for centuries.

But the time we live in now, so fragile, nothing is guaranteed about the safety of our life. There are two major wars occurring in Iraq and Afghanistan, along with many other disputes in which people kill one another. Other than the major wars there is the suffering of people of Palestine from Israel's occupation, the problem faced by those in Kashmir where the Indian army is constantly engaged with militants and hardship felt by the people of Swat Valley in Pakistan where Taliban and Pakistani armies have been engaged in fierce battle for control of land.

What has happened to the world that life is worth nothing for these poor people? Gandhi's principle, which once was a factor in helping India gain freedom from the British and African Americans succeed in the civil right movement has lost its meaning. On his birthday, Gandhi's name and legacy lives on but his ideology has found very little room even in India.

Syed Akhtar is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at sakhtar@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Harrelson attacks zombies, photogs

Raucous zom-com bucks gritty genre trends, casts infectious hold over weekend audiences

BY ANDREW SHERIDAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Every one of us has to live by our own set of rules. Some rules tell us how to behave socially, while others may guide our ethical decisions. In director Ruben Fleischer's maiden film "Zombieland," a young man named Columbus doesn't bother himself with guidelines of those sorts. He has written his own set of rules with a single distinct purpose: keeping himself alive in a land of the dead.

Fleischer's paints a comedic picture of a world overrun by America's favorite fiend in "Zombieland." While most non-sequel zombie films depict the outbreak and spread of a zombie epidemic (think "Resident Evil" and "Dawn of the Dead"), this one places viewers in the fallout, in a world where a virulent strain of Mad Cow Disease has already turned the U.S. into the Unites States of Zombieland.

The film follows a young man named Columbus, played by Jesse Eisenberg, whose fearful and neurotic nature make him an unlikely hero. Eisenberg narrates the story and lists off his rules of zombie survival, which seem plucked from a cache of horror-movie clichés (Rule number 3: always check the back seat).

Columbus soon joins up with a mismatched group of survivors, including the standoffish but beautiful Wichita, played by Emma Stone and the spritely Little Rock, "My Sister's Keeper" star Abigail Breslin and set off towards an unclear goal of finding "home." The survivors are known to one another only by the names of their intended destinations (i.e. Wichita and Columbus) and trust is a major theme that runs throughout the movie.

Eisenberg, who seems to channel Michael Cera throughout most of "Zombieland," does a good job at being the reluctant hero, but calling him the star of the film would not be exactly accurate. The real star of the show is Woody Harrelson, who plays the zombie-killing savant Tallahassee. The Twinkie-loving cowboy upstages the action in a good way, and according to Columbus, "When Tallahassee goes zombie killing, he sets the standard for 'not to be fked with'."

Harrelson also notoriously garnered attention after production wrapped for "Zombieland," after an abrasive run-in at La Guardia airport. An aggressive photographer prompted him to launch into what he later claimed was zombie survival mode. Clearly, the paparazzo in question hadn't caught a sneak peak at any trailers for the impending film.

Back in "Zombieland," director Ruben Fleischer doesn't skimp on the gore when it comes to the shambling dead, and the death scenes often seem over the top. Scenes of zombies feeding are particularly gruesome, and whenever the survivors decide to kill one of the infected, they see it through. The levels of blood are significant but not overwhelming, and despite the brain smatterings it is not by most standards a scary movie. Those who are particularly squeamish should most likely stay away, but "Nightmare on Elm Street" this is not.

While the fear factor in "Zombieland" is not as high as it is in others in the ghoulish genre, horror is not exactly the point. The fact that the film shies away from the gritty, "28 Days Later"-style scares draws instant comparison to 2004's zom-com romp, "Shaun of the Dead," but such a parallel is not quite fair. While "Shaun" was a dark comedy and a parody of the zombie genre, "Zombieland" is an extension of it, carving out its own particular vein of "action-zombedy."

This may seem like an odd combination of concepts, but "Zombieland" makes it work beautifully. The action is top-notch, with Woody Harrelson blasting his way across the country in style, bringing a sick sense of humor to the zombie-killing business. The film keeps the action fresh throughout the story, and whether the weapon is a banjo or an Escalade, de-animating the damned has never been so funny.

The human side of "Zombieland" is also well done, making it hard not to root for the survivors no matter what circumstances they find themselves in. Fans of zombie fiction will certainly be pleased by this farcical romp through the land of the living dead, and anyone who doesn't mind seeing a bit of brains would do well to make the trip to "Zombieland."

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at AsherL@student.umass.edu

Ruben Fleischer's "Zombieland" takes a farcical romp through the land of the living dead, and solicits lively performances from stars Woody Harrelson and Jesse Eisenberg.

Enthusiastic spectators walloped and cheered at Pearl Street last Saturday in anticipation of Man Man and opening act and former Amherst natives, Who Shot Hollywood.

Man Man unleashes fearsome package, brings along weird toys

BY GARTH BRODY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It was a packed house Saturday night at the Northampton Pearl Street Night Club, and headliners Man Man burned it down, laughing all the way.

Even before Man Man began to roll out their strange stage set-up (more on that later), the shoulder-to-chin crowd was primed and ready from the pleasant surprise that were openers Who Shot Hollywood, who apologized in advance for their band's name. For a high school band from right here in Amherst, they played some unexpectedly infectious nerd rock, complete with tongue-in-cheek punk energy and a healthy amount of noise. The bassist/vocalist, Lucas Kendall, hopped on and off the bass drum more than a few times during their short set, screaming at intervals to the crowd and to other band members.

And then, quietly (aside from the war chants and whoops called from enthusiastic spectators) and dressed in street clothes, the members of Man Man carried their equipment onto the stage. Besides each member's main instrument – there was a marimba for the guitarist, a set of vibes for the saxophone player, a synthesizer for the bassist and a drum each for the guitarist and the keyboardist. And then there was the keyboardist.

Honus Honus's slender Rhodes electric piano – sitting perpendicular to the crowd, face to face with the drum kit served as both an instrument and the work desk of a mad scientist. It held among other doodads doubtless picked up on his travels, a cannister full of colorful feathers, a small brass bowl, a spoon and a squeaky toy given to him moments before they began their set. Suffice it to say that every one of these knick-knacks had its moment in the spotlight over the course of

See MAN MAN on page 6

Robotic thriller goes through the motions, rusted around edges

BY KATE MACDONALD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Imagine a world in which no one gets sick or hurt, where crime is non-existent and discrimination is a thing of the past. Everyone is attractive, has a perfect body far and wide, everyone gets along flawlessly with others. Wars are still fought, but no soldiers die.

This utopia, set in Boston, provides the backdrop for Jonathan Mostow's latest sci-fi action flick, "Surrogates." The director, known for his work on "Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines," adapted the storyline from the five-issue comic book series of the same name, written by Robert Venditti.

In "Surrogates," the audience is plunged into the futuristic world of 2017, which, through the use of robots widely referred to as surrogates, widespread peace and harmony seems to have at last been attained. The human operators of surrogates have a rigid life that consists of waking up, eating food and plugging in to a high-tech machine by which they control human-like robots using brain waves from the comfort of their very own beds. But as surrogates, life holds limitless possibilities and experiences.

Bruce Willis stars as FBI agent Tom Greer who, with the help of his partner Agent Peters (Radha Mitchell), is charged with saving the surrogate way of life from being destroyed by a mysterious antagonist, destroying not only the surrogates, but also their human counterparts as well. The explanation of how this occurs is shoddy at best, with a surrogate engineer exclaiming, "Kablooey!" when telling Greer that the bots' software is being fried by an unknown weapon.

When the man who created the surrogates loses his son to the surreptitious villain, Greer and company are sent into a tailspin not only in their professional lives, but within personal relationships. With members of his own agency, the military, and a small regular human contingent working against him, Greer must not only fight to save his marriage, but the fate of surrogates and humans alike.

Many plot devices and situations in "Surrogates" seem to be taken directly from other popular futuristic flicks, such as "Minority Report" and "The Matrix." However, there are astounding similarities to 2004's "I, Robot," as well, right down to the techno-phobic cop's personality. The themes of technology ruining humanity, of conspiracy theories that involve both big business and hidden military agendas are commonplace to the genre, but Mostow's film brings relatively nothing new to the sci-fi genre as a whole.

See SURROGATES on page 6

Aging action star Bruce Willis leers menacingly at the camera, but has difficulties transcending his lackluster source material in the promising, though ultimately repetitive sci-fi thriller, "Surrogates."

"Juno" star Ellen Page plays against type as an angsty teen girl with indie sensibilities in Drew Barrymore's much-lauded directorial debut, "Whip It!"

Barrymore unleashes roller derby mayhem

By Haley Navarro
Collegian Staff

Drew Barrymore's directorial debut, "Whip It!" does not disappoint. The film follows a young girl who is forced to compete in beauty pageants by her mother but secretly (and illegally) skates in roller derby at night.

What makes "Whip It!" come alive is the camera angles shot during the roller derby scenes. Since roller derby is a fast-paced sport, Barrymore did a superb job of making sure that the audience feels as though they are in each bout with the skaters. The movie is about half storyline, half derby-practice footage, which, while seemingly a disadvantage for those inclined to favor storyline, serves its purpose, striking a good balance between storyline and action.

However, there are times in "Whip It!" when skaters smack the floor face first and come up with all their makeup intact, pulling the believability of the film into question. Still, perhaps the award for best believable nosebleed goes to Drew Barrymore herself, for swallowing some fake blood during a roller derby scene.

Besides these bouts, the cast is what brings "Whip It!" – adapted for the screen from Shauna Cross' novel, "Derby Girl" – to life. In the main character role, "Juno" star Ellen Page plays Bliss Cavendar, a small-town Texas girl who lives in mediocrity until she sees a flyer for the Austin Roller Derby and decides to try out for the team. Her character is largely relatable to the audience: she has problems trying to please her beauty pagent-obsessed mother, while still trying to do something that inspires her. She also dates a dude (Landon Pigg) in a band.

Other supporting roles include Drew Barrymore as Smashley Simpson, one of Bliss' fellow roller derby teammates. Rapper Eve co-stars as Rosa Sparks, while real-life stuntwoman (and "Death Proof" star) Zoë Bell appears as Bloody Holly. "Whip It!" is also lent the fantastic talents of two Saturday Night Live cast members – alum Jimmy Fallon serves up plenty of snark as 'Hot Tub' Johnny Rocket, while cast member Kristin Wiig turns sympathetic as Bliss' pseudo-mentor, Maggie Mayhem. In the tradition of roller derby, these characters were only referred to as their "derby names" and most were given little to no back story.

A surprisingly coherent Juliette Lewis pops up in "Whip It!" as Iron Maven, a rival roller derby team leader who quickly positions herself as the antagonist to Bliss. After trying out for the derby team in Austin after seeing them compete the week before, Bliss' Barbie-themed skates in tote - makes the team, and earns the fearsome mantle, "Babe Ruthless."

Miraculously, she is has a natural talent for skating. Bliss soon trades in her Barbie-themed skates for a pair of Riedell's with her tips she earns from working at a local barbeque joint.

The rest of "Whip It!" chronicles Bliss' life trying to balance working, lying to her parents about her whereabouts (she claims she's doing SAT prep) and improving at roller derby. "Whip It!" does seem to lag at some junctures, and the film's slow pacing is counteracted by the excitement that characterizes the film's derby scenes.

Bliss' sassy best friend Pash (Alia Shawkat of "Arrested Development"), provides the comedic foil for Page, who continues to play the same angst-ridden part we saw in "Juno," and again in 2008's "Smart People."

Shawkat is the embodiment of any best friend: she drives Bliss to the derby for the first time, she gives Bliss her tips when Bliss doesn't get any and she still secretly supports Bliss when she's mad at her. She and Bliss tango around the Oink Joint (where they both work), and later, Bliss holds Pash's hair back when she's drunk. They have a reciprocal, model friendship, and after getting into a fight, are not too proud to say when they're sorry.

Surprisingly, Jimmy Fallon's role as a derby announcer is meticulously placed: Who knew Jimmy Fallon was actually funny? His commentary on the world of the skaters plays off of their derby names, with crude and sometimes hilarious results. Though Drew Barrymore is in the movie herself, she has a relatively small role that serves to help keep the spotlight situated on Ellen Page.

"Whip It!" is one of those quirky movies. Primarily classified as comedy, it also features some serious moments and footage of roller derby. There seems to be no target demographic, but older generations might not get the puns with the derby names, or some of the pop culture references. However, "Whip It!" is one of those "10 out of 10" movies and has a little something for everybody.

Haley Navarro can be reached at hnavarro@student.umass.edu.

Hipster crowd assailed by wall of noise and fury at Pearl Street

MAN MAN from page 5

the evening.

Between setting up and starting the set, Man Man underwent a transformation backstage. Disappearing from the stage in jeans and t-shirts and hoodies, they emerged in their performance with uniforms – white athletic clothing and war paint, ready for the racquetball massacre of 1825.

The set commenced feeling almost tame, building slowly as rhythms ricocheted from Honus to Chang Wang to Pow Pow until they reached their full force. Not that they ever got that loud. They didn't need to. The power of Man Man, after all, can not be measured by the wall of sound they push at you. Theirs is the power to rouse the spirits of the audience, turning the character of the rock club to some sinister psychedelic religious revival meeting.

Each member sang, or rather chanted, in just about every song. And between the crashing and the chanting could be heard the impromptu screaming of an errant band member or fan. And the nature of Man Man's music is such that each and every stomping foot, bellowing drunkard or squeaking toy fits perfectly into the framework of their musical nonsense.

The well-rehearsed spontaneity between the five musicians on stage kept the show dynamic and unpredictable, without slipping into self-indulgent noodling. Within the tight and tricky structures of each song, the band members found time to throw water onto the swaying masses below or elbow the keyboard for a bit of playful dissonance. At one point, Honus and the drummer, and Pow Pow, traded timed leaps, still holding down their respective stations, in an overwhelming display of showmanship.

Equally apparent as their musical spirit and skill Saturday night was Man Man's weird and dark sense of humor, which is surprising, because they don't banter between songs; in fact, they don't do anything between songs. There is no between songs. Their humor surfaced, instead, during the unending medley of a performance. For one song, Honus dressed himself (so quickly you could hardly notice) in a sparkling blue dress, proceeding to stand on his bench and dance like a lunatic while he sang. Later, he held his spoon over a large metal pot, leering around the room with giddy anticipation, before dropping it in at an appropriately dramatic moment in the song.

And so they continued, throwing one sound against another, all the while grinning and yelling and sweating and jumping around. The set ended, fittingly, after about 40 seconds of impossibly timed, coordinated band crashes. They struck the last one and slunk off as if escaping from a recent act of vandalism.

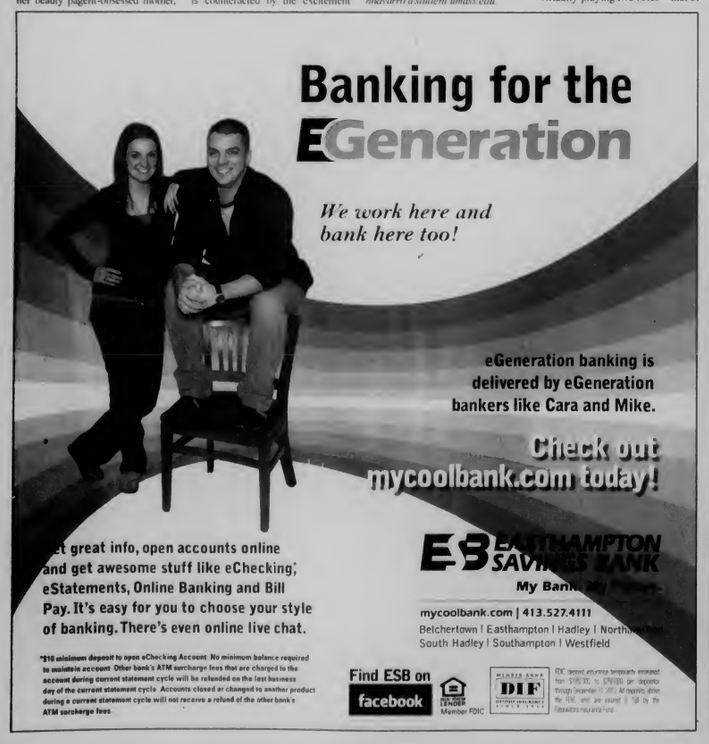
There was one piece of miscellany on Honus' keyboard that never was moved from its perch or even struck with a drumstick: a small pink skull, gazing into the crowd. Maybe he just forgot to use it. Or maybe he is saving it for when Man Man play the apocalypse.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu.

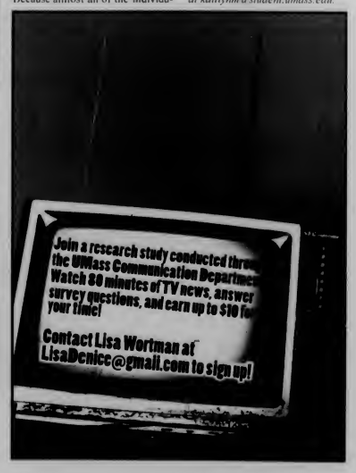
Characterized by their dark humor and penchant for bringing along eclectic objects – such as a cannister full of colorful feathers and a spoon – Man Man played a rousing set, fit for an apocalypse.

Lush trees, urban slums form futuristic settings in 'Surrogates'

SURROGATES from page 5



That being said, there are many high points to the movie. Willis, having honed his acting chops in many '90s action thrillers such as "Die Hard" and "Pulp Fiction," shows his versatility as an actor, virtually playing two roles – that of a toupeed, emotionless surrogate, and conversely, a bald, scared cop on the verge of divorce.



The cinematography of "Surrogates" is advanced, with impressive, multi-angled action shots that capture the thrill of helicopter and car chases from both air and eye level. Great shots of the city of Boston are also on display, bringing the audience to a familiar city (thankfully) not riddled with futuristic buildings or vehicles. The only notable exception is that half of Dorchester, where the technology-hating human contingency survives, looks like a war-ravaged slum, while the other half is extremely luscious, with grasses, trees and other scenic features, which are blatantly supposed to show the differences between those with technology in Boston and those in touch with their natural roots.

There are, of course, amazing special effects showing the technology present in this 2017 setting. However, even they can't save "Surrogates" from its flaws. Because almost all of the individuals were robots, the film inherently cannot delve far into the depths of the main characters, which severely hinders its plot. This fact alone makes the dialogue, which is corny and outdated at times, stiff and hard to follow. Though a big plot twist provides entertainment, various plot holes and inconsistencies leaves a sour taste in the mouth.

Perhaps Mostow's action would have been better received if its obvious message had been further developed: that the human race is doomed if we depend on technology in all aspects of our lives. Because of constant scene changes that occur without apparent plausibility and the many questions the audience is left with at the end of the movie, this message is ambiguous. What is clear by the time the credits roll at the end of "Surrogates" is that some of the lines from the movie are relevant. The film closes with the line, "It appears, at least for now, we are on our own." "Surrogates" is a movie best left alone.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

Running back Sean Jellison scored on an 81-yard kickoff return in a game that saw No. 6 UNH scored its 30 points in a span of just under five minutes in the 57-7 blowout of Towson. The Wildcats are unbeaten in four games this season.

Turnovers doom the Tribe against UNH

FOOTBALL from page 10

goals earlier in the game. The Tribe collected a season high 472 total offensive yards, compared to the Wildcats' 283 offensive yards.

Archer topped his performance from last week against Delaware and completed a season high 35 passes for 354 yards. He is averaging 226.6 yards per game.

William & Mary's ultimate downfall was turnovers. Archer's lone interception in the game led to an 80-yard drive down the field by Whitney for a touchdown in the first quarter. The Wildcats were also able to capitalize on a fumble by the Tribe, which also led to another Villanova touchdown.

Villanova will have another difficult game as they will face No. 6 New Hampshire. William & Mary will hope to return to their winning ways as they will travel to face Northeastern Saturday.

UNH TOO MUCH FOR TOWSON

No. 6 New Hampshire extended their winning streak over Towson to six straight with ease, winning 57-7.

The win marked a record in Johnny Unitas Stadium history for the largest margin of victory by an opponent.

The Wildcats were relentless in the first quarter against Towson, taking a 30-0 lead, scoring all 30 points in the span of 3:50 minutes.

UNH (4-0) was solid on all sides of the ball as they blocked a Towson punt on their first possession of the game, which set up a seven-yard run by Chad Kackert. The Tigers' next punt led to a safety from a botched snap. Kick returner Sean Jellison returned the free kick for an 81-yard touchdown return. The play earned him CAA Special Team Player of the Week.

Towson (1-2) was unable to overcome all of the turnovers it caused as their quarterbacks threw a combined six interceptions as well as a fumble.

In a game pitting two underachieving teams, Towson will travel to Kingston to take on Rhode Island.

Juan Pacheco can be reached at jcpacheco@student.umass.edu.

GW and Charlotte head conference games

Forward Ryan Richter leads the Explorers with three goals and an assist this season. La Salle has three wins and five losses this season. Richter's play has kept the Explorers afloat in the conference.

Matchup between the Colonials and the 49ers has major weight on conference standings

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Correspondent

With the Atlantic-10 set to begin its conference play this coming weekend, teams have begun to prepare for their upcoming matches.

Easily the biggest game of the weekend will be Charlotte taking on George Washington. The 49ers, who sit at the top of A-10 , take on the Colonials, who are right behind them. George Washington(6-3-0) finished off non-conference play with a 3-0 shutout over Rider. Though to defeat Charlotte (6-1-2), the Colonials have to readjust their strategy. The 49ers are on an offensive tear as of late, defeating No. 3 Wake Forest in the process.

Another strong matchup is between Duquesne and the always dangerous La Salle. The Dukes (5-3-1) take on a Rams team that has been scoring goals left and right thanks to several of their key players – most notably Ryan Richter. The playing field, however, seems to be even as La Salle (3-5-1) will be on the road against Duquesne, who are undefeated at home during non-conference play.

It should be an explosive weekend as conference play opens up, and it shall be seen whether non-conference records hold true.

CHARLOTTE STREAK BREAKERS

It didn't take long for Charlotte's soccer team to prove to the nation that it is an offensively-charged problem for opposing teams. The 49ers upset No. 3 Wake Forest on Sept. 29 by a final tally of 3-1.

Charlotte (6-1-2) ended the Demon Deacons' 46-game unbeaten streak against non-conference teams. This was the 49ers' first victory over a ranked opponent since Nov. 6, 1994 when they shot down No. 1 South Carolina, also by a final score of 3-1.

The match against Wake Forest was an intense battle for both sides. While Charlotte struck first (and second for that matter) blood against the Demon Deacons, Wake Forest put the pressure back on when they scored in the 61st minute.

The first goal of the game came from sophomore Evan James who blasted a goal into the back of net, off of a long cross from forward Andres Cuero.

While freshman Jennings Rex gave the 49ers some insurance after heading the ball into the goal, the Demon Deacons came right back with a strike from Andy Lubahn. His goal was scored 19 seconds after Rex's header.

Redshirt freshman Owen Darby finished the game off however, netting a late score. Darby's goal was the last of the match and the finishing touch that Charlotte needed.

The finish against Wake Forest seemed to inspire the 49ers to charge forward in their season, as they shutdown their last non-conference foe, Furman, by a score of 1-0.

Charlotte still stands at the top of the Atlantic-10 table, and seem to have nothing in its way as they move forward into conference play.

La Salle's offensive lead by Richter

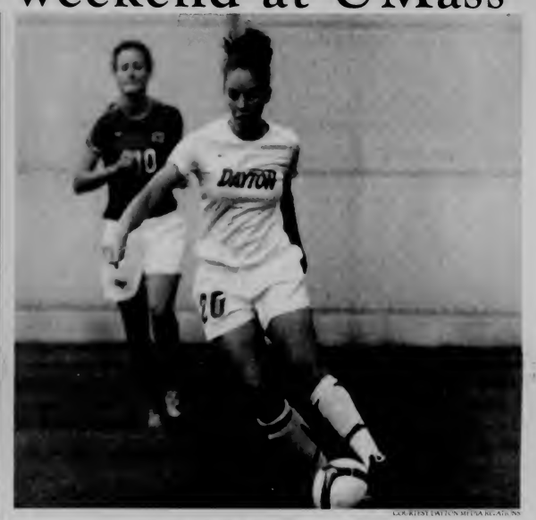
Seven minutes, thirty-five seconds. That's all La Salle and junior Ryan Richter needed to warm up before their Oct. 3 shut down on Marist. Richter had a hand in three of the four Explorer (4-5-1) goals , one of which was his own strike.

The first goal of the match came from sophomore Dan Korenyi. Korenyi scored off a corner kick cross from Richter. Little did the Explorers know that Richter was going to figure into the offensive charge later in the game.

Following Korenyi's well-placed strike, midfielder Nick Dundon contributed to the game's effort with his score, made off of a foul.

One minute more was all the Explorer's needed the close the game up, as freshman Jeff Pio put one in the back of the net to finish off La Salle's early-on scoring. Pio's goal was similar to the first, as Richter crossed the ball from the corner to Pio.

A final goal was added to La Salle's tally. Richter used his offensive force on Marist with a goal in the 69th minute.



The lone goal for the Red Foxes was scored by junior Joe Touloumis in the 53rd minute. This was Touloumis' first goal of the year.

Much inspiration has come from this match for the Explorers and will surely pump the team up for their conference opener against Duquesne this Friday.

Richter, who led the game with an offensive charge, is currently tied for sixth place in goals scored throughout the A-10.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribner@student.umass.edu.

49ers win this past weekend at UMass

Jenica DeWolfe and Dayton lead the Atlantic 10 Conference with a 10-2 record. DeWolfe has four goals this season for the Fliers who are on a seven-game win streak.

Goals from four different players lead the 49ers to two A-10 wins this past weekend

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Correspondent

Charlotte's Atlantic 10 women's soccer team recorded its 20th straight win this past weekend with victories over the University of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. These two wins also marked the 49ers' third consecutive shutout.

Charlotte (10-2, 4-0 A-10) started its dominant play while hosting the Rams (3-9-1, 2-2 A-10) on Friday night. Hailey Beam, Oni Bernard, Lena Suarez and last week's co-player of the Week Whitney Weinraub were the four players to contribute goals. Beam's 32nd career goal, scored in the seventh minute of play off of a corner kick, moved her into second place in Charlotte's all-time goals scored list. She also moved up this list into sixth place with her 27th career goal late in the second half. Weinraub also leads her team this season with nine goals. Sophomores Bernard and Suarez both scored for the second time this season.

The 49ers' defense also stood strong during this game, allowing only nine shots on goal total. The victory was Charlotte's seventh shut out of the season.

Sunday's 4-0 victory over the Minutewomen (3-6-2, 2-2) increased Charlotte's consecutive wins to 20. Once again, four players scored for the 49ers – Hailey Beam, Danielle Mayeaux, Kirby Stenard and India Winford. Charlotte's offense dominated with 24 shots, compared to Massachusetts' eight shots. The scoring started in the 18th minute as Beam scored for the second time this weekend. Four minutes later, Mayeux contributed a goal of her own. Charlotte did not show mercy as Stenard scored yet another goal seven minutes later. Winford wrapped up the scoring in the 68th minute of play.

The 49ers' defense was not to be outplayed; goalkeeper Lauren Brown recorded her third straight shut out of the season. The impressive weekend of play keeps Charlotte undefeated in the A-10 conference.

Flyers yet to be Beaten

Dayton's women's soccer team (8-0-4, 4-0), along with Charlotte, are the only two undefeated teams in the A-10. With victories over Fordham and La Salle this past weekend, the Flyers proved their worth in the conference.

Freshman Alysha Mallon posted the first goal of the game right before the first half ended. Senior Lauren MacCormick set up a perfect assist to give Mallon her first collegiate goal. The score remained unchanged until the 73rd minute, when junior Jerica DeWolfe took a tough shot from 20 yards out, giving the Flyers a 2-0 advantage.

The Rams (3-9-1, 2-2) did not give the victory up easily, outshooting Dayton 7-6. However, Flyer goal-keeper Katherine Boone saved three close shots. This was Boone's third consecutive shutout.

La Salle (6-5-2, 0-3-1) took an early lead in Sunday's game, keeping the score at 1-0 throughout the first half and most of the second as well. However, Dayton tied up the game in the 81st minute with a hard-earned goal by Junior Kelly Blumenschein. When the first attempt at a goal from a corner kick failed, Blumenschein stepped in and made sure she finished the play. Although the Flyers outshot the Explorers 24-6, the score remained unchanged, forcing the game into overtime.

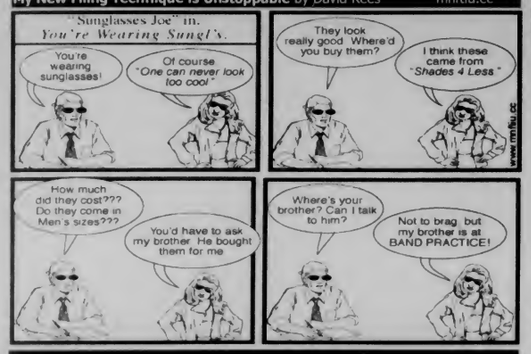
With four seconds left in overtime, senior Mandi Bäck netted the winning goal. This is not the first time Bäck saved a game this season. In last week's game against La Salle, she also scored one of the goals to bring the Flyers into the lead.

Temple Struggles in Conference Play

Temple (4-7-2, 0-4-0) still has yet to win a game in the conference, with two losses this past weekend against Richmond and George Washington.

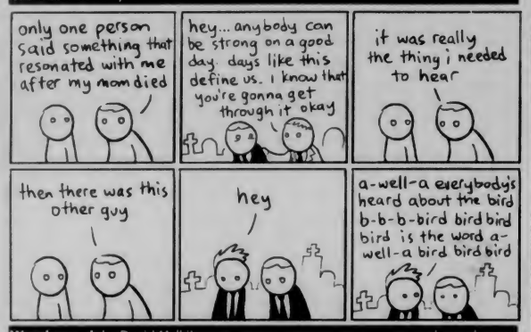
Neither Temple nor Richmond scored in the first half of play last Friday. Richmond (7-5-1, 3-1-0) opened up the scoring with a goal in the 49th minute, followed by another in the 82nd minute. Down by two goals, Sophomore Nikki Conn attempted to even up the score with a goal assisted by junior Sara Scheid. Although the Owls continued to outshoot the Spiders, they could not come back from the deficit.

Sunday proved to be just as negative as George Washington (4-4-4, 1-1-2 A-10) also defeated Temple.



The Owls, after remaining goalless in the first half, took the lead in the second half. Sophomore Allie Yurkovic scored off of a corner kick, putting Temple up 1-0. The Colonials answered with a game-tying goal in the 67th minute. George Washington scored again two minutes later, making the score 2-1. The Owls could not generate offense, giving George Washington the win.

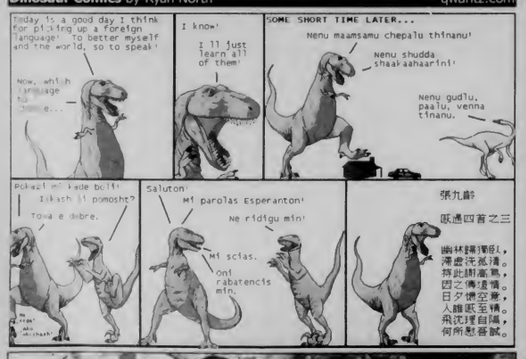
Goal-keeper Kara Williams had five saves, but that was not enough to help Temple to a win. This weekend's defeats mark the fourth consecutive loss for the Owls, after being beaten by Rhode Island and Dayton in the first week of conference play.



Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu

COMICS

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees — mnftiu.cc



Chainsaw Suit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Wondermark by David Malki! — wondermark.com

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

Part-time Personal Care Attendant, about 10-12 hours/week. Flexible hours, Please call Patrick. (413)-275-7928

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $99 Includes Hotel, Bus, and Clubs montrealexpress.net (781)979-9001

SERVICES

Resume $27 ruby.sc@gmail.com

FOR RENT

Nice 5 bedroom house, music room, washer/dryer, on bus line, ample parking near UMass. $1,875+ per month. Skibiski Realtors (413)-586-1827

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.

Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com

Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

UMass Outing Club & Alumni Association Brings you:

Radical Reels Tour 2009!

A part of the Banff Mountain Film Festival

Tuesday, Oct. 6th, 2009

Doors @ 7pm, Films @ 8pm

Student Union Ballroom

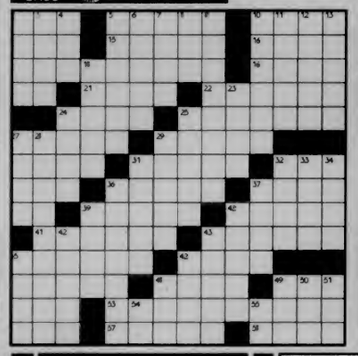
$5 Students (with ID)

$10 General Public

Get tickets at TIX:

Student Union 317 (413.545.0412)

The Radical Reels Film Tour complements the Banff Mountain Film Festival World Tour, and focuses on dynamic, high-adrenalin films featuring sports such as skiing, climbing, kayaking, BASE jumping, snowboarding and mountain biking.



ACROSS

1. Not worst
5. Find fault
10. Snatch
14. Chocolate cookie
15. Batman's sidekick
16. Start over
17. Narrow-minded
19. Computer symbol
20. Meadow
21. Cobs of corn
22. Shoot for
24. Not difficult
25. A large-headed turtle
26. A craving to drink
29. He runs for exercise
30. China grass
31. A unit of electrical energy
32. Egg cells
35. Weapons
36. Awaken
37. Con game
38. ___ green
39. Assuredness
40. Not fresh
41. Ability
43. Purloined
44. Keep from happening
46. Gush
47. Lasso
48. Absent without leave
49. Resort
52. Corrosive
53. Contemporaries
56. Blue-green
57. Explode
58. Seaweed
59. Parisian airport
60. Spiteful
61. Hammer or saw

DOWN

1. Be in an agitated emotional state
2. Coastal raptor
3. Stiff hair
4. Also
5. Bosom
6. A large low horse-drawn wagon
7. Fabrics made from goat hair
8. Minimum (archaic)
9. Snarl
10. Influenza (archaic)
11. Something done in return
12. Love intensely
13. Boo-boo
18. Rent
23. Wise one
24. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
25. A drunk
26. Snare
27. Rabbit
28. Of no importance
29. A combat on horseback
31. United or combined
33. Sheltered spot
34. Ends a prayer
36. First Nobelist in Physics
37. Put away
39. Supplication
40. Ancient upright stone
42. In a zealous manner
43. Fair
44. An ancient Athenian philosopher
45. An Indycar or F1 car
46. Used a broom
48. Excretory opening
49. Fodder holder
50. Jump up and down
51. Freudian stage
54. Equal Rights Amendment
55. Make lace

A lot of people are afraid of heights. Not me – I'm afraid of widths.

- Steven Wright.

College Ninja by Stephanie Ressic

Labrat by Richard Martelly

SUDOKU

	4		7
		2	9					4
1				8			5
					6	3
6								1
8	2			1		4
						9	4	5
4	1
				7	8	2

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

The Oakland Raiders need a new head coach. Opportunities are just opening up for you.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20

There's no idea you could have that would be worse than "Battleship: the Movie."

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19

The Flu has infected one of the Backstreet Boys. We're all doomed.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20

It's not that hard to be recognized when Twitter accounts are becoming street names.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21

Your web addiction is directly related to how funny you walk.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22

Steamy nightmares starring Don Imus foreshadow insanity. You've been warned.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22

Michael Moore is making his next movie to answer one question: "Where's my burrito?"

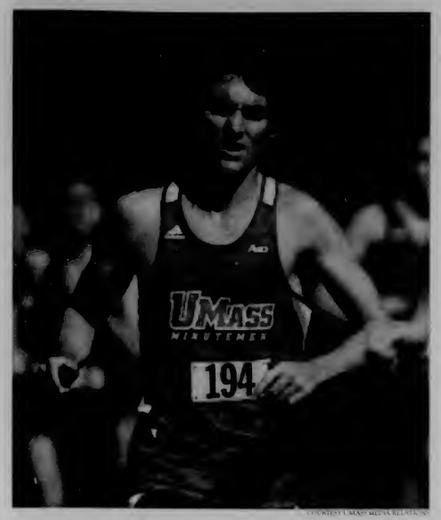
virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

Fires are frowned upon – unless you're burning Lindsay Lohan's new clothing line.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22

Put yourself in someone else's shoes – just not their gym shoes.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21



Challenge the world's negativity by calling diabetes "live-betes."

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

The source of all that is good is somewhere in Nickelodeon's 90's TV programming.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

"Pick-me-ups" do not include facelifts. Now go home and think about what you've done.

Courtesy UMass Media Relations

Senior Andrew McCann (72nd) made his third-straight top-five finish for the Minutemen this season, following Jonathan Pierce (37th) and Kevin Johnson (42nd).

Minutemen finish eighth at Paul Short Invitational

Daniel Herberholz
Collegian Correspondent

With the lowest spread between runners' finishing times at the tournament, the Massachusetts men's cross country team placed eighth at last weekend's 36th annual Paul Short Run.

The Run – a regional convergence of high school and collegiate runners – took place in Bethlehem, Penn.

A top-five runner last season for the Minutemen, senior Jonathan Pierce (24:27), improved by 26 seconds from his pace last year. His time placed him at 37th out of the 386 collegiate men's gold division 8K runners.

UMass Athletics named Pierce UMass Athlete of the Week on Monday for his performance.

Indiana University took first place in men's gold at the Run, with nationally ranked Iona College (No. 7) and North Carolina State rounding out the top three.

No other team, however, had a smaller spread among its runners' times than Massachusetts' 25 seconds. Indiana and Iona both were within sight in that category, but the rest of the top 10 finishers – as well as the field – had wider margins.

"We went out to try and get ourselves a good assessment on where we stood in the regional picture, and we were at the top edge of where we hoped to be," said UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien.

Junior Kevin Johnson (24 minutes, 30 seconds) also earned points for UMass at the 2008 Paul Short Run, with senior Andrew McCann (24:45) making his third straight top-five finish.

These three repeat finishers created a training program this offseason and were very faithful to it.

"They didn't take any shortcuts," said O'Brien.

Also finishing in the Minutemen's top five were juniors Sean Duncan (24:39) and Daniel Barry (24:52), who each placed for the first time this season. Barry, however, finished second on the team in the 2007 Paul Short Run, running his best time of that season (25:23).

After two weeks of small races, the Short run allowed the team to "really break the ice" for their full-length schedule, O'Brien noted.

"It gives you a chance to shake the rust off of a four-mouth layoff," said O'Brien. "Then, when you put yourselves on the line against 350-400 athletes, it is ten times harder than what you've competed against this far."

"We needed this to get juiced up for bigger meets later on in the year." The coach said the team has improvements to make, but "we're standing in a good place, we kept our enthusiasm high and we're going to get that work done," he remarked.

The women's team, which finished 36th on the day, was led by Claire Pettit's 6K time of 22:11. The sophomore Pettit improved on her point-earning Paul Short Run last year by 29 seconds, finishing 124th out of 363 runners.

Sophomore Karen Roa (22:26), as well as juniors Gina Perno (22:41) and Elizabeth Fisk (23:30), also finished amongst the Minutewomen's top-seven for a second straight year.

Rounding out the point-earners were sophomores Lauren Stocker (22:35) and Jennifer Harkey (23:43 Massachusetts) as well as freshman Danielle Allocco (23:30), who scored the first points of her Minutewomen career.

West Virginia University won the women's side, with University of Guelph and Indiana University following.

The teams travel next to the New England Championship at Boston's Franklin Park, the site of this year's NCAA regional qualifying race in November.

The upcoming Oct. 10 race will be according to O'Brien, "a look at the course as much as it is a look at ourselves."

"Our goal is go down to Boston and finish in a higher spot," said O'Brien. "We're looking for a top five or top four finish. Certainly there will be good runners but not as many [as on the Short Run]."

"This is kind of [an opportunity] to catch our breath a little bit."

Daniel Herberholz can be reached at danielherberholz@gmail.com.

A-10 field hockey loses nine games

Daniel Gigliotti
Collegian Correspondent

The Atlantic 10 field hockey conference suffered a defeating week against non-conference foes. Aside from Saint Joseph's – who were off the schedule – every team in the A-10 lost at least one game this week, collectively dropping eight-straight games and nine of 12 overall.

Despite playing eight out of twelve games at home, the conference as a whole was simply outplayed. The A-10 competitors started games strong, but on the offensive and defensive ends, their efforts were unsatisfactory.

Opponents outscored them 48-15 in their 12 games, managing only one goal in three games and getting shutout in four more. Their average margin of defeat on the week was over four goals.

The six A-10 squads on the schedule faced teams with superior records, and it showed on the scoreboard. Pitted against opponents that included four teams ranked in the nation's top 20 and a total of six teams with eight or more wins, the A-10 was clearly overmatched.

The A-10 has not boasted stellar winning records to this point in the season.

As of Monday, the teams combined for a .370 win percentage (29-49), numbers that were far surpassed by their level of competition which had won almost two-thirds of their respective games (78-40, .660) going into last week's action.

Out of their three wins this week, two of them came against teams with losing records.

The playing field will be leveled later this week when conference play begins.

Conference play nears

Following a week in which non-conference opponents dominated the A-10, teams will be glad to begin play against similar teams with more in common – such as records.

On Friday, conference play officially begins with three evenly matched games on the slate.

La Salle (4-8) will welcome to town West Chester (5-6), Temple (4-9) will take the short drive to Buckley Field to face Saint Joseph's (2-7), and St. Louis (1-10) travels to Richmond (5-6).

For Richmond and Temple, this is a chance for them to get back to the winning form that they displayed in the past four seasons. Since 2005, both teams have ended the season no less than third in the rankings. Temple won the conference in 2007 while Richmond won it in 2005 and 2006.

Massachusetts has spiked its conference play in the past three seasons, winning three games in 2007 and six in the past two seasons including last year's conference championship.

Four teams in the A-10 have been consistent bottom-dwellers. West Chester, Saint Louis and La Salle have produced sub .500 records in every season since 2005, while Saint Joseph's has hovered around that mark reaching its peek at third place in 2006.

A good non-conference record does not guarantee that a team will play as well in conference. In the past two seasons, Richmond has registered five conference wins with sub .500 overall records.

Each of the seven A-10 teams will play once. The last game will be Saint Joseph's at Saint Louis on Nov. 1.

Charise Young (right) has a team-high five assists this season for Temple, who went 1-1 over the weekend after beating Penn 3-0 and losing 7-2 to Stanford. The Owls are 4-9 this season after a tough non-conference schedule.

In all, seven shutouts occurred in the A-10 this weekend, including four defeats that combined for an 18-0 opponent advantage. Sophomore Bridget Settles of Temple earned Atlantic 10 Player of the Week honors this past week after scoring all five Owls goals in their two games played.

Daniel Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu

Minutemen sweep weekend games against Pioneers, NU

UMass scores seven goals on its way to a 3-0 record in '09

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts' men's club hockey team had an adventure of a weekend, as they not only toppled Northeastern but also took down Sacred Heart at the Wonderland of Ice.

"It was an outstanding weekend, outstanding effort and a really great [end result]," said Head Coach Robert Talloni.

When the Minutemen (3-0-0) traveled to just outside the state's capital, everything came together smoothly, as they shut down the Huskies by a final score of 2-1.

"We made up our mind that we had enough," said Talloni, regarding the history between Northeastern and UMass.

The game against the Huskies was a hard-fought battle, right up until the very end. The Minutemen seored the first two goals of the matchup. A late surge by Northeastern failed to give them the advantage over the Maroon and White.

"There was a whole 20 minutes where we gave all we could give. Mark Leonard stood on his head and denied shot after shot," Talloni said.

Junior Matt Coughlin scored the second goal of the game. "I'm sure the goalie didn't even see it," commented Talloni.

Following its tight victory over the Huskies (2-1-0), UMass traveled down the rabbit hole to the Wonderland of Ice. While in Bridgeport, the Minutemen defeated the Pioneers by the decisive margin of 6-3.

While Sacred Heart scored the first goal, the Minutemen did not succumb to the early pressure.

"We were so confident, we didn't even panic," Talloni said.

UMass mounted a comeback, and soon found themselves up 5-3. Ending the note on a high note for the Minutemen, Captain Alex Goolsby slapped the puck right into the netting.

"It was a shorthanded goal that was just beautiful," Talloni said.

Things are looking up for the Minutemen as they currently stand undefeated, despite starting the season on the road away from their familiar home ice. Not to mention, after the first three games of the season, UMass has outscored its opponents by a dominating 16-5.

While the Minutemen won't play Northeastern for the rest of the current season, they will play Sacred Heart (0-2-0) on Dec. 12, this time at the Mullins Center. The match against the Pioneers will be part of a five game home stretch for UMass.

Though it is possible for worry to set in on the Minutemen who are riding high on a string of victories, UMass is following the same patterns as last year's squad. The previous year, the second game of the season featured the Minutemen facing off with Sacred Heart at the Wonderland of Ice as well. In this game, UMass outskated and outclassed the Pioneers by a score of 8-2.

The 2008-2009 UMass club hockey team also won the game prior (both games were away) before coming home and being trounced by Connecticut 10-2.

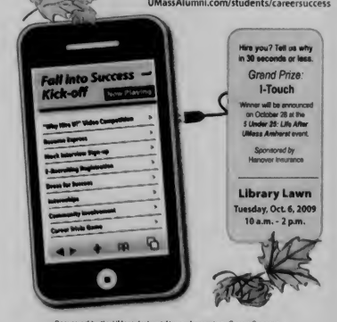
The Minutemen hope that their first home game of this season will be different, as they play against local rival Westfield State on Oct. 9.

"Once our skates hit the ice, especially home, it'll be 100 percent effort," Talloni said.

"We know what to do. We know how to read each other's actions. He also stated the players on his squad "play the game well, read the game well but understand the game most importantly. They know what to do."

Last season, UMass tied the Owls by a score of 6-6 on Nov. 1, a game that was tight right to the very end. The next match between the Minutemen and Westfield took place a week later, where the Owls could not catch enough opportunities on offense to produce as many goals as they had a week prior. UMass continued right from where they left off from the Nov. 1 contest, scoring five goals to best Westfield's lone goal.

"We're really looking forward to the opener," Talloni said.



Following its first home game, UMass hit the road once more, as they head out to Troy, N.Y. to face off against Rensselaer. According to Talloni, the Minutemen have not played the Engineers.

On the rest of the upcoming season, Talloni said "We're still looking for magic, to make things happen."

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribner@student.umass.edu

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Get In Touch ON THE LAWN
UMassAlumni
Fall into Success
UMassAlumni.com/students/careersuccess

Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association, Career Services, Commonwealth College, Engineering and Social & Behavioral Sciences

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MAYBETH SARGENT/COLLEGIAN

Junior captain Katie Kelly and the Minutewomen head to Harvard today to take on the Crimson in the first of four-straight road games. UMass hasn't played four-straight on the road since 2006.

UM seeing Crimson

UMass, Harvard will continue yearly series

BY JAY ASSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A long time rivalry will be renewed Tuesday when the Massachusetts field hockey team travels to Cambridge to face Harvard – its longest road stretch of the season.

The No. 9 Minutewomen (8-3) had a string of home games to begin the year and close the season with four out of five games in Amherst. However, UMass is currently in the middle of its schedule, where seven of its eight games are on opposing teams' fields.

Harvard is the first of four opponents in the upcoming road stint for the Minutewomen. Having played every season for the past decade, the two teams are familiar with each other.

"Harvard is a little younger this year, but they're still a quality team," UMass coach Justine Sowry said. "They are very good on their home field, and they are going to be motivated."

The Crimson (4-4) enter the game with momentum after snapping their four-game losing streak with a 4-3 overtime victory against Brown on Saturday.

After playing strong to begin the season, the Harvard defense is currently struggling to hold opponents to low scoring games. In their first three wins, the Crimson allowed a total of four goals, but during the four-game losing streak, the defense allowed an average of five goals per game. The recent vulnerability of Harvard on its own end of the field should open up opportunities for the Minutewomen attack.

While Harvard is a team that UMass should beat, Sowry doesn't want the Minutewomen to take the Crimson for granted and look forward to upcoming games with conference play on the horizon.

"We can't think ahead to UConn. We have to take it one day, one game at a time."

Since 2001, the Crimson hold an edge in the matchup with five wins to three for the Minutewomen. All five wins, though, have come from 2001 to 2005. UMass has controlled the rivalry in the last three years, playing in only one closely-contested game, which came last season in a double overtime affair.

It took 99 minutes to decide the outcome with the teams deadlocked in a 2-2 tie. The Minutewomen were in command throughout both overtimes and finally broke through with one minute, 43 seconds left in the second extra period for the 3-2 win.

UMass captain and leading scorer, Katie Kelly, isn't looking for a repeat of last year's game though, and hopes her team can take care of business without exerting too much energy.

"Hopefully it won't be as close as last time and we'll pick up our game, make it our game the whole time, and finish it in regulation to get the job done."

Fatigue has factored into the play of the Minutewomen, but so far UMass has been able to handle it. As much as Sowry is trying to keep the players fresh, she understands that exhaustion is an inevitable cause for concern.

"We are going to continue to battle our fatigue, and mentally, we're going to have to bring it," she said. "When we get fatigued, we make mistakes that we can't afford to make and eventually our luck will run out."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Road woes lay ahead

Aches and pains continue to batter a UMass squad already utilizing a depleted bench

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Playing four straight games on the road on short rest is tough for any team. Not only is it physically taxing but it also takes a strong mindset to maintain focus and good team chemistry.

The No. 9 Massachusetts field hockey team starts its road swing tomorrow against Harvard (4-4).

UMass (8-3) used only its starters on Saturday against No. 6 Syracuse (11-1) and only three reserves yesterday against Yale (6-4). Injuries are a part of any collegiate sport, and the Minutewomen currently suffer from bumps and bruises that occur during the course of a season.

UMass coach Justine Sowry stresses the importance of rest to her team.

"It's an insane schedule, and we definitely have players who are battling injuries," said Sowry. "In terms of playing away, right now it's just the fatigue factor that we have to take care of."

Forward Cher King is one of the players who isn't 100 percent right now. The last time King played with the Minutewomen was on Sept. 20 in a 2-1 overtime loss to No. 10 Boston College (9-2).

The last time UMass had a stretch of five or more road games was the 2006 season – one season before Sowry came into the program. Then the Minutewomen started off the year with eight road games before coming home to play then-No.10 Connecticut. In that stretch, UMass went 2-6, scoring an average of two goals per game and giving up the same number of goals.

The Minutewomen went 6-14 that season, including a five-game losing streak upon their return from the extended road trip. Lauren Gillespie led UMass with 13 goals without starting any of them. Seven of her goals came within the first eight games and she entered a five-game scoreless slump upon UMass' return to Amherst.

The Minutewomen are 4-1 away from Garber Field this season, their lone loss on the road coming to the Orange on Saturday.

Prior to the 5-2 loss to Syracuse, sophomore Alesha Widdall allowed one goal on the road this season, and senior Sarah Williams allowed the same total in her time in goal in away games.

Forward Eileen Seffron saw more time this past weekend in the absence of King, scoring the game-winner against the Bulldogs.

Seffron views the road trip in a different light. She believes traveling gives a boost to team cohesiveness and this can only help a UMass team that starts anywhere from two to four freshmen this season.

"Traveling is great on its own. It's team bonding for us, which is good," said Seffron. "I feel like with this, we connect better and know how each other work. Everyone's different, and we learn that, so we use that [to our advantage]."

Learning the tendencies of each player on the team plays an important role in the development of younger players and the production in away games from the freshmen on the team gives Sowry the luxury to rest players such as King.

Two of forward Kara Charochak's three goals on the season came on the road, and sophomore Christine Cutry's first goal of the season came at Syracuse.

The younger players can also outlet the ball on the road as well. Midfielder Kim Young's three assists came in games at Quinnipiac and Syracuse. Young's assist total leads all freshmen this season.

The increase in skill level of the freshmen this season most certainly means more playing time for the young Minutewomen and the play of veteran reserves is key to UMass' long-term health this season. The high skill-level of players means nothing if they can't stay on the field.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

MAYBETH SARGENT/COLLEGIAN

Defender Makaela Potts brings the ball up the field in a game against Kent State in last season's NCAA tournament play-in game. Potts has three goals this season and a team-leading six assists.

TY BUSH/COLLEGIAN

Hofstra quarterback Cory Christopher combined with fellow quarterback Steve Probst to throw for two touchdowns on 15-of-28 passing. Christopher's numbers this season include 887 yards through the air with five touchdowns and two interceptions.

Hofstra upsets favored JMU

BY JUAN PACHECO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In a closely contested game, Hofstra was able to overcome the odds and upset No. 7 James Madison, 24-17. The win marks the first time the Pride beat a top 10 opponent since 2007.

The Pride defense neutralized the JMU (2-2) offense, holding them to a season-low of 192 yards. This is down from an average of 360.8 yards per game.

Important to Hofstra's (3-2) success was defensive lineman Deron Mayo. During the game, Mayo accumulated nine total tackles, six of them were solo tackles. He also posted a sack in the fourth quarter, able to curtail the Duke's attempt at a comeback. Mayo's accolades against JMU earned him Colonial Athletic Association Defensive Player of the Week.

Hofstra was also able to find success on offense as well, tallying 287 total yards. The Pride used a two-quarterback system to get the upper hand over JMU. Quarterbacks Cory Christopher and Steve Probst combined for 15 of 28 and two touchdowns. The Dukes were unable to stop the Pride and their running game either. As a team, they ran for 154 yards, averaging 3.8 yards per carry. JMU has a rough road ahead of them as they take on No. 1 Richmond on Saturday.

Villanova holds off fifth-ranked William & Mary

In a game pitting two teams in the top five, No. 2 Villanova beat No. 5 William & Mary, 28-17, extending their home winning streak to six straight games.

Right away, the Wildcats were able to set the tone for the rest of the game, as quarterback Chris Whitney connected with wide receiver Brandyn Harvey on a 57-yard touchdown pass, the first offensive play of the game.

Despite having an explosive offensive, the Tribe (4-1) did not a score a touchdown until the fourth quarter – a 3-yard pass from quarterback R.J. Archer. Instead, Villanova (5-0) limited William & Mary to three field

See FOOTBALL on page 7

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 61 LOW: 46 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 2009

MAYBETH SARGENT/COLLEGIAN

A banner encouraging students to vote in the SGA elections, which were ratified on Oct. 6.

SGA unanimously ratifies '09 elections

BY NICK BUSH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The SGA Coordinating Council voted unanimously on Tuesday, Oct. 6 to ratify the 2009 Senate elections. At the same time, the Council withheld from ratifying the election's second referendum question regarding online elections, due to the wording differing from what students signed on petitions last year.

According to Speaker Modesto Montero, who moderated the meeting, there was legal precedent for ratifying parts of an election and excluding portions of the results. Montero pointed to the 1997-1998 SGA election, in which the Coordinating Council voted to exclude a portion of the results while ratifying the majority of the election.

"There were obvious issues with the wording of question two," said Chancellor of Elections Chris Faulkner. Despite the referendum's exclusion from the election ratification, there remains little doubt that online voting will be passed by the SGA in some form in the near future. The student body has overwhelmingly endorsed the idea, voting by a margin of 81 percent for referendum question two.

"This is the year [online voting] is going to happen," said Montero. "It just has to be done right. I wouldn't be surprised if it was voted on before the end of [2009]. I doubt there is a single senator who isn't in support of online elections in some form, but since the process started there have been legitimate concerns being voiced about how to securely move online. It's going to take time, but we will get it done."

The ratification of the election took place while a number of complaints from write-in candidate Brad DeFlumeri were still pending review by the Student Judiciary. DeFlumeri's complaint alleges numerous violations of the SGA election procedure, including failure to provide candidates with certified copies of the SGA Constitution, and a lack of elections commissioners staffing polling stations while voting was underway last week.

DeFlumeri could not be reached for comment in time for publication.

"According to [Student Legal Services], it is okay to ratify elections before the Judiciary conference takes place," said Faulkner during his presentation at Tuesday's meeting.

The Student Judiciary plans on possibly meeting the evening of Oct. 8 to review DeFlumeri's complaints. The Student Judiciary, chaired by Chief Justice Robert Weed, is tasked with determining the constitutionality of actions taken by the Executive and Legislative branches of the SGA, including the elections' process.

On Tuesday, the SGA Coordinating Council also voted unanimously to amend last week's official election report, which suggested that Northeast Residential Area has two senate seats, when in reality, has three.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

MAYBETH SARGENT/COLLEGIAN

Mallory Ottariano, a sophomore architecture major, checks out her SPIRE account. OIT will shut down access to the program on Oct. 8.

OIT enhances SPIRE settings

BY BOBBY HITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Office of Information Technologies (OIT) is shutting down SPIRE Oct. 8-14 in order to update software and introduce the new degree audit tool.

According to Dori McCracken, a representative from the Undergraduate Registrar's Office, the new academic requirement report, or the new degree audit tool, will replace SPIRE's degree progress report.

"The current degree progress report is 'static,'" said McCracken. "You can look at [the current degree progress report] just like a piece of paper ... you can get information from it but you cannot do anything with it. The new academic requirement report is an interactive tool and is hyperlinked."

The report allows the student to look at the requirements, see the courses that fill those requirements and follow the hyperlinks to the course descriptions.

"If it tells you that a requirement that is filled by English 354, but you do not remember what English 354 is, you can click on the hyperlink and bring up the description from the course catalog," said McCracken.

McCracken also mentioned what she feels is the "most exciting part of the upgrade." She said, "If you are in the enrollment period, you can add a course [to your schedule] straight from the academic requirement report. So, we have put together enrollment with advising."

SPIRE will be unavailable for access from 5 p.m. on Oct. 8 to 9 a.m. on Oct. 14. When asked what she would say to students who are possibly inconvenienced by this shutdown, McCracken said "that OIT could not do it in any less time, because it is a major upgrade."

The new academic requirement report will not be available when SPIRE comes back online. According to McCracken, "[OIT] hopes [the new academic requirement report] will be available very quickly ... but [the students] will have to wait a little bit, because we need to make an academic requirement report for every student, and there are a lot of [students]."

University of Massachusetts students may be inconvenienced by the SPIRE shutdown. However, many students see the inconvenience as a minor one.

"[SPIRE's shutdown] doesn't matter to me at this point in the semester," said junior Amanda Kohr. "If it were during add/drop period, it would be much worse."

When asked how she felt about the new academic require-

See SPIRE on page 2

McCain to give talk hosted by UMass Republican Club

BY MICHAEL PHILLIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This evening, the University of Massachusetts' Republican Club will be hosting Meghan McCain, the eldest daughter of 2008 Republican presidential candidate John McCain, at 6:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. McCain's talk, entitled "Redefining Republican: No labels. No boxes. No stereotypes.," will discuss the Republican brand and its evolving image.

Justin Thompson, Vice President of the Republican Club who helped book McCain, said that the club "wanted to show people that the Republican Party is not as coercive as people think. There are moderate Republicans."

At 24 years old, McCain has been a public figure for a large portion of her life. She supported her father during his campaign for president against Barack Obama, and is known for speaking in a way that does not always strictly adhere to Republican Party lines.

The Republican Club wanted to set a different tone with this speaker. Republican Club President Derek Khanna said, "You have this internal debate going on right now, and I think Meghan McCain is the perfect person to bring to this campus because she represents a vision of the Republican Party going forward that has a broad base of appeal."

McCain will speak and then take questions from the crowd at the conclusion of her remarks.

Khanna acknowledged that in the past, the Republican Club had brought some divisive figures to campus. "There are definitely going to be some elements of the Republican Club that aren't going to be happy with Meghan McCain," said Khanna, referencing the fact that many in his club might not think McCain is conservative enough.

Charlie Felder, president of the University Democrats (UDems), is planning to attend as much of the event as he can.

Both Felder and Khanna – who have been friends since freshman year – said that a feeling of divisiveness has embodied much of the campus debate in recent memory.

"We are sick of all [the] hateful writing in the newspaper, we are sick of all the nastiness," said Felder.

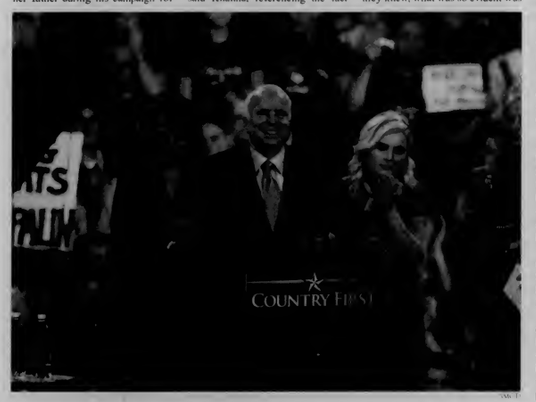
Meghan McCain is a contributing columnist for the Daily Beast. She has written columns with headlines like, in reference to Ted Kennedy, "Why The Lion of the Left was Right."

In that column, she says, "As I listened to [Kennedy's] friends, family and Senate colleagues – including my father – tell stories of the man they knew, what was so evident was that Ted Kennedy always believed you could find compromise on the really important matters."

McCain has also addressed the Log Cabin Republicans – a group of gay Republicans – and is often derided as a Republican in name only. She responds that it is people like her who are the future of the Republican Party, and issues like gay rights should be embraced.

During the 2008 presidential campaign, John McCain touted his status as a "maverick" – a person who is not afraid to stick up for his own convictions and go against his party if he feels the need. Khanna feels that Meghan McCain has inherited this independent mind-set.

McCain also published a children's book during her father's campaign entitled "My Dad, John McCain" that told the story of his life.



Some conservative commentators, such as Fox News contributor Michelle Malkin and Ann Coulter, think that Meghan McCain's views of the Republican Party are counterproductive to the party's interests. In a column entitled "My Beef with Ann Coulter," McCain said that she does not care for Coulter's offensiveness, and that she can't tell if Coulter is "for real."

McCain was raised in Phoenix, Ariz., where her father has been a U.S. senator since 1987. She graduated from Columbia University in 2007 and regularly blogs about everything from her views of the Republican Party to the difficulties of dating after her father lost the election.

Recently, McCain has been making a number of appearances. She was a guest on The Colbert Report in May 2009 and has guest-hosted The View.

While some of McCain's beliefs do not align completely with the Republican Party platform, McCain was quoted in a recent release stating that she does believe government is best, "when it stays out of peoples' lives and business as much as possible."

Michael Phillis can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu

TODD MAISEL/COLLEGIAN

Meghan McCain, right, supported her father, John McCain, center, throughout his campaign during his 2008 bid for presidency. She will be speaking tonight in Bowker Auditorium at 6:30 p.m.

UM pupil assaulted with alcohol bottle at Amherst townhouses

BY MICHELLE WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Friday, Oct. 2, multiple Amherst Police Department officers were called to the Townhouse of Amherst Apartments for a reported large-scale disturbance to find that a University of Massachusetts student was struck with a glass beer bottle.

A 20-year-old UMass student from Canton, Mass., whose name has not been released, was found to have been struck and injured. While his injuries were not life-threatening, he accepted treatment and was taken to University Health Services at approximately 10 p.m. on the night of Oct. 2.

Nicholas Williamson, 19, of Holyoke, Mass., has been charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. Williamson is not a student at any of the area colleges, and his relationship to the victim is not known at this time. He was held over the weekend at the Hampshire County House of Corrections and opted to stay rather than pay the $1,000 cash bail.

If convicted of this crime, Williamson can expect, "punishment by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than 10 years or in the house of correction for not more than two-and-a-half years," said Lieutenant Chief Ronald Young of the Amherst Police Department. If he is convicted and does not receive jail time, he may be fined up to $5,000 dollars or possibly both fined and imprisoned. It is unknown at this time if Williamson has a prior record.

Several other victims were

See CRIME on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

FAC brings new shows to UM

October's productions will kick off the beginning of the Fine Arts Center's semester of 'big performances.'

SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS

Tennis to faceoff with UConn

The Minutewomen will play the Huskies in their eighth annual fall match-up.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

The Modern Elephant

Collegian Columnist Alana Goodman discusses Meghan McCain's hope to bring a fresh, young perspective to GOP.

SEE PAGE 3

DailyCollegian.com

Assistant Multimedia Editor Chris Shores will produce a video piece on Meghan McCain's lecture in Bowker Auditorium.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 22

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR N.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Dermer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shanna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Annie Keithline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Sconnell
ASSISTANT COMICS Andrew Wits
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Hannah Nelson
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alissa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Giffmeister
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded as 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Biologist examines animals with horns

By Nitsa Heikkinen
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts evolutionary biologist Ted Stankowich, a lecturer and former Darwin Postdoctoral Fellow, offers a new possible explanation as to what uses female animals with hooves have for their horns.

In his article entitled, "Evolution of weaponry in female bovids," which was published in the August 2009 edition of The Royal Society Journal, Stankowich proposes that female bovids that live in open habitats or are conspicuous because of their size are significantly more likely to have horns than small species or species that can hide in closed habitats.

According to Stankowich, the research, which was done in collaboration with Tim Caro of the University of California Davis, is the first to offer a comprehensive hypothesis that analyzed data taken from all 117 bovid species.

Some examples of common horned bovids are cattle, goats, gazelle and antelope.

"We went through the scientific literature on different species and gathered data on variables like group size, how large the animals were, if they lived in open or closed habitats, and then we analyzed the data statistically," Stankowich said.

The researchers also considered other factors such as territoriality and the group sizes of the species. "Our goal was to explain every case of horns in bovids," Stankowich said.

"We hypothesized that species that are taller and live in open habitats are more exposed, visible for longer distances and would be more likely to benefit from the presence of horns for defense against predators," said Stankowich in the article.

Stankowich used phylogenetic analysis, or comparison of ancestral genetic relationships between species, and contrasted existing hypotheses to test his hypothesis. He said his hypothesis explained the presence of horns in 80 out of 82 horned bovid species.

He added that his research did not provide an explanation for antlers in deer, which are cervids, not bovids.

"This is the first paper to build into account whether females are territorial or not," said Stankowich.

Stankowich's research revealed that territoriality did play a small but significant role among a genus of bovids called duikers, a type of small antelope.

According to Stankowich's article, researchers have proposed a variety of competing hypotheses to explain the presence of horns in female bovids. Some researchers believe females use horns for competition with other females for food. Meanwhile, others argue horns are purely for defense against predators.

Nitsa Heikkinen can be reached at nheikkin@student.umass.edu.

University of Massachusetts evolutionary biologist Ted Stankowich published a scientific article on how female bovids utilize their horns.

Pond-side profession pointers

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

University of Massachusetts' Career Services and the UMass Alumni Association held a career resource fair yesterday on the library lawn.

Entrance onto SPIRE shut off for updates

SPIRE from page 1

ment report. Kohr said. "If it can keep track of all the requirements such as majors, minors and Commonwealth College, it would be a worthwhile tool."

"I still need to work out some financial aid on SPIRE, so yes it is an inconvenience to me," said freshman T.J. Wallace.

SPARK, UMail and other frequently used UMass sites will not be affected by the SPIRE upgrades, because they are not run by the same company as SPIRE.

According to the Oracle website, SPIRE is run by PeopleSoft, which is an application produced by Oracle who claims to be "the world's largest business software company." Heidi Dollard, a representative from the student information services department at OIT said, "SPIRE needs an update to take advantage of the new software available from PeopleSoft and to continue to get support from the company." SPIRE will be upgraded to the software PeopleSoft 9.1.

PeopleSoft will also be coming out with more expansion packs in the future that may cause SPIRE to update as the software upgrades.

According to McCracken, OIT staff believes these updates will directly benefit the students allowing them to more easily navigate and work with SPIRE.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu

Townhouse incident leads to student injury

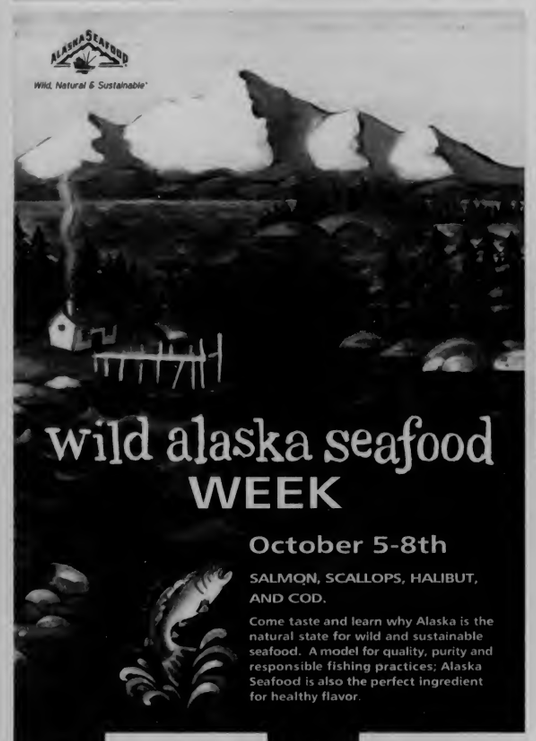
DANIELLE AUGERA/COLLEGIAN

The Townhouse of Amherst Apartments, where a 20-year-old UMass student was struck with a beer bottle this past weekend.

CRIME from page 1

found to be suffering abrasions and other reported injuries. Their names and conditions are not known.

The Amherst Police Department believes additional persons may have been involved, but currently, Young said "no one else has been charged. The matter is still being investigated."



In the past, the Townhouse Apartments have been home to other crimes, including underage drinking and several assaults.

Last April the Amherst Police Department responded to a call regarding a 41-year-old man being severely beaten.

In another instance at the Townhouse Apartments, approximately six to eight men had gotten into a fight in the parking lot outside of the Townhouse Apartments, resulting in the arrest of two UMass students. During this particular incident, one Amherst resident was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital.

Additionally, in another act of violence, two Amherst Police Officers responded to a disturbance report, and when they arrived they found 500 to 600 people congregated in the area. The crowd consisted of both students and non-students. It took nearly an hour to disperse the crowd. During this time, members of the crowd assaulted the two officers, who were then taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital – one for a broken bone and another for a severe laceration to his elbow. These injuries were due to glass beer bottles being broken upon the officers as well as the officers falling onto broken glass bottle shards.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Meghan McCain's Republicanism

Alana Goodman

I was watching Fox News the other night when something suddenly hit me like a Marc Jacobs spike-heel stiletto: The conservative movement is dying. It's old, it's dull and worst, it's tragically un-hip.

As my eyes roved across Fox's news contributors — Dick Morris (old!), Krauthammer (handicapped!), Dana Perino (Can you say "crows-feet?") – I realized that not even an Extreme Makeover could save this political movement.

I mean, how could there possibly be this many old people in one place? Did Roger Alles recruit his lineup from the nickel slots section at Foxwoods?

What gives?

It was almost enough for a young conservative like me to renounce the ideology for good. That was until I discovered someone who would transform the conservative youth movement for the 21st century.

I'm referring, of course, to up-and-coming political commentator and pop-culture maven, Meghan McCain. You may know her better as the 20-something blonde daughter of the guy who lost the presidency to Barack Obama.

If you thought Republicans were too embarrassed to publicly associate with Meghan McCain because of her "dirty" reputation, then you clearly haven't spent enough time around the Republicans in Amherst.

According to the MassGOP's website, the UMass Republican Club has invited Meghan to campus to give a lecture on "her vision of the future of the Republican Party."

Meghan, who writes columns for the Daily Beast, has fashioned herself as a leader of the young conservative movement. According to her profile on the Greater Talent Speakers Bureau website, which recently signed her as a client, Meghan "has launched a national movement to redefine Republican stereotypes and values."

Incredible. As the Republican Party sinks into musty irrelevancy, Meghan McCain has suddenly arrived like a modern-day William F. Buckley to single-handedly redefine the conservative movement as we know it.

"It is no secret that being a Republican isn't the most hip political stance a person can take right now," admitted Meghan, who is sometimes photographed hanging out with celebrities like Tila Tequila and Heidi Montag, in her March 9 column in the Daily Beast.

Meghan is right. For too long, the Republican Party has played host to schlubs, ugly people and the elderly, while the Democratic Party has brimmed with jet-setters, glitterati and virtually the whole cast of "Twilight."

"I wish I could be more positive about the current 'hipness' of our party. But being a Republican is about as edgy as Donny Osmond," she added.

Meghan is right. For too long, the Republican Party has played host to schlubs, ugly people and the elderly, while the Democratic Party has brimmed with jet-setters, glitterati and virtually the whole cast of "Twilight."

No wonder the conservative movement is losing voters – our answer to Russell Brand is Ben Stein.

As a young conservative, I'm embarrassed and offended by this blatant disregard of societal trendiness. Forget "small government," "free market," and "individual liberty." What's the point of having "principles" if they can't get you past the bouncer at 10ak?

Fortunately, Meghan assures us that not all hope is lost. "I know there are young cool Republicans out there – I've met them – but many of them are too scared to come out of the closet," she wrote in a July 10 Daily Beast column.

So what steps is Meghan taking to help rebrand the Republican Party as a hipper, younger movement? I've read through some of her columns, and here is what I've found:

Step One: Remind everyone the Republican Party is full of old, stupid people.

Because if you've "launched a national movement to redefine Republican stereotypes and values," there is really no better way to achieve this than to constantly announce how "uncool" the party is – preferably publically and in print.

For more information, see Meghan's articles entitled "Karl Rove, Twitter Creep," "My Message for Michelle Malkin," "My Beef With Ann Coulter," "Stop Talking About My Weight, Laura Ingraham," "The GOP Doesn't Understand Sex" and "Why the Republicans Don't Get the Internet."

Step Two: Reiterate how cool Meghan McCain is in comparison to other Republicans.

Meghan isn't like other Republicans – she's a cool Republican. In fact, on Oct. 14, 2008, she even confessed to Fox News that she "voted for [John] Kerry and Al Gore" – yes, Al Gore, who ran for President in 2000 when Meghan was only 16 years old. How precocious.

And during a speech to the Log Cabin Republicans on April 18, she reiterated how far she deviates from the rest of the unwashed Republican masses.

"I am concerned about the environment. I love to wear black. I think government is best when it stays out of people's lives and business as much as possible. I love punk rock. I believe in a strong national defense. I have a tattoo. I believe government should always be efficient and accountable. I have lots of gay friends. And yes, I am a Republican."

A shocking revelation, of course, to all of us who believed Republicans only wore pastels and listened to old show tunes while tossing burning Styrofoam containers into the backyard of their gay, tattooed neighbor. Meghan is a true anomaly and Republican trailblazer.

Step Three: If All Else Fails, Go Back to Being a Democrat.

But then what would you be famous for?

Alana Goodman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at angoodma@student.umass.edu

Are you off limits? Then don't flirt

H.C. Wang

The scene: You're at some get-together with a bunch of people. You meet some hot guy or cute girl and get to talking. The two of you seem to really hit it off and it's looking like there's potential. By the end of the event, you end up getting the number of the hottie you've been flirting incessantly with. You think 'Score!' then go home and log onto Facebook only to realize he or she was already in a relationship.

You walk away feeling disappointed and, more than likely, confused as hell. You're probably thinking, if he or she already has a significant other, why was he or she flirting so intensely with you? If this scenario seems familiar to you, it should. It's called being led on, and it happens all too often.

A friend of mine recently came to me and told me a similar story that took place with him. He met a pretty blonde in his building that he described as having a kind of "indie look."

They decided to watch "Bones" together alone in her dorm while her roommate was out. At some point in the evening, while they were fiddling around with their phones and comparing them, the girl programmed her number into it and gave it back to him with a coy remark telling him what she had done.

Again, the disappointing relationship-status-revealed-on-Facebook thing happened, and my friend was left scratching his head in confusion.

Sure, he's a bright-eyed freshman and he could have read the signals wrong, but more experienced people than him have been on the receiving end of such frustration. So why does this phenomenon occur so much?

Who is to blame?

The person sending mixed signals? The receiver who misreads the situation? It's a little bit of everything.

Unfortunately, women tend to be guilty of creating such situations more so than men. I am equally baffled as to why this happens. Some people are completely unaware that they even do this. Others do it on purpose, either for some sort of power play or simply an ego boost.

To the former, have some self-awareness. Be more empathetic. Your actions may be wholly innocent of vindictive intentions, but that doesn't make the result any less hurtful or exasperating. Actually think about what you're saying or doing and try to see it from the other person's perspective.

You're probably thinking, if he or she already has a significant other, why was he or she flirting so intensely with you?

Could they possibly interpret your words or actions differently than you intended them? Of course, the downside is trying so hard to be aware of this that you end up thinking everyone who is nice and talks to you has a huge crush on you. Don't do that. Learn to examine the ambiance of the situation you're in. Like most things, it takes practice.

To the latter type of people, get some self-esteem. Everyone needs the occasional ego boost now and then, but to achieve it at someone else's expense is just plain mean. There are plenty of ways to make yourself feel better without exerting control over another human being in such an insidious way. Go workout. Read some self-help books on improving confidence. Hell, get a haircut if you think that might make you look better. Just don't send mixed signals on purpose if you're not truly interested. Chances are you've been there yourself, just as astounded and frustrated at being led on – whether intentional or not. You didn't like it, so why pass the torture on to someone else? Nobody likes being strung along. Or do they?

This brings me to my next point. In the name of egalitarianism, I have to say, this is something more guys tend to be guilty of. Sometimes you know you're just being used, but you don't care. Or so you claim.

You think that any success you might achieve in process would outweigh the feelings of embarrassment or failure. Word of advice? That thing you straighten at the gym to do your dead lifts and squats? That's your spine. Use it.

Nobody really cares if you can bench press a truck if you allow people to walk all over you. Why settle for someone who only superficially likes you when with just a little more work, you can get someone who actually cares. Just think – you may not even get anything from letting yourself be led on. Quality over quantity, people.

It's always hard to give good advice. It's harder still to keep it within 750-850 words. Got a particular bone to pick? Send me the details and I can answer your questions more specifically.

H.C. Wang is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at collegianadvice@gmail.com.

Talk of the newspaper

This week is National Newspaper Week. Think that's silly? So does The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

But quick search on Google News will show readers that newspapers – unsure about their future in the thick of an economic crisis and a digital revolution – are putting out some pretty self-congratulatory editorials on the subject. "Newspapers' relevance has never waned," "Keeping you informed" and "Informed? Thank your paper." We agree, it's pathetic.

In honor of National Newspaper Week, and for the record, we at The Collegian would like to say that we think information is a two-way street.

Until recent years, The Collegian was best metric for the daily life of University of Massachusetts students. With a staff of several hundred, we got more of what was happening on campus on the record than anyone else. But now all of us – all 18,000-plus undergraduates, not to mention the graduate students, faculty, staff and community members who read The Collegian – are interconnected on the web.

Collectively, a population of 18,000 is going to procure much more information than a few hundred student journalists, no matter how much coffee we consume.

Those who have been on campus for a while have likely noticed that the print edition of The Collegian has never been smaller. Waning print advertising revenue means that our paper – scratch that, your paper – is seldom printed larger than eight broadsheet pages Mondays through Thursdays and 16 tabloid pages for The Weekend Collegian.

Yet The Collegian as a newsgathering organization has never been bigger or more ubiquitous, and our readers have never had a larger role in our news production. The Collegian is not just in lecture halls and the Campus Center, it's on readers' Facebook newsfeeds, Twitter feeds and RSS feeds. What's more, since the relaunch of DailyCollegian.com this September, we've made more money off our website than in all the years we've been on the web combined.

That's not to say we're immune to what's happening to newspapers at large. We still have an outstanding loan from the Student Government Association, and advertisers are only going to become less interested in delivering their message in ink. Yet we made a profit last year. Many papers would like to say that. And we run a leaner, more streamlined organization than ever.

We also have access to one of the best sources of information out there: you.

In the spirit of the week, we'd like to make clear that we aren't just a newspaper anymore. We're a news operation and better for it. Newspapers don't have much room for their readership to sound off, aside from a few column inches in the opinion section saved for letters to the editor. But you can comment on our stories on Facebook, or on DailyCollegian.com. You can submit your events to our calendar and tell us why you thought that music review sucked with just a few clicks of the mouse, and all while you're in the back of that overstuffed lecture in Thompson Hall.

And we want you to. We need you to. We can't cover this whole campus alone.

So tell us what you think. Tell us what you're doing. Tell us what we're doing right, and what we're doing wrong. Because we need you more than you need us – this week and the next.

We don't just want you to chime in digitally, either. Our senior editors are interested in meeting with members of the community who have suggestions and criticism for The Collegian. Leave a comment with your e-mail (which will be kept private) on this editorial on DailyCollegian.com, or e-mail managingeditor@dailycollegian.com and set up a time.

The future of this organization is bright, mostly because of what you can offer to it. Meanwhile, we aren't throwing any parties this week.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

WRITE FOR ED/OP!

WE ARE SEEKING NEW COLUMNISTS.

EDIOTRIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

LETTERS, COLUMNISTS AND STAFF WANTED

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 2009 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dance takes Fine Arts stage by storm

Upcoming spectacles sure to shake up UM

By Anshalee Guarnieri
Collegian Correspondent

The art of dance thrives in this season's Fine Arts Center Series lineup. Seven of this season's 16-show schedule will be made up of dance productions covering a variety of themes. Dance parties, sword fights and Abraham Lincoln are among the many subjects that will be gracing the Fine Arts Center stage. The series begins on Oct. 18 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall with Orquestra de Sã Paulo and ends April 30, 2010 with the Aspen Santa Fe Ballet.

This year's dance crews include such acts as Dan Zane and Friends, a family friendly concert and dance party with the Grammy Award winner and sing-along songs in both English and Spanish; Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Dance Company, a historical telling through dance that questions life without Abraham Lincoln; and Ballet Folklórico de Mexico, a production with traditional Mexican music, dance and ornate costumes.

There is a lot more to this season's lineup, including the American Shakespeare Center's "Romeo and Juliet" on Nov. 3. This show has sonnets, dancing and sword fighting, giving the audience a view into the culture of Elizabethan playgoers. Other acts in the series include Imani Winds with Stefon Harris, a genre-blurring show of classical music and jazz; Paddy Moloney with the Chieftains, a traditional Irish music group; and Zakir Hussain, an internationally renowned percussionist.

"I'm proud to say there's not a lot of cheese in there," said Kathryn Maguet, the Fine Arts Center Series director.

Because of the University of Massachusetts' desirable facilities for large dance productions and the high sales figures dance productions accrue, Maguet is picking more sizeable dance companies to perform. Another reason for these choices is an attempt to "ride the wave of what's happening." Maguet is banking on the fact that dance is an art that is not being tapped into within the Pioneer Valley. She hopes to pique the interest of the hundreds of people who attend the famous Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival every summer in Becket, Mass.

The Center Series began in 1975 with the completion of the Fine Arts Center. This venue has been visited by acts such as the National Philharmonic of Russia, the Toumani Diabate Symmetric Orchestra, the National Acrobats of China and others of both jazz and classical music. In past series performances, the amount of dance productions was as low as two or three per season.

This year, Maguet has had to face a 25 percent decrease in the Fine Arts Center Series' budget, and now more than ever must book shows that are not only relevant to the Five Colleges area, but also self-sustainable. Maguet says that significant shows like Cirque du Soleil have been key in keeping the series' sales figures high.

Dame Evelyn Glennie, pictured, will be performing with the Orquestra de São Paulo at the Fine Arts Center on Oct. 18, as part of this season's Center Series, which is scheduled to include various large dance company productions as well as the American Shakespeare Center.

In a ticket-sale driven atmosphere, one-person shows are not the answer to filling the Fine Arts Center's 1,900 seats. Last year, the series made 85 percent revenue from ticket sales and must sell more than 800 seats per show in order to break even, Maguet said.

Large shows, particularly dance productions, with sweeping genres and large talented casts are easier to market than solo shows, and bring in more box office revenue. Orchestras do not fall under this category, as they cost a lot of money to bring to the series and do not draw in many people.

"The bigger the show, the less the risk," said Maguet. "We don't want to sacrifice quality, but shows with 12 people [in the audience] can't be done."

Along with the dance companies, Cirque Mechanics will be coming to the Fine Arts Center on Nov. 10. This circus show is made up of a troupe of former Cirque de Soleil performers, Pickle Family Circus and Moscow Circus. Clowns, acrobats, contortionists and dancers are featured in Cirque Mechanics, which is scheduled to appear at UMass only two months after Cirque du Soleil's "Alegria" was welcomed to the Mullins Center.

Maguet is especially excited about one upcoming dance company. Her recommendation for this season is the Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Dance Company's show, "Another Evening/Serenade/The Proposition," described by the Fine Arts Center's website as "a lively rumination on the nature of history." Maguet said the piece is "beautiful, moving and profound."

This historical dance piece debuted at the 2008 American Dance Festival and is currently on tour. The show has ornate sets with video projection and movable scenery that portray iconic historical architecture. The projected scenes take the audience on a tour through the country, showing many of the stops that President Lincoln visited as he campaigned throughout the nation. With original scores drawn from Mozart's "Requiem," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and "Dixie," and original choreography, the company looks into the past and questions what life for an American would be like without Abraham Lincoln or the Reconstruction era. The company will come to UMass on Thursday, Nov. 5, in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

For more information on the upcoming dance companies and the full Fine Arts Center Series calendar, visit their website at http://www.umass.edu/fac/centerseries/index.html

Anshalee Guarnieri can be reached at aguarnie@student.umass.edu

Top 10 horror films from off the cinematic 'beaten path'

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Correspondent

Every year around Halloween, the same television channels play the same horror movies – "Sleepaway Camp" on TBS, "Hellraiser" on AMC, etc. While one would not wish to deride the positive qualities of these films, it is difficult to deny that a good amount of equally wonderful films tend to fall by the wayside. So, without further ado, I present to you (in no particular order): 10 Horror Films From Off the Beaten Path.

10. The Other (1972) – Although probably better remembered for "To Kill a Mockingbird," Robert Mulligan also made this largely bloodless (for the squeamish) adaptation of Thomas Tryon's Southern Gothic tale of twins with psychic powers. Featuring incredibly gorgeous southern photography and grotesque plot twists which keep on coming, "The Other" has many good things to speak to.

9. Dust Devil (1992) – Quite possibly the most beautiful film about a serial killer ever made, Richard Stanley's South African "Dust Devil" was practically unknown until its 2006 DVD release, when it finally began to develop a cult following. Once described as "Tarkovsky on acid," this film features sumptuous desert photography, an electrifying score by Simon Boswell and exploding heads. How can you go wrong?

8. Kwaidan (1964) – While basically a standard on the art-house circuit, "Kwaidan" has frequently been dismissed by fans of the horror genre as being "Slow-moving and hokey." This misguided accusation comes from the film's hand-painted sets and immersion in the pace of Japanese folk tales (which provide the film with its stories). While some of the stories (for "Kwaidan" is an anthology film, like "Creepshow") may be a bit uneven, the peaks the film achieves are undoubtedly highs for the genre.

7. Cemetery Man (1994) – Before Rupert Everett attended "My Best Friend's Wedding," he was the night watchman/zombie killer at Buffalora Cemetery in Michele Soavi's 1994 twisted little horror-comedy, "Cemetery Man." This is one of the few films which actually features something for everyone: the gorgeous Anna Falchi, who, while not the best actress, still has her own (ahem) assets; the existential crises faced by a zombie killer; and, finally, one of the most perplexing, beautiful and bizarre endings that any "genre" film could possibly contain. "Cemetery Man" was called "one of the best Italian films of the 1990s" by Martin Scorcese. Who are we to contradict him?

6. Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1978) – Although most horror fans would normally be wise to shun remakes, the fact that Philip Kaufman's rendition of this classic tale of alien doppelgangers has fallen under the radar for most is a crime. There are sequences in this film which easily surpass the original in terms of suspense. Donald Sutherland plays an effectively twitchy hero, and there are many terrifically gooey set pieces, most of which certainly couldn't have been pulled off in the 1956 film. Be sure to keep an eye out for Leonard Nimoy.

5. Angel Heart (1987) – Mickey Rourke gives the performance of his career as an insurance gumshoe who gets in over his head in this 1987 Alan Parker noir homage with supernatural overtones. Although usually remembered for its controversial blood-stained love scene between the protagonist and Lisa Bonet, this film in fact has much more to offer than initially meets the eye. With a skin-crawlingly perfect performance from Robert De Niro as Louis Cyphre (see if you can spot the pun), an incredibly subtle and bizarre score, gorgeous extended shots of seemingly painted skies and an ending that will haunt you for days, "Angel Heart" has much to recommend it.

4. Bay of Blood (1971) – This gore-soaked Mario Bava classic of the murder-mystery genre is probably most known for its direct influence on basically every slasher film that followed it. From its inventive kills – including a woman in a wheelchair who is hung – to its baffling (in the best way possible) ending, "Bay of Blood" is sure to entertain any fan of the modern serial killer film. Keep an eye out for the spear sequence, which was copped by "Friday the 13th" shot-for-shot.

3. Madman (1982) – As a perfect follow-up to "Bay of Blood," check out this delightfully trashy "Friday the 13th" knockoff. With little to differentiate it in terms of story from your typical camp-based slasher film, "Madman" has to get by on personality alone. And boy, does it deliver in that department. With some of the most annoyingly hilarious 2-dimentional characters seen by the genre, a theme song that will stick in your head for days and some incredibly silly set pieces (the refrigerator scene is a highlight), for that night when all you want to do is laugh uproariously at a trashy slasher film, "Madman" is the way to go.

2. The Unknown (1927) – For fans of silent film, this Tod Browning ("Freaks," "Dracula") chiller will be sure to please. Starring Lon Chaney as a legless knife thrower at a carnival and Joan Crawford as the woman he loves, "The Unknown" is a great chance to see these classic thespians in their prime. Of course, the film has much to offer in terms of scares, as well. Let's just say you may not look at horses the same way, soon after watching "The Unknown."

1. Sisters (1973) – While Brian De Palma usually receives credit for the classic horror films he made during his peak early years ("Carrie," "Dressed to Kill"), this dark little Hitchcock homage starring Margot Kidder tends to be unjustly swept by the wayside. It truly is a shame, because there is no denying that this film is at the very least equal to his more popular classics. The tale of a beautiful woman, her murderous doppelganger and the reporter who becomes caught up in their dark secret, this suspenseful tale isn't one to miss.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu

Decemberists' latest release a single album-length song

By Walter Tunis
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

Almost by definition, pop music is viewed as an easily digestible commodity. It commands that you stick to a familiar and accessible theme, conjure an appealing melody, and for crying out loud, it's got to move along briskly. A pop tune isn't an epic, you know.

Or is it?

The newest album by The Decemberists, "The Hazards of Love," harks back to an artistically haughty enterprise known as the "concept album." That means that even though it is technically divided into 17 songs, the recording is essentially one long piece – and a fairly fanciful one at that. Its story line involves fabled but forbidden love, forest witches and the promise of some nasty deeds from a fellow known as The Rake.

So what could be more out of step with the pop mainstream than to release an album that is, in essence, a single extended work? How about going on tour and performing the entire thing from start to finish?

Did Capitol Records, which signed the onetime indie sensation in 2005, think such moves conflicted with conventional pop strategies? Hard to say. But Decemberists drummer John Moen had an initial word for releasing and performing a concept work like "The Hazards of Love": "inadvisable."

The Decemberists share their latest album, titled "The Hazards of Love."

"I thought, 'OK, now that everyone is back to ordering just one song at a time on the Internet, we're going to make an entire album that is one big, long song,'" Moen said. "But you know, sometimes it can be really interesting to do something that even you are telling yourself is a bad idea."

"The Hazards of Love" didn't sell in Michael Jackson-like numbers upon its release last spring, but it did become the highest-charting album of the band's career, making it to No. 14 on the Billboard Top 100. More arresting than that, though, was the sheer expression and invention of the record.

Inspired by a 1966 LP disc of the same name from British folk songstress Anne Briggs, "The Hazards of Love" moves from delicate passages of dark acoustics to thundering bits of keyboard-charged rock 'n' roll. It's part 3rd-folk fairy tale (which is fascinating given that the band is from Portland, Ore.) and part rock 'n' roll theater.

"I love The Decemberists," said fellow Portland musician Scott McCaughey, who recruited all of The Decemberists for cameos on his new album, "Killingsworth," with indie rockers The Minus 5. "Great lyrics, absolutely killer musicians ... They're incredible. They go from doing really stripped-down English folk to bombastic prog-rock, but also sound great on everything in between. I really love that about them."

"The Hazards of Love," like all Decemberists records, is the invention of Colin Meloy. As the band's vocalist, frontman, co-founder and chief songwriter, he mapped out the album's epic pop design. And this wasn't the first time that Meloy had devised a concept recording for The Decemberists (which currently include multi-instrumentalist Chris Funk, keyboardist Jenny Conlee, bassist Nate Query and Moen). In 2004, he wrote the Irish-inspired (though decidedly un-Irish-sounding) "The Tain." But that EP's five songs lasted a mere 18 minutes. "The Hazards of Love" runs nearly an hour.

"It was daunting, firstly," Moen said. "I wasn't in the band when 'The Tain' was recorded. So I was kind of nervous about how all of this was going to come together. But Colin made a pretty detailed map, a demo, for us. Once you listened to everything, you realized how there are songs in there that hold up on their own just as much as the other material he writes.

"So once we heard the tunes, the ideas just started popping in our brains about how to make this sound unique. It became a kind of creative puzzle."

On tour, the band is being augmented for the new material by vocalists Shara Worden (of My Brightest Diamond) and Becky Stark (of Lavender Diamond). A second set features earlier Decemberists songs.

"I think we have proved that a show like this really isn't such a silly thing to do," Moen said. "I mean, I wasn't sure at first this was such a good plan, but it's been great to pull off playing the whole record, to get the whole thing done. I wouldn't have predicted something like this at all. But I'm really proud to be part of it."

Moore's newest 'Love' child

Like documentaries before it, 'Capitalism' expected to add fuel to the financial fire

By Steven Baum
Collegian Correspondent

As one of the most commercially successful documentary filmmakers in history, Michael Moore once again finds himself the subject of inquiry following the release of his most recent collection of criticism on America, "Capitalism: A Love Story."

Thirsting for answers to the questions on the minds of the majority, Moore sets out to uncover the reasons behind the financial crisis that has remained an issue in the United States since 2007. "Capitalism" captures Moore's efforts to understand the origin of the financial crisis and the collapse of the "American Dream."

This film, currently playing at the Amherst Cinema, will be presented as part of a special event on Wednesday, Oct. 6, which includes an introduction to the film and a discussion after the showing, both hosted by Class Action, a non-profit organization aimed at eliminating classism from the world. Classism is defined as the assignment of ability and worth based on the system of social classes.

Michael Moore's most recent documentary, which addresses the economic crisis currently facing the United States, will be screened tonight at Amherst Cinema.

Class Action's mission is to rid the world of classism, a change that would, among other things, reduce "vast differences in income, wealth and access to resources," according to the group's website. Class Action "provides training, strategies and resources to explore class and dismantle classism." The organization works towards its goal of a world without classism by working with various philanthropic institutions and places of higher education, including the Five Colleges and helping individuals develop an awareness of classism by hosting workshops and discussions open to the public.

Class Action was officially incorporated as a non-profit organization in July 2004. Its founders, Jennifer Ladd and Felice Yeskel, began holding workshops and forums to bring awareness to classism in 2001, hosting events open to the public in Western Massachusetts.

Moore's films have generally been the subject of much controversy. Moore introduced himself to the documentary world with his film "Roger & Me" In 1989, which documented the effects of General Motors closing down their Flint, Michigan factories and how the change affected Moore's hometown of Flint. Moore's second documentary, "Bowling for Columbine," examined the student shooting that occurred on April 20, 1999 at Columbine High School in Columbine, Co. and the gun control laws in America. Moore was the subject of much criticism and scrutiny following the release of this film, with a large portion of the public labeling the film as nothing more than propaganda.

In "Fahrenheit 9/11," Moore investigates the actions of the Bush administration following the attack on the World Trade Centers in New York City in 2001. Like his previous film, this generated a lot of controversy, causing some to label the project as more propaganda. Moore responded to these claims by publishing a credible list of facts and sources he used to create the film. Moore's 2007 documentary, "SiCKO," takes a look at the American healthcare system and compares it to those of other countries, such as Canada, France and the United Kingdom. Controversy followed the release of this film too, with the Treasury Department investigating Moore's trip to Cuba during the making of the film, and whether or not the trip violated the U.S. embargo against Cuba. Moore responded by citing that trips made for the sake of journalism are not in violation of the embargo, and do not require authorization by the State Department.

"Capitalism: A Love Story" is sure to raise many questions and generate a lot of discussion amongst the audience following the film.

The showing and discussion of "Capitalism: A Love Story" will be on Wednesday, Oct. 7 at 7:15 p.m. at Amherst Cinema, located at 28 Amity Street.

Steven Baum can be reached at sbaum@student.umass.edu

Pants, leggings take a stand on runways

By Elizabeth Wellington
The Philadelphia Inquirer

NEW YORK — New York and London fashion weeks make it clear: Pants have earned permission to be feminine.

In women's high-fashion circles, top tastemakers – Phillip Lim, Michael Kors, Philadelphia's own Behnaz Sarafpour and Tory Burch, and London-based designers Graeme Black and Matthew Williamson — presented pants as more than basic Hillary Clintonesque trousers. They were the sexy focus of outfits in shiny, lacy and ruffled splendor – a trend we haven't really seen since the late '70s.

"The pant has become more feminized (and) more detailed, like dresses," said Lim, whose presentation of his stellar 3.1 collection opened with a sleek cherry-red pantsuit.

One of the strongest looks in Lim's 39-piece grouping was a pair of navy blue, slightly skinny pants with ruffled tiers. So cool. So original. So feminique.

"Details like frills and bows usually reserved for dresses can now be applied to pants," Lim said.

Constance White, eBay's fashion director, agreed. Taking a break between London shows, she e-mailed me raving about the "feminine" pants by Rebecca Taylor (metallic with elastic cuffs), Diane von Furstenberg (roomier bottoms with layers) and Marc Jacobs (sheer pantaloons).

"There were certainly a lot more choices in pants than we've seen in a while," White said.

My favorite – and, of course, the least wearable for me — was a Sunkist-orange ruched pant by designer Tracy Reese, who usually is more sensitive to the hippy chicks. Still, she fearlessly showed the body-hugging legging. I know I'd have to pair this with a tunic, but a shiny three-quarter-length gold cropped jacket would be so much cooler. The boldness was quite refreshing.

I'm not saying this ends the era of the dress. Far from it. The majority of spring pieces previewed for next year were dresses and skirts – the shorter the better – in bold, jewel-toned shades. In fact, my bet is next summer's color will be a greener turquoise.

But pants are stealing some of the spotlight.

"Instead of being a foundation, we saw pants as a layering piece," said Sean General, women's wear buyer at Boyds. "Remember how women used to put the sweater over their shoulders? Now they are putting a skinny pair of pants under their dresses."

The focus on feminine detailing in pants crept onto the fashion scene late in fall 2008 as skinny jeans and leather leggings became standard under baby-doll dresses and chunky knits. (Remember the leather legging promotion at Express last fall?)

This fall, leggings are back. Some are studded. Others have glitter. Some are liquid metallic. I've even seen some lacy ones a la Prince Rogers Nelson.

With retail's focus on leggings combined with designers' focus on harem pants (which debuted on the runway in February but have yet to be hits with shoppers), the runway was primed for more trousers.

Fashion historians say that except for the smattering of decorative pants seen 30 years ago, the newfangled feminine detailing is something unique to this time.

Of course, women have worn pants regularly starting with the equestrian pant of the late 1800s. But, said Clare Sauro, curator of the historic costume collection at Drexel University, women have always been appropriating a man's look.

There were the '80s power suits and, in recent seasons, the boyfriend trousers. Pants often were a political statement. They were a way to be taken seriously in the workplace. Or they were worn to relax and do physical work.

"Women have never really claimed trousers as a feminine extension of themselves," Sauro said.

So this trend, now in its infancy, is one to watch. The good news: Those detailed pants you buy this fall will be in style for a while.

But we may have some trouble handling our trousers' new identity.

Traditionally, pants have been the go-to article of clothing for hiding our shape. Eat a little too much cheese? Those cuffed menswear trousers and a cute little top would hide your girth.

And those tight leather pants have always been about tough girls, not girly girls. Dust-ask "Grease" heroine Sandy. As for layering denim with my dresses, it always was about keeping warm.

Am I really bold enough to pair a dress with orange ruched leggings? Will I look feminine or just loud? And how will I disguise my one-night stands with bread and wine?

I feel a fashion conundrum coming on.

Join the UMass Republican Club for

AN EVENING WITH MEGHAN MCCAIN

Redefining Republican:
No Labels. No Boxes. No Stereotypes.

TONIGHT!
Wednesday, October 7, 2009
6:30PM
Bowker Auditorium (Stockbridge Hall)
Free Admission

Stop&Shop

Welcome back!

You don't need to be an economics major to know Stop & Shop offers great values that fit perfectly into a student's budget!

- Prepared foods • Natural and organic foods
- School supplies • Personal care needs
- Redbox™ DVD rentals
- Plus the convenience of a full-service pharmacy

Save even more with this special bonus coupon!

Exclusive bonus coupon
Valid Wednesday 9/16 - Saturday 11/28
Stop&Shop
$5 OFF a purchase of $20 or more.
Coupon must be presented at time of purchase. Limit one coupon per customer per order. This coupon cannot be doubled, tripled or combined with any other offer. Offer excludes alcoholic beverages, tobacco products, gift cards, milk, lottery tickets, gasoline, pharmacy items, postage stamps, prepaid telephone calling cards, Western Union® money orders, Metro passes, and any other purchases prohibited by law. Coupon not redeemable at Peapod® by Stop & Shop.
2 10000 00143818

A look at the 2009 MLB playoff match-ups

Dustin Pedroia (left) greets his teammate Jason Bay (right) after hitting a home run earlier this season. The Boston Red Sox will play the Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim in the first round of the 2009 MLB playoffs.

By Phil Rogers
Chicago Tribune

Twins-Yankees
Starting pitching

Edge: Yankees. This would have been a huge New York edge even if Minnesota hadn't been extended to Game 163, as the Twins' starters have the highest ERA in the playoffs. They don't appear to have a counter for CC Sabathia, who gets two starts in the best-of-five series. Scott Baker, the Twins' winningest starter, worked in Tuesday's game against Detroit and won't be available until Game 3. Nick Blackburn and Carl Pavano, who pitched Saturday and Sunday, won't be available for Game 1 if the Yankees choose the series with the eight-day format, beginning Wednesday.

Relief pitching

Edge: Yankees. This isn't a big advantage. The Twins have Joe Nathan and a solid cast of middle men ahead of him. Mariano Rivera is the best postseason closer ever, and coming off a vintage season. The setup corps is thin, however, after Phil Hughes.

Hitting

Edge: Yankees. It's hard to envision a team-wide drought for the Yankees. The cast built around Mark Teixeira and Alex Rodriguez leads the majors in runs, home runs, on-base percentage and extra-base hits, with oversized contributions from Hideki Matsui, Jorge Posada, Robinson Cano and Nick Swisher. The Twins are without Justin Morneau but are getting surprisingly good protection behind batting champ Joe Mauer from Jason Kubel and Michael Cuddyer.

Fielding

Edge: Twins. Year in and year out, the Twins are as solid fundamentally as anyone. Shortstop Orlando Cabrera hasn't been as solid this season as he was for the White Sox in 2008. The Yankees have allowed the most unearned runs of the eight playoff teams.

Manager

Edge: Twins. Indications suggest Joe Girardi is ready for his first playoff run but Ron Gardenhire has more experience. He's not bragging about his 2-8 record in the playoffs, however.

Gut read

Game 1 will be huge for the Yankees, who have lost 13 of their last 17 playoff games. But even if they stumble early, the Twins will have a hard time putting them away. They're the weakest of the eight playoff teams.

Pick: Yankees in three.

Red Sox-Angels
Starting pitching

Edge: Red Sox. Depth has been a problem for both of these groups this season, thanks to injury and, in the case of Nick Adenhart, tragedy. The Red Sox have starters with a strong history in October, however, especially Josh Beckett and Jon Lester. That is the difference. The Angels are counting on ace John Lackey, a free agent after the season, and newcomer Scott Kazmir, who has a strong history at Fenway Park, which the Angels as a group do not. Clay Buchholz and Daisuke Matsuzaka round out the Boston rotation; Jered Weaver and Joe Saunders the Angels' rotation.

Relief pitching

Edge: Red Sox. Previous Angels playoff teams have been loaded in the bullpen but that's not the case this time around. Closer Brian Fuentes looks like a rally waiting to happen, and the group in front of him hasn't developed like Mike Scioscia envisioned. Darren Oliver, a complementary reliever throughout his long career, could get setup work. As usual, there are lots of options out in the Boston bullpen, with Billy Wagner serving as a second closer to get the ball to Jonathan Papelbon. Takashi Saito had 39 saves for the Dodgers two years ago.

Hitting

Edge: Angels. Neither of these teams count on one or two sluggers, as they have in the past. There's not much difference between the teams. The names in the lineups suggest the Red Sox, as they run out guys like David Ortiz, Dustin Pedroia and Kevin Youkilis, but the Angels have scored more runs in the second half of the season. Bobby Abreu, Kendry Morales and Howie Kendrick more than offset the Vladimir Guerrero downturn.

Fielding

Edge: Red Sox. Alex Gonzalez has answered the questions Boston had at shortstop. Both teams handle themselves well in the field, with few fundamental breakdowns. As in other areas, not much difference between these teams.

Manager

Edge: Red Sox. Scioscia is excellent but since Game 4 of the 2004 ALCS, Francona has been an absolute wizard. His teams have won 24 of their last 35 playoff games.

Gut read

Boston has eliminated the Angels in the first round in 2008, '07 and '04, going 9-1 in those series. The Angels badly need to win the first two games at Angel Stadium and that won't be easy to do against Lester and Beckett.

Pick: Red Sox in five.

Feed your future

Tune in and learn why we're one of the best places to start your career.

Begin at www.pwc.tv

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2009 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. 'PricewaterhouseCoopers' refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer

CHECK OUT
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG

http://blog.masslive.com/dailycollegiansports

UMass prepares for Huskies

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Staff

Fresh off a 7-0 victory over Holy Cross, the Massachusetts tennis team is ready to take on Connecticut in Storrs, Conn. on Thursday.

UMass looks to continue its dominance in this traditional fall season matchup. Since the 2000-01 season, when the series began, UMass is 5-2 against the Huskies. The Minutewomen have won each of the last five matches.

"When we play UConn, we're really mentally prepared," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "The kids really refuse to back down."

Last year, in the 2008 fall season, the Minutewomen defeated the Huskies, 5-2. UMass won all three doubles matches on its road to victory and junior Candyce Boney defeated Kelly LaRusso, 6-3, 6-2, at No. 1 singles.

Senior Maude Lecluyse also won a match 1-6, 6-3, 7-6 (4) over Allison Campitello at No. 3 singles.

UMass took 4-3 victories in both the 2007-08 and the 2006-07 seasons as well. In 2005, it swept UConn, 7-0, and in both 2003-04 and 2004-05, the Minutewomen seized 6-1 victories.

UMass won 13 of the last 15 doubles matches over the Huskies, last losing in 2003-04. Since then, it has won 12 straight doubles matches.

UConn will look to come back strong after this series of defeats. The team is currently 1-0 on the season, with its lone victory coming over Bryant on Oct. 1. The Bulldogs were nothing more than a small challenge to the Huskies as they rolled to a 7-0 victory.

The singles competitors lost a total of five games in six matches, with senior LoRusso at No. 1 singles and junior Emily Herb at No. 2 singles, completely shutting out their opponents. The doubles teams all won their matches by a five game margin or more.

"This is the first true test of where we are," Dixon said. "We have to win this match from the bottom up, in the four, five, six singles matches."

UConn also competed in the Bucknell Invitational this past weekend. The Huskies took home two titles, as freshman Julia Allen won the C Singles Main Draw, 6-1, 6-4, over Liz Larkin of Bucknell. Freshman Abby McKeon and sophomore Alexa Gregory combined to earn the B Doubles Main Draw by beating George Mason's Andrea Londen and Meredith Cutchin by an 8-1 margin.

McKeon fell in the finals of the B Singles Main Draw, falling to Demi Iepuras of Bucknell. Gregory reached the second round of the B Singles Main Draw, but also lost to Iepuras. The duo did defeat Iepuras and her partner Dara Dwojewski in the semi-finals of the B Doubles Main Draw.

Campitello and LoRusso both missed coming advancing from the first round of the A Singles Main Draw.

LoRusso will look to defeat UMass for the first time in her career. She has yet to earn a win in any of her four previous attempts. Campinello defeated Lecluyse in the 2007-08 season, 6-4, 6-4.

This will be the first time that LoRusso faces UMass No. 1 singles player Magdalena Ploch.

The match was originally scheduled for 2:30 p.m. on Wednesday, but has been postponed until 2 p.m. on Thursday because of anticipated inclement weather. The match will still be at the Mullins Center tennis courts.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu.

Senior Maude Lecluyse hopes to have similar to success against UConn that she had in 2008 after defeating Allison Campitello.

Senior Cher King looks to get a shot off in a game last year. The Minutewomen (9-3) are riding a two-game winning streak after defeating Harvard, 1-0, last night.

Potts scores lone goal in win

F. HOCKEY from page 10

the last few seconds of the game as Harvard continued to put pressure on until the last second. With three seconds remaining in the game, the Crimson's Kristin Bannon fired a shot towards UMass' net. Widdall made a kick save to preserve the 1-0 victory, the fifth win by UMass with that score.

"They just worked really hard, they are a very good passing team and we got caught ball-watching a little bit," Sowry said of the Crimson. "We were unable to put a lot of pressure on their midfield. They definitely did that well and they were very fast on the counter attack. Fortunately, our deep defenders clean up at the right time."

The contest came as the third game in four days for the Minutewomen, a stretch where they finished 2-1 – the only loss coming at then-No. 6 Syracuse. Sowry admitted that the team has been somewhat fatigued due to the schedule, but it doesn't get any easier. UMass has another three games on the road coming up, one with No. 6 UConn looming on Friday.

"It has been a really difficult five days and it is going to continue to be difficult but we have to try and look after our bodies and get treated for the UConn game," Sowry said. "It is a very important game, the last ranked team that we're going to play this year and it is a team that we targeted all year, but we're still going to have to call on all of our reserve tanks and try and put together a stellar performance."

After UConn, the Minutewomen begin their Atlantic 10 schedule and know they must be healthy as they try to repeat as A-10 champions.

"After that, we really need to get healthy again and we'll be taking a number of days off our legs so we can refocus for the A-10 games coming up."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

Holmes gains confidence through prep

Linebacker Tyler Holmes (36) makes a tackle in one of his appearances as a linebacker. Holmes originally played cornerback as a freshman before moving to inside linebacker and has since made his presence known on the field.

HOLMES from page 10

"He had an ability to understand the game so much easier and so much quicker I think than most folks do," David Crist said of Tyler. "You really didn't have to tell Tyler but one time, if he made a mistake, you would tell him what he did and seldom did it ever repeat itself anywhere else."

Holmes first played corner in his freshman year, then moved to inside linebacker in his sophomore year under David Crist and soon was calling all of the plays for the defense.

It was a similar journey for Holmes once he got to UMass. After getting redshirted his freshman year, he found out that he was needed early in the season.

"I was just excited, I figured that definitely if they took my redshirt they would put me in the game," Holmes says of losing his redshirt. "I played a lot of special teams and got a lot of game experience that has helped me out this year."

After seeing some time his freshman year, including a start in the team's final game of the season, Holmes took on a larger role in his sophomore year. With injuries sidelining senior Josh Jennings, Holmes had to fill in at middle linebacker and has been solid there in anchoring a Minutemen defense that ranks third in the CAA in points allowed per game, passing defense and total yards per game.

When Holmes makes his way out of the locker room, dressed in his maroon practice shirt and black pants, he stops for a brief interview. Talking in a soft and quiet manner, Holmes responds to each question with a sense of unselfishness, despite playing a large role in UMass' near upset over Football Bowl Subdivision's Kansas State and a 44-7 rout over Albany in the first two weeks of the season.

"We just want to keep playing hard, the CAA is tough so we just got to keep turning it up and it all starts this week with Rhode Island," Holmes said before the team's Week 3 contest with Rhode Island.

The sophomore also speaks modestly, even though in three straight starts, dating back to his start against Hofstra in the last game in 2008, he picked off three opposing passes, one in each game.

"He just had a unique ability to know where the ball is going to go and I think not everyone has that," David Crist said of his former linebacker.

"He's just gonna be at the right place at the right time, that is why he had three picks in his first three games, because he's going to be at the right place at the right time," Brian Crist added of Holmes.

Holmes' streak of interceptions ended that week against URI, but it didn't mean Holmes didn't do what he always does. Holmes was still in the right place at the right time, but he just tipped the ball up so fellow linebacker Kurt Filler could grab the interception.

For some players, putting in as much time as Holmes does to study the game, whether it is watching film or memorizing his playbook, doesn't necessarily turn into results on the field. But with Holmes, the work he puts in off the field translates onto the field.

"Some guys have a harder time translating from the classroom onto the football field, and Tyler is not one of them," UMass coach Kevin Morris said. "Tyler takes all the knowledge he gets from the film work and from his studying the playbook and game-plan reports and puts it on the field and puts it to actual use and he's done a great job with it."

For Holmes, preparing himself for the next Saturday's game is more about giving himself confidence than learning new plays. He has probably seen the plays he studies a hundred times and gone over them in film sessions over and over again, but Holmes makes sure he knows the plays inside and out.

"It definitely paid off, it helped me play with confidence, when I know my plays, I know my assignments, I know my checks, that all just helps me play with confidence and its all reaction," Holmes says.

Holmes even admits to being nervous at times, from when he got called up to varsity in high school, to his first career start at UMass, but due to his game preparation he was always able to step up to the challenge.

"I remember being real nervous. Coach [Don] Brown use to come up to me and asked me if I was scared and I was like 'No, I'm ready to go.'" Holmes said of his first career start. "I just wanted to prove to my teammates that I could be the man, and that I could step up and play my position and doing that in the Hofstra game, I felt like I got their trust for this year."

Tyler gained their trust then, and continues to give his teammates reason to trust him as the season goes on, but that doesn't mean he'll get complacent.

"Sophomore year is going great as of now, I want to keep it up," Holmes says. "Of course I expect myself to make a lot of plays, just perform at a high level. I set minor goals for myself beside the team goals and right now I'm lining up to those goals, but I definitely have to keep it rolling."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

LOVE UMASS SPORTS?
Then come see the Daily Collegian Sports Section online!
www.DailyCollegian.com

Campus to Career
Student Alumni Association
UMass Amherst Alumni Association
HOMECOMING
Etiquette Dinner
Wednesday, October 14 • 5:30 pm
Amherst Room, 10th Floor, Campus Center
The Essentials of Etiquette
Enjoy a multi-course meal and socialize with UMass Amherst students and alumni as our etiquette professional shares the basics of proper dining etiquette and how to make a great first impression.
Enter to win a UStore gift card.
Seniors can also enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 13, 2010.
$10.00 per student
Register online at UMassAlumni.com/students
The Etiquette Dinner is sponsored by the Student Alumni Association and the UMass Amherst Alumni Association.

Public Notice: University Of Massachusetts Accreditation

The University of Massachusetts Amherst will undergo a comprehensive evaluation visit November 1 – 4, 2009, by a team representing the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the New England Association of Schools and Colleges.

The Commission on Institutions of Higher Education is one of eight accrediting commissions in the United States that provide institutional accreditation on a regional basis. Accreditation is voluntary and applies to the institution as a whole. The Commission, which is recognized by the U.S. Department of education, accredits approximately 200 institutions in the six-state New England region.

The University of Massachusetts Amherst has been accredited by the Commission since 1932 and was last reviewed in October, 1998. Its accreditation by the New England Association encompasses the entire institution. For the past year and a half, the University of Massachusetts Amherst has been engaged in a process of self-study, addressing the Commission's Standards for Accreditation. An evaluation team will visit the institution to gather evidence that the self-study is thorough and accurate. The team will recommend to the Commission a continuing status for the institution; following a review process, the Commission itself will take the final action.

The public is invited to submit comments regarding the institution to:

Public Comment on the University of Massachusetts Amherst
Commission on Institutions of Higher Education
New England Association of Schools and Colleges
209 Burlington Road
Bedford, MA 01730-1433
E-mail: cihi@neasc.org

Comments must address substantive matters related to the quality of the institution. Comments will not be treated as confidential.

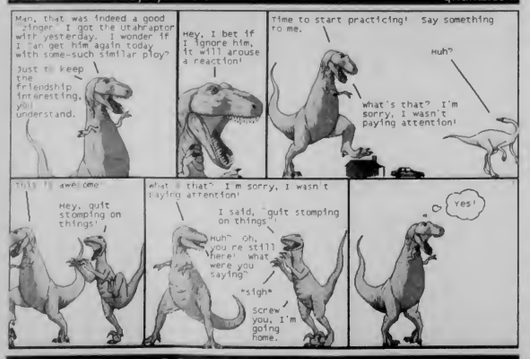
Written, signed comments must be received by November 4, 2009. The Commission cannot guarantee that comments received after that due date will be considered. Comments should include the name, address, and telephone number of the person providing the comments.

The Commission cannot settle disputes between individuals and institutions, whether those involve faculty, students, administrators, or members of other groups. Individuals considering submitting complaints against an affiliated institution should request the separate Policy and Procedures for the Consideration of Complaints Made Against Affiliated Institutions from the Commission office.

COMICS

Basketbomb by Matt Sullivan

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees mnftu.cc



Chainsaw Suit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Wondermark by David Malki! wondermark.com

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North qwantz.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

Part-time Personal Care Attendant, about 10-12 hours/week. Flexible hours, Please call Patrick. (413)-275-7928

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends From $99 Includes Hotel, Bus, and Clubs montrealexpress.net (781) 979-9001

SERVICES

Resume $27 ruby.sc@gmail.com

FOR RENT

Nice 5 bedroom house, music room, washer/dryer, on bus line, ample parking near UMass. $1,875+ per month. Skibiski Realtors (413)-586-1827

SPRING BREAK 2010

Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.

Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com

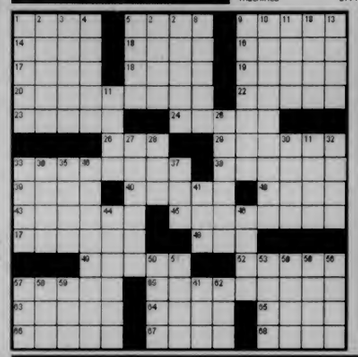
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

UMASS AMHERST



New Schedule for Winter Session

Earn credits during break!

Online classes begin: December 21, 2009

On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010

Sneak peek of class offerings [illegible]

ACROSS
1. Fabrics made from goat hair
5. Circle fragments
9. Strip
14. Farm building
15. Inflammation of the big toe
16. III
17. Murres
18. Almond
19. Stair part
20. The hide of a certain reptile
22. Alter
23. S S S S
24. Collection of maps
29. With hands on hips
33. Speech
38. Magnate
39. Verbal
40. Cadge
42. Basilica area
43. Ventilate
45. Unnecessary
47. More angry
48. Earned Run Average
49. Angered
52. Armored war machines
57. Perfume
60. Lacking in refinement
63. Water park slide
64. Govern
65. Comply with
66. Part of a joint
67. Historical periods
68. Small rounded bread
69. Trap
70. Dispatched
71. Competent

DOWN
1. Bad treatment
2. Cowsheds
3. Operatic solos
4. Viper or boa
5. Matures
6. Stone
7. Papal court
8. A dangerous feat
9. Marked with stripes
10. Capricious
11. Backside
12. Adolescent
13. Group of cattle
21. Jacob's brother
25. State of agitation
27. A photographic tool
28. Bigheadedness
30. Brood
31. Supervisor
32. I I I I
33. Farm soil
34. Neighborhood
35. An aromatic ointment
36. A professional combatant of ancient Rome
37. Long, long time
41. C
44. Belonging to this world
46. Romantic encounter
50. Grows weary
51. Habituate
53. Ancient Greek marketplace
54. A wealthy man
55. The sound of a bell rung slowly
56. Elan
57. Parts of a play
58. Not now
59. Albacore or bluefin
61. Distinctive flair
62. In order that not

Last night, I lay in bed looking up at the stars in the sky. And I thought to myself, "Where the heck is the ceiling?"

-Anonymous

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't be the star on "True Life: I had a secret office affair that ended badly."

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Honestly, who doesn't understand why King Kong won't switch to Direct TV!

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Perhaps the back of your midterm will read, "Haha, you're on Scare Tactics!"

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You have a new nickname: Boss Monster Flex. Use it well.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
"More than meets the eye" doesn't really apply to everything.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Jesus saves, but you could be the one to score on the rebound.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
"Drug addict" is not the best Halloween costume.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
An obsession with the Energizer Bunny has both positive and negative side effects.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You chew so loud because your brain is grasping for air.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are the one person for whom Motel 6 does not leave on the light.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Rejoice that the oort cloud didn't rain o0rt on your dorm-room.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you're assigned homework in class, feel free to respond, "P-p-p please don't do this to me."

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro travisdandro.com

SUDOKU

3	8				4		2
		5			7		1	8
	4			2			3
				7
				6	2		8
						6
				1	3
		9				1
7		1			5	9

EVERY WEDNESDAY: Poker Night

EVERY THURSDAY: Promo & Trivia Night

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8TH: Trivia Night
Sponsored by Stella Artois

EVERYDAY: $1.00 Drafts!

[illegible]pshire Mall
[illegible] from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery

ARIZONA PIZZA

KPMG GO.COM/ BRANDING U

In a crowded job market...

how well will you stand out?

As you prepare for interviews to land that prized internship or first job, it's essential to present yourself so that employers can see what makes you unique. KPMG Branding U is a great place to get the information and advice you need with KPMG professionals offering their perspectives on personal branding, job-hunting and interviewing. Our self assessment tool and online information help you define and communicate your key attributes in ways that employers will really respond to, and you'll see real-world examples that truly work. Visit Branding U today and separate yourself from the competition!

www.kpmg-go.com/BrandingU

AUDIT • TAX • ADVISORY

KPMG

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 7, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass returns 6 top scorers in '09

Mass Attack ranked 7th in Coaches Poll

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon sees his team like any other coach does before the season starts: undefeated and full of potential. But for Cahoon and the Mass Attack, potential will not be enough to improve on a 16-20-3 record from a year ago and a rigorous conference schedule.

The Minutemen, who ranked seventh in the Hockey East Preseason Coaches Poll, bring back 21 letterwinners and six of their top 10 scorers for last year. More importantly though, UMass retains many of the team's core players.

"We have several really good returning veterans in each key position," Cahoon said. "We have a group of kids, many of whom are of real good character and good personality and we think we've complimented them with a good group of young players to fill in the gaps."

The veteran presence will be huge for the Minutemen this season. However, that is a luxury that UMass has in bulk, with forward Brett Watson and defenseman Justin Braun coming back as captains with senior defenseman Martin Nolet and junior forward James Marcou bringing vital experience.

"We think that the biggest strength of this team is the character of the team and the leadership that we have in that locker room," Cahoon said.

Cahoon had particular praise for the leadership capabilities of his two returning captains.

"Brett Watson is the pure leader of this team and has been for two years and he'll continue to be the captain," Cahoon said. "Justin Braun has been maybe the most valuable player on this team for a couple of years now because of his position and the amount of ice time he gets and the situations we put him in."

While the Minutemen will rely on Braun and Watson to act as the foundation for the team, Marcou remains the offensive star. After tying for the conference lead in points last season with 47, the All-American winger will be the spark for the UMass top scoring line along with sophomores Casey Wellman and T.J. Syner.

Like the team's other leaders, Marcou's impact goes beyond his numbers and into his work ethic and example for the rest of the team.

"What we'll see most with James is that the young kids will see how hard he works at his game," Cahoon said. "Yes he has gifts and skills, but for the most part, it devolves from hard work and due diligence."

Maturity will be an important factor for the Minutemen, as they are currently looking at some of the best teams in the country at the top of the conference rankings. Defending champion Boston University is currently ranked at the top of Hockey East and No. 2 in the nation. Also nationally ranked are Hockey East foes No. 11 UMass Lowell, No. 12 Boston College, No. 14 Vermont, No. 16 New Hampshire and No. 20 Northeastern.

"Everyone's grown accustomed to this league being an unbelievable league," Cahoon said of the high level of play present in the conference year after year.

Sophomore Danny Hobbs races down the ice with the puck in a game last year. The Minutemen were ranked seventh in the Hockey East Preseason Coaches Poll after finishing the 2008-09 season with a 16-20-3 record.

"On paper, there is as close a league that has ever been put together," he said. "What does that mean? It means a lot of anguish for the coaches because every night, the team that's most ready and most prepared is always going to succeed."

With its strong veteran presence, the tough conference could play right into UMass' favor. The team's experience in prior Hockey East play could be the difference between the Minutemen cracking into the national rankings or falling out of the conference race.

"We're just going to have a real presence in that locker room of guys that understand exactly what it takes to succeed at this level," Cahoon said.

UMass will find out how it matches up against the rest of the conference when it faces BU during its second week. The game against the Terriers is in the midst of stretch where the Minutemen play seven out of nine games at home to start the season.

When UMass finally takes the ice Thursday against Rensselaer, it will begin its efforts to improve upon last season. The Minutemen finished the season seventh in the conference and in the middle of the pack in most other areas. The Minutemen will have to improve on their performance within the conference if they want to have their first winning season since 2006-07 after being ranked seventh in scoring and sixth defensively.

Cahoon, though, had little concern over past seasons. Now entering his 10th season, the coach is more concern about creating history for his team today.

"Remember, both teams are stepping on the ice undefeated," Cahoon said. "The first games, you can have the greatest disparities in the level of play. When you look at the two teams at the end of the year, there could be a great disparity between the two and no one's going to know that the first night."

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

UM edges Harvard

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Despite a late charge by Harvard and a last-second shot, the Massachusetts Field Hockey team came out on top at Harvard, 1-0, behind a strong defense and UMass' first penalty stroke of the year.

With eight minutes remaining in the first half, the No. 10 Minutewomen were awarded a penalty corner that set up a Makaela Potts' shot. The junior's shot was blocked but found the stick of captain Katie Kelly, who rifled a shot at the net.

As the shot was on its way to finding the back of the net, a Harvard (4-5) defender stepped in the way, preventing the goal and giving UMass (9-3) a penalty stroke.

"The penalty was given for the ball hitting a defender on the line, on the foot," UMass coach Justine Sowry said after the win. "We gave it to Makaela who was having a great game and she executed it perfectly."

Potts beat the Crimson's goalkeeper, Cynthia Tassopoulos, placing the ball on the inside of the right post for the score. The goal was Potts' fifth of the season.

"Makaela Potts, without a doubt, had a very solid game," Sowry said.

Sowry also praised the efforts of Kelly who was tied for the team lead in shots with five. Potts also had five – and led the team in shots on goal with four.

"The other contributor that is definitely worth mentioning is Katie Kelly," Sowry said. "She had a very strong showing today and led by example with a really strong game and giving us a great penetration on the attack."

The Minutewomen dominated the game in terms of shots, taking 21 to Harvard's eight and 14 on goal to the Crimson's four.

The four shots on net were all saved by All-American Alesha Widdall, who recorded her sixth shutout of the season. On the other side of the field, the Crimson's Tassopoulos stopped 12 of UMass' shots, keeping the contest close.

"We had a lot of opportunities and I give a lot of credit to their goalkeeper who kept them in the game and kept it a lot closer," Sowry said.

One of Widdall's saves came in

See F. HOCKEY on page 7

Junior Makaela Potts chases after a ball during a game last season. The midfielder scored the Minutewomen's lone goal in their victory over Harvard and will play Connecticut on Oct. 9.

As a sophomore, Tyler Holmes has worked his way to starting as a linebacker for the Minutemen. Holmes currently has six tackles and two interceptions in four games.

Holmes studies way to starting linebacker

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Tyler Holmes slowly walks along the outside of the Massachusetts football team's locker room. He walks slowly because his eyes are fixated on the open playbook in his hands, so it's hard for him to see where he's going.

"Hey Tyler, you have a minute for an interview?" Jason Yellin, UMass' associate athletic director and the team's media relations representative, asks.

"Yeah, let me just change real quick," Holmes responds, as he takes a quick look away from his playbook at me, then back down to his playbook as he enters the locker room.

"He's always studying," Yellin laughs as I wait.

Despite being on a college campus, it is rare to see anyone walking around with his or her face buried in a book, never mind a playbook. Even outside the No. 12 Minutemen's locker room, most players are walking with their playbooks in hand, but few of them are open.

Not with Tyler Holmes, UMass' new middle linebacker.

"You always can get better. You never play a perfect game," Holmes says. "College football is pretty hard with learning all the plays, so I just really study my playbook, make sure I know my assignments."

So far, in just his sophomore year, Holmes seems to know all of his assignments. Through four games, the Blacksburg, Va., native leads the team with 32 tackles (tied for fifth in the Colonial Athletic Association), two interceptions and has two pass-break ups.

The work ethic and studying habits displayed by Holmes today were instilled in him back in his high school days playing for David Crist, father of UMass wide receivers coach, Brian Crist. At Blacksburg High School, Holmes received the rare opportunity to play at the varsity level midway through his freshman year and proved to his high school coach what he could do on the football field.

See HOLMES on page 7

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 64 LOW: 42 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8, 2009

Meghan McCain speaks at Bowker

Former candidate's daughter hosted by Republican Club tells campus her vision for the GOP

By Michael Phillis
Collegian Staff

Meghan McCain – the daughter of 2008 Republican presidential nominee John McCain – spoke at the University of Massachusetts Wednesday about the future of the Republican Party, stressing themes of inclusiveness and civility as vital for the party's future.

McCain's speech, titled "Redefining Republican: no labels, no boxes, no stereotypes," was sponsored by the UMass Republican Club. "I'm not saying to abandon the core ideas [of Republicanism]," said McCain. "I'm asking the Republican Party not to be so stubborn and closed minded."

There are some ideas that McCain believes do not comply with the more conservative elements of the party, her advocacy for gay marriage being an example. McCain said that a person like her who believes in socially progressive ideas is still a valuable voice in the Republican Party.

McCain's speech lasted 17 minutes. The majority of her time was spent after her speech taking questions from the audience on everything from health care to John McCain's campaign to the importance of broadening the Republican image.

McCain's talk started with a clip of her on the Colbert Report back in May where – in his normal arch-conservative character Colbert joked, "by the end of this interview we are going to make you a Republican."

There was some bitterness however, when McCain was asked to answer why she called herself a Republican.

"It's very insulting for me to have to go down this litmus test of detail, by detail, by detail. I can give you three reasons right now: health care, the war in Iraq, and I'm very pro life."

For the upcoming presidential race in 2012, McCain thought that the Republican Party would either go socially conservative – with a nominee like Mike Huckabee, the former governor of Arkansas – or more fiscally conservative with someone like Mitt Romney, the former governor of Massachusetts.

There was a combination in McCain's talk of discussing the future of the Republican Party and her experience as the daughter of John McCain. A member of the audience asked her about her views on torture, her reply came, not out of a hard and fast policy line, but of a more personal nature.

"My dad couldn't pick me up as a kid or teach me how to ride a bike," she said, trying to demonstrate that, after her father was tortured for five years in Vietnam, she thought that torture was never acceptable. "It's what separates us from the terrorists."

McCain has received criticism from members of her party that have at times been personal in nature. She cited some who had "complained about the way my ass looked in a pair of jeans," as an example of what is wrong with the way debate is carried out in politics.

According to McCain, her treatment has not gotten any better lately now that Barack Obama is president. "Republicans and Democrats seem to be even less able to get along with each other," she said, citing Joe Wilson yelling, "You lie!" at President Obama during an address to a joint session of Congress.

She linked the theme of civility back to her own ability to be a member of the party that would not receive criticism for supporting policies like gay marriage or well-funded sex education in schools. McCain said that "if we bring back civility into politics, it won't be so hard to be like me."

McCain voted for John Kerry for President in the 2004 election and said that one of her political idols was Barry Goldwater.

UMass students have protested some previous speakers that have been sponsored by the Republican Club. Don Feder spoke at UMass last spring about his thoughts on the faults in hate crime laws. He stopped speaking after he was yelled at by a number of people who attended his talk. Meghan McCain did not garner any protest and her talk went along uninterrupted.

Bowker Auditorium – the location of McCain's speech – was about half full to see McCain's presentation that was open to the public, free of charge.

Derek Khana, President of the UMass Republican Club, opened for McCain at the conclusion of the Colbert Report clip. His remarks centered around McCain's important perspective – as an insider to her father's campaign and not an elected official – that gave her the opportunity to speak honestly and compellingly about the Republican Party's future.

"[McCain] understands the political necessities of tomorrow," said Khana.

Failing to see how more government control in health care would be a positive, McCain dismissed the ideas that are being proposed by Democrats in the often-contentious health care debate.

The future tended to be the most important theme of her talk. McCain spoke of the importance of using the Internet and engaging young people in the future of politics. "Being a Republican is not the coolest thing right now," she said. "The older generation is just going to have to starting making room."

McCain has two brothers who are serving in the military. When asked by a member of the audience whether or not, knowing what we know now, we should have gone to war in Iraq she replied, "I don't think it matters [why we went in]." She is supportive of the efforts of the United States in that country.

At just 24 years old, McCain graduated from Columbia University in 2007 and spoke of her time on the campaign trail – learning the ins and outs of politics and the process – citing it as her version of graduate school. Through her experience, McCain provided small stories of the campaign trail and her experiences meeting some of the most interesting political operatives in the nation. Facts that were previously not widely known – such as her father's fear that Ron Paul might pull off something spectacular in the New Hampshire primary – gave a rare first hand glimpse into John McCain's 2008 run for President.

Questions were put forward, inquiring into her views on one issue compared to another, but the main focus of her speech was not so much on specific issues like health care and gay marriage, but on the overall direction of the Republican Party.

"I don't believe I'm the lone spokesperson in the room," she said of the future of the party. She spoke about the importance of young people in the political process.

"[The] south felt they really truly mattered [in 2008] and they delivered," she said. "Only for the wrong guy."

Mike Phillis can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu

Arizona senator and former presidential candidate John McCain's daughter Meghan addressed the University of Massachusetts Wednesday, telling students about her ideas for the future of the Republican party.

Totman Gymnasium is scheduled for renovation as part of the Trustees' $888 million capital plan.

Trustees approve $888 million capital plan

By Sam Hayes
Collegian Staff

$888 million has been dispensed to the University of Massachusetts by the Board of Trustees for a variety of improvements, including earmarked projects as well as new construction, according to the recently released UMass five-year capital plan.

The plan reaches all five campuses in the UMass system, with a total of $2.6 billion for the next five years. Over the past decade only $1.9 billion was spent on similar improvements.

The capital plan hopes to update the university's facilities. 68% of UMass Amherst's facilities were built in the 1960s and 70s while another 25% dates back to before 1950.

University Spokesmen Robert Connolly said that one can see improvements "most vividly in Amherst, where you see the fruits of a lot of renovation projects, and also many new facilities, ISB (the Integrated Sciences Building), the Studio Arts building, the new student recreation center and the new dorms."

Although the trustees plan to spend $2.63 billion, the "total need identified" in the next five years is over $1 billion more, at $3.7 billion.

UMass was able to get over $1 billion in capital investment from the Higher Education Capital Improvement Act, as well as $250 million from the Life Sciences Industry investment act.

The capital plan calls for more improvements, using an "unprecedented" amount of borrowed funds to do it. UMass borrowed $1.27 billion from the Health and Educational Facilities Authority (HEFA) and the University of Massachusetts Building Authority (UMBA).

As of June 30, UMass's debt was $1.38 billion. UMass's annual debt service, or the amount that UMass is required to pay per year to pay off the debt, will rise from $110 million to $138 million.

A definite need for improvement can be found in deferred maintenance, compliance, repair and replacement of existing infrastructure according to the plan, as well as "new construction for academic and research facilities, student housing, recreation & campus centers, and auxiliary activities such as parking and dining facilities."

UMass Amherst will complete 97 projects by 2014, costing more than $1.1 billion. Also, the school will attempt to attract new faculty by improving facilities, which will "result in research growth and increased student demand."

See CAPITAL on page 2

Students to protest for LGBT equality in D.C.

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

Today, Thursday October 8 at noon, students from University of Massachusetts, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith colleges will be marching across the UMass campus to raise awareness for the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender people.

Those marching will be meeting at the Student Union at 12 p.m. and the event will be approximately an hour-and-a-half long. Students and community members armed with strong words and stronger emotions will be rallying for LGBT equality.

This march serves multiple purposes, to raise awareness on campus of the issue, as well as to rally students to come to Washington D.C. this Sunday for the National Equality March.

When asked why she supports students marching in the Rally for Equality on Thursday, UMass Sophomore Kellie Quinn, 19, of Framingham, Mass., said she wants to fight for civil liberties and incite others to advocate for their beliefs.

"It is important to stand up for your rights and the rights of others. Silence and complacency are the fuel for injustice." She also hopes, "we'll be an inspiration to someone and give people a taste of what it means to fight for your ideas, values, and beliefs," Quinn said.

Another UMass sophomore, Andrea Gonzalez, 19, of Gardner, Mass. is marching for a few reasons.

See MARCH on page 2

Students will assemble Thursday at noon at the Student Union to march across campus in support of LGBT rights before a national march in Washington takes place on Sunday.

ARTS & LIVING
'Straight, No Chaser'
Tuesday's screening at Amherst Cinema paved homage to late, great jazz legend Thelonious Monk.
SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS
Minutemen look for four straight
The UMass football team will travel to Delaware Saturday to take on the 3-2 Fightin' Blue Hens
SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION
Columnist Matthew Robare explains why getting Z's can be more important than getting A's.
SEE PAGE 3

DailyCollegian.com
Head to DailyCollegian.com for writer Chris Shores' video coverage of Meghan McCain's speech on Wednesday night

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 23

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Deimer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Annie Keithline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ebse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Sammell
ASSISTANT COMICS Andrew Witts
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Hannah Nelson
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alissa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semesters. The Collegian is independently funded operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Massachusetts Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1965, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Bush

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

Students march for LGBT rights

Five College march at UMass precedes Sunday national March for Equality on Washington

MARCH from page 1

"I feel this march is the opportunity of a lifetime. Also, this march is truly revolutionary. I have never been around this many supporters at once and I feel that this could be a fantastic learning experience," she said.

Gary Lapon, 24, Springfield, Mass., a local LGBT activist and organizer of the trip to Washington D.C. believes that not only LGBT students but those of all sexual orientations need to get on the bus to Washington D.C because LGBT rights can only be achieved with support from people of all orientations.

"We have to unite to win struggles for social and economic justice, and unless those who are not a part of the LGBT community stand in solidarity with their LGBT brothers and sisters, unity will be impossible," said Lapon.

A group of over a 100 will be leaving around 1 a.m. Sunday morning and will return to campus around 3 a.m. Monday. Tickets for the bus are $60 but, if financial assistance is needed, students can contact Lapon.

While there were less than 10 seats available on the bus from Amherst as of Wednesday night, if a student wishes to attend they can email Lapon at equalitywmass@gmail.com. Lapon can put students in contact with other groups in the area attending the march or link people to carpool together.

The March on Washington will be held on October 10-11 with keynote speakers including Cleve Jones, the creator of the NAMES Project AIDS Memorial Quilt who worked with the openly gay politician Harvey Milk, as well as Julian Bond, a leader of the American Civil Rights Movement and a chairman of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). The march will also host musicians including the Gay Men's Chorus of Washington, a highly respected performing arts group.

Well-known celebrities including Bryan Batt, an actor in the AMC series "Mad Men", Scott Fujita a linebacker for the New Orleans Saints, and singer Lady Gaga have endorsed the mission of the march. The march has also been endorsed by members of congress, professors across the nation, religious leaders and veterans groups. The Broadway show "Hair" has cancelled its Sunday matinee show on October 11 to allow the cast and production crew to attend.

As the National Equality March website states, "We guaranteed equal protection by the 14th Amendment of the US Constitution. Free and equal people do not bargain for or prioritize our rights, so we are coming to D.C. this October 10-11 to demand equal protection in all matters governed by civil law in all 50 states"

Specific rights that citizens are fighting for include the right to marriage, to be openly gay in the military, same-sex adoption, to donate blood or sperm and anti-discrimination in the work force, as well as many others.

If unable to attend the National Equality march, Lapon hopes students will join or watch the Rally for Equality and be inspired by the efforts of their peers. There will also be meetings after the march held on the UMass campus to discuss further efforts towards equality. Details can be found on their website, equalitywmass.blogspot.com, or on the WEquality Contingent Coalition Facebook page.

Many are comparing the fight of the LGBT community for equality to the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960's. Often the words of Martin Luther King Jr. are quoted from his letter from Birmingham Jail in April 16, 1963, "injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwilliamsv@student.umass.edu

Protesters will flock to Washington, D.C. on Sunday to support the National Equality March. A group of local students will caravan to the capital for the march, which aims to increase LGBT rights.

UMass trustees sign off on $888 million in capital spending for continuing renovations

CAPITAL from page 1

according to the report.

Other problems listed in the report pertaining to the Amherst campus included 27% of science or engineering spaces rated "poor," a shortage of academic space limits, enrollment and the large residential population's wear on the facilities.

New improvements expected on the UMass campus include: A new science building, an addition to the Totman kinesiology building, enclosures for the tennis courts, new solar panels, a Worcester dining common overhaul, purchasing new property and about 30 other multi-million dollar renovations.

Aside from the proposed buildings, a variety of research or teaching projects are also part of the plan.

Sam Hayes can be reached at sdhayes@student.umass.edu.

Contact Nick Bush at news@dailycollegian.com

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
BUY 6 BOTTLES OF WINE WITH YOUR REUSABLE FOUR SEASON WINE BAG AND RECEIVE 10% OFF
LIQUOR SPECIALS

Johnnie Walker Blue Label	750ml $209.99	Chopin Polish Vodka	750 ml $32.99	Myer's Platinum Rum	1.75 liter $19.99
Hennessy Cognac X.O.	750 ml $129.99	Hennessy Cognac V.S.	750 ml $30.99	Smirnoff RTS Cocktails	1.75 liter $18.99
Grand Marnier 100yr Centenaire	750 ml $120.99	J&B Scotch	1.75 liter $29.99	Jeremiah Weed RTS Half & Half	1.75 liter $18.99
Ardbeg Alrigh Nambeist	750 ml $99.99	Ciroc Snap Frost Vodka	750 ml $29.99	Capt. Morgan RTS Long Island Ice Tea	1.75 liter $18.99
Bushmills 1608 Anniversary	750 ml $99.99	Belvedere Pura Vodka	750 ml $28.99	Jeremiah Weed Sweet Tea Vodka*	750 ml $16.99
Johnnie Walker Gold Label	750ml $74.99	Captain Morgan Spiced Rum	1.75 liter $27.99	*Including Original, Peach and Bourbon
Oronoco Reserva Rum	1.75 liter $59.99	Nuvo L'Esprit de Paris	750 ml $27.99	Parrot Bay Key Lime Rum	750 ml $15.99
Tierras 100% Organic Tequila	Reposado 750 ml $39.99	10 Cane Rum	750 ml $26.99	Captain Morgan Parrot Bay Rum*	750 ml $15.99
Hennessy Black Cognac	750 ml $38.99	Bailey's Irish Cream*	750 ml $22.99	*Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit
Grand Marnier Cordon Rouge	750 ml $34.99	Including Original, Caramel, Coffee, Mint Chocolate		Smirnoff Twist Flavored Vodka	750 ml $12.99
Tanqueray Gin	1.75 liter $34.99	Jose Cuervo Tequila*	1.0 liter $21.99	*Including Strawberry, Watermelon, Raspberry, Black Cherry
Bushmills BlackBush	750ml $34.99	Ketel One Vodka	750 ml $20.99	Smirnoff Pear Flavored Vodka	750 ml $12.99
Glenmorangie 10yr	750 ml $34.99	Ketel One Citroen Vodka	750 ml $20.99	Smirnoff Pinapple Flavored Vodka	750 ml $12.99

SALE 10/1 - 10/14 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

ALASKA SEAFOOD
Wild, Natural & Sustainable wild alaska seafood WEEK

October 5-8th
SALMON, SCALLOPS, HALIBUT, AND COD.
Come taste and learn why Alaska is the natural state for wild and sustainable seafood. A model for quality, purity and responsible fishing practices; Alaska Seafood is also the perfect ingredient for healthy flavor.

SPEAKER
KARL URI, a former Alaskan fisherman, will speak on seafood sustainability and health.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8TH AT 7PM IN THE BERKSHIRE ROOM

GUEST CHEF
NAOMI EVERETT, chef and culinary arts instructor, will showcase recipes utilizing Alaska's amazing resources.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8TH, 5-8PM IN THE BERKSHIRE DC

UMASS DINING
RESTAURANTS Ivy Seafood WATCH
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fight for your right to sleep

Matthew M. Robare

I have an important and radical proposal for you all, so listen up.

This semester has generally been difficult for me so far because I have two classes which start before 10 a.m. And between my various responsibilities, I am in bed between midnight and 1:00 a.m. This just can't go on. I need my sleep and I need my education, but without my nightly trip to the land of "Nod" it becomes difficult to function and therefore my education suffers.

Therefore, I will make known in this column the following: Sleep is a fundamental natural right and it is inhuman, cruel and unusual to penalize someone for getting up before 10 a.m.

It is not unreasonable to expect a student to be up and at 'em at 9 a.m. But between work, class assignments and life in general, an early start gets to be too much.

How do I justify this assertion?

Simple. A natural right is a right which we have by virtue of being human. For example, freedom of speech is a natural right because our ability to speak and think does not depend upon some artificial means. The right to own property is natural because it is, according to John Locke, the application of natural mental or physical labor to that which already exists in nature. For most people, sleep comes naturally and does not need to be induced artificially. In fact, the inability to go to sleep can be a serious medical issue.

Since a large part of our mental and physical well-being depends on sleep and the exercise of other rights is often dependent upon mental and physical health, it stands to reason that sleep is one of the most fundamental rights, along with the right to life.

In the past 24 hours, most of my inhibitions have broken down and my mental health has deteriorated. I have recited Shakespearean soliloquies on the toilet, moon-walked through the library, and pondered how much travel time could be saved by using momentum and throwing myself down a flight of stairs. Yes, the magical world of sleep deprivation. More hardcore insomniacs experience wild hallucinations, such as being helicopters, or have visions of Mr. T.

According to the National Sleep Foundation, lack of sleep results in an increase in the risk of car accidents, an increase in obesity, a greater chance for diabetes and a shortened attention span. These effects have a huge bearing on our lives. Totalitarian governments, such as the Soviet Union, and not-so-totalitarian governments, such as the United Kingdom, have used sleep deprivation as a torture technique. Torture, everyone will agree, is an extreme violation of human rights and dignity – and since sleep deprivation is a technique used in "enhanced interrogations" around the world, it follows that sleep is most definitely a right.

Here on this campus, students are sleep deprived as a matter of course. Exams at 6:00 a.m., 7:00 a.m. or 8:00 a.m. – before anything opens to even admit the possibility of coffee – can be preceded by studying deep into the night, so that when the time comes for exams, they might have well spent the past 24 hours with the KGB.

It is not unreasonable to expect a student to be up and at 'em at 9 a.m. But between work, class assignments and life in general, an early start gets to be too much. Benjamin Franklin said that "Early to bed, early to rise, makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise." But in the modern world, it is simply too difficult to go to bed early. Experts agree that more sleep benefits students and makes their lives better.

Some people try to combat their lack of sleep with energy drinks, like Red Bull, Rock Star or Monster. But those drinks often have a distinctly negative effect on health, containing 280mg of caffeine in an 8.5 ounce serving. Coffee, by contrast, contains 100mg per six ounces. The high sugar content in combination with the caffeine can lead to insomnia, an arrhythmic heart beat, and anxiety attacks.

Nothing can replace sleep. Not even Adderall.

We must all pull together and fight for our right to a good night's sleep. I encourage everyone to agitate on behalf of more sleep. Hold a sleep-in during the next early morning lecture you go to, or sleep out on the Campus Center lawn now and again. Sleep is precious; too precious to be withheld from those of us who need it most. As my final thought in this column, let me just say that it is vastly important to remember "Zzzz..."

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

U.S. needs to play right hand

Rachel Dougherty

It's Wednesday night at the White House, and all the major players in U.S. foreign policy are sitting around a table with the president. They're considering their positions, working out their strategies, and wondering what hand is going to be dealt next. Its decision time for Barack Obama's administration, and they have to decide: Do we go all in, or do we fold?

The White House hasn't spent the past month locked in an international game of Texas Hold 'em. The game is U.S. military strategy in Afghanistan, and the stakes are the future of the Afghan democratic government and the lives of the potentially 68,000 troops that could be stationed there by 2010.

It's been more than a month since General Stanley McChrystal issued a report asking the president to deploy an additional 30,000 to 40,000 troops to Afghanistan. The report has ignited a fierce national debate over the need for troops in Afghanistan. Some, like General McChrystal, feel that the U.S. needs to focus its military efforts on protecting the fragile Afghan democracy from the resurgence of Taliban forces in the provinces surrounding Kabul. Others, such as Vice President Joe Biden, want to reduce U.S. military presence in Afghanistan and focus instead on the threat of Al-Qaeda along the Afghanistan-Pakistan border. Obama has to decide which is the bigger risk: becoming entrenched in a never-ending war in Afghanistan, or leaving Afghanistan vulnerable to a Taliban insurgency that could return the country to its pre-9/11 state. To continue the gambling metaphor, U.S. policy on Afghanistan is looking like a crap-shoot.

The question Americans are asking themselves is: What obligation do we have to the people of Afghanistan?

For international student Wadia Samadi, this question is personal. Samadi, a junior at the University of Richmond, came to the U.S. from Kabul in 2007 through the Initiative to Educate Afghan Women (IEAW). She will return to Afghanistan after she graduates in 2011.

The question Americans are asking themselves is: What obligation do we have to the people of Afghanistan?

Wadia believes that the continued U.S. presence in Afghanistan is crucial not only in protecting the Afghan government from the Taliban, but also in ensuring U.S. national security.

"If the U.S. were to withdraw from Afghanistan, let's say tomorrow, the Afghan democracy will not survive very long because there are no institutions strong enough to keep it standing," Samadi says. "But this is not the only consequence of such a decision: Al-Qaeda will find a more favorable terrain for its terrorist activities."

Samadi's opinion is based on her connections and personal experience with the democratic government in Afghanistan. Her father is Abdul Razique Samadi, Deputy Minister of Administration for the Ministry of Finance in Afghanistan. Wadia returns to Kabul every summer and was in the city during preparations for the 2009 Afghan presidential election.

The fate of the new democracy in Afghanistan holds a personal significance for Wadia's family. Samadi's family left Afghanistan when Civil War broke out in 1991. They relocated to a refugee camp in Pakistan and returned to Kabul in 2002, once the Taliban presence had been "removed" by U.S. forces. Samadi does not believe that military withdrawal is even an option for the U.S., as it would signify a clear defeat to Al-Qaeda and pave the way for Taliban resurgence.

"That is a chance not a single American leader will take," she says.

Not a single American leader, except, it seems, except for Vice President Biden. The vice president has been vocal in his opposition of sending more troops to Afghanistan. According to an article by Joanna Neuman of the Los Angeles Times, Biden wants to scale back the military presence in Afghanistan, not inflate it with 40,000 additional troops. Biden's strategy would reduce nation-building efforts and refocus military resources into eradicating the Al-Qaeda presence on the Afghanistan-Pakistan border. Which according to Samadi, is "a very bad idea."

"If the U.S. stops fully supporting Afghanistan, we will go back to the pre-2001 situation which will mean defeat for the U.S.," Samadi says.

This idea supports McChrystal's assessment of the situation in Afghanistan. McChrystal's report, available at Washingtonpost.com, states, "stability in Afghanistan is imperative; if the Afghan government falls to the Taliban – or has insufficient capability to counter transnational terrorists – Afghanistan could again become a base for terrorism."

After eight years of occupation in Afghanistan and 774 military casualties, as recorded in the Washington Post on October 4, the American people are sick of war. Many Americans feel that the war in Afghanistan is unwinnable. They believe that the U.S. should stop pouring resources into a never-ending battle against Al-Qaeda and the Taliban, and focus instead on problems within our own country. But according to Wadia Samadi, a withdrawal would mean ignoring the reasons we invaded Afghanistan in the first place.

"There are no winning situations in wars against non-conventional enemies," says Samadi. "But downsizing the Al-Qaeda movement from a many thousand-strong army like structure with billions of dollars in its hands to a small group with little means is what we can call 'winning the war'"

The coming weeks will decide not only the future of American troops in Afghanistan, but the fate of democratic government in Afghanistan. Its decision time America: Do we go all in, or do we fold?

Rachel Dougherty is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

WANT TO WRITE TO US?
Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed, but can be found online.

UMASS DINING IS NO IMPOSTER

RE: "UMass an eco-impersonator;" Ashley Lesperance, October 2

Dear Editor,

I would like to clarify the misleading statements made by Ashley Lesperance in her recent column on Friday, October 2, titled "Eco-Impersonator."

Since joining the Monterey Bay Aquarium's Seafood Watch program three years ago, UMass Dining has not served Atlantic Cod and we strictly adhere to the guidelines. In fact, we were the first large state university to become a member of the Seafood Watch program and serve only sustainable seafood. This coming week, in partnership with Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute, we will present the Wild Alaska Seafood Week Special to help promote sustainable seafood through educational talks, and a guest chef from Alaska. We are not sure why the author thought that Atlantic Cod was being served three times at Worcester.

As for local produce, UMass Dining is committed to purchasing 25% of produce locally and during the months of September and October, this percentage will be much higher.

During the family weekend, we featured recipes from parents as part of the Taste of Home program; we used the same local produce just like any other weekend. We had extra staff on duty as we served 5,600 parents and family members.

We are committed to going green, not just in word; we need support from everyone, rather than cynicism to make it work. Go UMass!

Sincerely,

Ken Toong
Executive Director,
UMass Dining Services

LEGALIZATION FOR BELIEVERS

Dear Editor,

On October 14, the Revenue Committee of the Massachusetts legislature holds its first hearing on a bill to fully legalize marijuana.

While the committee's focus is on the narrow issue of potential tax receipts, broader concerns make this proposal a good one. Marijuana use is a de facto spiritual practice for a great number of its proponents, regardless of whether they think of it in those terms or not. And while people may view any particular religion (or all religion) as silly and worthy of mockery, many are still accepting of religious freedom as good public policy, if only because of the effort and cost to society of engaging in religious suppression.

Terry Franklin
Amherst, Mass.

REAL REPORTING NEEDED

RE: "Students arrested for larceny;" Michelle Williams, October 1

Dear Editor,

I would like to comment on an article published today in your paper about two students stealing a Global Electric Motorvehicle. I had actually heard the story before the article came out, so when I saw the story on the front page, I grabbed the paper and read the article, hoping to find out the true story.

What I came across disappointed me, and then deeply saddened me. The information about the students all seemed about correct, though the word choice was boring and the article was poorly written, but something else bothered me. In the recent past, we have heard a ton about different cases of journalistic integrity, and reporters unwilling to reveal their confidential sources. A real digging for the story, with risk and mystery and intrigue. Defending the honorary status of a journalist, and their right to withhold their sources.

However, editor, what I saw in your paper discouraged me. The only source of information other than common knowledge (trust me when I say that everyone on campus had heard this story well before your article came out) was Facebook. That's right editor, your reporter could not be bothered to go out and find some sources, perhaps some witnesses or people living in the dorms who heard the ruckus, people who knew these students or, most importantly, the students themselves. The source your reporter chose was Facebook.

Many journalists are being put on trial and almost imprisoned for refusing to reveal their sources, and your reporter's only source of information about this incident was Facebook. I cannot tell you, editor, how disgusted I am. It is bad enough that Facebook can be accessed via cell phone, Blackberry and iPod, or that every other computer screen that I see when walking through our library is someone's home page or profile, but to allow your reporter to do her job based on someone's Facebook? Well, editor, that truly disgusts me.

Laura Reiman
UMass Student

This won't complicate anything, now will it?

Sex with a friend: A single girl's untapped resource or just another dating delusion?

S.K. Murphy
Collegian Columnist

He says it's nice, and I have to say the feeling is mutual. He nestles up beside me - spent as Danielle Steel might describe, from the vigor of our recent activities — and I jealously observe that his physique is much better maintained than my own. By then I've vowed to keep my curves surreptitious by all means measurable. Obtrusive objects like pillows will do for now.

We used to be good friends, he and I. Good enough that I would always arrive late to meet him at the D.C. for unofficial dinner dates, and would wolf down fries and Cokes without a care in the world as he delicately nibbled on salads and other healthy dishes offered there. But now I'm always on time. In the courtyard where he first kissed me, and in the liquor stores where a search for the perfect craft beer leads to petting in the back room. And even to Grendel's Den before the kissing, when he leaned forward and gently rubbed some spilled beer off my mouth. For each meeting, I made a point of being punctual.

Chalk it all up to some random act of fate and university housing. Were it not for someone else's desire to bed and maybe date him, perhaps none of this would have happened. The night we crossed paths, I was fretting in front of a computer — one not yet made noisy through misuse, not yet made to miss both its J and Ctrl keys — and socializing was the last thing on my agenda. My nights prior to it had been both sleepless and wrinkled, the stuff that inspires college-age alcoholism. I'd just found out my ex-boyfriend was cheating on me.

So I'm at the computer, weeping, typing, gnawing on my fingernails and thinking about how I can never really be certain my ex will be truthful to me again.

And then one of my suitemates comes in. She prefers my roommate but talks to me, us having bonded over a mutual affinity for the Bay City Rollers song "Saturday Night." In she comes, offering to take me to the party she's headed to later in the night. Not because she likes me very much, but because she's on suicide watch. I acknowledge this, but give her the brush off. I'll take free booze, thank you, but not if there's pity attached to it. Yet the next few hours fill me with dread and loneliness beyond compare. Wallowing in the hollow glow of the computer screen, I decide I can't be alone.

That's when I hear voices still in the suite. I step outside, and the door to my suite mate's room is ajar. Three people sit on a bed: a boy and two girls. The girls look frumpier than me, so I deduce that they must not be friends of hers. The boy isn't frumpy, though. He's kind of cute. I smile at my suite mate, and she catches sight of me, welcoming me into their fold with all the requisite introductions — "Oh, this is Shayna, etc. etc. This is ____." And she motions to the girls, whose names I don't care to remember, and then to the boy.

We hadn't yet progressed to witticisms, to hand waves signaling familiarity and closeness, or even yet to waving fists and threatening violence. No, he and I have never met, so instead we exchange a polite, I'll-forget-you-anyway hello.

He's her date (or so she thinks). She invites me to stay for a drink, and that's the reason why I stumbled out here in the first place, right, so why not just accept it? I take her up on the offer, sipping out of a plastic cup with cartoons on it that remind me of the Burger King cups I collected when I was a kid. I think of "Batman Forever." I think I'm not yet drunk enough.

We chit and chat, and somewhere along the way, something hits a nerve. When someone mentions Ayn Rand, I seize upon the opportunity to parade my intellectual prowess and to say her name properly, as I have read a book recently, entitled "Intellectual Morons." Among it's many other complaints the author contends that Ayn Rand was crazy and her name was not Ann. It was Ayn (rhymes with mine). He stressed this, thus I feel the need to stress this to a group of strangers.

And then I think, why stop there? Why not gripe about Frank Lloyd Wright and Fallingwater and the murders that happened at one of his houses, and why "The Fountainhead" is just a bunch of crap anyway. When I'm done talking to myself - because that's ostensibly all that I'm doing — my suite mate doesn't say anything. She stirs her drink and looks at me like I'm drunk and ought to be embarrassed. They all do, except for the boy, who seems to be strangely amused by my outburst. I guess that's the watershed moment when our friendship is forged.

The rest of the night passes in a flurry of photo shoots and conversation. We exchange words, and I recall thinking he was that elusive guy that everyone predicted I might hit it off with in college - the kind that they can't grow organically in inner-city public high schools. I don't necessarily think we'll ever see each other again, which emboldens me. Fueled by hard liquor

See SEX on page 5

Courtesy Thea

The Original Wailers, formed out of the famed reggae group featuring Bob Marley, will play the Pearl Street Nightclub tonight in NoHo. The band includes veteran wailers Al Anderson and Junior Marvin.

The Original Wailers slated to spread irie vibrations in NoHo

Lee Taylor
Collegian Correspondent

Pearl Street has been getting down lately, paying homage through amplifiers and microphones to the great reggae legend, Bob Marley. This past weekend, a photograph of Marley graced an amplifier in Badfish's rig as they tore through a repertoire of world class Sublime emulations harkening back to the guy that brought Badfish to their current success. To pay your respects to the late Sublime singer Bradley Nowell, you must pay it back farther to the man who paved the reggae road himself. In keeping with the irie vibrations, tomorrow, the venue will host Marley's former cohorts with a performance from the Original Wailers.

Though Bob Marley and the Wailers did not achieve widespread recognition outside of Jamaica until the early 70s, the band enjoyed incredible success up until, and even following Marley's death in 1981. Today his legacy lives on and his contributions to the Rastafarian movement and reggae music continue to inspire musicians from Sublime's own Bradley Nowell to Sting. Marley's songs have also fueled many movements for peace and justice across the world with such well-recognized classics as "Buffalo Soldier," "One Love" and "Get Up Stand Up."

Celebrations of the late reggae star's life have continued since 'the Natty Dread's' passing twenty-eight years ago with not one but two bands currently touring under the Wailers name. The Wailers Band, one of Marley's earliest projects rose to considerable fame until the band's breakup in 1974 and featured Peter Tosh and Bunny Wailer. Their involvement in the Wailers preceded each musician's respective solo career and Tosh's future prominence in the Rastafarian movement. The lineup, including now notable figures in Reggae music, forged on following the break-up and later, Marley's death. The Wailers Band still tours today despite the passing of both Tosh, Bunny Wailer and of course Marley himself and continues to survive through the many lineup changes.

Following the break-up of the Wailers Band, Marley joined forces with epic reggae bassist Aston Barrett to form Bob Marley and the Wailers. Barrett, also commonly known as "Family Man," having fathered 52 children, helped to recruit and train many band members. His ingenious bass lines have earned him recognition as an eminent figure in reggae. Following Marley's death, he continued to play to much acclaim with current members of the Original Wailers, Al Anderson and Junior Marvin.

This sonic reincarnation of Marley's extraordinary backing band, dubbed the Original Wailers, features Anderson and Marvin in its current form. Both musicians contributed guitar on several memorable songs by Bob Marley & the Wailers. They also played together in the Wailers Band until recently, leaving that version of the Wailers with only one original Wailer.

The two groups face the very same legal battle as current versions of L.A. Guns and The Beach Boys, with former band members split into separate factions. The Original Wailers, however, outnumber the other incarnation with two of Bob Marley's former band mates, channeling the classics with soul that should not be missed in Northampton tomorrow night.

The Original Wailers perform Thursday, October 8 at 9 p.m. at the Pearl Street Nightclub, 10 Pearl Street, Northampton. Tickets are available through Northampton Box Office by phone or at theg.com.

Lee Taylor can be reached at letaylor@student.umass.edu

Despite audience trepidation, 'Pandorum' delivers above par

Courtesy Magnolia Media Film

"Pandorum" provides above par entertainment for the hammy horror genre. A brilliant cast of actors and fantastic set design counter-balance a mediocre performance from Dennis Quaid.

Nora Drapalski
Collegian Correspondent

Prior experience watching movies of the hammy horror genre may make viewers a little nervous about going to see "Pandorum." All the trailers and teasers showing men screaming as they are dragged away by weird looking monsters in dark hallways may lead audiences to expect the film to fit right in with the rest of the cliché, plotless flicks currently being released.

True to form, the ticket taker cautions, "I would usually say enjoy, but…." he trails off, smiling with an almost pitying look. The empty theater compounds the feeling of intense caution mixed faintly with dread. Then the film opens with a depressing list of dates detailing the overpopulation of the Earth and the expiring resources hardly able to support such a population. Surprisingly, the film isn't as bad as one might think.

In the year 2174, a ship is launched from Earth in order to reach Tanis, a planet believed to provide suitable conditions for human habitation. Unfortunately, things don't go exactly as planned as Pandorum, an unknown disease, grips the crew.

"Pandorum" follows Corporal Bower (Ben Foster), a flight crew member recently awakened from hypersleep. Bower, joined by the only other crew member he sees, Lieutenant Payton (Dennis Quaid), decides to search the ship for any other crew, and to restart the reactor in order to get the ship working. Bower quickly discovers that they are not alone, as he soon enters a desperate race to save his life, pursued by monstrous creatures.

While following Payton's directions via telecommunication devices, Bower encounters two other humans, Manh (Cung Le), from the Agriculture crew, and Nadia (Antje Traue), a biologist in charge of the Noah's Ark-type animal collection on board. Meanwhile, Payton finds a flight crew member named Gallo (Cam Gigandet), whose mysterious story is gradually revealed as the film continues.

"Pandorum" welcomes the familiar faces of Ben Foster and Dennis Quaid, and introduces some new, unlikely actors. Although Cung Le, a kickboxing superstar from Vietnam, communicates nonverbally in the film due to language barriers between his character Manh and Bower, his fighting prowess speaks for him. Le engages the lead villain in a one-on-one, action-packed battle in the end of the film that can only be described as ridiculous.

Antje Traue, the actress playing Nadia, the female lead, has appeared in a handful of German films and television series, but makes her first American film appearance in "Pandorum". Eddie Rouse, a supporting actor from "Pineapple Express" and "Observe and Report," also lends his talent as Leland, a crazy chef reduced to surviving by any means possible.

Quaid effortlessly pulls off the old, experienced leader, who merely provides advice and adds little to the development of the plot. While neither deplorable, nor admirable, Quaid acts as he always

See PANDORUM on page 5

Heavy beats hit hard in 'Straight, No Chaser'

By Garth Brody
Collegian Correspondent

Filmgoers entered the sold-out Amherst Cinema theater Monday night to self-guitarist Rich Goldstein's pleasant renditions of jazz compositions by Thelonious Monk. He played a range of styles as the theater filled up, from ballads to foot-tapping blues to rubato virtuosity, it served as a fitting overture for the film to follow.

After a brief introduction covering the outline of Monk's life and previewing a few choice scenes by Tom Reney, the host of WFCR's "Jazz a la mode," the film began. The screening was followed by a short but enlightening Q&A session led by Reney.

"Thelonious Monk: Straight, No Chaser" is, as its title (taken from a Monk composition) suggests, a documentary with a clear focus. Composed almost entirely of archival footage of concerts, recording sessions and downtime with Monk, peppered with interviews with friends and family, the film paints a vivid and naturalistic portrait of the jazz legend's peculiar brand of genius.

The film, directed by the late Charlotte Zwerin ("Gimme Shelter," "Salesman") and produced by Clint Eastwood was originally released in 1988. "Straight, No Chaser" is, to quote Tom Reney's introduction, Eastwood's "mea culpa for his overreaching" in his previous jazz-related work, the biopic "Bird" about Charlie Parker, released earlier the same year.

In "Bird," Eastwood hired musicians to re-record the backing band under Parker's electronically isolated solos. The jazz world's distaste for that technique may have led to Eastwood's participation in this project, where a cinema vérité style derived from lots and lots of archival footage lends a sense of honesty to the film.

"Thelonious Monk: Straight, No Chaser" opens on a black screen with white credits as Monk's rhythm section gets going on "Evidence". Then it cuts to a shot of Monk, larger than life, looming over the camera in his signature cap, spinning slowly on his feet. He spins for ten or so seconds, and then walks off screen. A few seconds later, without missing a beat, he scurries over to the piano and comes in right on cue.

He proceeds to play a beautiful solo, the camera following his fingers closely all the while. They look like they land accidentally on each key; his hands hover over the piano like a those of a child hesitating in indecision over a bowl of assorted candy. He would frankly look like a bit of a novice on the instrument if it weren't for the unbelievable performance he pulls off. And he knows exactly what he's doing at every moment of it — at one point he draws a hankerchief from his pocket and wipes his brow, holding the groove with one hand.

The film chronicles Monk's life through narration, describing his early years growing up in Manhattan over Ken Burns style still photo zooms and his artistic rise at Minton's Playhouse and the legendary Five Spot Café. It covers his invaluable contributions to jazz, his connections and collaborations, his long delayed recognition and everything else you would expect in a biographical documentary on Thelonious Monk.

But what sets "Straight, No Chaser" apart is the richness of the archival footage. We see Monk on and off stage with all his trademark eccentricities, and we see a lot of him. Most of the movies' screen time is devoted to the man, and it works. We become acquainted with his style, his ties, his bemused interactions with curious and often oblivious strangers and his warmth with friends and family; some of the film's most memorable and moving moments are the long takes of Monk with his wife Nellie on the road, getting ready in Swedish hotels or waiting for the train.

See MONK on page 5

Screening honors jazz legend

MONK from page 4

The film moves gracefully between this old footage and interviews with bandmates, family, and other various acquaintances and experts. What we get from the interviews that is noticeably absent from the rest of the film is a hint at the serious mental health problems that Monk faced, resulting in his seclusion at the end of his years that is thankfully skipped in the course of the film's life. In this way, the film achieves a complete portrait of the man without dragging the audience through the sad futility of his last days.

Instead, his funeral comes as abruptly in the movie as it might have seemed to come to his confused fans when he died in 1982. The funeral footage is followed by another fantastic Monk performance, at the close of which, the film ends.

Thelonious Monk is portrayed in "Straight, No Chaser" as a genius, driven and confounded by the complexities of his fragile mind to achieve artistic greatness and suffer a terrible mental breakdown.

He is always cool, but not with the finger-snapping hipness of his jazz contemporaries; he is frazzled and scatterbrained, mumbling indecipherably until you hear whatever incredible thing he finally arrives at (on a bus in Europe, he is laughing hysterically at a bandmate's goofy striped pants, eventually coming out with the phrase "bad mother[expletive]!"). And his playing style follows, hesitating and stumbling, striking perfect musical clarity at the most unexpected moments.

Even more fascinating - and something you can only get from a documentary like this — is how he interacts with his fellow musicians, several times responding to their questions concerning the specifics of his compositions with something along the lines of "play what you want." Despite his idiosyncrasies, he trusts the spontaneity of his colleagues as he does his own hands.

Monk in "Straight, No Chaser" is portrayed as bizarre and often contradictory articulate through mumbles, magnanimous and introverted, childlike and masterful on his instrument — he even takes a shot with a pretty long chaser at one point after a show. He is, like any true genius, impossible to pin down.

So we're left with his music. And really, that's what the film is about. A dozen or so pieces are performed by Monk and his quartet or octet throughout the 90 minutes, each one dynamic and intimately shot. The only one that moved the audience to applause, however, was performed by neither his quartet nor his octet. In fact, it wasn't even performed by Monk at all. It was a piano duet on one of Monk's compositions performed by his aging contemporaries Barry Harris and Tommy Flanagan. Their reverence for Monk's music is underlined by their refusal to play it like Monk.

Because only Monk plays it like Monk. And only Monk does what Monk does; that rotating dance we see him do in the opening sequence is repeated four more times in the movie, accentuating his unique strangeness. His moves, his hats, his glasses, and of course his music — everything about Monk makes him a true American original.

His birthday is coming up — October 10. Celebrate it however you want. But in his honor, you may consider doing it straight, no chaser.

Garth Brody can be reached at gbrody@student.umass.edu

Courtesy Thea

Amherst Cinema's screening of "Thelonious Monk: Straight, No Chaser" honors the late heavyweight jazz musician pictured here in 1967 performing in Montreal.

Courtesy Magnolia Media Film

Comprised largely of archival footage, "Straight, No Chaser" portrays the complexities of Monk's musical genius and the spontenaity of his personality.

Dating delight or delusion?

SEX from page 4

and the comfort that we'll never be friends on Facebook, I make obscene jokes that I expect I'll never be held accountable for.

Somewhere in the midst of this I do think - perhaps with some foresight — that the meeting is a good omen of things to come. It's just too bad that I'm utterly hung-up on someone who doesn't love me, because maybe I could kiss this new guy right now and it wouldn't be so strange. But I don't do this. Instead I just say goodnight and watch him head up that pathway in Sylvan that leads to Eastman Lane. I watch until I can't distinguish from the hordes of raucous weekend partiers, and then I step inside, leaving my newly kindled feelings outside where they belong, where they can't mess around with my relationship.

Now as he pulls me into his grip, I wonder if it was all a mistake and we should have been doing this from the beginning. Since I probably won't be getting much of this any time soon (either from him or from anyone else), I decide to savor it. This is the sweet, hopeful sleep that comes before I'm forced to brace myself for a walk of shame or maybe triumph — a potential initiation of the many walks to come now without the steadfast grounding of a built-in life partner hanging over my head.

Am I ready for it? Yes, yes, I insist as he kisses me again. And even if I'm not, I have to keep my strength up because it's a very long walk, indeed. Friends of mine don't mind this; many pride themselves on being conquistadors of the male form. I suspect I would mind, though, after a while. Too often am I given over to quiet pining and bad poetry writing — that explorer's fervor that carries my friends into each new bedroom tousle just doesn't belong to me.

Despite this, as the night ambles along, I can't deny that's what I'm doing. I tip-toe around the floor and tip-toe around the fact that in the morning light, it feels more like I'm an overnight guest than it did before. Don't be deceived by the way his hand slips comfortably around you, says my inner watchdog, which by morning has resumed its normal post. Sure this is new and exciting and fresh, but maybe there is a reason why people don't fall from serious relationships into new sexual dalliances in less than a few weeks' time. With friends. Because sex and long-standing infatuations aside, there's one thing I have to keep reminding myself we're still just good friends.

S.K. Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@dailycollegian.com

'Pandorum' deviates from many hammy horror norms with great sets and acting does, and delivers a believable performance.

PANDORUM from page 4

Ben Foster, of "X-Men: The Last Stand" and "3:10 to Yuma," leads the cast in a stunning performance. Foster connects to his character, and honestly portrays a vulnerable, but determined man fighting for his life.

Foster proves he can handle a lead role, even though it is a horror film. His performance manages to penetrate stereotypes of the genre as notorious for poor acting and weak plotlines.

Surprisingly, the most impressive acting came from Cam Gigandet, who portrayed Gallo, a man driven to Pandorum, a severe psychological disorder, by the final transmission from the doomed and dying planet Earth saying, "You're all that's left of us". Gigandet is practically unrecognizable from his previous role as the villain James in "Twilight." Gigandet captures the insanity of his character, and provides one of the few "oh my!" moments in the film. Deftly switching from innocent crew member to paranoid lunatic to humorous villain, Gigandet rounds out an unexpectedly well-cast ensemble for such a fantastic thriller.

In addition to its cast, "Pandorum" remains a unique and entertaining thriller due to its complex set and elaborate narrative. The events in "Pandorum" take place across the length of the ship, allowing the characters to encounter a variety of obstacles, while further developing the plotline. Director Christian Alvart and set designer Richard Bridgland create an entirely new and realistic world in the film and take full advantage of the scenes the screenplay presented.

As a German-American collaboration, "Pandorum" harnesses the master artistry the Germans provide, as well as the vibrant energy that Hollywood allows. Unlike many other low budget, Hollywood horror films, "Pandorum" stands out as a horror film with a highly elaborate plot. It is so foreign and unique that audiences won't be able to quite predict the ending.

It clearly presents a goal for its characters, whose dual mission is to prevent the extinction of the human race and to find a way to their new home planet Tanis. However, as events unfold, their journey to Tanis proves a tricky and ever-changing one.

"Pandorum" embraces "Aha!" moments without making them seem predictable or even cliché. At the same time, the entire ending is memorable due to its deviation from traditional horror films. Although the good guy lives and the bad guy dies (after all, this is Hollywood) the audience won't be able to pinpoint who, or what, exactly the "bad guy" is until they see the film to completion.

"Pandorum" will be a pleasant surprise for movie-goers expecting just another horror film. The combination of acting, set design, and plot easily erase the unoriginal design of the creatures and the exaggerated, and more than a bit tiresome, performance by Dennis Quaid. "Pandorum" is definitely not a film to miss.

Nora Drapalski can be reached at ndrapals@student.umass.edu.

Courtesy Magnolia Media Film

Dennis Quaid delivers a luke-warm performance, amid an otherwise shining cast, as the seasoned leader who contributes little to the plot.

"PANDORUM"

DIR. CHRISTIAN ALVART

3/5

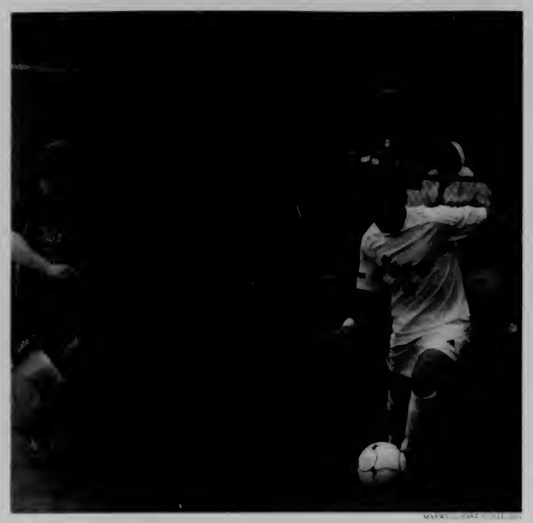
★★★

Domino's

Customer Appreciation Weekend:
Thursday 10/8 through Sunday 10/11

Large Cheese Pizza for only $4.99

Route 9, Hadley
(413) 259-8911



Good 11 am to midnight
Toppings Extra
Expires 10/11/09
Delivery Charge Applies

IN DECIDING WHICH LAW SCHOOL TO ATTEND,
CONSIDER THIS:

Quinnipiac University School of Law ranks among the top 100 law schools in such categories as bar passage rates for first time takers (95%); student LSAT scores; student/faculty ratio (9.5 to 1); and average expenditures per student. Not to mention, we offer merit scholarships ranging from $3,000 to full tuition. Before you decide which school to attend, make sure you review the facts. To learn more, visit law.quinnipiac.edu, email ladm@quinnipiac.edu or call 1-800-462-1944.

Quinnipiac University
School of Law

law.quinnipiac.edu | Hamden, Connecticut

Junior midfielder Ben Arikian takes on a Colgate defender in the Minutemen's 3-0 win over the Raiders. UMass heads to Ohio this weekend with to open its Atlantic 10 schedule against Xavier and Dayton.

Nelson set to return after injury

OFFENSE from page 8

Stony Brook, the UMass rushing attack hasn't missed a beat. The Minutemen are averaging 175.5 yards per game on the ground. A lot of that has to do with the success of a solid offensive line, anchored by preseason All-American Vladimir Ducasse, and the success of redshirt sophomore tailback Jon Hernandez stepping in when needed.

Through the three games in which he has played, Nelson has racked up 351 yards on 69 carries with two touchdowns. Hernandez, meanwhile, has 257 yards on the season on 45 carries with five touchdowns.

After losing record-setting quarterback Liam Coen to graduation, the expectations for the Minutemen were less than stellar. But the fact that his team has stormed out of the gate, playing up to a Big XII opponent in the season opener followed by three double-digit wins, is not surprising for Morris.

"It's expected," he said of the early success his offense has had. "We expect our offense to click, and we already have enough weapons that have already played at a high level and [have] proven [that] they can play in this league [and] that we should be pretty good offense."

The offense, though, is still a developing unit. That growth was aided during the last week of practice with UMass' bye week.

"We're still growing and at the same time, there's a lot of room for improvement," Havens said. "There [are] a lot of things we could be doing better, but we're playing pretty well right now."

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Braun, Nolet headline defense

MARCOU from page 8

"Justin Braun has been maybe the most valuable player on this team for a couple of years now because of his position and the amount of ice time he gets," Cahoon said. "I have a hard time believing that he's not one of the top six defensemen in all of college hockey."

The UMass defense had an 84-percent penalty kill average and a 17-percent power play percentage, giving up seven goals last season.

In 39 games in the 2008 season, the Minutemen held opponents to under three goals 20 times, including two shutouts.

Opposite Braun this season is fellow senior Martin Nolet, who had two goals, seven assists in 2008-2009.

Nolet's physical play gave him a team-leading 26 penalties last season. Cahoon said that there is an area in front of the net where players like Nolet and Braun will need to make their presence felt, because it's an area where an opponent should feel like they're going to pay a price for entering.

Braun and Nolet had 39 penalties between them last season, including the Nov. 26 game against rival Boston College, when eight players received 10-minute misconduct penalties after a fight broke out in the second period.

Sophomore Matt Irwin had seven goals, 11 assists last season and figures to see more time this season based on the success of his rookie campaign.

Junior Paul Dainton will see much of the time at goalie this season with senior Dan Meyers also a strong player between the pipes.

There is a difference between backup goalies that are benched because they have more to learn and goalies who are capable players who are working hard and waiting for their chance, and Cahoon made that known.

"I think that the season's enough of a grind where there are certain points in the season where one is a little fresher than the other. We're not putting him in there out of the goodness of our hearts, we're putting him in there because we think he's a good choice to win that game that night," Cahoon said of Meyers.

"If one guy is playing at a pretty high level regardless of how the other guy's playing, we're probably going to run with that guy."

Dainton went 12-14-1 in 29 games last season while Meyers had a record of 4-6-2 in 14 games. Dainton and Meyers had .913 and .911 save percentages, respectively.

Both Minuteman goalies held opponents to under two goals 13 times in 2008, including both UMass shutouts.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potter-auto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

PUBLIC NOTICE: UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACCREDIATION

The University of Massachusetts Amherst will undergo a comprehensive evaluation visit November 1 - 4, 2009, by a team representing the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the New England Association of Schools and Colleges.

The Commission on Institutions of Higher Education is one of eight accrediting commissions in the United States that provide institutional accreditation on a regional basis. Accreditation is voluntary and applies to the institution as a whole. The Commission, which is recognized by the U.S. Department of Education, accredits approximately 200 institutions in the six-state New England region.

The University of Massachusetts Amherst has been accredited by the Commission since 1932 and was last reviewed in October, 1998. Its accreditation by the New England Association encompasses the entire institution. For the past year and a half, the University of Massachusetts Amherst has been engaged in a process of self-study, addressing the Commission's Standards for Accreditation. An evaluation team will visit the institution to gather evidence that the self-study is thorough and accurate. The team will recommend to the Commission a continuing status for the institution; following a review process, the Commission itself will take the final action.

The public is invited to submit comments regarding the institution to:

Public Comment on the University of Massachusetts Amherst
Commission on Institutions of Higher Education
New England Association of Schools and Colleges
209 Burlington Road
Bedford, MA 01730-1433
E-mail: cihe@neasc.org

Comments must address substantive matters related to the quality of the institution. Comments will not be treated as confidential.

Written, signed comments must be received by November 4, 2009. The Commission cannot guarantee that comments received after that due date will be considered. Comments should include the name, address, and telephone number of the person providing the comments.

The Commission cannot settle disputes between individuals and institutions, whether those involve faculty, students, administrators, or members of other groups. Individuals considering submitting complaints against an affiliated institution should request the separate Policy and Procedures for the Consideration of Complaints Made Against Affiliated Institutions from the Commission office.

Minutemen to open A-10 slate, take on Musketeers and Flyers

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Playing on the road is a tough feat for any team that strives on getting better each game and making the postseason.

Just ask the Massachusetts men's soccer team.

The Minutemen have won just one game on the road so far this season, a 2-0 effort over Siena on Sept. 26. With Atlantic 10 play beginning this weekend, the Minutemen hope to get off on the right foot. On their quest to return to the conference finals, the Minutemen head to Ohio this weekend to face Xavier Friday and Dayton Sunday.

"It's all a part of it, you have to travel, you have home field for the opponent, you have the fans, and you have the referees who can certainly be influenced by the hometown fans, so it is a lot harder," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

"But, in order to get to the A-10 tournament, you've got to win a couple games on the road, and we hope to do that on Friday. Is it a little bit harder? Yeah, it's a little bit harder, but I still think we can do it."

UMass fell to conference opponent Fordham last Saturday, 3-0, seeing its three-game winning streak come to a close after back-to-back wins against the Saints and Colgate. Even though the Minutemen could not come up with the victory, the game does not count towards the A-10 standings.

"I think we didn't get better last weekend against Fordham, we certainly played better in the second half, we just went away from everything we had been doing really well, and we got punished for it," Koch said.

UMass should have an easier time against the Musketeers (1-5-1), who have won just one game so far in 2009 and average less than one goal a game (0.86). The Minutemen lead the A-10 in goals against average (0.58), goals allowed (five), and are second in shutouts with four. Part of the reason is goalkeeper Chris Piekos, who will start in goal against the Musketeers on Friday. Piekos tops the conference in goals against average (0.22) and save percentage (.955), and is third in saves per game (5.25).

While the defense has never really been a question, UMass' offense struggled Saturday, and will need to generate offense against both the Musketeers and the Flyers.

"I think with taking a step backwards, we took a step forward, and we will find out Friday," Koch said. "I am hoping that the players realize we have to play this way, simple, one or two touch, and we have to work hard off the ball to support each other, we've got to play the flanks and we have to play the ball quickly."

The Minutemen will look to midfielder Ben Arikian and forward Mark DeSantis to find the back of the net against a Musketeer team that is coming off a 2-1 overtime defeat at the hands of Cincinnati on Sept. 30. Even though their record does not back it up, Koch knows that Xavier is a team that cannot be taken lightly, like the Rams last Saturday.

"Xavier is a very solid team; they have a good center midfielder, a good center back, a front runner that is certainly dangerous, an outside midfielder that's dangerous, but the bottom line is that we have to take care of our own business. We need to make sure we do the things that we need to do to play well," Koch said.

The Flyers are in the midst of a five game winning streak, and are tops in the A-10 in almost every offensive statistical category.

As for the A-10 schedule beginning, Koch knows how important it is for him and his team.

"It's huge, it's big, it's the start, it's what we've been waiting for and we're looking forward to it."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

UMass looking for strong beginning to the 2009 season after disappointment last year

HOCKEY from page 8

Against RPI all-time, the Minutemen hold a 7-4-1 record with the series, dating back to 1911. The Engineers' last victory against the Minutemen came nearly eight years ago, on December 29, 2001, when RPI edged UMass for a 3-1 overtime win. Cahoon individually has a record of 11-10-4 in 25 career games against the Engineers, stretching back to his nine-year tenure at Princeton.

In their last meeting, the Minutemen had success against RPI with a 6-0 whitewash victory to drop the Engineers to 0-4-0 on the year. The game marked the first shutout of goalkeeper Dan Meyers' career and the first collegiate goals by Doug Kublin, Casey Wellman and Danny Hobbs. UMass dominated on offense, winning 31 of 50 face-offs and while managing 35 shots on goal, compared to 25 for the Engineers.

The Minutemen, however, caught RPI early last season, and the Engineers struggled and were out of rhythm.

After the loss to UMass, the Engineers went 10-23-2 through the rest of their schedule, playing well enough to reach the Eastern College Athletic Conference Hockey playoffs. RPI advanced from the first round with a two-game sweep against Dartmouth in a best of three series. Then, against second-seed and No. 12 Cornell, the Engineers won the first game before losing the next two, eliminating them from postseason play. Cahoon knows that the matchup with RPI last season will not be a true test of what UMass will face Thursday.

"They're a team that finished the season with a whole lot better feeling than they started the season," he said. "It took them the first half of the year to catch on, and in the second half of the year, they were a lot better team. I expect that they're going to come in here trying to pick up where they left off."

When asked how important it will be for the Minutemen to get off to a good start with a win Thursday, Cahoon didn't hesitate, saying everyone knows the answer to that.

"It's a lot easier to find your way if you're having some success. It's a lot easier to look each other in the eye in the locker room. It's a lot easier to keep the players attention when things are going well," he said. "We want a good start, because it's easier to grow and develop from that place than it is to have doubts and ill feelings about how things transpired."

The team is ready, the campus of UMass is excited, and there's a buzz in Amherst as they welcome back the Minutemen to the Mullins Center.

"Let's get going, it's time to make hay," Cahoon said.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

Cahoon and staff making impact on Minutemen veterans, rookies

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

In playing a team throughout the course of 23 years, both teams can familiarize one another with the opponent's tendencies. Such is the case with UMass coach Don Cahoon and the Rensselaer hockey team.

Cahoon and the Massachusetts hockey team face the Engineers in the milestone game Thursday night, with RPI leading the all-time series, 11-10-4.

His record against RPI dates back to Cahoon's tenure as head coach at Princeton, where he faced the Engineers multiple times each season.

UMass is Cahoon's sixth team in his collegiate coaching career, having come most recently from the Tigers in 2000. In his nine years at Princeton, Cahoon compiled a 396 winning percentage.

Coaching in any collegiate sport for more than two decades is a feat for any person, and Cahoon, now in his twenty-third year, said that you can judge a person by the kind of company that they keep. He takes this saying seriously, as he employs it in his coaching staff. Such company includes the likes of assistant coaches Red Gendron and Len Quesnelle, strength and conditioning coach Chris Boyko and goaltender coach Mike Buckley.

Jeff Lang is a graduate assistant in the program and Josh Penn is the equipment manager.

"To last in this business is to become a student of the game," Cahoon said. "I think that our staff is as good as anyone's out there, and the proof will be in the way this team responds to us and the way this team competes, and hopefully continues to improve."

Each member of the coaching staff enters this season having served on Cahoon's staff for at least the past three seasons.

Boyko enters his ninth season on Cahoon's staff, and with each new coaching addition to the Minutemen, a positive for UMass has followed. With Boyko anchoring the Minutemen's conditioning program in 2001, the power play unit showed immediate improvement. The defense held stronger, giving up 13 fewer goals than in 2000. Also, after learning Boyko's methods after a full season, UMass' record improved from 8-24-2 to 19-17-1 while climbing the ladder of the Hockey East rankings, from ninth to third.

By the time both Quesnelle and Gendron joined Cahoon's staff in 2005 and 2006, the Minutemen were no longer at the bottom of the conference. In 2007, UMass finished fourth in the conference with a record of 21-13-5, the program's highest ever win total.

Attendance is at an all-time high as well for the Minutemen. In 2006, average attendance for a home game was a record 5,140, and the last time the Mullins Center had less than 3,600 people for a hockey game was during the 2002 season (2,796).

Buckley enters his third season as goaltenders coach for the Minutemen, continuing to guide junior goalie Paul Dainton. Last season, Dainton allowed 66 goals compared to 83 as a freshman, including two goals or less 13 times, and had 30-plus saves in nine games last season.

As long as his current coaching staff has been alongside him, Cahoon believes that results show in more ways than concrete statistics.

"I think it's shown itself in the type of kid we've been able to recruit, and the type of culture that we've been able to create here," said Cahoon. "I think the people behind the scenes with our program are highly professional, totally motivated and I think our team knows that. Our history is now."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
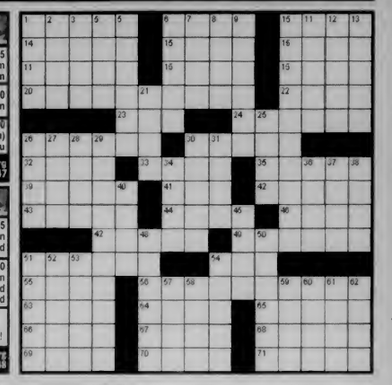
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"



CROSSWORD

LA PIAZZA
pizza • and more
• specialty pizza
• wings
• calzones
• pasta
• salads
• desserts
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us
One pound boneless wings with a tossed salad for $14.99
Pickup or delivery only
Expires 10/14/09

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 10/8 DJ Construct
Fri. 10/9 Mass Production live
Reggae Band in back room
DJ Burg in front room
Sat. 10/10 Guest DJ
Tues. 10/13 Techno Tuesday featuring Southern Comfort promotions, clothing giveaways and drink specials
413-259-1600
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

amherst cinema
Fri Oct 9 - Thu Oct 15
VOO-HOO 2:30 4:30 7:15 9:15
MRS. GOLDBERG +12:00pm Sat, Sun & Mon
CAPITALISM: A LOVE STORY 2:15 4:45 7:30 10:00 +11:30am Sat, Sun & Mon
AMREEKA 2:00 4:15 7:00* 9:30 (9:45 Tue & Thu) +11:45am Sat, Sun & Mon *NO 7:00 Tue & Thu
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org
(413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Oct 9 - Thu Oct 15
Baader Meinhof Complex 6:00 9:15 +3:00 Sat, Sun & Mon +10:00am 3:00 Wed
Bright Star 5:00* 7:30* 10:00 +2:30 Sat, Sun & Mon +10:30am 2:30 Wed *NO 5:00 or 7:30 Wed
ZERO HOUR FILM SERIES: HAXAN Sat. Oct. 10 Midnight! Special Admission $3!
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton
www.pleasantstheater.org
(413) 584-5848

MIKESMAZE DARWIN!
FOOD, FUN, SPUDZOOKAS!
Weekends & Holidays 10am-5pm thru Nov 1
S. Main Street Rt. 47 Sunderland
www.mikesmaze.com
413-665-8331

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Way to go! You've started a public demand for tiny pigs.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You ever feel like someone just turned off the game?

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
How awkward would it be if everyone's ring tone was "What's Your Fantasy" by Ludacris!

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
There should be a Google logo for your first pimple.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
The Dining Common is not your "biffle."

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your closest classmate is Pikachu to your Ash Ketchum.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Why don't you go poach your problems in a vat of tissue boxes?

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
UMASS needs an RSO on being a Bard. Get going.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
There's only one person who can save the environment: Poison Ivy, yo.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It rained yesterday because Zeus was crying laughing at your outfit.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You didn't go to college just so you could get a love job. Right?

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Life is a hundred-dollar textbook that just diminishes in value.

MIX TAPE THURSDAYS
HOSTED BY DJ VID KID
HIPHOP DANCE RCB MORE
EVERY WEEK DOWNSTAIRS AT AMHERST BREWING CO
NO COVER · DRINK SPECIALS
BEST DANCE PARTY IN TOWN
21 PLUS

ACROSS
1. Swelling under the skin
6. A military installation
10. Collections
14. Challenges
15. Flair
16. Radiate
17. Humorous
18. Anger
19. Story
20. Past times
22. Neap, high or low
23. Snake-like fish
24. Congealed
26. Directions for cooking
30. Elan
32. Computer symbol
33. Fifty-seven in Roman numerals
35. Tiny
39. Picture
41. Dined
42. Strange
43. Not liquid
44. Not more
46. A gas found in some lights
47. Units of distance
49. Floating in water
51. A person with white hair and milky skin
54. U-boat
55. Coagulated milk
56. Adversary
63. Murres
64. Blue-green
65. Cowboy sport
66. Hue
67. Protagonist
68. A bird sound
69. Border
70. Biblical garden
71. Imposite look

DOWN
1. Swirl
2. Have the nerve
3. Greek god of love
4. Unfreeze
5. Napping
6. Aquamanne
7. Wings
8. Epic
9. Electricity, for example
10. Colony
11. Electronic messages
12. Diacritical mark
13. Horse
21. Whirl
25. If not
26. Tears
27. Reflected sound
28. Not warm
29. Frighten
30. Locations
31. Neckwear
34. Sheltered spot
36. Region
37. King of the jungle
38. Gave temporarily
40. Chief Norse god
45. Cozy
48. Detest
50. Terminates
51. Critical
52. Sensational
53. Convey
54. Beauty parlor
57. Require
58. Container weight
59. Nothing (British)
60. Brainstorm
61. Fortuneteller
62. Carry

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
sunraise printing
Custom Printed Tees
Student Discounts
586-7133
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035

SUDOKU

		5						6
3					9	5
		7	6	1
				3				1
	8	6		9				3
	5						9	8
			5	4			1	2
	2				8	6

Hits Now 94.3 FM
The Valley's Hit Music Now in HD on 99.3 HD2
www.hits943.com

Chainsaw Suit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

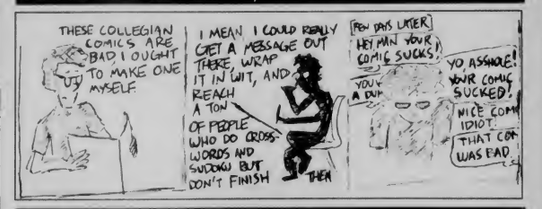
Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

Part-time Personal Care Attendant, about 10-12 hours/week. Flexible hours, Please call Patrick. (413)-275-7928

SERVICES

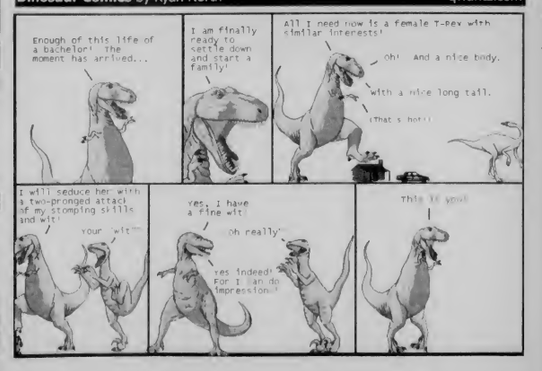
Resume $27 ruby.sc@gmail.com

FOR RENT



Nice 5 bedroom house, music room, washer/dryer, on bus line, ample parking near UMass. $1,875+ per month. Skibiski Realtors (413)-586-1827

ANNOUNCEMENTS



Montreal Party Weekends From $99 Includes Hotel, Bus, and Clubs montrealexpress.net (781) 979-9001

"I Like the Idea of Revolution..." by S.H. Bernoth

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen look for four in a row

Wide reciever Jermey Horne scores the first touchdown en route to a 17-7 victory over Delaware last season at McGuirk Stadium. UMass will look for Horne, along with Havens to defeat the Blue Hens on Saturday.

Offense key to victory

Havens, Devlin transfer quarterbacks making impact on Colonial Athletic Association teams

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

When the No. 12 Massachusetts football team travels to Delaware to face the Blue Hens this weekend, two of the most prolific quarterbacks in the Colonial Athletic Association will go head to head.

The Blue Hens, who are currently ranked first in passing offense in the CAA, one spot ahead of the Minutemen, will offer UMass one of its biggest defensive challenges this season.

Both teams feature transfer quarterbacks who are in their first year under center in the Football Championship Subdivision. At the helm for UMass (3-1, 1-0 CAA) is Kyle Havens, a junior college transfer from Diablo Valley College. Delaware (3-2, 1-2 CAA), meanwhile, features Pat Devlin, who spent two years as a backup at Penn State.

While both teams have been consistent in the air so far this season, UMass has had more overall success. The Minutemen are currently at the top of the conference in total offense (419 yards per game) and second in scoring offense (33.8 points per game). Delaware, meanwhile, is ranked fourth in total offense (362.4 yards per game) and seventh in the CAA in scoring offense, (24.8 points per game).

The UMass offense may look better on paper at the moment, but a lack of upper-tier opponents in the first four games has allowed UMass to beat up on some inferior teams. Delaware, meanwhile, has already gone through the toughest part of its season. The Blue Hens narrowly lost to defending champion and top-ranked Richmond, 16-15, and lost two weeks ago to then-No. 5 William & Mary.

UMass, though, has beaten the teams it has had to, and has done so quite handily, using a healthy mix of senior running back Tony Nelson and the quickly-developing Havens.

Taking the load off Nelson, though, isn't the plan for Morris, who wants to make use of his workhorse back.

"We want to rely on Tony Nelson, he's a great dimension to our football team and out on our field," Morris said. "I just said today to someone else that the game plan is to get Tony Nelson the ball, and that hasn't changed."

Even with Nelson out of the picture against Hens are coming off a 27-17 victory at Maine. The win was the first conference victory for Delaware in three tries, as they fell to No. 8 William & Mary and nearly knocked No. 1 Richmond from the top of the polls in Week 2 at UD Stadium.

"They took the number one team in the nation to one point, and they had a field goal to win, a chip shot, and got it blocked. Otherwise they would have beat the No. 1 team in the nation, and the defending national champions," Morris said.

Delaware's passing attack (253 yards per game) is tops in the CAA through the first five weeks of the season and will be a test for a UMass secondary that has only had a few challenges to this point in the season.

"They'll go no backs, they'll go play action out of one back so they'll spread it around and try to get you in different match ups in the open space, and their quarterback can do it too, and he can run the ball also," Morris said of the Blue Hen's passing game.

The Minutemen's secondary ranks third in the conference against the pass, giving up just 161 yards per game, but will be without safety Shane Viveiros after his suspension last Friday. Redshirt freshman Kumar Davis, who has seen his share of time this season, is expected to see more time with the absence of Viveiros.

"He's played a number of reps already, [and] he's gotten a lot of time. He hasn't gotten the Rookie of the Week recognition, but that doesn't mean he hasn't been playing and playing well," Morris said of Davis. "He has already been in the mix a bunch in primetime situations."

Even more importantly for UMass, it must prove that it can win on the road. The Minutemen's only road contest of the year was their Week 1 loss to Kansas State, and after a three-game home stand, they will play three of their next four on the road, including games at Richmond and Maine.

"Our last game on the road we lost, so we got to prove that we can go on the road and prove that we can win games, just like we've been winning them at home," Miles said.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

See OFFENSE on page 6

After bye week, UMass travels to take on UD

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

For the Massachusetts football team, its Week 1 loss to Kansas State provided them with something other than a defeat: it prepared the No. 12 Minutemen for what awaits them this weekend in Delaware.

The University of Delaware Stadium has become known as one of the tougher places to play in the Colonial Athletic Association, and the numbers speak for themselves. The Blue Hen's 12-3 record against UMass (3-1, 1-0 CAA) at home shows how tough a place it can be, but it's a welcome challenge to UMass coach Kevin Morris.

"It's a hostile environment, but we like that, we love great places to play," Morris said before the team's practice on Tuesday. "The K-State game, as we've talked about with 55,000 screaming, was great, and now we'll go to Delaware, and there will be 22,000 screaming and we like that. I think our kids feed off that."

Even senior Jeromy Miles, who has never played at UD Stadium, knows about its reputation, and is looking forward to its sold-out crowd.

"We went into a hostile environment at Kansas State, a bigger crowd. So for us, it was a nice experience," Miles said of playing at Kansas State. "Now we have to come and go to Delaware. I heard it's sold out all ready. It just gets us more in the mood, [and] gets us ready to play, and we just look forward to it."

But while Delaware (3-2, 1-2 CAA) may dominate the series at UD Stadium and even the whole series for that fact, the Blue Hens lead the all-time series, 23-6. UMass took the last contest there and did so in historical fashion. Back on Nov. 5, 2005, the Minutemen took the contest, 35-7, in Newark, the largest margin of victory for any visitor in the stadium's history.

UMass has taken the last two games in the series with its win in 2005, and a 17-7 victory last year in Amherst.

While the Minutemen come into Saturday's contest well rested after their bye week, the Blue Hens are coming off a 27-17 victory at Maine. The win was the first conference victory for Delaware in three tries, as they fell to No. 8 William & Mary and nearly knocked No. 1 Richmond from the top of the polls in Week 2 at UD Stadium.

"They took the number one team in the nation to one point, and they had a field goal to win, a chip shot, and got it blocked. Otherwise they would have beat the No. 1 team in the nation, and the defending national champions," Morris said.

Delaware's passing attack (253 yards per game) is tops in the CAA through the first five weeks of the season and will be a test for a UMass secondary that has only had a few challenges to this point in the season.

"They'll go no backs, they'll go play action out of one back so they'll spread it around and try to get you in different match ups in the open space, and their quarterback can do it too, and he can run the ball also," Morris said of the Blue Hen's passing game.

The Minutemen's secondary ranks third in the conference against the pass, giving up just 161 yards per game, but will be without safety Shane Viveiros after his suspension last Friday. Redshirt freshman Kumar Davis, who has seen his share of time this season, is expected to see more time with the absence of Viveiros.

"He's played a number of reps already, [and] he's gotten a lot of time. He hasn't gotten the Rookie of the Week recognition, but that doesn't mean he hasn't been playing and playing well," Morris said of Davis. "He has already been in the mix a bunch in primetime situations."

Even more importantly for UMass, it must prove that it can win on the road. The Minutemen's only road contest of the year was their Week 1 loss to Kansas State, and after a three-game home stand, they will play three of their next four on the road, including games at Richmond and Maine.

"Our last game on the road we lost, so we got to prove that we can go on the road and prove that we can win games, just like we've been winning them at home," Miles said.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

Minutemen host Rensselaer for 2009 hockey season opener

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

When October comes, the Massachusetts hockey team is back.

The Minutemen will begin their 2009 campaign, as well as kick off the college hockey season, on Thursday night when they open against Rensselaer at the Mullins Center.

UMass is eager to begin the new season after having ending last year with a heartbreaking 3-2 overtime loss at the hands of Northeastern.

"It's kind of a double edge sword in that their anxious because their absence away from the ice has been on their mind," Coach Don Cahoon said. "They train all the time, but they're not getting ready to compete. In August, they start visualizing themselves in game situations, and the anxiety starts to become more pervasive."

With the first game of the season comes the possibility of rust. Practice, conditioning, and even the preseason do not compare to regular season game action.

"We know we're physically prepared, we know we're in shape, but we're not in game shape," Cahoon said. "The good news is that RPI has the same set of issues, so it's not like we're dealing with a different set of circumstances."

See HOCKEY on page 6

Marcou, Braun lead potent offensive attack

By Mike Gilmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team returns six of its top 10 scorers from last season, all of whom have significant roles in 2009, as they try to fill a void left by last season's departed personnel.

UMass returns three of its leading point-scorers from last season, including All-American James Marcou, who leads a forward line that brings speed and scoring to the ice. Marcou led the Minutemen with 15 goals, 32 assists last season, and is a creative player who can do a lot with the puck. Based on his six power-play goals last season, Marcou is one of the main players to look out for on the man advantage.

Last season's co-leader in league points (35), Marcou is especially dangerous against Hockey East opponents, with 11 of his goals and 24 of his assists coming in conference play last season. While only a junior, Marcou's skill-set improves every time he steps on the ice.

Senior Brett Watson mans center ice for UMass this season. The captain tallied five assists last season with no goals. However UMass coach Don Cahoon believes that Watson's strengths lie in more than points.

"Brett Watson has carried the leadership for this team for a couple of years now," Cahoon said. "We lost some good seniors from last year, and that's part of the college game. The strength of this team is the character and the leadership that we have in that locker room."

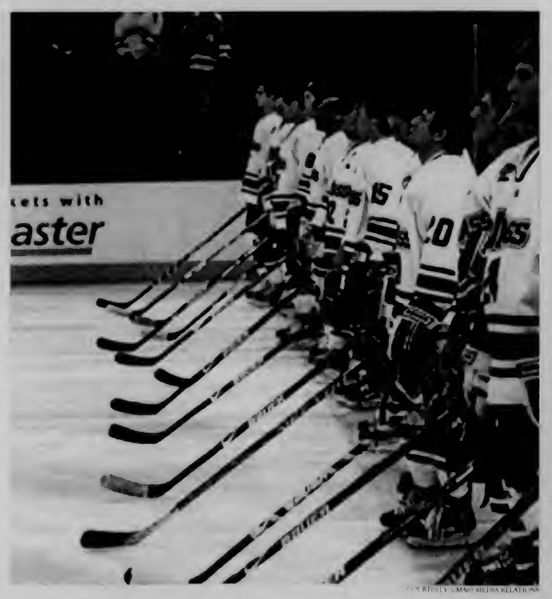
Watson's work ethic and leadership are critical this season to a team that has nine incoming freshmen.

Senior Will Ortiz is another veteran whose natural ability makes him a threat to any team. Ortiz had three game-winning goals last season (six total) and four assists. His 41 shots was a career-low, but his well-placed time on the ice earned him a career-high +4 rating in 25 games. If Ortiz dresses for most of the games this season, look for the Framingham native to return to the form he showed in his freshmen season, when he tallied seven goals, 14 assists in 2006-2007.

Sophomore Casey Wellman led all Minuteman rookies last season with 11 goals, 22 assists, while earning a team-high +10 rating. He also had six power-play goals, making both Marcou and himself two of the most dominant forwards in the conference, behind Boston University's unit.

Redshirt freshman David Boehm gets his chance on the ice this season after losing last season to injury. Before UMass, Boehm tallied 14 goals, 17 assists for the Cedar Rapids Rough Riders of the United States Hockey League.

True freshman forwards Rocco Carzo (Des Moines Buccaneers, USHL), Kevin Czepiel (New Jersey Hitmen, EJHL) and Eddie Olczyk (Waterloo Blackhawks, USHL) had 20, 20 and nine goals, respectively, in minor league hockey before UMass.



While the offense for the Minutemen is a potent one, Cahoon has as much confidence in his defenders when it comes to closing out games.

"I think on given days, the forward lines are going to carry the play," he said. "Yet I think that if they're shut down on any given day that we have the ability to stay in it defensively, and get the type of goaltending that can allow us to win a low-scoring game."

Defensive captain Justin Braun returns to lead a defensive unit that includes three freshmen this season.

Braun had seven goals and 16 assists in 39 games last season, and orchestrated last season's penalty kill defense that had four short-handed goals, including two by Braun.

See MARCOU on page 6

The Massachusetts hockey team will open its 2009 season Thursday night at 7 p.m. against Rensselaer at the Mullins Center. The Minutemen defeated the Engineers last year, 6-0.

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM OCTOBER 9, 2009

inside this issue:

BACK ON THE ICE

SEE PAGE 11

COLBIE CAILLAT

SEE PAGE 7

PARADISE CITY

SEE PAGE 9

'Lending an ear'

Pioneer Valley Red Cross calling center helps out in flood-stricken Georgia

See page 2

(MCT)

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 24

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED. OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890. THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. SULLIVAN

COPY EDITOR
HANNAH MCGOLDRICK

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

Red Cross has Georgia on its mind

By Cameron Ford
Collegian Staff

The website of the Pioneer Valley chapter of the Red Cross says that it services 75 communities in western Massachusetts. The question is remains, however: Why are they involved in an emergency happening over 1,200 miles away?

Seventeen counties in Georgia are in turmoil right now, hammered by weeks of pouring rain spawned by the remnants of Hurricane Fred and an unusually warm air system in the Gulf of Mexico. Floodwaters at record high levels have swamped buildings to the roofs and left thousands trapped, unable to flee due to flooding on roadways. A state of emergency has been declared at both the state and federal levels, but assistance has been insufficient when faced with the thousands of calls for help.

The Six Flags outside of Atlanta was left devastated by weeks of flooding rain.

The American Red Cross in Atlanta has been at the forefront of relief efforts in the affected areas. It opened seven major shelters within 24 hours of the floods, and, according to its website, has assisted over 2,000 people who have been rendered homeless and provided meals to tens of thousands more.

According to a press release, the Atlanta Red Cross receives over 100 calls a day from flood victims requesting food, shelter, and medication, a formidable task when the chapter's other day-to-day responsibilities are considered.

This is where the Pioneer Valley chapter comes into play. Many people are surprised to learn that the chapter, with a little over 1,100 volunteers, possesses the largest Red Cross calling center in the United States, according to the chapter's executive director, Rick Lee.

"We share the calling center with just under one hundred other Red Cross chapters nationwide," he said during a phone interview. "We're proud to have been able to help the Georgia flood victims."

As such, when a major emergency breaks out, the calling center kicks into high gear, standing poised to accept any emergency calls from the affected area and process them accordingly. In the case of the Georgia floods, all calls in the affected counties were forwarded to the Pioneer Valley call center.

"During the floods we experienced a 25% increase of calls," said Lee. "At the peak, we received about 500-600 calls per day," Lee said.

"What we were able to do was triage them – that is, figure out which ones were urgent and which ones could wait," he continued.

The call center was able to handle this influx of requests by using Pioneer Valley Red Cross chapter staff as well as specially trained local volunteers. Callers needing immediate emergency assistance were assisted by the Springfield call center, whose staff then passed information on to Atlanta. Other callers are provided with the addresses of shelter centers.

As can be expected from such a large and involved chapter, the Pioneer Valley Red Cross has been extensively involved in a host of nationwide emergencies.

"[The call center] has had an extremely busy forest fire season this year," said Lee. "I would say we've had at least a dozen fires. And in 2005, we had fifty of our people spend about three weeks in Louisiana after Hurricane Katrina."

The emergency services call center also provides service to armed forces emergency communications networks and works with other Red Cross chapters around the country.

Cameron Ford may be reached at cjford@student.umass.edu.

UMass alumnus hopes to shake up social networks

By Nina Heikinnen
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts alumnus Matt Etlinger, class of 2003, is taking on the likes of Twitter with his own social networking start-up eSwarm.com, in what he hopes will be the newest enduring trend in online social communication.

Officially launched Aug. 9, eSwarm uses a simple chat model that allows users to contribute to a variety of different user-driven forums, or microblogs. While similar in concept to topic-based websites like Twitter, eSwarm differentiates itself by emphasizing conversations between users that reflect face-to-face communication as opposed to simple status updates.

"A lot of the topics that people tend to get really riled up about in real world discussions, those are the most active conversations on our website," said Etlinger. "We've seen a huge wave of young intellectuals and thought leaders who want to have relevant and meaningful conversations."

Currently the website has 10,000 users, many of them college students at top universities from around the country, Etlinger said. He expects that figure to increase to 75,000 by August 2010.

Etlinger said eSwarm is working on applications for Blackberry and iPhone that will further integrate the site into existing popular technology.

While at UMass, Etlinger could not have predicted that he would become the co-founder of his own start-up business. He describes his transition from a sports management major in the Isenberg School of Management to co-founder of a social networking site as a lateral rather than linear path.

After graduation from UMass, Etlinger moved west to Arizona where he worked for the Phoenix Suns as an account executive in the business development office. Etlinger said that through his work there he came to admire the entrepreneurial style of businessmen such as former Phoenix Suns owner Jerry Colangelo and Starbucks chairman Howard Schultz, and began to consider starting his own business.

"I started to get the entrepreneurial spirit, so me and two of my friends powered off to California in 2005," said Etlinger.

In California, Etlinger and his business partners developed the initial concept of eSwarm as a website that applied the principles of natural swarming behavior to a group buying business model. They based their new company in Boulder, Colo., with the initial version of the website launched in 2007. A beta test of usership of the website revealed that users were most interested in the chat aspect of the site rather than using the swarming model for conducting business.

"What we realized was that the most active part of the website, our users wanted to talk, they wanted to have conversations," Etlinger said. In response to user behavior and feedback, Etlinger and his business partners changed their site to focus exclusively on providing a forum for user conversations.

Etlinger advised UMass students interested in starting their own businesses to be self-motivated and to make sure they picked their partners carefully.

"The execution is everything," said Etlinger. "My advice is to do your due diligence, do your research, make sure you have your ducks in a row, make sure that it's not just a good idea but that you can execute it."

Nina Heikinnen can be reached at nheikkin@student.umass.edu.

Smith student sexually assaulted

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

A Smith College student was sexually assaulted on the Northampton campus early Sunday morning.

According to a statement released to Smith students by public safety director Paul Ominsky, the student, whose name has not been released by the school or police, was reportedly attacked Sunday morning between 3 a.m. and 6:30 a.m. in the living room of Chapin House.

She said her assailant is a white man about 5'6", of average build, approximately 28 years old, with a light beard and mustache. The Northampton Police Department has released a sketch of the suspect who is believed to go by the name of Josh. The student reportedly knew the man prior to the attack.

COURTESY WIKIPEDIA COMMONS

An unidentified Smith College student was sexually assulted on Sunday morning in the living room of Chapin House. Police are searching for a white male in his late 20s.

There are currently no suspects in custody. Anyone with information on the assault is asked to contact the Northampton Department of Public Safety by calling (413) 585-2490 or dialing 800 on any Five College campus phone.

According to RAINN, the Rape, Abuse, & Incest National Network, approximately 73 percent of rape victims know their attackers, as the Smith College student did. About one in six women and one in 33 men will be sexually assaulted in their lifetime. College age woman are also four times more likely to be sexually assaulted.

In cases of sexual assault Smith College asks that asks that students follow five steps: get to a safe place, tell someone, get medical attention and report it. Once in a safe place, call the public safety office when on campus or the local police when off campus. As this is an upsetting situation, if the victim or anyone on campus would like someone to talk to they can call student counseling services, student affairs or the Everywoman's Center. It is highly recommended that after a case of sexual assault students seek medical attention. Medical care can detect injuries, test for sexually transmitted diseases and prevent undesired pregnancies.

COURTESY SMITH DEPT. PUBLIC SAFETY

Authorities released this sketch of the suspect, who may go by the name "Josh."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwilliams@student.umass.edu.

'Improv With Attitude' stays quick on its feet

By Timothy Wallace
Collegian Correspondent

Every Friday night, I.W.A., or Improv With Attitude, puts on performances for the student body. The group performs at 8 p.m. for about two hours. The performance is heavily based on improv-comedy, acting within certain guidelines or incorporating suggestions from the crowd into it. The cast reminds the audience before each show that theirs is not a "family-friendly" performance.

This past Friday night, there was an added surprise to the group's performance. They had an opening act put on by "Sit-Down" comedian Jay Petron. His personal view of comedy was that everyone in his profession presented their material in the same stand-up format and by presenting his in an opposite medium, it would stick better to the fore-thoughts of audience members.

Following Petron's act, the show began with a bit of unintended improv, as second year cast member Adam Graper nearly knocked over the podium up on the stage in Herter 231. Following his scramble to set it upright again, he laughed and asked the crowd, "Isn't it funny when things are improvised?"

He then went on to describe the upcoming show, explaining that it would occur in two different sets. Each set would act within certain prescripts that vary from show to show. The first set bounced back and forth between four different sketches with common phrases and words relating them to what the troupe members were saying. The second set depended on audience suggestion; the performers were given the example of the Donner Party for a story-telling, campfire setting.

Rehearsals for the group take place three times a week, Sunday, Wednesday and Friday. In total, the cast members spend about seven hours a week working on different types of improv comedy. They rehearse in both Dickinson and Herter, the latter the place of their Friday night performances. So, according to senior troupe member Andy Devlin, "don't expect to catch a show in Dickinson."

I.W.A. is not the only comedy troupe on campus. There are two others, Sketch 22 and Mission Improvable, all three of which make up one RSO. Of the three, Sketch 22 is the only group that does not use improv comedy. Members of the three groups actually participate in the others' shows from time to time. Both Andy Devlin and Peter Storey from last Friday's I.W.A. performance are also members of Sketch 22.

The art of the improvisation itself is presented in I.W.A.'s weekly performances. Senior members of the troupe describe what they do as a short introduction of the audience to what they

See IMPROV on page 4

Rolling Green
All Rents Include: heat, hot water, and electricity!

Move-in Special:
$99 security deposit.
NO application fees.
NO non-refundable move-in fee.

1 bedroom: $980*
2 bedroom: $1135*
2 bedroom townhouse: $1275*
3 bedroom townhouse: $1500*
4 bedroom townhouse: $1995*

Contact us:
(413) 253-3000
rollinggreenamherst@eqr.com

*Pricing fluctuates. All pricing listed is based on a 12 month lease.
Shorter term leases are available. Please contact us for availability.

OIT aims to limit phishing attacks

By Matt Sullivan
Collegian Staff

Two to three students' personal information falls into jeopardy each time a new phishing scam materializes itself on the University of Massachusetts network, according to the Office of Information Technology (OIT). Occasionally, professors have even fallen victim to these threats, which occur a few times a year at the UMass.

In a nationwide effort to combat online security threats, EDUCAUSE, a non-profit which, according to its website, is dedicated to advancing higher technology through the intelligent use of technology, and NERCOMP, the Northeast Regional Computing Program, have organized National Cyber Security Awareness Month.

The October program not only works with higher education, but businesses and corporations as well.

"Students tend to be more likely to have [technology] problems," said senior technical support consultant Fred McIvor. "When your machine is on, and the cable is in the wall, students are still vulnerable to the Internet."

To keep students' computers safe, McIvor suggests using strong profile passwords, clearing private data from web browsers, and keeping anti-virus and anti-spyware software up to date. The network's spam filters work well most the time, but it is up to students to be alert of suspicious e-mails. To get answers on questionable e-mails, students should call the help desk for answers.

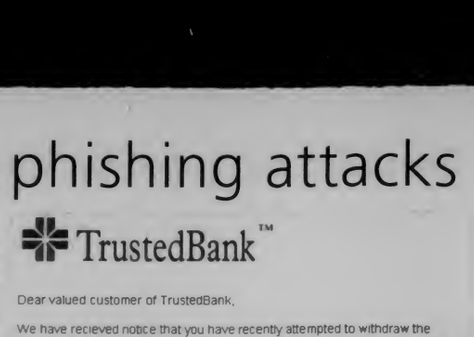
Companies that may have affiliation to organized crime harvest campus e-mail addresses through people finder, networking sites, to just picking and guessing common first and last names. The cyber security committee works to cut off compromised student accounts from the UMass server to prevent the spread of infection. When student e-mails are hacked by spammers, they immediately go through every listed address on that account, and send out automated messages by the thousand.

OIT Software Support Manager Kevin Skelly says that the spamming outfits might get as little of "a fraction of a penny for every message they send out." However, as spamming slowly works down entire contacts lists, this can add up to tens of thousands of dollars. Students who were added to spam lists five years ago are still on them today.

Phishing e-mails work by posing as legitimate companies by providing links to fraudulent banking websites. The look-a-like sites may also be polished up enough to resemble eBay, Amazon or Facebook, to name a few. Once students click on the link, the scammers then request personal information and passwords.

In the event of accidently downloading a virus, freshman Bobby McSheffrey says, "They [OIT] might be able to help me out, but they are students for the most part."

On OIT getting the job done, Sophomore Jill McElleney said that the service there was fast and dependable. McElleney, who had a hard drive issue, said, "I went to the info desk, the wait wasn't that long at all, and I got sent to the people who fix that particular problem."



To promote Cyber Security Awareness Month, OIT is offering free computer checkups and sponsoring weekly quizzes around the four weekly themes: security basics, phishing, protecting sensitive data and password security. Those partaking in the opportunity are eligible to win iTunes gift cards, Microsoft Office Ultimate or an iPod touch.

One of the more recent viruses circulating around UMass' online community is the WINA Antivirus. This virus takes users to a secondary website for purchasing anti-virus software and asks for credit card numbers.

The cyber security committee is continuously educating students, tenured professors who have been here for as long as twenty years, and reeducating every new crop of freshman on the basics of internet hazards.

Despite this, McIvor joked, "People click on these things they shouldn't, too many times ... way too many times."

Matt Sullivan can be reached at mdsull@student.umass.edu

COURTESY WIKIPEDIA COMMONS

An example of a typical phishing e-mail, which find their way into student and faculty e-mail accounts nearly everyday, and aim to trick recipients into giving their bank info.

Getting a view from the top

Kish Kelloog Collegian

Lt. Col. John McEldowney of the Air Force ROTC program spoke to members of the InterFraternal Council on Thursday night in the Campus Center, with his speech focusing on the importance of developing leadership and teamwork skills.

Improv group gags campus

IMPROV from page 3

call long-form improv performances. Simplified further, they like to think of what they do as an improvised play, with acts and scenes shifting and changing as they continue along, in order to best entertain their audience. Returning troupe member Tony Czajkowski describes the situation as I.W.A. being "deep dish pizza," while Mission Improvable provides only a "thin crust."

Some of the performers are unsure whether or not the audience fully understands what they do, but rest assured whenever the audiences break out in laughter.

I.W.A. has existed for about four years. Prior to 2005, the group was simply known as Toast!, with more or less the same mission of the current I.W.A., to make people laugh. Before Toast! was established in 2003, there were no improvised comedy group on campus at UMass Amherst.

Auditions are usually held once each semester for new members. Information is provided on the website www.studentvalleyproductions.com, under the tab "Groups." Information for the other comedy troupes on campus can be found on the website as well.

As second-year cast member, Sean Toland has said on more than one occasion, "we provide a drug-free alternative for students on a Friday night, at least until 10 p.m."

Timothy Wallace can be reached at timothyw@student.umass.edu

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The UM administration is not your mother

Brian Benson

A glance at history will show that as social systems become more complex, the entities that govern them become more restrictive and less popular. We have seen two primary solutions to this problem. Either their component parts become autonomous or their governments attempt to fix the system with rules. As people complain, they demand reform and put yet more rules in the books.

So, I have to wonder why the Center for Student Development (CSD) thinks it is a good idea to be as half as regulatory as it is.

To say it is difficult to get space for student organization events does not begin to describe the exhaustion getting even medium-quality space induces. I'm pretty sure the CSD has a ritualistic trial of honor and survival to secure the Student Union Ballroom or Campus Center Auditorium for a night. Imagine a "Lord of the Rings" challenge in a "Lord of the Flies" setting. That's basically what they make you do.

Of course, this difficulty of getting space on campus for a student organization event is largely based on supply and demand. So it is not inappropriate to pause for a moment and question what kinds of Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) we should have and in what capacities we should have them. After all, part of the restrictiveness in these systems is the number of organizations that want different things while competing for limited resources (tax dollars). Before I continue any further, I need to make it expressly clear that I did the following to make no points whatsoever about individual groups or the topics with which they are concerned.

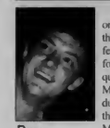
I went through the list of Registered Student Organizations and tallied about 40 groups that directly relate to race or racial topics. This number does not include racial fraternities and sororities, of which there are over a dozen. With the CSD reporting there are just over 200 organizations, this means that just about a quarter, if not more, of student groups are ethnic or racial in nature. Additionally, there are just about nine organizations excluding fraternities and sororities that are directly religious in nature. Think about this again: these comprise over 25 percent of all student groups. This is an awful lot of financial and spatial resource to extend to people based on race and religion.

The reason I mention this is because having such a disproportionate number of groups related to political correctness feeds into a larger mechanism that makes the student organization system clunky and rigid.

So, what do people expect the administration to about it? Apparently, since space is limited, some think we need more bureaus with more regulation, their rational being that it will preserve space and reduce chaos. But in reality, all we get are more technicalities and reasons to resent a system that defines individual freedom as a governing body allowing its subjects to act rather than its subjects allowing its organizers to govern.

> If the administration has to take responsibility for it, then apparently we have to spend thousands of dollars a year protecting its hide from legal ramifications.

The criteria that must be met for events in order to be condoned by the CSD are so prohibitive and jungle-thick that they cease to contribute to the welfare of people and have actual paralyzing effects on student groups.



Take, for instance, a simple event like playing a night movie on a quadrangle. Fixing a projector requires ground stakes. Underground utilities cannot possibly be damaged by these, as they are set at a level under the soil much deeper than the stakes could possibly penetrate. Yet the CSD demands we spend hundreds of dollars hiring inspection companies for this very reason.

Events that involve distribution of food apparently require the presence of emergency medical technicians (EMTs). Why? Is it because someone might choke and require medical help? Should we not, therefore, have EMTs stationed in the cafeterias for the same contingencies? Of course, we should not. People choke and die. It happens. But if the administration has to take responsibility for it, then apparently we have to spend thousands of dollars a year protecting its hide from legal ramifications.

Truly it can be said the issue stems fundamentally from accountability. The money we spend protecting the administration from lawsuit abuse and the systematic disregard for supply and demand in favor of maintaining a shallow politically correct image has completely ruined organization fluidity. Regulations pop up wherever there is liability to be shared or blame to be allotted. The government is not your mother, and neither is the Center for Student Development.

Brian Benson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bbenson@student.umass.edu.

Meghan McCain the new GOP spokesperson

Ben Moriarty

"Is there anyone in this room that actually thinks fear politics is good for America?" A question posed by Meghan McCain during her visit to the University of Massachusetts campus on Wednesday night.

I don't know, no one responded. But I imagine some would.

Meghan (first name basis, in my dreams), started out the evening building a proper foundation for herself. She made it clear that, yes, like every normal person in college, she too was a liberal. She made it clear that, damit Grand Ol' Party, "evolve with the times!"

She explained how she went on the campaign trail with Papa McCain, which transformed her political views and made her more red. And then, after the campaign trail, she started writing online, where she espoused such great stances like being for gay rights.

Yipee! Progressive, honey.

Because she is - not only just the daughter of the original, but also because she is herself - a maverick, she claims she has been attacked for some of her positions which do not align exactly with the Republican's normal stances.

These attacks have included, most famously, Laura Ingraham - who does not even try to hide her dislike for homosexuals - saying she has a fat ass and bleaches her hair too blonde.

"All of a sudden, I was too fat to be a Republican."

What the hell? The highest rates of obesity lie in the Deep South. That ain't blue country.

Even so, this whole ordeal is a farce. Meghan McCain is merely a representation of the up and coming generation, with slightly conservative stances in some areas. Like she says, "younger Republicans definitely think more open-mindedly." This isn't a matter of Meghan betraying old-school Republican ideas. It is a matter of a generation which is becoming more liberal, more socially conscious and more "open-minded," with all its self-fellatio connotations, coming into the spotlight with the power to vote now.

> Meghan gets a lot of flack for apparently betraying her party by having other sides to issues, by trying to be too "hip" by insulting some Republicans, by being, well, a 24 year old.

So what is she? She is a spokesperson for it, whether we like it or not, and whether we are Democrat, Republican, Independent or whatever. She represents the progressive trend towards a more liberal social stance, which engulfs both parties.

And why is she? Well, that really isn't any mystery. She is the daughter of the famous presidential candidate. She's young. And, to Laura Ingraham's dismay, she is hot.

Meghan gets a lot of flack for apparently betraying her party by having other sides to issues, by trying to be too "hip" by insulting some Republicans, by being, well, a 24 year old.

In her question and answer section, it was clear she wasn't a political virtuoso. She had some very generic and superficial answers, and, much to my roommate's anger, didn't even know what the Military Industrial Complex was, and at the very least, couldn't answer a question about it.

Which, if you have two brothers in the military, your dad was a POW, and you are "super pro-military, super pro-supporting the troops in Iraq in any way possible," it is kind of a staple.

But, to me, it really doesn't matter. She isn't a politician, she is a politician's daughter. She isn't, as far as I know, studying modern day politics, nor has any ambition to go into it. So yes, if she is going to write a political blog, then probably, but, her real purpose isn't to inform the general public about politics.

She is, most prominently, or will be, one of the biggest icons for this generation in politics for the Republicans, fighting in duels against Bono and every other musician known to man.

She's doing her thing. Just like we all are doing our thing. She just has a little bigger audience because of her name.

And, I, nor anyone, should have a problem with that. Because if there is going to be someone to represent where the Republican Party is or could go, I am very fine with it being someone who is rather attractive.

Because that is all that matters to me.

And let us, as a closing statement, thank God we had some moron ask the mandatory and quite revealing question about legalizing marijuana. Keep fighting for it man. One day, one day.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriarty@student.umass.edu.

Exciting time to exercise the right to vote in MA

Nick Milano

What we have here is a political nut's dream come to fruition. A thoroughly entertaining Boston mayoral and City Council election has captivated the city. Senator Ted Kennedy's unfortunate passing has kick started an incredible Democratic primary with four legitimate candidates hammering away at each other that speaks to true Massachusetts politics.

Depending on who wins, there are even more opportunities for political addicts to get their fix, with implications for who would replace Attorney General Martha Coakley or Representative Mike Capuano. Finally, Governor Deval Patrick faces a tough re-election against two serious opponents. With all these happenings, there are ample opportunities not just for politicos to be satisfied, but also requirements for the rest of us who might not be so inclined. With all that is occurring in such a short amount of time and very real consequences for residents of Boston, Massachusetts and students at the University of Massachusetts, it's time to act like its 2008 all over again and get out and participate and vote and stand up for our most important democratic right.

For those of us who live in Boston, this year's mayoral election has more implications than any in recent memory. Challenger Michael Flaherty has joined forces with Sam Yoon who was knocked out in the preliminary election and if voters see more to it than basic political maneuvering, the partnership could have dramatic results for Mayor Tom Menino. With his regime coming under fire for illegally deleting e-mails and the improper use of computers, Menino's reign might be coming to an end.

On the City Council front, tireless incumbent John Connolly is running for re-election, as is Stephen Murphy. This means two seats are open for the taking since both Yoon and Flaherty vacated them to run for mayor. This directly affects college students since Boston could either come under new leadership or keep trudging along with the status quo. One has to wonder, though, how much change can come from an insider like Flaherty who has served on the City Council since 2000 and as President for five terms. This election affects Boston Public Schools, crime, the greening of the city and many other issues.

On the Senate front, there is a fight between imposters and true blood liberals. Who wins the Democratic Primary will undoubtedly win the general election, so this has serious implications for the future of Massachusetts. As was proven by Senator Kennedy's 40 plus years as Senator and Senator John Kerry's ease in winning reelection time after time, being senator is almost a lifetime appointment. Mike Capuano is the only real and known liberal in the field. He deserves the seat after years of representing liberals in the House of Representatives. Coakley's policies are unknown and her campaign has an aura of inevitability in that it seems she is assured of victory. Celtics co-owner Steve Pagliuca is made of money and will spend whatever amount he can to win the seat. The Boston Globe last week reported that he has seldom voted, skipping presidential primaries and local elections. More importantly, he supported Mitt Romney in 1994 against Kennedy in the Senate election.

This race demands college student participation and high voting rates. Whoever wins will likely be around for a long time to come. Get out there and stand up for your issues.

The governor's race is due to be heated with Republican Charlie Baker and Independent Tim Cahill. Despite sweeping to victory in 2006, Patrick has brought very little to the table. Besides tax breaks and other incentives for the biotechnology industry and the film industry, Patrick's 2006 campaign slogan of "Together We Can" was a blatant lie. Or it was an unfinished slogan which really means together we can do nothing, but for young progressives like most college students are, the alternatives are disconcerting. Baker was a high-ranking member of the Bill Weld administration in the early 1990s when Republicans ran the Governor's office, but to them making government smaller meant cutting spending on social welfare programs. Independent Cahill has done an admirable job as Secretary of the Commonwealth, but his politics are more moderate than most of us.

In the end, all the mixing and matching, all the elections, all the possible outcomes are exciting for the political junkie, but momentous for eligible voters. We – college students and young adults – voted prolifically for President Obama, but that does not mean our job is done. It is time to step up and keep participating politically. Capuano opposed the war in Iraq from the beginning. If you support that position, work on his campaign, give money, or most importantly, get an absentee ballot and vote.

For those of you who live in the city of Boston, you have limited time to get an absentee ballot. Exercise your democratic right. The future – and it is a cliché – will be determined by who gets the lifetime appointment to the Senate, by the next mayors and city councilors of Boston and by the governor. Federal student aid, local schools and aid to UMass are all pertinent issues and they will all be affected by this election. Please, do not sit idly by.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

ED/OP: MORE CONTAGIOUS THAN SWINE FLU
SEND LETTERS TO THE EDITOR
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

arts&living

YOU'VE JUST BEEN RICK ROLL'D COURTESY OF THE ARTS & LIVING STAFF.

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Breakthrough' artist heads east

Colbie Caillat brings her latest tour to Mass. Sunday

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

Most famous musicians have to release a handful of albums before they can even start playing in small venues. With a little luck, a ton of patience and a lot of talent, they are noticed by a big record label, sign and start touring.

With the explosive evolution of social networking, artists can now make a name for themselves through websites like MySpace. If it weren't for that, would we know who Colbie Caillat is?

"I hadn't been doing shows. I wasn't trying to get signed. I just was this girl who wrote songs and put them up on MySpace," she said on her artist biography on d.baron media.

In a recent interview with Alstv.com, however, she said that she had unsuccessfully auditioned for American Idol twice. The second time she actually sang the song that put her on the map, "Bubbly." She attributes her misfortune auditioning for the show to nerves and said, "I can understand why they didn't pick me."

Her inspirations range from Bob Marley, Jack Johnson, and Lauryn Hill. Particularly, Hill's song with the Fugees' "Killing Me Softly" was a main source of motivation. "It made me want to start singing," Caillat says, "so I sang one of her songs at a talent show in sixth grade."

The 24-year-old Californian will be playing at the Orpheum Theater in Boston this Sunday night, Oct. 11, at 7:30 p.m. Howie Day, known primarily for his hit "Collide," and Trevor Hall will be the opening acts.

Caillat just released her second album, "Breakthrough", in August and with it, proved that the first was not a fluke.

"Bubbly" was the iTunes Free Single of the Week in July of 2007. Soon thereafter it began to become a regular on the mainstream radio set list. The next month the complete album, "Coco", debuted as the number one rock album on Billboard.com.

"Breakthrough", which debuted as the number one general album, currently sits at 39 having been in stores for six weeks now.

Together, her father Ken Caillat, who worked on Fleetwood Mac's "Rumours" and John Shanks produced her latest album.

"My dad's recording is very organic and reveals the rawness and vulnerability in a song and John Shanks is a great pop producer. His songs are perfect for radio," Colbie said in her artist biography.

"On this record… I had a better sense of how I know the songs should sound and feel, and what instruments should be added or taken away from them," she said. "Because I didn't get to do that on "Coco", to really be able to make these songs completely my own was a special experience for me."

Her music is true to her origins as well as her physical identity. Raised in Malibu, Calif., she uses her soft yet vibrant and strong voice perfectly in unison with an acoustic emphasis to portray the different emotions of her songs. Not only does this make you fall in love with her music, but it also allows you to picture the setting she is rendering.

Her latest tour promoting "Breakthrough" started on Sept. 17 in Anaheim, Calif. and will continue through Boston across the country at different ballrooms and theaters until later this month.

John Rzeznik from the Goo Goo Dolls, whom she opened for on their 2007 tour, said on A&E's Private Sessions, "She goes up there every night and acts like she's been doing it for 20 years."

There are tickets still available for her show at the Orpheum in Boston, and can be purchased through livenation.com. All tickets cost $27.

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jgagnon@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

American Idol reject turned Billboard chart topper Colbie Caillat will be promoting her latest album "Breakthrough" at the Orpheum Theater in Boston this Sunday, Oct. 11 at 7:30 p.m.

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Regina Spektor will be playing a sold out show at the Calvin Theater in Northampton on Monday Oct. 12 at 8 p.m. New York-based band Jupiter One will open the night.

Regina Spektor a 'Far' cry from a normal artist

By Angela Stasiowski
Collegian Staff

Regina Spektor is flexible. From writing style to influences, the singer-songwriter and pianist never ceases to surprise listeners with impressive displays of vocal acrobatics and a smile that lights up any stage.

The ever-grinning star is set to perform at Northampton's Calvin Theater on Monday, Oct. 12 to spread some of her piano-pop cheer throughout the Pioneer Valley.

Opening the occasion is the fellow Brooklyn-based group Jupiter One. The five-piece band is the sum of their wide array of influences, culminating into a synth-driven whole. Much like Spektor, the band comes out of New York's "anti-folk" movement and has recently stumbled upon media success with several of their songs being featured in EA video games.

Born in Moscow and raised in New York, Spektor had the advantage of a diverse musical upbringing. With a music professor for a mother and a father who dabbled in violin, her childhood was constantly full of sound.

Young Spektor was just as much influenced by Ella Fitzgerald and the Beatles as she was classical and Jewish music.

Her first collection of songs, "11:11" was self-released in 2001. She remained rather unknown outside of Brooklyn for several years, self-releasing another album aptly titled "Songs" in 2002.

Spektor's third studio album, "Soviet Kitsch" gained quite a bit of momentum for the songstress. "Us," one of the more popular tracks, was featured on several commercials and "Somedays" on "CSI: NY."

In 2006, Spektor released "Begin to Hope," and her career took a turn for the best. With the debut of the single "Fidelity," she was no longer an indie darling but a widespread phenomenon.

"Fidelity" is a tasteful combination of highly melodic piano pop and lyric sensibilities, with Spektor bending her voice to make beautiful intricacies of the simplest words.

The songwriter released the piano driven "Far" earlier this year. Drawing from both "Soviet Kitsch" and "Begin to Hope," her latest effort combines the usual quirky characters and classical influence.

Tracks like "Eet" and "Dance Anthem of the 80's" exemplify her unusual vocal stylings, featuring Spektor's take on beat boxing and highly original phrasings. Her music makes a point of defying genre classification.

Spektor is often associated with the "anti-folk" movement, which embraces a number of styles and artists, all of which verge on the experimental side and draw heavily from the 60s folk movement.

Some of the more notable artists under this blanket include Devendra Banhart, Kimya Dawson and Dufus, one of Spektor's favorite live acts.

Still, Spektor refuses to pigeonhole her music. "I have this fear of getting stuck and doing the same thing over and over again I'm always trying to push the dexterity thing," said the siren in an interview with WomanRock Magazine.

That being said, the artist makes a point to diversify the subjects of her songs as well. With Spektor, every song is a story.

In reference to her writing style, she reveals that, "I relate it much more to short stories or little cinema pieces and making up characters rather than songs."

Spektor's music even has a conscience. In 2007, she participated in "Instant Karma," a compilation of covers by modern artists that went to benefit Darfur. She also took part in "Songs For Tibet" to support the rights of Tibetan citizens.

Spektor's songs are instantly recognizable with their classical flare and warm vocals. Whether she is performing as a heart-wrenching songstress or a whimsical teller of tales, Spektor is always serious about her love of music.

Calvin Theater is the perfect environment for Spektor to spread her wings and show off some new tunes.

Regina Spektor will be performing at Calvin Theater in Northampton at 8 p.m. Tickets range for $28.50 to $38.50.

Angela Stasiowski can be reached at atasiow@student.umass.edu

COMMONS.WIKIMEDIA.COM: DESERAE L. STAGE

Spektor, who has been involved in "Instant Karma" to benefit Darfur and "Songs for Tibet," released her piano driven album "Far" earlier this year.

Artists go down to the Paradise City

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

Spot the rows of intricately beaded handbags and hand-stitched wool jackets and you'll have seen a place unlike any other – a place cluttered with ceramic vases and glasswork tinted by light blue hues and other accoutrements to catch the eye's attention. For the local art aficionado, it's a place that only sprouts up once a year, but easily earns its mantle – it's Paradise City.

Closing in fast on its 15 year anniversary, the Paradise City Arts Festival makes its way back to Northampton, Mass. for a weekend filled with one-of-a-kind artwork and unique designs. Founded in 1995 by Geoffrey and Linda Horvitz Post, Paradise will host 270 artists, many of whom owe their beginnings to the festival.

Artists to be featured at the festival include Granby, Mass. native Takashi Ichihara, painter Anthony Matteis, designers Daiga Henson and Sarnite Svilis, as well as furniture designer Daniel Gugnoni and newcomer Christine Rodrigues Schukow, whose specialty – 3D dioramas – are sure to elicit the attentions of the festival's core fan base.

With Paradise City, the Posts sought to stimulate new degrees of artistic expression, while also providing a platform for new artists to launch themselves into a scene that grows increasingly competitive with each successive year.

For their part, both Posts also happen to be artists – she a painter, he a fiber artist. Awash with bright colors and images of youth, Horvitz Post's pastels have garnered the attention of various local galleries in the past, including the R. Michelson Gallery in Northampton and the Mary Ryan Gallery in New York City. As the recipient of the Ozzie Award for Design Excellence for her 1991 work, "Solstice," Horvitz Post has a pedigree that others in her field would find enviable.

Indeed, the success of Paradise City is enviable. In 2008, American Style Magazine allotted Paradise City its highest accolade, regarding the event as the top art fair and festival in America. The National Association of Independent Artists (NAIA) has similarly endorsed the festival.

Paradise City, which lasts from October 10-12 at the Three County Fairgrounds, is a migratory affair, appearing in November in Marlborough, Mass. at the Royal Plaza Trade Center. In May 2010, Paradise City makes a leap several states over, to the Pennsylvania Convention Center in Philadelphia.

After a long day of roaming Paradise City's ample grounds, visitors need not leave the fairgrounds to sate their rumbling stomachs – they can find their share of good eats underneath the festival's dining tent, where delectable dishes served up by some of the area's preeminent eateries will be in vast amount. Meals include regional favorites, such as New England clam chowder, along with sweet treats like apple crisp and homemade ice cream. While dining, patrons are also invited to sample wine and enjoy live jazz performances, helping form an atmosphere that is immediately warm and congenial, and also conducive to dropping a nice bit of change on the festival's featured works.

Prices for Paradise City's unique works vary by artist, but one thing's for certain: only handmade and original works of art will do. As a requirement of showcasing at Paradise City, an artist's work must be their own. To feature, an artist must also provide five images of their work and pay a fee, ranging from $30 - $45 according to the number of shows that one wishes to exhibit one's work at.

A special event, marking the festival's anniversary, will also be on display throughout the weekend. "Then and Now: 15 Years" depicts sculptures, jewelry and fashions from 26 of the original artists to exhibit work in 1995, during Paradise City's first festival. Paradise City will also feature a silent auction, situated within the Arena Building of the Three County Fairgrounds, to benefit The Fisher Home in Amherst, which serves as a Hospice residence for those suffering with terminal illnesses.

Show hours for Paradise City are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday, October 10 and Sunday, October 11 at the Three County Fairgrounds in Northampton. Admission for adults is $12, while seniors 65 and over may enter for $10. Student admission is $8, and children under 12 may enter for free. For more information, visit www.paradisecityarts.com.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@dailycollegian.com

COURTESY PARADISE CITY

Paradise City Art Festival will take place at the Three County Fairgrounds in Northhampton, Mass. this Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

80's fashion makes comeback

By Bridget Tiernan
McClatchy Newspapers

Fashion is cyclical by nature, but when we pulled out jackets with accentuated shoulders and snakeskin-printed leggings, we couldn't help but cringe as we flashed back to the '80s - to the years of scrunchies, spandex and shoulder pads.

Although many of fall's trends are reminiscent of the past, this season is all about reinventing old styles and making them contemporary.

Designers have taken two "Material Girl"-era classics – leggings and blazers – and put them together to create an uber-chic downtown style.

ABOUT THOSE BLAZERS

Basic blazers are a great staple to have in your closet; they add instant chic to just about any outfit. Thrown over a tee or layered over a floral-print dress, these go-to jackets are perfect for a day or night look. Three we're seeing everywhere:

In a throwback to a look made famous by Michael Jackson, jackets with sharp shoulders and crystal accents are retro-hot.

Or slip on an oversize "boyfriend" jacket, with its more relaxed fit and masculine details – two-button fronts, notched collars and cuffed sleeves.

Hardware is in this fall. Find a jacket with built-in accessories, such as neckline chains or studded buttons, for a sophisticated edge.

The most important thing to remember about wearing a blazer is the fit. Although it is easier to get away with an ill-fitting boyfriend blazer because of the looseness of the style, a tailored blazer needs to be just that – tailored.

Long cardigans are a casual alternative to a blazer. It's a lightweight accessory long enough to cover your hips and waist when paired with leggings and perfect with a pair of dark-wash straight or skinny jeans. In an array of colors and patterns, today's cardigans are not your grandpa's sweaters.

LET'S TALK LEGGINGS

This fall is all about legs, legs and more legs. There is no better way to show off toned legs than with a sleek pair of leggings.

The most important thing when picking out a pair is to pay attention to the fabric. Do not pass pantyhose off as leggings. Choose a quality, heavier material that will hide imperfections and will give your legs a smooth, flawless surface.

Leggings come in materials from denim to leather, so experiment to find the right pair for you. The design is in the details, too – zippers, buttons and lace are all popping up on leggings.

Not quite ready to bare all? Opt for a great pair of dark skinny denim. This allows you to feel a little more held in, while still maintaining the overall silhouette of a legging.

Tips on how to wear blazers and leggings:

Wear leggings like leggings. Even if they are leather or denim, you must still have some coverage of your waist and hips. Most boyfriend-blazers will cover enough, but if opting for a shrunken blazer, be sure to pair it with a longer top.

Go for a full-length legging that comes down to your ankle. This creates a much longer line and is more flattering than cropped styles, which visually cut your leg in half.

Wear your legging-and-blazer outfit with "shooties" (cross between an ankle boot and a shoe) or boots to complete the look. Leggings are the perfect bottoms to tuck into boots because there is minimal bunching.

(MCT)

Don't throw away those old leggings and blazers; your older sister's hand-me-downs are back in style.

Minutewomen ace visiting Huskies

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

Led by another dominating performance by the double squads, the Massachusetts tennis team defeated Connecticut 4-3 Thursday.

The win was of special significance for the Minutewomen (2-0) as it was their home opener of the 2009 season. It also came against the Huskies (1-1), a team that UMass has had a rivalry with in recent years.

Despite the solid performance by the doubles and the top three singles, Coach Judy Dixon was frustrated by the lack of mental toughness and execution in the singles matches. A combination of nerves and the fact that the game was postponed a day later from its original scheduled time may have been part of the cause of these mental errors.

"Our effort was there," Dixon said. "We came up with the win, and now we know what we have to work on."

Maude Lecluyse and Candynce Boney took care of business yet again in the No. 1 doubles match, defeating seniors Kelley LoRusso and Alison Campitiello with a score of 8-4.

Huskies Emily Herb and Lauren Wilmarth were no match for the powerhouse machine of Magdalena Ploch and Julia Comas. The UMass pair defeated their opponents 8-2 in No. 2 doubles play.

Representing the Minutewomen in the No. 3 doubles match were Tanisha Hodgson and Kaitlyn Carpenter. The duo beat sophomore Alexa Gregory and freshman Abby McKeon with a score of 8-4.

In the No. 1 singles, Ploch beat out LoRusso in two straight sets, 6-1, 6-3.

Freshman Comas, the Minutewomen representative in the No. 2 singles match, continued the superb start to her collegiate career with a win against Herb, 6-1, 6-1.

Boney defeated Campitiello for the second time that afternoon with her win in the No. 3 singles match, 6-3, 6-1.

The rest of the victories went to the Huskies, as UMass took losses in No. 4, 5 and 6 singles play.

Captain Lecluyse, successful in the No. 1 doubles earlier in the day, came up short in the No. 4 singles match. Huskies freshman Wilmarth defeated her, 6-4, 7-5. Lecluyse missed balls on her forehand side, which is usually her strength, said Dixon. She was unable to adjust as the match went on.

In the No. 5 singles match, Carpenter suffered an injury but managed to finish the match. The hard fought battle went to Gregory who pulled out the victory in three sets, 6-1, 1-6, 10-8.

Carpenter has had a lingering hip injury since the summer and it was aggravated during the match, said the coach. She will have to rest it for a few days and then rehab.

McKeon defeated Minutewoman Hodgson in the No. 6 singles match in two straight sets, 6-4, 7-5, a loss that Dixon attributed to poor shot selection.

Assistant Coach Juancarlos Nunez said that the team had been preparing to play a hard fought match against UConn. In particular, they expected a strong outing from the bottom of the Huskies' lineup.

Despite their preparation, UMass was unable to stop the lower half of Connecticut's lineup. Dixon has said that for her team to be successful, they need to be able to win from the bottom up.

The solid effort by the Minutewomen's top three proved again to be enough to pull out a victory. Ploch, Comas and Boney remain undefeated this year in both singles and doubles play.

UMass now prepares for two upcoming home matches next week. The Minutewomen will take on the Rhode Island, Wednesday, and Fordham, Friday.

"We need to keep working hard every day," said Nunez. "We need to work on being aggressive and staying mentally tough."

Unbeaten streak now over, UM to recover

OFFENSE from page 12

that problem seemed to be dissipating.

"I think the losses really came down to us. They're good teams. I don't want to take anything away from them, but I don't think we played very well," Napoli said. "Whenever we made a small mistake, they were consistently taking advantage of it."

The Minutewomen took things away from those games and converted them to the practice field this week, where Napoli worked on various aspects of the game with her team.

"We're trying to become more aggressive in our own box," Napoli said. "We were working on clearances, head balls, and attacking the ball in our box. We also continued on things we've been practicing all season, like our transitions from defense to offense."

Cota to remain in net

Shortly after being moved to number one in the depth chart, freshman goalkeeper Emily Cota was named to A-10 Co-Rookie of the Week honors. Her stellar performance in the box was a big part of UMass' five-game unbeaten streak. After letting up eight goals in two games, coach Napoli still has supreme faith in her young keeper.

"We are still sticking with Emily," Napoli said. "Of the eight goals scored on us, seven were great. She also had her fair share of big time saves. Yes, eight goals went in, but it easily could've been more."

With goals hard to come by, there may be an increased amount of pressure on Cota to deliver inipeccable outings. On top of that, senior Lauren Luckey remains as a very solid number two option.

"I don't think Emily feels too much pressure. The only pressure maybe she feels is because if she doesn't perform, there's a great keeper right behind her," Napoli said. "She gets excited for games and she wants to be in games. I don't think she looks to the pressure side of it, she's just a competitor who wants to play her best."

Looking ahead

The Minutewomen will play two games this weekend at home against the Explorers and the Rams.

"These games are huge. We have a big advantage at home on our grass field," Napoli said. "La Salle and Fordham play on turf, so it's a different surface that plays slower than what they're used to. Also, our players will be in their regular routines and in their comfort zones."

The Explorers (6-5-2 overall, 0-3-1 A-10) and the Rams (3-9-1 overall, 2-2-0 A-10) are teams that UMass want to take advantage of early in the season.

"Those early wins help a lot," Napoli said. "If we can get four wins in the first few weeks of conference play, it will increase our chances for the tournament later."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen get first win of 2009

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

Somewhere among the 24 penalties committed by both teams, the Massachusetts hockey team and Rensselaer did manage to play a hockey game Thursday night. Outside of the penalty box, Matt Irwin scored twice and James Marcou tied his career high with four assists, as the Minutemen won its season opener against the Engineers, 5-2.

UMass (1-0-0) recovered from a slow first half to storm back into the game, putting up three goals early in the second period. Goalkeeper Paul Dainton was solid on the night, recording 28 saves, putting a stopper on any chance for an RPI comeback.

The Engineers (0-1-0) had the upper hand offensively for most of the first period, outshooting the Minutemen 16-6. Neither team converted on their power play opportunities, but RPI utilized the momentum created by one to score the game's first goal.

The Minutemen killed off a Michael Lecomte slashing penalty late in the period, but failed to clear the puck, as the Engineers maintained pressure on offense. After RPI bombarded the UMass net, junior Tyler Helfrich finally beat out Dainton on the right side on a rebound for the score. During the sequence, the Engineers got off 12 shots, eight of which were saved by Dainton.

"I thought it was a playback from last Saturday night's exhibition game," UMass coach Don Cahoon said of the team's slow start in the first period. "When the game started, the opponent had more intensity, was on the puck and out-competed us."

Just over two minutes into the second period, the Minutemen found themselves with a 5-on-3 opportunity. After failing to convert on its first four chances, UMass put one in the back of the net after Marcou fed the puck to Casey Wellman in the slot. Wellman went top shelf on RPI goalie Allen York for the first UMass goal of the year.

The Minutemen's power play success continued later in the period when, 14 seconds into a power play, Justin Braun beat out York to give UMass the lead. Minutes later, Marcou intercepted a pass deep into the RPI zone. Marcou lost it, but freshman Rocco Carzo quickly scooped it up, and put it past York for the first goal of his career.

"We had to regroup. We were playing pretty soft, I think. We were really easy to play against. We were doing everything from the outside. We weren't getting any shots on net," Irwin said. "We had to come in after intermission and regroup, start getting greasy, [and] start getting pucks to the net."

The Engineers would respond with a goal on their own to close out the period. After a Marcou tripping penalty, Brandon Pirri won the face off, which was taken by Tyler Helfrich, who caught Dainton out of position for the quick goal.

The second period brought no shortage of opportunities for the Minutemen, as the Engineers committed seven penalties, giving UMass four powers plays, two of which were 5-on-3's.

UMass opened the third period with a two-man advantage and wasted little time converting on it as Marcou passed out to the perimeter to Irwin, who blasted one into the back of the net just 20 seconds in. Irwin and Marcou would hookup again in the third on the power play with 9:24 left in the game.

Though the teams were tied with five shots apiece in the third period, UMass picked up its two goals by taking advantage of the power play. UMass' 10 power play chances on the night is not something that is expected to carry over next week, as the Minutemen face defending national champion No. 2 Boston University Saturday at home.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

UMass looks to improve in A–10

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team returns home this weekend to host La Salle and Fordham as they try to improve their rankings in the Atlantic-10.

Last weekend, the Minutewomen (3-6-2, 2-2-0 A-10) lost their share of the conference lead after being shut out, 4-0, in consecutive games at Saint Louis (5-5-2, 2-1-1 A-10) and Charlotte (10-2-0, 4-0-0 A-10).

The UMass offensive attack was nearly absent, as the Minutewomen attempted 11 shots during their southern road trip. Although seven of those shots were on-goal, the Minutewomen could not get any of them past the goalkeepers.

UMass coach Angela Napoli cites one reason for the disappointing weekend in the team's defensive struggles while the ball is in the air.

"Our air-game has always been a weakness," Napoli said. "We have worked on our clearance out of the box, and it is definitely something we will continue to work on. The team has worked very hard."

Freshman goalie Emily Cota also hit the first rough patch of her young career. Prior to the game against Saint Louis, she allowed a goal in just three of her eight appearances. A strong performance from Cota this weekend could help UMass halt their skid at two, but Cota will need a lot of help from the offense.

Redshirt junior Sydney Stoll and junior Therese Smith will have to be more aggressive and lead the Minutewoman attack. They have been the team's top weapons this season, and need to get heavily involved if the team is to put up a strong effort on the offensive end. The duo has combined for two of the team's six goals this season.

La Salle (6-5-2, 0-3-1 A-10) is also coming off a tough weekend and looks to get back on track in Amherst. The Explorers enter this afternoon's game in the midst of a three game losing streak. They have been the victim of a tough schedule as of late, dropping consecutive home games to Richmond (7-5-1, 3-1-0 A-10), Xavier (2-9-1, 1-2-1 A-10), and Dayton (8-0-4, 4-0-0 A-10).

The Explorers were within 10 minutes of handing the Flyers its first loss of the season. After the Flyers scored in the 80th minute to tie the game at one and send it into overtime, the Explorers were unable to respond in the extra period, as they allowed one final goal at the 99 minute, 56 second mark.

La Salle's offense is led by seniors Traci DePasquale and Ally Kenney. DePasquale is third in the A-10 with 17 points on the season, while her five goals are tied for seventh, and her seven assists are best on the team. Kenney's 14 points are tied for fifth in the A-10, while she is second on the team with four goals and six assists.

"La Salle has played well against good competition, they are always a good team," Napoli said. "The same goes for Fordham. They lost a lot of kids to graduation and have had good teams the past couple of years. Every game is going to be a battle and we come to play."

Meanwhile, Fordham (3-9-1, 2-2-0 A-10) enters the weekend at sixth in the conference with a 2-2 record. The Rams are coming off a win versus the Musketeers, but have been relatively quiet on the offensive end this season.

Senior Leah Loguidice and freshman Annie Worden are tied for the team lead with three goals and seven points each. Junior Katie McDermott has chipped in two goals, while junior Lauren Nowakowski and senior Mary Hennessy lead the team with two assists apiece.

"It is nice to be home," Napoli said. "We are happy to get back on the field and redeem ourselves."

Today's game against La Salle is set for a 3 p.m. start time, while the match against Fordham is slated for 1 p.m. on Sunday.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@studnet.umass.edu.

Marcou, Dainton impressive in win

Offense puts in five against RPI

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team received stellar play from James Marcou, Paul Dainton, and the power play unit to kick off its season with a 5-2 victory over Rensselaer at the Mullins Center on Thursday night.

Marcou led the Minutemen offense against the Engineers, tying a career-high with four assists in the contest. The junior forward had a hand in the two goals scored by sophomore Matt Irwin and the first collegiate goal scored by freshman Rocco Carzo. Marcou's previous four-assist game came last season against then No. 3 Northeastern in a 6-4 win.

Having six of the top 10 scorers return from last season, Marcou feels comfortable in the potent UMass offense.

"My line of guys that I've been playing with is pretty much the same as last year, so we kind of know where everyone is," Marcou said.

UMass coach Don Cahoon has high praises for Marcou, and understands that he's the focal point of the Minutemen offensive attack.

"He's a pretty creative kid, so it's not surprising," Cahoon said. "He's hard to contain in that situation. That's his gift, and we try to give him the opportunity to bring it forth the best he can."

On the other side of the puck, Dainton was a stable force in net for UMass, swatting away 28 shots while holding the Engineers (0-1) to two scores for the game.

"Paul looked like he was comfortable tonight. He looked like he was confident tonight," Cahoon said. "He seemed to be following the puck and he gave me a sense of security and confidence, so I have to believe the rest of the players felt the same way."

Dainton's steady play was especially significant on a night when UMass and Rensselaer combined for 24 penalties.

The Minutemen, however, were the team to take advantage of the whistles and went 4-for-10 on the power play, while the Engineers struggled, going 1-for-7.

Rensselaer didn't help its own cause, losing two players to penalties at times. UMass was able to take advantage of the five on three play and added two more goals.

RPI coach Seth Appert expected many calls to go in favor of UMass, but felt that his team wasn't prepared to surmount the high number of penalties.

"This point in the season, you haven't had enough time to work to be that comfortable to kill that many," Appert said. "We knew coming into a Hockey East building that we would have a lot of calls against us, but we also added to it."

Taking to account that this game kicked off the college hockey season, the referees seemed to be making a point of what calls would be enforced this year. Cahoon, however, understands that even the referees had to shake of some rust.

"Their season is just beginning too," he said. "Their feel isn't quite the same right now as it might be a month from now, but in fairness to the referees, the teams don't have the same feel."

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Brett Watson enters the draw circle against Rensselaer Thursday night. The Minutemen earned a 5-2 victory over the Engineers, their first victory of 2009.

All-in-all, the Minutemen were able to pull out a victory to begin the season on the right foot, but Cahoon will look to keep working and fixing areas of concern.

"We have to find a way to play a whole lot better, and there are a lot of aspects of this game that need to be improved, but fortunately, the power play was in tune tonight."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

UM travels to Storrs

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Exhaustion is the word surrounding the Massachusetts field hockey team, as it creeps ever closer to Atlantic 10 conference play. Two non-conference games remain, and No. 6 Connecticut hosts the Minutewomen Friday night at 7 p.m.

UMass (9-3) won the first of its four-game road tilt when the Minutewomen beat Harvard (4-5) on a Makaela Potts penalty stroke on Tuesday.

In that game, UMass used two reserves and three in the game before that. Following its 5-2 loss to No. 6 Syracuse (11-1), in which the Minutewomen rested all reserve players, the UMass offense sputtered, scoring two total goals in its next two games – both against unranked opponents.

"We're going to continue to battle our fatigue, and we have to stick to our game plan, without question," UMass coach Justine Sowry said. "When we get fatigued, we make mistakes that we can't afford to make. Eventually our luck will run out if we keep making those mistakes."

Yet even with the offense tiring, The Minutewomen have totaled 31 goals in 12 games this season, as opposed to 26 through the same time span last season, when UMass finished 17-5 in its NCAA tournament season.

The Minutewomen faced the Huskies (11-1) much earlier in the 2008 season. At that point, UMass was 3-1 before UConn extended its undefeated streak to five with a 1-0 victory over UMass. In that game, then-freshman Alesha Widdall faced five Husky penalty corners in the first four minutes of the second half, including one of which that preceded the game-winning goal by UConn's Katie Semanoff. It was the only time all season that an opponent shut out the Minutewomen.

In that contest, UMass had four penalty corners to the Huskies' 11. This season, UMass is third in the A-10 with 76 penalty corners. However, opponents have totaled 110 corners against the Minutewomen. While defense is a strong aspect of UMass' game, Sowry has a younger team and with the new self-hit rule put in place this season, the Minutewomen aren't showing much patience on defense.

Given that UMass went to the NCAA tournament last season, Sowry has lofty goals for her team, regardless of collective experience.

"We have to go back to basic defensive principles and stay disciplined about it, regardless of the circumstances," said Sowry. "Ultimately, our goal is to get to the NCAA tournament and go deep into it."

The perfect opportunity to test the defense comes in Storrs, Conn. The Huskies have 52 goals this season, but Widdall and the Minutemen have held opponents to 1.23 goals per-game so far this season.

Forward Loren Sherer leads UConn with 19 goals, 10 assists this season, including six game-winners. Sherer comes to UConn from Durham University in England, where she is also a member of the U-21 national team. Sherer scored a point in each of the Huskies' games this season, including six multi-goal games, three of which were hat tricks.

Sherer shares the forward line with Kim Kryzk and Allison Angulo, who have 10 assists apiece this season. Graduate student Andrea Mainiero has a 1.03 goals-against average and a .782 save percentage this season.

UConn has 286 shots on the season, outshooting opponents 3-1. The Huskies average four goals per-game this season, and opponents have given up 115 penalty corners against them. Compared to UMass' 21, UConn's 52 assists this season represent a team that has good ball movement. Thirty six of the Huskies' 52 goals are first-half goals, so the Huskies are sure to pressure the Minutewomen immediately after the opening whistle. Given the individual scoring leaders, it's likely that Sherer will see numerous touches in the game.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

P.J. STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts field hockey team travels to UConn tonight to take on the sixth-ranked Huskies. The Minutewomen are coming off a 1-0 victory over Yale.

Defense stepping up

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The ability to grind out and win close, contested games is what makes up the identity of the Massachusetts field hockey team this season.

Nine of the twelve games the No. 10 Minutewomen have played up to this point have been decided by one goal, with UMass coming out on top in seven of those games. The two games the Minutewomen dropped were a 3-2 loss against Boston University and a 2-1 heartbreaker in overtime against No. 9 Boston College.

"As a coach, I do not prefer them," UMass coach Justine Sowry joked, "but our players do respond in those types of games."

The down-to-the-wire contests have been the result of a combination of strong defense, and at times, lack of offense. Discounting an offensive outburst in a 7-1 victory over Quinnipiac, the Minutewomen have tallied four or more goals in a game on only two seperate occasions. Despite having 25 more shots on goal than its opponents for the season, UMass has been unable to capitalize on many scoring chances.

"In terms of our offense, we need to be able to execute under pressure, and that's what were not doing," Sowry said. "Scoring more goals is something we need to focus on if we're going to go deep into the tournament. Sometimes, we play with an attitude that we'll get another opportunity, so we need to work on taking advantage of opportunities when we get them."

Missed chances are not the only reason why the offense has been hurting lately, as the Minutewomen have been hampered by injuries and fatigue.

"We have a small squad right now, and we're unable to interchange much on the bench, so we're very tired and it's very obvious," Sowry said.

Though the offense has been sufficient enough to bring the Minutewomen a 9-3 record, the real strength of the team has been its defense. Five of the nine games decided by one score have ended, 1-0, in favor of UMass.

After recording seven shutouts last season, sophomore All-American Alesha Widdall has already held six teams scoreless this year. Widdall and the rest of the defense have held opponents to a 0.094 shot percentage, and have relinquished only three goals in 110 penalty corner chances.

"Our team defense in those close contests is something we really relish and perform well in," Sowry said. "Whatever opponents we come up against, we know that we have a strong defensive unit, and that's going from the forward line all the way back to the goalkeeper."

The defensive culture has only been around as recently as 2007 though, the same year Sowry was appointed head coach of the Minutewomen. The season prior to her arrival, UMass was 6-14 and allowed an average of 2.77 goals per game. The three years since, UMass has allowed an average of 1.08, 1.09, and 1.25 scores per game, respectively.

"We defend the goal as if our lives depended on it, and we compete for every second of every game until we come out with the desired result," Sowry said. "That's just how the team's been built from day one."

Whether they prefer to play in close games or not, the Minutewomen have proven that they can close out opponents under pressure. If the offense is able to catch up to the defense, and the team is able to get back to full strength, the remaining games might not be so competitive.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Offense lacking, Cota to stay put

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

For the Massachusetts women's soccer team, their recent five-game unbeaten streak seems like it was ages ago.

The Minutewomen were riding high into last weekend's matches, when an awakened offense and stellar goaltending carried them into a five-game unbeaten streak. That newfound confidence was quickly put in check, however, as UMass was knocked down a few pegs by Atlantic-10 rivals, Saint Louis and Charlotte.

Offensive woes

One week ago, the Minutewomen arrived in Missouri for a match they believed would extend their streak to six against the Billikens. Those hopes quickly faded though, as the Billikens outshot UMass, 28-3, en route to a 4-0 victory.

On Sunday, the Minutewomen replicated their poor performance in North Carolina against Charlotte, falling to the 49ers, 4-0. UMass was outshot 24-8 in the match, again struggling on the offensive side of the ball.

UMass coach Angela Napoli attributes various factors to her team's offensive woes this past weekend.

"It was a combination of things. They were two very strong teams first and foremost who were very fast on the field," Napoli said. "I think the travel took a lot out of our team, and with some rest, we probably could have competed a lot better."

The lack of offense has been a running theme for UMass this season, and before last weekend,

See OFFENSE on page 10

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

The Massachusetts cross country team heads to Boston this weekend for the New England Championships, the site of the 2009 NCAA Championship qualifier race.

UMass crew team starts 2009 in weekend race

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team may be the most successful team to wear maroon and white in recent years. Having held the Atlantic 10 championship title for 13 out of the last 14 years, coach Jim Dietz and the rest of the Minutewomen are title-hungry yet again this season.

Year after year, Dietz gets the most out of his group of 65 women. Of course, such achievement is contagious, when your head coach carries a history of winning in his back pocket. Dietz has been a part of almost every U.S. national team from 1967-1983, as well as coach of the 2000 U.S Olympic Team in Sydney, Australia.

This year's group of women hopes to continue its winning ways, as their first step towards that goal begins this Saturday at the House of the Housatonic in Derby, Ct. Coach Dietz is confident that his team is ready for its first event of the 2009 season.

"The women came back in really good shape, so we're picking it up really fast," Dietz said. He is especially excited about the amount of talent he sees in his younger rowers.

"It's very competitive to try to make the first open boat, and a lot of last year's freshmen are stepping up and making it. There's a lot of pressure from last year's novice team to push the varsity."

This year's squad includes 52 women returning from last year, as well as 30 freshmen that have tried out and made it far through the selection of Dietz's walk-on team.

Saturday's race will be focused more on gaining experience, as the girls have only been going for a short time. "For us, a race weekend is comparable to Sherman's March to the Sea," Dietz said, comparing the race to the widely-known Civil War campaign. "We bring our tents, we bring our grills, we bring our chili, we bring an army of women and a fleet of boats, and we're just racing all day long."

Many of the girls will be racing two to three times in the day, just because they want to, Dietz explains. "We come away very tired and usually pretty happy. The more racing you get, the better conditioning you get in, the more race-savvy you are."

Coach Dietz calls this Saturday's competition "a dress rehearsal" for next Saturday's prestigious race on the Charles River in Boston. The Charles is the largest head race in the world, according to the team, as 60 teams compete in the Women's Championship Eight, including the U.S. national team, the London Training Center, which is the national team of Canada, and representatives from the Netherlands and Germany.

"For us it's a reward getting there," Dietz said. "This is tied for the most entries we've ever had. We have three boats entered in the regatta, which is huge because most years you just get one."

As the fall season begins the Minutewomen prepare for the heavy dose of competition they will endure. However, their coach always reminds them not to get too caught up in the moment.

"Just go out and have fun," Dietz joked. "And fun is winning!"

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

NEC's in Boston

By Daniel Herberholz
Collegian Correspondent

The best way to familiarize yourself with a particular place is to go see it – which is exactly what the Massachusetts cross country team is doing at Franklin Park this weekend.

On Oct. 10, the men's and women's teams will run the New England Championship at the park, a preview of their Nov. 14 NCAA Championship qualifier race.

The course this weekend will not be identical to the race in November, but the similarities make it helpful to the runners so that they can see the landscape of the race.

"The first mile is usually extremely fast," women's coach Julie LaFranier said of the 5K. "Sometimes it might scare an athlete when they hear how fast that first mile is, and it's not a hard rugged course."

LaFranier is confident that her team is ready to compete, especially now that they are finally all healthy.

"This will be our first time competing with our full top seven," LaFranier said. "I hope that will help in their confidence also."

The men are coming off an eighth-place finish in the Paul Short Run, and are looking to match their fifth-place performance at the Park from a year ago.

According to men's coach Ken O'Brien, the team should be able to improve their confidence this week against a less competitive group of teams than at the Paul Short Run last weekend.

The Minutemen's top two performers from last year's New England Championships, Andrew Mulvaney and Sean Duncan, return to the race this year.

Mulvaney, a senior, placed ninth overall last year with a team-leading 8K time of 25 minutes flat, while Duncan followed just 20 seconds behind Mulvaney for 31st overall.

The most recent A-10 coaches' poll has the Minutemen atop the rankings, and the U.S. Track & Field and Cross Country Coaches Association placed UMass eighth in the Northeast region.

The women are led this season by sophomore Claire Pettit, who has been their top finisher twice – including a 5K personal-best time of 18 minutes, 26 seconds at the Minutewomen's only home meet this year.

Sophomore Lauren Stocker, who earned A-10 Rookie of The Week honors in 2007 for her effort at the New England Championships, will be back after a year out due to pneumonia.

Also, freshman Courtney Baldwin, a soccer player in high school, will be competing in her first career cross country race.

The teams will travel to Indiana for the Indiana State University Pre-Nationals on October 17th.

Daniel Herberholz can be reached at dherherh@student.umass.edu.

Domino's
Customer Appreciation Weekend:
Thursday 10/8 through Sunday 10/11
Large Cheese Pizza for only $4.99
Route 9, Hadley
(413) 256-8911
Good 11 am to midnight
Toppings Extra
Expires 10/11/09
Delivery Charge Applies

comics

JORNALISM AT ITS FINEST

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will soon be a wedding photo nightmare.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your motto of the day should be, "Please let me sleep in your bed."

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Never play "stop and frisk" with the Fuzz. They cheat.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Don't let Burger King launch a sneak attack on the U.S dollar.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
ATTENTION! The moon is going to get a drive-by at 7:30 a.m. No joke, fool.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If NASA can shoot the moon, why can't we all? Now, let's make swiss cheese!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Find your new home in the world's biggest pumpkin.

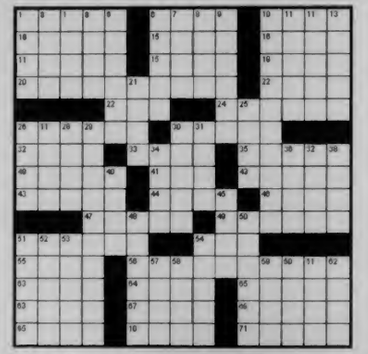
virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Tyrese Gibson is now a superhero. Who are you?

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Deep within you, there is a creepy eBay scam-master deluxe.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Revive a newly endangered species: the hand shake.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't think outside of the box. Tape someone else's box shut.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your e-mail is infected with a Balrog. Hopefully, "It shall not pass!"



CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Refined woman
6. Requests
10. Somersault
14. Type of Japanese animation
15. Takeover
16. Linoleum (abbrev.)
17. A beverage made from pressed apples
18. A language of Pakistan and India
19. Loose sleeveless cloaks
20. An addition to the length
22. Part of a chromosome
23. Before
24. Staggered
26. City in Turkey
30. Faithful
32. Verse writer
33. A radar echo
35. Trudges
39. Bowel cleansing
41. Picnic insect
42. Dining, coffee or end
43. A noble gas
44. Gusto
46. Adolescent
47. Forest god
49. Complied
51. A trial portion
54. Woman
55. An Egyptian deity
56. Intermediary
63. Memorization by repetition
64. Threesome
65. Melt
66. Chieftain
67. They come from chickens
68. Sharpened
69. Anglo-Saxon slave
70. A measured amount of medication
71. Adolescents

DOWN

1. Ceremonial staff
2. Blue dye
3. Founder of Carthage (Roman mythology)
4. Ends a prayer
5. A combining
6. Intense
7. Spore-producing structures
8. Praise
9. Feisty
10. Whip
11. Slander
12. Silly
13. Modelled
21. A Semitic people
25. Where the sun rises
26. Highest point
27. Not a single one
28. Avid
29. The air around us
30. A passenger ship
31. Chooses
34. Indolent
36. Comply
37. Mirth
38. Dispatch
40. A Freudian stage
45. Just right (2-1-1)
48. Covered without touching
50. Plague
51. A brief indulgence
52. "Smallest" particles
53. French for "Morning"
54. Gander
57. Therefore
58. Musical bookings
59. Found in some skin lotions
60. A note
61. Baking appliance
62. Crimson and scarlet

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303.

SERVICES

Resume $27 ruby.sc@gmail.com

SERVICES

Home Sweet Home Housekeeping services is a residential cleaning business in the Sunderland/Amherst area. See our website www.home-sweet-home.tk to learn more – it's less expensive than you'd think!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends. From $99 Includes Hotel, Bus, and Clubs montrealexpress.net (781)979-9001

WANTED

Part-time Personal Care Attendant, about 10-12 hours/week. Flexible hours, Please call Patrick. (413) 275-7928

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

SPRING BREAK 2010

Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guaranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

FOR RENT

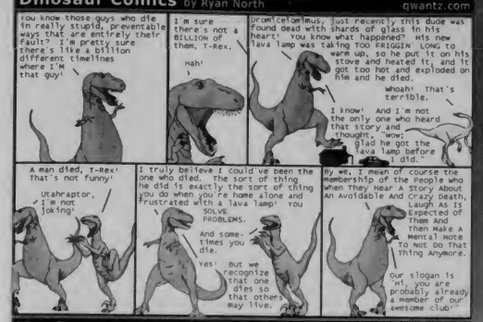
Nice 5 bedroom house, music room, washer/dryer, on bus line, ample parking near UMass. $1,875+ per month. Skibiski Realtors (413) 586-1827

UMASS AMHERST

New Schedule for Winter Session

Earn credits during break!

Online classes begin: December 21, 2009



On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010

Sneak peek of class offerings listed at www.UMassU...

The man who smiles when things go wrong has thought of someone to blame it on.

- Robert Bloch

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro — travisdandro.com

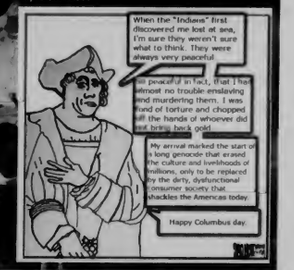
Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Wondermark by David Malki! — wondermark.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees — mnftiu.cc

SUDOKU

	5		1	8		2		3
		2					5
	4						1	7
	3			4				2
			7
		7		9	6
3								1
				2		5	9
1	2	5	9



WE WANT YOUR COMICS

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers!

EMAIL:

comics@dailycollegian.com

Columbus Was a Real Ahole
by Dan Nott

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 54 LOW: 33 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 2009

Guest lecturer promotes energy conservation

UMass alum Marvin O. Schlanger talks benefits of energy security

By Angela Hilsman
Collegian Staff

Approximately 120 University of Massachusetts students, faculty and engineers gathered in room 1009 of the Campus Center on Thursday afternoon to hear what an industrialist had to say about energy consumption.

UMass alum of the chemical engineering department, Marvin O. Schlanger, gave his presentation "Can You Read with the Lights Out?" to discuss the case of energy security.

Schlanger started the lecture by stressing that energy security will come from a balance of domestic supply and domestic demand.

He also said that dependence on imported oil threatens security, further proving this by showing that the U.S. imports 60 percent of its oil requirements.

According to Schlanger, this represents an annual transfer of wealth of more than $500 billion a year.

As if this was not a big enough problem, Schlanger says that global population and economic growth drive energy demand.

The average growth rate between now and 2030 will be one percent, which translates to more than one billion people on the planet.

This will demand a 30 percent energy increase.

As other nations, such as China, develop, Schlanger said they are going to start looking for the same amenities that are available here in America.

This will hike the energy demand to 35 percent.

The solution, Schlanger said, is to decrease demand and increase supply.

There must be trade-offs, he explained, saying "it is primarily a test of national will."

According to Schlanger, market forces alone will not solve the problem because the true cost of oil is not reflected in its price.

New technologies are critical to managing economic burden, he explained, further insisting that government involvement is the key to solving this.

"I don't believe, 'Hi, I'm from the government and I'm here to help you' is real," Schlanger said.

He added that the government must be involved and use a mix of regulatory tools and economic incentives.

"There are substantial economic and environmental benefits," Schlanger said.

To lower demand, Schlanger suggests increasing the miles per gallon standard in cars to a little more than 35.

According to him, it would add up to four million barrels a day in savings.

Also, he said that establishing fuel standards for medium and heavy duty trucks would help lower demand, as well as releasing commercial airplanes from gates.

This will happen when taking off within a few minutes, as opposed to letting planes run for long periods of time thus wasting fuel, investing in mass transit, mandating use of "smart" electric meters and "time-of-day" pricing and providing tax incentives for industrial and residential investments.

To increase supply, Schlanger suggests creating long-term incentives for the development of alternative renewable energies, removing barriers to responsible development and supporting research and development.

Schlanger spoke about three alternative energy resources — wind, solar and

See ENERGY on page 2

Marvin O. Schlanger is a UMass alum from the department of chemical engineering. His lecture, titled "Can You Read with the Lights Out?" featured discussions on energy security and consumption.

'Wild Alaska Seafood Week' invades the DCs

University of Massachusetts Dining Services hosted a four-day seafood event last week in the dining commons on campus, featuring Alaskan food specials, speakers and guest chefs.

Workshops aim for UM sustainability

By Jessica Sacco
Collegian Staff

Students, faculty and staff gathered in the University of Massachusetts' Mullins Center on Oct. 7 and 8 to attend the year's kickoff sustainability workshops, brought to the campus by Johnson Controls, Inc.

This effort was created in hopes of gathering people's ideas on campus in terms of sustainability, which will in time be used to write the University's Climate Action Plan.

At 11:30 a.m. on Oct. 8, the vicinity was full of chatter as the 30 people in attendance brainstormed on how to improve sustainability at UMass by contributing ideas to the top six needs out of the 55 they had voted were most important.

Participants in the discussion placed comments through colored Post-it notes on the different issues displayed on easel paper throughout the room.

The ideas that were discussed throughout the workshop series included increasing the use of energy from renewable source and reducing energy usage across all operations on campus.

The workshops will also seek to obtain adequate funding for sustainability projects, reduce the levels of greenhouse gas emissions, maintain healthy indoor air environments and provide effective occupant training on energy and environment.

Ideas ranged from creating solar panels on campus buildings, to increasing the use of energy from renewable sources, to temperature control and natural ventilation in buildings which would help sustain healthy indoor environments.

Other participants mentioned applying for grants to gain funding for projects.

The participants had also suggested that the UMass community should grow our own food and remove water bottles from campus to lower greenhouse gas emissions.

"There's a lot of good discussion going on here," said UMass sustainability coordinator Josh Stoffel.

He added, "It [the workshop] is really bringing us together as a unified group."

At the end of the exercise, the information gathered was shared throughout the room and then collected for a feedback report that will be delivered to the University within a few weeks.

The report will then be disseminated to all those who attended.

The Environmental Performance Advisory Committee (EPAC), whose job is to evaluate where the campus is in terms of environmental sustainability and to then develop ways in which we can move forward.

The EPAC will then work to implement the suggestions the group created in relation to the Climate Action Plan.

This plan is designed to reduce greenhouse gas emissions through different projects and initiatives that were received during the workshop.

The group then moved to discuss the challenges and barriers that will be facing those working to create a more sustainable campus.

After a long discussion and input from the majority of the

See SUSTAINABILITY on page 3

ARTS & LIVING
'Rebel Without a Cause'
The James Dean classic was screened at the Amherst Cinema last Thursday, with a discussion led by Hampshire College professor, Karen Koehler.
SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
UMass falls to Delaware, 43-27
The bye week proved to be too long, as the Minutemen defense failed to capitalize on the mistakes of the Blue Hens and stop the Delaware offense.
SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION
Collegian guest columnists Azeen Khanmalek and Andrew Prowten talk about the benefits of the SAFRA bill.
SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com
Head to DailyCollegian.com for Collegian staff member Chris Shores' video coverage of Meghan McCain's speech on Wednesday Night

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 2009

Mass Attack is back

UMass gets first victory of season

See page 10

ICE HOCKEY

Behind strong performances from James Marcou and Paul Dainton, the Minutemen defeated the Engineers, 5-2, Thursday night, getting their first victory of the 2009 hockey season.

SEE PAGE 10

FIELD HOCKEY

After a 1-0 win over Yale on Wednesday, the UMass field hockey team travels to take on No.6 UConn tonight at 7 pm.

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 25

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shanna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Lamard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Spurr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1965. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

What do you have to say about this issue?

What do you think about President Barack Obama winning the Nobel Peace Prize?

Leah Salloway, sophomore, BDIC major

"I think other people are more deserving of the prize. There are all these people who have really impacted their countries, and I think there are a lot of people today making more of an impact in less of a limelight."

Katie O'Connell, junior
Math major

"I don't even know why he won it. I think it is weird. I hear he's donating the money, which is good.I think that's noble."

Tom Kelly, junior
Sociology major

"I think the people who awarded Obama this year are trying to catalyze global change. I think whether or not he deserves it will depend on how he performs in his first term."

Tom Kadlick, senior Management major

"Honestly, when I first heard it, I kind of lost all respect for the Nobel Peace Prize, period. I always thought it was something you had to do something for, instead of stand for."

By Alyssa Creamer, Collegian Staff

Swine Flu deadliest to the young

By Fred Tasker
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

MIAMI — Patients with the H1N1 swine flu virus who become severely ill and those who die tend to be relatively young adults without underlying medical conditions, according to a new Canadian study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The average age of 168 patients studied in 38 Canadian adult and pediatric intensive care units was 32.3 years.

Thirty-three of the patients died within 90 days of being admitted to the hospital.

The study, released Monday, suggests that H1N1 flu might be more complex than experts had believed.

Many had said the virus was most dangerous to people with underlying medical conditions such as asthma, diabetes, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease and immune system diseases.

And experts say regular seasonal flu is most dangerous to the elderly.

"Our data suggest that severe disease and mortality in the current outbreak is concentrated in relatively healthy adolescents and adults between the ages of 10 and 60 years," the authors write.

But they go on to say that modern therapies, including breathing assistance from ventilators and antiviral medicines, can prevent most swine flu deaths.

"With such therapy, we found that most patients can be supported through their critical illness," the study says.

South Florida doctors agreed that the Canadian study suggests that H1N1 flu is not entirely understood.

"Our data suggest that the patients we've seen had underlying conditions or pregnancy," said Dr. Steven Katz, director of emergency services at Memorial Hospital West in Pembroke Pines, Fla. "But this is a new strain of flu. It's still early. Sometimes the facts change as diseases unfold.

"People die from the flu each year," he added. "This one is no worse than other flus, at least so far."

Most people with flu-like symptoms don't need to go to emergency rooms or even take antivirals such as Tamiflu, Katz said.

Only people with severe shortness of breath or very rapid heartbeat should go to hospitals, he said.

The Canadian study, conducted between April and August, was authored by Dr. Anand Kumar of the Health Sciences Centre and St. Boniface Hospital in Winnipeg.

The fact that few of the severely ill patients in the Canadian study had underlying health conditions may be because the H1N1 virus primarily infects younger people, who tend to be healthier, the authors said.

Older people — especially those over 65, who are more likely to have underlying conditions — appear to have some immunity because of long-previous exposure to similar viruses or to inoculations.

Schlanger urges energy conservation

ENERGY from page 1

biofuels.

Referring to wind energy, Schlanger said there is "tremendous potential here. We need to be doing more."

When discussing solar energy, he said that this technology's usage has grown to about 30 percent in the last decade, but the rest of the world has increased its usage by 59 percent.

"The U.S. lags compared to the rest of the world," Schlanger said. "Costs are falling as technology is evolving. The fact that global growth is double compared to the U.S. is a message to us. We need to be doing more in solar."

Concerning biotechnologies, Schlanger explained that as technologies mature, opportunities grow.

In the case of using corn ethanol, which meets three percent of U.S. gasoline requirements, Schlanger said it is not worth it.

This, he said, will take 15 percent of corn crops, which will consequentially lower gas prices, but drive up food prices.

Schlanger said that transportation must shift to electricity, biofuels and natural gas.

To do this, he suggested expanding research and development for advanced battery technology as well as tax incentives for installation of public auto-electrical charging stations.

Although alternative energies are accelerating, Schlanger said that conventional sources will provide the bulk of U.S. energy for a long time.

Therefore, Alaska and offshore U.S. territory should be opened for immediate exploration and development.

Schlanger said that if Alaska were to be compared to a football field, the area taken up for drilling sites would be the size of an index card, proving that this would have little effect on the environment.

Schlanger said that oil production is environmentally safe, showing that 62 percent of oil found in water sources is from natural seeps.

Only one percent is from oil extraction.

In addition, he said that a pipeline should be built to get natural gas from Alaska to the lower 48 states.

Schlanger said that extracting oil from the oil shale in the U.S. west is beneficial because there is more oil here than in Saudi Arabia.

The federal government has avoided this because it believes the technologies needed to extract the oil are more than the oil is actually worth.

Schlanger wants the government to "prove the price of technology" and "take advantage" of the resources we have growing here in the U.S.

"Eliminate regulatory barriers to develop oil shale and subsidize full scale shale," Schlanger said.

Schlanger said that new drilling technologies have discovered gas deposits in the lower 48 states as well.

This adds up to approximately 500 trillion cubed feet of natural gas, although it would require an infrastructure investment and growth of a natural gas distribution system.

As for coal, the U.S. has hundreds of years worth, according to Schlanger, and the technology is there to develop clean coal.

"New technology will facilitate change," Schlanger said.

Schlanger also took the time to commend the University on their energy conservation, calling it "impressive."

Overall, Schlanger said that he was optimistic about national change.

He said that momentum is building for change and that there is recognition that the current state is not sustainable.

Schlanger is a strong advocate for government intervention and raves about the Cash for Clunkers program, but said he was disappointed that it was terminated after $3 billion.

He said the Obama administration has a "lack of focus and lack of a comprehensive plan."

He said that the government should guarantee a price for a gas, saying currently "it is too cheap and fosters the wrong type of behavior."

According to Schlanger, the government should buy gas for a set price, like it already does for milk, corn and wheat.

Dr. Theodore L. Djaferis, dean of the college of engineering, said he was impressed with Schlanger's presentation.

"The world is facing a serious energy crisis. People need to be educated to be aware," Djaferis said.

Schlanger stressed the importance of getting data so rational decisions could be made.

"We need to do something as a country," he said. "The world needs to look at this."

He went on to say UMass is doing their part.

The college of engineering is heavily researching energy and has a strong wind energy and biofuel program.

"The one thing that caught my attention the most is, besides being pro-green, was drilling in Alaska," said UMass electrical engineering student, Thomas Gilbert. "Very Republican."

"He supports it so thoroughly that it sort of makes it seem dirty," Gilbert said in reference to Sarah Palin's "Drill, Baby, Drill" campaign.

"To see support from someone who has a pretty good understanding of technologies is pretty surprising," he said. "To see the drilling side in a different light was good."

Gilbert goes on to talk about his work with sustainable engineering projects in developing countries such as Brazil and Kenya.

Marc MacLead, a mechanical engineering student, also found the conference informative, saying that it posed some questions for him that he had not considered, including how to get the hall rolling on solving the energy problem.

"Renewable energy can't solve everything," MacLead said. "It needs to be more than that to solve an energy disaster."

MacLead added that he was interested in the conference because it not only related to his major, but, as a freshman, he is thinking about working with renewable energies in the future.

Christopher Kalinowski, a chemical engineering student, had a lot to say about the presentation, as well as about his own studies at UMass.

He explained that Schlanger made a lot of great points.

"He had really highlighted some of the issues and necessary solutions, even those that can't be implemented easily," Kalinowski said.

Kalinowski added that the presentation was "very straightforward."

What impressed him most was "the benefits of small changes," specifically referring to saving energy that would result from enforcing a stricter policy each year on gas mileage.

Kalinowski questioned, however, Schlanger's coverage of government involvement.

"I think that maybe he fell short on how you'd get the government to do these things," he said.

Kalinowski also wondered if the index card analogy was just the size of drilling sites or if it included pipelines and infrastructures.

Schlanger fielded questions from the audience, saying "each of us should let our congressmen and senators know we're concerned about this issue."

He added that we should tell them we want a "comprehensive energy plan that will include conservation, growth of alternative energy supplies and expansion of conventional energy sources."

As for the analogy, Schlanger said that the index card represents only the drilling footprint, not the roads, which are relatively small.

Professor William Conner, who has been teaching introduction to energy engineering at UMass for 30 years, called Schlanger's presentation "fantastic."

He said that Schlanger had "really good suggestions on how, as a nation, we can achieve energy independence, something students should know about."

Triantafillos Mountziaris, professor and head of the chemical engineering department, said that "this was a very stimulating presentation by an industry leader."

"We're very excited to hear from him and get his perspectives on the issue of the energy independence of the United States," said Mountziaris.

Schlanger said that he was very impressed by the interest of the students, adding that the questions were excellent.

He said that the presentation covered a "very important topic."

"If we don't start talking about how we're going to solve this problem, we're going to be in a crisis situation," said Schlanger.

Angela Hilsman can be reached at ahilsman@student.umass.edu

Retail stores prepare for low holiday sales

High unemployment rates are expected to limit shoppers

By Andria Cheng
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

NEW YORK — Despite some signs of economic improvement, continued job losses and record-high unemployment will likely translate into the retail industry's first back-to-back holiday-season sales declines on record.

Holiday sales in November and December this year are expected to decline one percent to $437.6 billion, compared with a 3.4 percent drop last year, when the industry saw its worst holiday season on record, according to National Retail Federation. The industry's 10-year average, as tracked by the trade group, is a 3.4 percent increase.

While numerous indications suggest the recession's worst is past, continued uncertainty over the job market and home values will continue to weigh on consumers' spending decisions this holiday season, federation said. Retailers, particularly electronics and apparel stores, are likely to continue to cut prices and offer other promotions to lure shoppers during the industry's most crucial period.

Wal-Mart Stores Inc. last week said it's making more than 100 holiday toys available for $10 each, an expansion of its 10-for-$10 toy program last October, setting the stage for another price-competitive holiday season, analysts said.

The holiday period represents anywhere between 25 percent and 40 percent of the industry's annual sales and is make-or-break for some categories, such as jewelry shops, according to the NRF.

Archstone Consulting, which on Monday forecast holiday sales would fall one percent after a 2.8 percent decline a year earlier by its calculation, said this holiday season would likely cap the industry's first consecutive declines in 40 years, when the compilation of such retail-sales data began.

In addition to a cloudy job picture, demand also has been hurt by a decline in consumer credit and near-record-high savings rate, the consulting firm said.

Faced with forecasts of a tough holiday season, retailers are taking a conservative tack and may opt to keep tight reins on inventory levels this season to avoid the profit-eroding discounts of last year, Archstone said. Inbound cargo, a proxy for retail inventory, is at its lowest level in at least seven years, down about 20 percent from 2007's peak levels, Archstone said.

The two-month holiday period represents anywhere between 25 percent and 40 percent of the retail industry's annual sales.

It should be noted that not all seasonal industry outlooks are quite so gloomy. The shopping-center trade group International Council of Shopping Centers forecast retailers would see a one percent increase in same-store sales in November and December, and it said holiday sales could be up as much as 1.5 percent when factoring in January, marking the industry's best holiday-sales performance in three years. The trade group noted that consumers' mood could be buttressed by the facts that average weekly earnings have risen and jobless claims have declined from their highest levels in more than 26 years.

Deloitte has forecast holiday sales, including January, to be flat at $810 billion, after their worst-on-record decline last year. The consulting firm said consumers' desire to spend may rally if gas prices remain stable, home prices continue to make headway toward recovery and the equity-market recovery continues. It advised retailers to put customer perceptions at the forefront of the season's merchandising, pricing and promotion decisions.

Brian Dunn, chief executive of No. 1 electronics retailer Best Buy Co. (BBY), said last week that he's very confident the company will meet its full-year profit forecast by ringing up positive comparable sales this holiday season. He said Best Buy will make sure it's competitive on prices and value against rivals.

Discussion series plans UMass climate action

The workshop series hopes to develop a plan for sustainability in time to write the University's Climate Action Plan for the reduction of energy usage on campus.

SUSTAINABILITY from page 1

room, a long list was formed illustrating the obstacles the participants will face.

These obstacles include a lack of funding, as well as people resisting change and ways to keep enthusiasm up about maintaining a healthy environment.

Others suggested realigning the campus mission statement to include sustainability and creating a way for all members involved to remain integrated with each other, regardless of the project they may be involved in.

This will be possible if there is a creation of an office of sustainability, according to those attending the workshops, which will bring all the different staff, faculty and students together so they can work collaboratively.

Those who are researching new green technology or even educating students will be able to come together as one central effort towards the same initiative.

As a closing activity, participants gave advice to each other on how to keep up their sustainability pact.

People shared insights such as paying it forward, leading by example and never hold back to voice your own fears and challenges.

Susan Personette, director of campus planning, expressed her opinion to the students who had attended the event.

"You are the reason we are here," Personette said to the students present at the workshops. "Get organized and use your voice."

At around 12:30 p.m., the workshop concluded and a representative from Johnson Controls, Inc., thanked all that attended.

The representative for the company which had brought the workshops to campus, had stated that the report of the day's efforts would soon be available.

Stoffel was pleased to say that he thought the day was a huge success.

"Not only were we able to collect thoughts and perspectives from many stakeholders across campus, but they interacted as well," Stoffel said.

"That's the key to sustainability, she added. "To be able to bring people in groups that have different goals and initiatives to work on the common goal of sustainability."

The Student Government Association's environmental committee Vice Chair Ali Alder also thought the workshop was successful.

Alder also had said taht she was surprised by the enthusiasm in the room.

However, she stressed that the ideas covered in the meeting should be followed by concrete actions if sustainability is to be reached on campus.

"It's easy to sit around and talk, but this needs to turn into something bigger than discussion," Alder said.

"I don't feel as though we have accomplished anything yet," Alder had added. "It's just the first step."

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu

Students discuss dorm sex with roommates

By Susan Snyder and Olivia Biagi
The Philadelphia Inquirer

PHILADELPHIA — Penn State sophomore Ricky Morales and his roommates worked it out themselves: If the others are asleep, it's OK to have sex with a partner in the room.

"It's all about communication. That's what it comes down to," said Morales, a journalism major from Stroudsburg, Pa.

But at Tufts University near Boston, students apparently weren't able to negotiate such delicate matters so deftly.

After receiving about a dozen complaints in the last several years from a student body of 5,000, the upscale private university this fall took what is at the very least an unusual step in the world of college housing: It banned in writing sex with a roommate present.

Some students thought the policy sounded like a good idea.

"Sex should never have witnesses. Then it's just porn," said Fleurette Louis-Jacques, 20, an English and French linguistics double major at Rutgers University.

She and her roommate haven't discussed the topic, she said, but added that they don't have sex. "Seriously, not even being funny, we're like nuns."

Most students, however, thought that a written policy was unnecessary.

"Everyone here is smart enough to understand that it's a common courtesy" to leave the room while your roommate is having sex, said Doug Mocik, a freshman English major at La Salle University, "unless your roommate is a freak."

Temple University senior Jordan Ramsey was incredulous that a policy would be needed. told about the Tufts ban, he quipped "Somebody wasn't getting any!"

Even some who have fallen victim weren't upset.

Ashley Clark, a senior business-law major at Temple, said she once had a roommate who would have sex while Clark was asleep. Clark sometimes woke up. She thought it was "weird, but it didn't bother me."

Kelly Powell, 21, a history and women's and gender studies double major at the College of New Jersey, had it happen to her, too.

"I didn't really care that much, as I was sleeping at the time," she said, "but I discussed it with her afterward and told her that it could not happen again."

Then there were those who thought sex with a roommate close by was something to be celebrated.

"You've got to get fist pounds," said Cory Winkoff, a junior communication major at the University of Pennsylvania.

He and a group of friends high-fived one another when the subject was introduced.

"We're happy when our friends are hooking up," agreed Terry Kennedy, a junior political science major. "It's college; it kind of happens."

Most schools surveyed have no specific policy on sex in a room, but many ban behavior that offends a roommate.

Our residence life guest policy prohibits guests in a room over the objections of a roommate regardless of the activity," said Sandy Lanman, a spokeswoman for Rutgers.

Adrian Gage, an officer in the American College Personnel Association, said he wasn't aware of other schools with a ban like Tufts'.

The issue, said Gage, a student affairs assistant dean at Worcester State College in Massachusetts, "may be part of a roommate contract or roommate agreement where it's one of the things listed that the two roommates can discuss."

Even religious institutions are not as specific as Tufts.

Neumann College and Villanova University, both Catholic, note in their handbooks that they adhere to church teachings, which condone sex only in marriage, and that those teachings govern residence hall life.

La Salle, also Catholic, requires members of the opposite sex to leave a room by midnight Sundays through Thursdays and by 2 a.m. Fridays and Saturdays.

"Roommate approval is required for any residential student to bring a guest to their residence/room," spokesman Jon Caroulis said.

The College of New Jersey requires written permission from a roommate to have an overnight guest, but doesn't specifically address sex.

"We don't actually really get that many complaints" on the topic, spokesman Matthew Golden said.

Most schools report some complaints and said that the subject does cause some breakups, but that it was not one of the most prevalent concerns.

"General disrespect for each other comes up more often than anything else," Gage said.

At Temple, roommates have agreements and are asked at the outset about preferences regarding intimacy, said Michael D. Scales, associate vice president for university housing and residential life.

"We use that as a basis to establish what is acceptable," he said.

Scales said he and his staff had discussed Tufts' policy.

"Tufts is private. We have to be mindful of the freedoms and liberties that come along with being a public university," he said.

At Tufts, where about 2,200 students live with a roommate in university housing, no penalties are attached to the guideline, which appears as a new bullet in the campus-living handbook and was publicized last week.

It reads: "You may not engage in sexual activity while your roommate is present in the room. Any sexual activity within your assigned room should not ever deprive your roommate(s) of privacy, study, or sleep time."

Meanwhile, Morales and his roommates at Pennsylvania State University will continue to handle the matter on their own. They have a backup plan if a roommate is awake in the room.

"All you need to do," Morales explained, "is send a text message to that roommate to ask them for a half-hour alone."

F.B.I officials pledge to stop Internet-based security breaches

By Josh Richman
Contra Costa Times

SAN FRANCISCO — Anyone can be taken in by online phishing scams seeking to steal your personal data — even the director of the FBI.

Almost.

FBI Director Robert Mueller told the Commonwealth Club of California on Wednesday that an e-mail he received looked so much like something his bank would have sent that he followed its link to a website, and it was only after answering several preliminary questions that he realized he was being duped.

Now his wife won't let him do online banking anymore, he said; he didn't mention whether the almost 33,000 employees working for him have tracked down the culprits.

They are hard at work, however, trying to counter cyberthreats against everything from personal privacy — like your bank account and medical records — to national security, meaning military installations, public power grids and other critical infrastructure, he said.

"Our lives are impacted by the Internet all the time whether we see it or not," he said, and while that has meant great strides in education, commerce and other areas, it also means the virtual world can be "a conduit for crime" with "costly and potentially deadly consequences."

Mueller, 65, whom President George W. Bush appointed in 2001, said the nation can't afford to underestimate cybercrime, as it's become increasingly harder to determine whether data thefts, denial of service attacks and other virtual mayhem are the work of "a high school hacker across the street or a hostile power across the ocean." What looks like a minor intrusion could be the telltale sign of a major crime in progress, he said.

Mueller said the FBI cooperates closely with U.S. intelligence agencies and with foreign governments, embedding its agents around the globe to combat cybercrime at its myriad sources. As an example he cited Wednesday morning's announcement of charges against about 100 people in the United States and Egypt as part of "Operation Phish Phry," taking down an alleged scam that targeted U.S. banks and victimized hundreds and possibly thousands of account holders by stealing their financial information and using it to transfer about $1.5 million to bogus accounts the perpetrators controlled.

An audience member sent up a question about surveillance of Americans' e-mail and online data; Mueller replied the FBI intercepts online information in criminal cases only with a federal judge's permission, and in national security cases only with the permission of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court.

He also said the FBI works "day in and day out" at balancing protection of civil liberties with protection of national security, and "there should be a debate but I'm comfortable with the role the FBI has played since Sept. 11 (2001)." He said he remains "a firm and strong supporter of the PATRIOT Act," particularly as it pertains to eliminating information-sharing barriers between the FBI and intelligence agencies.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

End of the college loan shark

College is not only about learning information. It's not only about learning job skills, finding a prospective career or helping you get a better job. Well, it is about all those things, but more importantly, it's about learning how to live life.

Azeen Khanmalek
Andrew Prowten

We have never met anyone who said they didn't enjoy and appreciate their college experience. The problem that arises is most people's post-college experience. Especially in these hard times, college students are coming out of school saddled with debt and unable to get a job. This problem doesn't just affect our financial situations, but the rest of our lives, and can in fact close the doors that college is meant to open for us.

As many of you may have noticed on Wednesday, there were people standing around the Franklin and Berkshire Dining Commons and the campus center asking you to call your senators. I know, you think we're crazy, but I'll tell you what – this may have been the most important event of your college career. Right now, there is a bill going to the Senate (the U.S. one, not the Student Government Association), and that bill will literally change your life. It's a ballout. A bailout for you.

This bill, the Student Aid and Fiscal Responsibility Act (SAFRA), will invest tens of billions of dollars into schools just like the mighty University of Massachusetts. It will increase the Pell Grant Scholarship funds by $40 billion. It will invest $3 billion to increase other college grant programs. It will send $2.55 billion to schools that have historically helped the disenfranchised and people of color. Heck, it will even make those darn Free Application for Student Aid (FAFSA) forms your parents make you fill out easier.

When Andrew Proten was a freshman, he took out a $5,000 loan with an interest rate of 2.8 percent. Awesome. But alas, he found out after putting his John Hancock on it that the interest rate jumped to 12 percent. This is called an adjustable interest rate. An adjustable interest rate is basically a fancy way of saying, "We can change your contract whenever we want to for no reason." This is where they really get you when you miss a payment on your adjustable loan. If that happens, a loan provider can increase your interest rate to 20-plus percent. Azeen Khanmalek is going to graduate in May with about $85,000 in debt, and has no idea how or when he will pay that off. What kinds of jobs are available right now that will pay enough to support yourself and pay off loans? Azeen wants to go to graduate school, and maybe do service work for a year, but how can one do so if loan amounts increase with interest? In a lot of ways, it simply isn't fair. How are we expected to succeed if we have to put ourselves in the hole before we really even start our lives?

Think about it, if you wanted to be a teacher (like Andrew) or a social worker, how could you afford to go into a relatively low-paying (but critically needed) career if you had, say, $80,000 in loans to pay off? College is meant to give us opportunities and expand our choices. Yet the way we fund our higher education system seems to have the opposite effect.

Over the years, the cost of school has skyrocketed much faster than inflation. Andrew learned in a political science class the other day that the cost of one year at a decent law school in 1929 was $300 (about $2,800 in today's dollars). But now, a half decent law school costs at least $30,000 a year. That's an increase of about 1,000 percent.

According to an October 2007 New York Times article, the cost of college rose at more than double the rate of inflation that year alone, with the cost of public schools rising at an even higher rate. We are willing to admit that college costs are what they are for a reason. We appreciate the high level of education, the opportunity to go to a nationally ranked school and all the resources that the University provides for us. So we understand that we have to shell out a certain amount of money for all those nice things. We are not demanding that the prices are substantially dropped (at least not right this second), but something needs to be done. That something is the Pell Grant.

Throughout our history, the U.S. government has had to step in to help citizens in need who cannot compete in an expensive economy through subsidies. We subsidize corn (a non-digestible food item), sugar, milk, meat and almost the entire U.S. agricultural industry. So isn't higher education worth it too? We certainly think so.

Luckily, we now have President Barack Obama who sees that this is pretty messed up. SAFRA is not a cure-all or a magic bullet, but it is one heck of a start. Now, we are not diehard followers of the "Obamessiah," but we have to say that ever since he came into office, a lot of people in Congress started getting their heads out of their private assets. We know that we might struggle financially for the rest of our lives, but we also know that we can prevent other students from experiencing the same thing.

If we all agree that the college experience is important, then shouldn't everyone have the opportunity that we've had? The best part is that SAFRA, if passed, will take effect next year, which means we could see results almost immediately. So please, If you want to change the way we pay for college and make it more equitable for students all over the country, take action. Lobby on your own behalf. Call your senators; tell them you need better college funding. Tell them that you don't want your life to be a constant financial struggle just because you wanted to get an education. Tell them that students are the future of this country, and we need all the help we can get.

Azeen Khanmalek and Andrew Prowten are SGA senators. They can be reached at akhanmal@student.umass.edu and prowten@student.umass.edu, respectively.

Genocide prevention

Eric Magazu

It is familiar to most of us that many student organizations, both on campus and throughout our high school years, have actively sought to inform us about the occurrence of genocide. Many classes we have taken have made reference to historical moments of genocide, the most recent and significant being the events of World War II and the Holocaust.

It would be rare to find a serious scholar and any person for that matter, advocating for the desirability of genocide. The most common excuse for such behavior is a desire by national leaders, or a whole population, for homogeneity in ethnic, cultural, political or religious matters. In times past, such behavior occurred more often without apologies. Today, there appears to be a general consensus that genocide as a concept is morally repugnant.

Whether this consensus means that genocide itself will never again occur in developed nations, or if it will simply be called something else, is still very much up for debate. Even today, we will occasionally encounter the idea of expulsion or transfer, which are attempts to accomplish societal homogeneity without bloodshed or murder. Expulsion and transfer are accomplished by forcibly removing a group from a location and transferring them to another, generally less desirable, location.

Genocide is unique in the sense that it is understood not to be a crime against an individual, but an entire group of people. This forces us to consider the idea of collective rights. In America, we generally see things in the form of individual rights. But in genocide, as in war or terrorism, it would hardly make sense to prosecute each individual case of murder. We have to consider whether social groups and identity still hold a lot of sway in modern life. It does indeed appear to be the tendency of human beings to associate with an in-group as a way of understanding where they belong. While we might want to believe otherwise, tribes and tribalism are not ancient concepts, but very much active even today.

It is indeed heartwarming that so many students are eager to dedicate their time and effort to bring these issues to the forefront of our political discussion.

Since no human being in principle supports the concept of genocide, what remains is to determine how best to address modern cases of genocide. We are familiar with student campaigns that address the genocides in Darfur, Burma and the Congo. This past February, Emmanuel Jal spoke in the Student Union concerning his experience as a child soldier fighting in Darfur. Tomorrow, Patrick Cook-Deegan will be speaking in the Campus Center concerning his 2006 bicycle trek through Burma, Laos and Cambodia in order to help bring attention to the situation in Burma and to raise funds for scholarship programs.

At the lecture this Wednesday, hosted by UMassSTAND, a student affiliate of the Genocide Intervention Network, it is expected that Cook-Deegan will make the case that the International Criminal Court (ICC), located at The Hague in the Netherlands, needs to urgently investigate the military government in Burma. Last February, Jal insisted that the situation in Darfur must be brought to the ICC.

The ICC appears to be a common path for genocide intervention advocates to recommend. The question that should be addressed is the effectiveness of the ICC to deal with these situations, especially when the countries in question are unlikely to be part of the treaty organization that created the ICC. It may be to consider military intervention under international auspices. The problem is mustering the will of developed nations to invest their soldiers in these conflicts, as military action in places with there is heated ethnic hatred can result in a multitude of deaths on the part of the intervening nations.

It is indeed heartwarming that so many students are eager to dedicate their time and effort to bring these issues to the forefront of our political discussion. We need to ensure that politicians and other public figures address the issues of genocide in a serious way. Indeed we will never understand the gravity of the situation from our vantage point. It may be desirable to visit areas where genocide is occurring in person, as Patrick Cook-Deegan did, with proper protection and local guides to ensure safety.

We know that compassion in our desire to end genocide is very much warranted, but we must recognize that the reluctance on the part of developed nations to immediately respond with military intervention is not based simply on hardheartedness, as leaders would be irresponsible if they did not consider the needs of their own citizens. We should be cognizant that it is not a virtue when a person's apparent righteousness is actually done at the expense of a third party.

For these reasons, our primary task must be to raise broad public support for genocide intervention. This is why it is essential that University of Massachusetts students learn about these issues and seek out public forums that address the cases of genocide.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

Frozen heads and euthanasia at Alcor

Matt Kushi

What is death? It is a question that seems so simple yet so complex. It is a question that we tend to think that we know. Once a person stops breathing and their brain stops functioning, they are dead. Apparently, the Alcor Life Extension Foundation, Inc., a cryonics laboratory founded in 1972 in Scottsdale, Ariz., has different ideas.

What exactly does Alcor do? They freeze human bodies in hopes that one day technology will come along and allow us to bring these humans back to life. That sounds interesting on paper. We all wish we could live on and on. However, in this day and age, this is not yet possible. To add to that, Alcor does not exactly have a glowing reputation.

In the past decade, you have probably heard of Alcor. Yes, the same Alcor that hosts a legendary baseball player, who was the last man to hit .400 in a single season, as one of its more famous residents. When Ted Williams, Boston Red Sox legend and Major League Baseball Hall of Famer, passed away on July 5, 2002, a debate ensued over if Williams would receive a traditional burial or if he would be frozen at Alcor. The latter was allegedly the idea of Williams' son, John Henry Williams.

In the end, Williams' body was frozen at Alcor. This is where the case gets murky. Besides the question of whether Williams truly wanted to be frozen in a laboratory upon the hour of his death, there is the ethical manner in which Alcor operates.

According to Associated Press reports from ABC News, with the source being the New York Daily News, and CBS, there were several ghastly methods that Alcor used. The reason why the company is finding itself back in the public eye is that Larry Johnson, a former chief operating officer at Alcor, is releasing a book detailing the gruesome behind-the-scenes action.

In the past decade, you have probably heard of Alcor. Yes, the same Alcor that hosts a legendary baseball player ... as one of its more famous residents.

Is Johnson just trying to hype up his book? Who knows? However, there seems to be something fishy about Alcor.

In the reports mentioned above, it is stated that Williams' head was severed and put into a capsule. The severed heads of victims are put onto tuna cans. In order to move the heads, the can must be knocked off of the head. Johnson stated in his book that a technician trying to knock the can off of Williams' head, in 2002, missed and struck Williams' head with his swing. This may explain the reports a couple of years ago where it was said that Williams' head had cracks in it.

An even more brutal method used, as reported by Johnson, lies in the death of two of Alcor's clients. On these two occasions, Johnson states, Alcor employees waited outside of the home and waited for the death of the client. When these clients did not die quick enough, their death process was sped up by an injection of some chemical. That is too disturbing to really comment on. Unless there was a legal contract permitting euthanasia, this is straight-up murder.

While doing some research for this story, I decided to check out Alcor's homepage at Alcor.org. On their front page, they have several subheadings with little descriptions that essentially list what Alcor is about. One line caught my eye in particular under the heading of "Cryonics and Religion."

This line reads, "The purpose of cryonics is to maintain life, not reverse death." Technically, yes, it is possible to have a few brain waves still firing after you are physically dead. Alcor tries to freeze their patients at -321 degrees as quickly as they can after they die. However, the patient is also technically dead. They are not actively thinking and their heart isn't beating.

Therefore, the above statement is not entirely true. What life are you trying to maintain? The person is technically dead so in order to maintain life, you need to reverse death.

This case is what sparks the "what is dead?" debate. Is a person technically alive or technically dead in this case? The answers are not clear cut. We know where Alcor stands on this.

However, in the case of Mr. Williams, it is even weirder. How are they going to restore him? Does he have any frozen brain waves? Logically, I would not think so. His head was severed from his body. His head is not attached to anything. How do they expect to bring him back to life? In order to do so would require a Dr. Frankenstein operation, which is scary to think about.

So we are left with the question, again, of what is death? Do we really know? Maybe we do, maybe we don't. I am sure that Alcor, despite their grand talk, has no idea either.

In my eyes, Alcor is a scary company. Why don't we wait and see if we can expand living human life instead of playing with dead people like we are living in some sort of science fiction movie? That makes more sense to me. It's not as ethically creepy.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

'Crazy Christians' not just Amherst products

Thomas Moore

I'm starting to notice that there are a fairly large amount of crazy Christians at the University of Massachusetts. Some sacrifice their free time to sit behind tables in the Campus Center, providing information and opportunities for interested individuals wanting to learn more. Others are bold enough to stand on a crate to endure a slew of negativity while making proclamations through a megaphone.

These crazy Christians intrigue me. Not because of their actions that everyone can see, but it's their underlining motivation that can't be seen by the uninformed eye that get me wondering. What drives a person to stand out of the cultural step, inviting judgment and ridicule from others?

At first I thought that these wild and crazy Christians were just following a fad. Maybe standing up for what you believe in was just the American-driven, postmodern thing to do. But then I was told about a website called JoshuaProject.net that lists crazy Christians on an international scale who put their necks out in countries we only see in National Geographic. The website speaks of people risking not just their collegiate social reputation, but their very lives, all hinging on the same truth that crazy Christians on campus lean on.

Is this "acting out" of Christians a new thing? With some research, I found that it wasn't. Christians actually have a knack for public displays of faith that make observers feel awkward.

A couple of months ago, I preached a sermon on the New Testament book of Acts, a 28-chapter account of the very beginning of the Christian church. Confession booths, Sunday school, "Jesus camp" and First Communions haven't existed since the beginning of time, and the book of Acts shows what the church was like before these modern adaptations came.

The particular portion of Acts that I went through was at the end of chapter 18 and on through the beginning of chapter 19. In the section of Luke's historic account, we hear about the church at Ephesus. According to Nathan Cartel, the pastor of Vita Nova in Amherst, the church at Ephesus is one of the most closely studied churches not just because it was one of the first churches to ever exist, but because it is mentioned in seven different books of the bible.

What these Ephesians do is nuts. They're going out into public and sharing with each other the crap that they have been associated with and setting evidence of their old lives ablaze.

Some of the Christians in Ephesus were crazy, maybe crazier than the ones on campus today. At one point, Luke writes, "Many of those who were now believers came, confessing and divulging their practices. And a number of those who had practiced magical arts brought their books together and burned them in the sight of all. And they counted the value of them and found it came to 50,000 pieces of silver. So the word of the Lord continued to increase and prevail mightily."

What these Ephesians do is nuts. They're going out into public and sharing with each other the crap that they have been associated with and setting evidence of their old lives ablaze. I mean, imagine if some Christians today bought into the Gospel and the new life available in it so much that they took all of their weed, porn and any other evidence of their old life to the Southwest Residential Area beach and set it on fire. They wouldn't sell it, give it away or hide it on a shelf, but would remove it completely from existence because they believed there was something infinitely better.

The Ephesians rest so firmly in the truth of the Gospel that they have no shame whatsoever. With the new perspective on their lives in light of Jesus and the Cross, they are free from the junk that chained them down to death. To the onlooker walking by, however, they are straight up out of their freaking minds.

For the Ephesians who turned away from their old lives and onto Jesus in a radical fashion, they had to have some sort of motivation. It wasn't a man yelling at them to burn their stuff that made them do it, it was a natural response in their hearts when they understood just a piece of the Gospel.

Why read something if you're not challenged by it? Challenged to learn more, challenged to make a change or just challenged to challenge yourself. To the crazy Christian: Are the things that you are doing natural reactions your constant discovery of what the Gospel means and are they done out of raw love? Sometimes it's easier to be bold than to be genuine, and the latter is more than important.

To the non-crazy Christian: Do you understand how much it means to have God love you so much as to step into flesh and die for you? I don't. But if we did, I think it would show.

To the non-Christian: What these crazy Christians have that allows them to live free is available to you as well. If you want it, keep pursuing truth and explore the depth that is the Gospel. Thanks for reading.

Thomas Moore is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tjmoore@student.umass.edu.

Days since the new Recreation Center was scheduled to open:

15

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

James Dean classic still relevant

By Lindsay Pierce
Collegian Correspondent

"Rebel Without a Cause" first opened on Oct. 7, 1955, approximately one month after its star, James Dean, died in a fatal car accident. Dean's fame stems from starring roles in only three films: "East of Eden" (1955), "Rebel Without a Cause" (1955) and "Giant" (1956), but his tragic and untimely death cemented his status as a cultural icon.

The film was nominated for three Academy Awards, and has also become an icon of its own. In 1990, it was added to the United States Library of Congress's National Films Registry, deeming it "culturally, historically or aesthetically significant."

Directed by Nicholas Ray, the film's title is adopted from "Rebel Without a Cause: The Hypnoanalysis of a Criminal Psychopath" (1944) by psychiatrist Robert M. Lindner. The book is a case-study of an imprisoned teenage psychopath in the post-war years. However, the film itself does not directly reference Lindner's work. The screenplay was written by Stewart Stern, from Irving Shulman's adaptation of an original storyline written by Nicholas Ray.

"Rebel Without a Cause" portrays what was seen as the moral decay of American youth. It is considered to be one of the best 1950s films depicting young restlessness and rebellion. Appropriately, the film was used as a case-study for the Hampshire College class titled "1950s: Cold War Culture & The Birth of Cool." Playing at Amherst Cinema for a select engagement, Hampshire College professor Karen Koehler introduced and led a question-and-answer session for the film.

The film begins in the juvenile division of a Los Angeles Police Station. Jim Stark's (Dean) parents and grandmother arrive from a country club dinner to exonerate their son, who has been charged with public drunkenness. The ensuing drama reads like family court, with Jim airing their dirty laundry and in a moment of coherence, yelling "You're tearing me apart!" In following with the adage "a drunken man's words are a sober man's thoughts," Jim reveals the dysfunctional family dynamics.

Judy (Natalie Wood) is picked up walking the streets in red. The tension at home and the constraints of her age and gender force her to escape from her house and run with "the kids," a restless crowd that Jim comes to blows with. In the tension between Judy and her father, and the resentment towards her mother, Freud is clearly at work. The incestuous subtext of her relationship with her father is disconcerting at best. She later expresses to Jim that "I've been looking for someone to love me. And now I love somebody."

Plato (Sal Mineo) is introduced as a fragile, volatile teenager, whose parents have all but abandoned him. Throughout the film, his view of Jim as a father figure becomes increasingly apparent.

The film was first released with the tag-lines "...and they both come from 'good' families!" and "The bad boy from a good family." The film examines this idea of a "good family," as Jim, Judy and Plato's issues clearly stem from troubled family dynamics.

The Starks have moved, once again, to escape from the trouble and embarrassment caused by Jim's rebellious ways. Yet once again, Jim falls into trouble with the wrong crowd. The film spans a 24-hour period, in which Jim is involved in a knife fight, and also in an accident in which Buzz Gunderson, the leader of the gang, is killed, and then proceeds to run from Buzz's goonies who are out for revenge.

Koehler presented the idea that perhaps Dean's best acting is nonverbal. There is a pervading idea of entrapment, in gender roles, and in Jim's case, in his own body. Jim's frustration threatens to boil over throughout the film; evidenced by his body language and the way in which he interacts with his environment.

Koehler began with the question, "Is there really a cause?" Throughout the film, it is heavily implied that Jim is trying to be the man that his father is not. In a climatic moment with his parents, Jim expresses that he wishes that his father would be a man, and that his mother would stop running from him.

If the film was meant to portray the decay of American youth, it is at odds with Dean's character, who values honor and is described by Plato as sincere. Jim also finds love and friendship with Judy, to the astonishment of his parents.

In response to the comparison between film rebels James Dean and Marlon Brando, Koehler presented the problem with the idea of an archetypical rebel, saying, "If there is an archetype for rebels, there are certain things the rebel has to conform to, yet the essence of the rebel is breaking conformity. Conformity also needs the rebel, in order for conformity to be what is deemed 'normative.'"

Lindsay Pierce can be reached at lepierce@student.umass.edu

Amherst Cinema held a screening of the classic film "Rebel Without a Cause" last Thursday. Professor Karen Koehler from Hampshire College introduced the film and hosted a question-and-answer session.

Actors Vince Vaughn, Kristen Bell, Jon Favreau and Jason Bateman, while typically very funny, leave their genuine humor at home in their latest film, "Couples Retreat."

Humor of all-star cast lost in the heat of 'Couples Retreat'

By Danny Marchant
Collegian Correspondent

There is very little comedy in the new Vince Vaughn movie, "Couples Retreat." For the two-hour duration of the movie, there are maybe five jokes. Most of them happen within the first 30 minutes, leaving an hour and a half of boring, awkward "comedy" to sit through. When a drama doesn't connect with an audience, it's "unintentionally funny." This movie is unintentionally serious.

The film is about four couples and their efforts to put some life back into their marriages. Jason (Jason Bateman) and Cynthia (Kristen Bell) are on the verge of divorce, and so have decided to travel to an island resort (Eden) to save their relationship. However, in order to get a good deal, they have to bring friends. Dave and Ronnie (Vince Vaughn and Malin Akerman), Joey and Lucy (Jon Favreau and Kristin Davis) and the reeently divorced Shane (Faizon Love) and his new girlfriend (Kali Hawk), join them. While only one couple is there for therapy, it becomes clear that if you are in Eden, you will "follow the program." Their week in paradise turns into an outrageous, non-stop laugh riot, or at least it's supposed to.

The biggest problem with "Couples Retreat" is that for a comedy filled with actors like Vaughn, Bateman and Bell, it's surprisingly bland and unfunny. The script was written by Favreau and Vaughn, and after all the comedies they've been involved in ("Wedding Crashers," "Swingers," etc.) you would think that this movie would be hilarious. However, it seems Favreau is preoccupied with the "Iron Man" movies and Vaughn is still reeling from "Fred Claus."

That being said, Vince Vaughn does provide some laughs. Four of the five laughs were his doing in fact. But rather than his usual, likably unlikable self, Vaughn seems uninterested and unenthusiastic in the proceedings. The movie was shot in a real-life paradise, Bora Bora, and perhaps Vaughn just wanted a vacation for himself – show up, do the "rapid-fire talking thing" and swim in the crystal clear ocean.

In fact, the whole cast is underwhelming. Most of the characters are unlikable, and it's hard to get into a comedy if you're annoyed by everyone on screen. Perhaps the most tragic is Jason Bateman. It's obvious that Bateman is just killing time until the "Arrested Development" movie. In this movie, however, there is nothing lovable about his nitpicking and obsession with detail.

Now it can't all be blamed on the actors and the script – someone directed the movie. The director is Peter Billingsley, whose making his directorial debut with "Couples Retreat." Billingsley is probably best known for playing Ralphie in "A Christmas Story." While that has little to do with how good or bad the movie is, it is undeniably weird. He will always have a special place in our hearts for Ralphie, but not for this movie.

"Couples Retreat" drags on for far too long. Maybe Billingsley saved all that time for island hijinks. But there are no hijinks to be found. This is a completely hijinks-less film. Scenes are just long setups for no punch line. Or they're abrupt and serve no purpose other than to show Malin Akerman in a bikini.

Towards the end, the film starts to have a plot. The couples have to find Shane's missing girlfriend, and it's at this point that the movie crams in its message. Therapy can help, but it's all about communication and appreciating each other. That's all well and good, but it comes out of nowhere and does nothing to make this "comedy" any funnier.

Somewhere in this muddled mess, there is a good movie. The cast is made up of talented actors, but they're doing stale, boring jokes with no enthusiasm. I'm sure they all had a blast in Bora Bora, but that does nothing for the audience. In fact, it's even worse knowing they spent all that time in paradise to make a movie that is anything but. If you're in the mood for a real laugh, go see "Surrogates." An "unintentionally funny" movie will always brighten up your day.

Danny Marchant can be reached dmmarcha@student.umass.edu

'White Collar' life for DeKay

By Elaine Lee
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

PASADENA, Calif. — Actor Tim DeKay never quite grew up. He still loves pretending, he says, in a hotel suite, crowded with people from the USA Network.

"As a kid, I always loved playing cowboys and Indians, and it was always freeing for me to really be the Indian, not be the cowboy. As I got older I thought, 'I want to be a lawyer,' 'I want to be a doctor.' But I realized I don't really want to be those, I just want to play them, behave like those people."

He's been behaving like other people for most of his adult life, but folks know him best from his turn as Jonesy, the gimpy carny roustabout in HBO's "Carnivale."

But DeKay, 46, finds himself somewhere else now. In his travel-worn overcoat and regulation gray suit, he plays the straight arrow FBI agent who's coerced into joining forces with a sly con man (Matt Bomer) on USA's "White Collar" premiering Oct. 23.

"White Collar" marks his 11th pilot and the battle weary DeKay says he didn't harbor high hopes when he got the call to audition.

"You look at a pilot as something that is an extremely well paying guest star until you hear, 'We've been picked up.' You can get your hopes up too high," he said.

Matt Bomer had already been cast when DeKay tried out for the part. "'It was fantastic,' they said. I went in for the studio execs, they said, 'Great, can we test for USA?' I was doing three episodes of 'The New Adventures of Old Christine' and they let me out during lunch and said, 'Go test.' And I tested, and by the end of lunch, I got a call saying, 'It's you.'"

But it hasn't always been him. By now, DeKay knows to read between the lines. "You learn to decipher what the expressions of the producers are: 'Oh, we thought Tim was a little too rugged for this role.' Which mean not good looking enough. Or, 'He was a little too earthy for this role,' which might mean I didn't come off as intelligent as they might have hoped. They're very political with these," he smiles.

Married to former actress Elisa Taylor and the father of two children, 10 and 7, DeKay confesses he and Elisa went through a rough patch when they first came to L.A. from New York.

"I was working a lot and I was away a lot and there was a lot of difficulty being away so much of the time. This could be one of the toughest times. We got through it by really communicating and my staying committed. And that changed me. I don't think I really knew what commitment was prior to that. I had an idea. My parents had separated when I was 10, so it was really foreign for me to stay in it even though it was very difficult to work things out.

"My instinct was to say, 'You know what? Let's call it a day. It's been good.' It would've been easier. But we didn't. We stayed in it, and that changed me greatly. And I'm so glad because now I've got two kids and now they see that mom and dad are together."

Becoming a father skewed his priorities, he says, leaning closer to speak above the din. "When both my children were born, you realize, 'Oh, this is really the A story in my life right now, everything else is a B story. It's like the Peace Corps, the toughest job you'll ever love."

Though acting was foreign to them, DeKay says his parents always supported his wayward desire to be a performer. "My father wanted to make sure I got a master's so I could possibly fall back on teaching and I thought: that was smart actually. I didn't fall back on anything fortunately. I've always made a living at it. I do go to colleges and do seminars because I do love to teach. It would not be a falling back of sorts. It would be just another way to talk about pretending."

Tim DeKay stars as FBI agent Matt Bomer in USA's new show "White Collar," which premiers on Oct. 23. The show will be DeKay's 11th pilot.

No. 10 UMass shut out by No. 7 Connecticut

Huskies beat Minutewomen for second time in two years

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

There are times when a strong team seems completely outclassed. At least conference play is on the horizon.

The Massachusetts field hockey team failed to score against Connecticut for the second time in as many seasons. The No. 10 Minutewomen (9-4) couldn't generate any penalty corners against the No. 7 Huskies (13-1), who preyed on UMass' weakness of giving up corners. UConn forced 15 penalty corners in the first shutout of the Minutewomen this season, something they struggled with against ranked opponents in particular.

UMass averages 12 corners per game against ranked opponents this season, and less than 10 overall.

"We were definitely outplayed by a better opponent on the night in [the Huskies]," UMass coach Justine Sowry said. "We were really lacking in hustle in terms of losing the ball and getting it back. We seemed pretty evenly matched in the first half and they definitely outran us in the second half."

The Huskies outshot the Minutewomen, 30-2, including seven shots from leading scorer Loren Sherer, whom UMass undoubtedly scouted heavily leading up to the game. However, the Minutewomen defense contained Sherer for most of the game until she did what she does best – make other players better.

UMass also tried to limit the productivity of Melissa Gonzalez, who has two goals and four assists this season playing center midfield for UConn. Gonzalez and Sherer responded to UMass' due-diligence by teaming up for Sherer's 20th goal of the season on a Gonzalez feed from the left side of the circle.

The Minutewomen allowed UConn assists-leaders (12-each) Sherer, Kim Kryzk and Allison Angulo to help on goals. UMass is 0-4 this season when allowing multiple assists.

Minutewoman goalie Alesha Widdall had nine saves in the game, one-shy of tying her season-high.

The UMass defense held strong in the first half, weathering the 13 UConn shots and five penalty corners. The Minutewomen kept the ball out of the circle for the first seven minutes of the game but then the first wave of Husky shots came. Widdall weathered the attack for most of the first half until seven UConn shots off four penalty corners came her way and the Huskies kept the pressure going into the second half.

UMass allowed two corners in the first two minutes of the second half which proved to be costly, as UConn's first goal came in the 37th minute off the second of the two.

Ten minutes and four penalty corners later, the Huskies scored again on Loren's assist, and pressure from the Huskies never softened.

The loss to UConn puts the Minutewomen's record against ranked opponents this season at an even 3-3. Many pinned UMass as a weak underdog against then-No. 7 Iowa, but the Minutewomen pulled off a 4-3 upset in overtime, and if all of Sowry's players remained healthy this season, the outlook could have been different.

However, conference play is in sight, and last season, the Minutewomen swept all teams on its Atlantic 10 Conference slate.

"We're excited for the [start of] conference play," said Sowry. "We've had a very tough out-of-conference schedule, and it was always going to be pretty tough along the way but it has absolutely prepared us for the Atlantic 10 schedule. Even though we're coming off a tough loss, we've learned a lot along the way and we're excited to see what we can bring to the table."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Midfielder Kate Heineman brings the ball into the midfield in a game against Northeastern earlier this season. Heineman has one goal and two assists while having started 12 of UMass' 13 games this season.

Co-captain Shivi Zan finished second (80th overall) behind freshman Courtney Baldwin at the New England Championships on Saturday.

Women led by Baldwin, men by Pierce at New Englands

Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts women's cross country coach Julie LaFreniere warned her team about the fast course of Franklin Park in Boston, Mass., home of this year's New England Cross Country Championships.

The key to success in the race was simple – get off to a quick start and run hard.

Freshman Courtney Baldwin made sure to not take her coach's words for granted. Competing in the first race of her collegiate cross country career, the young freshman from Lowell, Mass., literally sprinted out of the gate, en route to a strong finish.

By the time the race finished on Saturday, Baldwin led UMass to a 14th place overall finish out of 49 schools, and finished 16th overall out of 322 individual runners, with a time of 18 minutes, 22 seconds. LaFreniere believed it was her new runner's drive that got her career off to a productive start.

"She competes with a lot of heart and is fearless," said LaFreniere. "She is going to have a very strong cross country career."

The Minutewomen coach hopes her team can follow Baldwin's lead and run with that same competitiveness. If Saturday is any indication, it appears that they will.

Co-captain Shiyi Zan finished with a time of 19:14 and junior Lauren Stocker crossed the finish line shortly after with a time of 19:16 to finish 80th and 83rd, respectively.

Junior Claire Petit and Gina Perno also made significant contributions, as they rounded out the team's top five runners.

But the story on Saturday was Baldwin, a newcomer who earned both Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week and Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week honors.

Not to be outdone, the men's team featured its own peak performer.

Senior Jonathan Pierce had a strong performance, leading UMass to a second-place finish in the New England Cross County Championships. Pierce was the first of three Minutemen to place in the top 15 in a race that featured 47 schools and 320 runners, as he finished at a time of 24:42.

One week after Pierce was named UMass Athlete of the Week, he was named the A-10 Performer of the Week.

The Minutemen had several runners perform well this weekend. Fellow senior Nicolai Naranjo finished seventh overall with a time of 22:49. Junior David Johnson ran a time of 25:00, which earned him 12th overall.

UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien was relatively pleased with his team's performance this past weekend.

Though his team fell short of the first-place finish they set out for, he believes that overall, they had a successful weekend, as the Minutemen incorporated new running strategies that may pay dividends in future races.

"We're at the mid-point of the season, so we want to work hard to prepare for the harder races coming up," said O'Brien.

Among them is the ISU Pre-Nationals in Terre-Haute, Ind., this Saturday, which is bound to feature at least 30 of the top teams in the country.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

Lack of running game dooms Minutemen against Delaware

FOOTBALL from page 8

Alexandre Cuko – the third-longest attempt in history – to cut the deficit to 17.

Devlin threw the last two of his four touchdowns in the third quarter – the second of which was a 27-yard pass to Duncan on the first play after a Havens interception – building a 37-6 lead.

Havens found some holes in the Blue Hens defense in the fourth quarter, as he connected with tight ends Andrew Krevis and Emil Igwenagu for touchdown passes. Havens finished the night 24-of-36 for 275 yards, and two touchdowns with one interception.

Scott Woodward came in late in the game, going 4-of-8 for 50 yards and a 20-yard touchdown pass to Aaron Fears, the first of Fears' career.

UMass lacked a running game the entire night, as Nelson ran 15 times for 33 yards, an average of 2.2 yards per carry, as the Minutemen failed to capitalize on turnovers as well.

In the second quarter, the Minutemen defense forced an interception and a fumble on consecutive Delaware drives, but turned neither into points.

After Jeromy Miles picked off Devlin, Havens threw three consecutive incompletions and Cuko attempted a 52-yard field goal that fell short.

On the Blue Hens' next drive, Michael Hanson sacked Devlin, jarring the ball loose where Eric Dickson recovered the ball at the Delaware 49-yard line. UMass drove 15 yards before having to punt the ball away.

"We had too many lapses offensively, defensively and then some special teams," Morris said. "We didn't capitalize on any fundamentals at all tonight."

Jeffrey R Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.

Defensive coordinator Keith Dudzinski talks to the defense in the first quarter of UMass' game against Delaware on Saturday. The Minutemen allowed the Blue Hens to convert five times in the red zone.

Sydnee Stoll leads UMass with four goals this season.

Two home losses put UM in A-10 slump

NAPOLI from page 8

"One of their forwards made a nice read on the ball," Napoli said. "It was a bad pass and it was unfortunate, but Cota didn't have a chance at saving that ball."

Although taking two losses at home, the Minutewomen created chances consistently throughout the weekend, something that has been plaguing them all season long. Finishing on chances is just as important, though, and UMass will stress that a lot in practice through the week.

"There's a different level of play in practice and in games," Napoli said. "We're going to really push our kids during drills so we can make it as game-like as we can."

The Minutewomen's perfect start to conference play quickly vanished as they suddenly find themselves 2-4-0 in the conference.

Napoli still believes in her team as much as ever, but there's not much time left for UMass to find consistency.

"This weekend was frustrating but we definitely have learned from it," Napoli said. "We have five games left and we can still reach our goal of making the A-10 tournament."

The Minutewomen look to break out at home this Saturday, when they host Rhode Island at 1 p.m. The Rams (4-8-1 overall, 2-4-0 A-10) are coming off a 2-1 loss to La Salle and like UMass, struggle when it comes to scoring goals.

Richter shines in HOTH singles

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts rowing team had its first test of the 2009 season this past Saturday in Derby, Conn., and according to UMass coach Jim Dietz, the women matched up well against their opponents. "I think overall it was a good race for us," said Dietz about the Head of the Housatonic Regatta.

"…it was tough for everyone because of the weather, but I think we came out alright."

The regatta opened with the women's singles and featured UMass rowers Julia Richter and Sam Smith. Richter placed third in the race, while Smith rowed to a sixth place finish because of buoy and interference penalties.

In the varsity four, UMass raced three boats, but could not finish in the top five. Yale finished first and fourth in the race, and the top Minutewomen boat came in sixth, with a time of 18:45.486.

The UMass rowers could not place in the top five of the varsity eight. They raced three boats and finished seventh, eight and tenth, with their best finishing time of 17:20.391.

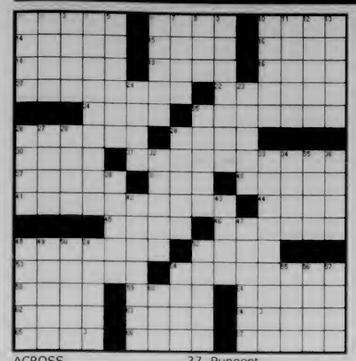
Although the Minutewomen did not place very high in the varsity four or eight boats, the team's performance still satisfied Dietz.

"Going into a race like that, it's not like you're gonna win," said Dietz. "You're competing against some of the best teams, so it's how you're gonna do against yourself."

UMass entered 18 boats in Saturday's contest. Dietz also said his team still has room for improvement.

"We're working generally on technique and also getting a flow in the boat," said Dietz. "Fitness comes throughout the year, so we're just getting some experience."

The Minutewomen captured first place in the junior varsity four. The UMass boat finished in first with a time of 20:17.096, placing them ahead of Fordham, Yale, the Coast Guard Academy and Iona, respectively. The UMass novice boat placed second. In contrast to most of the other varsity crew programs, Dietz encourages his rowers to get experience racing in the smaller boats. He believes that the practice they get in races consisting of smaller boats can help the team as a whole.



"We do what other schools don't," said Coach Dietz. "Unlike Yale, Williams and other schools, we allow a lot of small boat rowing for our girls to get experience."

Next weekend, UMass heads to Boston, Mass., to compete in the world-famous Head of the Charles Regatta. This race includes many of the most prestigious schools in the country, and gives the UMass team an idea of where they place against the nation's top competitors.

Neil Carroll can be reached at ncarroll@student.umass.edu.

COMICS

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. An unborn baby
6. Existed
10. Unwanted email
14. Warning
15. Take
16. Minute opening
17. Devilfish
18. Slave
19. Out of the wind
20. Completely
22. Not occupied
24. Crummy
25. Kodaks and Nikons
26. Inevitably
29. Despise
30. Teller of untruths
31. Marvelous
37. Pungent
39. Before
40. 1000 kilograms
41. Noteworthy
44. Naked
45. Boosts
46. Justification
48. Fate
52. Fluff from a dryer
53. Evaluation
54. Occult
58. Weightlifters pump this
59. Duo
61. French for "Red"
62. Whip
63. Doing nothing
64. Come to pass
65. Sort
66. Gestures of assent
67. S S S S

DOWN
1. Renown
2. Flair
3. Canvas dwelling
4. Nettle rash
5. A clear night sky
6. Puppy
7. Gentle
8. Hurry on foot
9. Raise
10. The Final Frontier
11. A type of bear
12. Sporting venue
13. Encounters
21. Where the sun rises
23. Catkin
25. Dromedary
26. Winged
27. Cooties
28. Not cool
29. Seasonings
32. Prepare
33. Contributions
34. Burden
35. Cancel
36. Witnessed
38. Flow off gradually
42. Bigwig
43. Goddess of discord (Greek mythology)
47. Main course
48. Float
49. Not late
50. Condescend
51. Bit of color
52. Harps
54. Not hot
55. Swear
56. Chills and fever
57. Bottom of the barrel
60. Bother

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Cheer up! Woody and Buzz wouldn't want you to be this pouty.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
The truth never hurts anyone, except when Jesse Eisenburg realizes he isn't Michael Cera.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Dick Cheney shouldn't haunt your dreams thaaat much...

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Discover the reason why long term smokers enjoy the sounds of electronica.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Eat at the Franklin Dining Commons. You are now haunted by that thing in "Paranormal Activity."

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't feel like a pansy. "Titanic" made Satan cry just as hard as you.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
There's only one thing you should be thinking about: "Wu-Tang."

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
No one should live their lives by "Diff'rent Strokes."

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
When the gloves come off, hopefully the pants don't.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Why can't Fox make good shows, like "So you think you can play Russian Roulette?"

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Video didn't kill the radio star, but he did steal his lunch money.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Every day is better when you name your writing utensil, "Boomstick."

Rolling Green
All Rents Include: heat, hot water, and electricity!

Move-in Special:
$99 security deposit.
NO application fees.
NO non-refundable move-in fee.

1 bedroom: $980*
2 bedroom: $1135*
2 bedroom townhouse: $1275*
3 bedroom townhouse: $1500*
4 bedroom townhouse: $1995*

Call for our Fall Specials!
Contact us:
(413) 253-3000
rollinggreenamherst@eqr.com

*Pricing fluctuates. All pricing listed is based on a 12 month lease. Shorter term leases are available. Please contact us for availability.

SUDOKU

					1			3
	5	1	3
6				9	7
								6
	2	6			5		1
	8		1		4
	6	9				3
7				8	9
					6	5		7

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

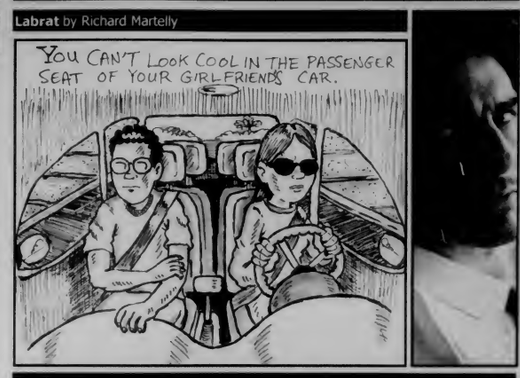
Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

Part-time Personal Care Attendant, about 10-12 hours/week. Flexible hours. Please call Patrick. (413)-275-7928

FOR RENT



Nice 5 bedroom house, music room, washer/dryer, on bus line, ample parking near UMass. $1,875+ per month. Skibiski Realtors (413)-586-1827

SPRING BREAK 2010

Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guaranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
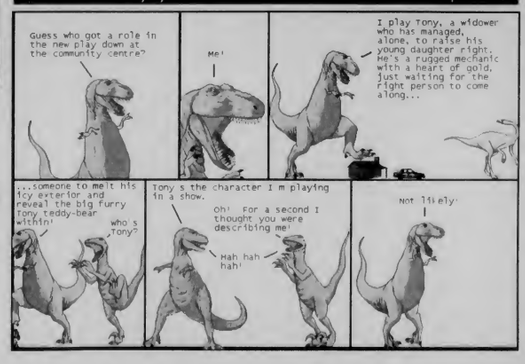
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

Labrat by Richard Martelly

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro travisdandro.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees mnftiu.cc



Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Wondermark by David Malki! wondermark.com

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North qwantz.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Minutemen talk things over during a first-quarter timeout in Saturday's game against Delaware. UMass failed to generate much offense and committed costly mistakes in the 43-27 loss to the Blue Hens.

Devlin, Delaware too much for Minutemen

Blue Hens quarterback throws for four scores against UMass

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts football team never returned from its bye week last week.

After rolling off three straight victories prior to its weekend off last Saturday, the No. 12 Minutemen could not capitalize on mistakes by Delaware and overcome an early deficit as they fell, 43-27, Saturday night at the University of Delaware stadium.

The Blue Hens (4-2, 2-1 Colonial Athletic Association) turned two early UMass (3-2, 1-1 CAA) fumbles — one by Tony Nelson and another by Kyle Havens — into touchdowns and opened up an early 20-0 lead in the first 11 minutes of the game, never looking back as they held at least a 16-point lead throughout the rest of the game.

"Well you're not going to win in the CAA when you do things like that," UMass coach Kevin Morris said after the game. "We certainly did that tonight and took ourselves right out of it."

Four plays into the first drive of the game, the Minutemen produced a drive that brought them to the Blue Hens 31-yard line, and looked poised to score as they easily marched down the field. But on the fifth play, as Havens dropped back to pass, a Delaware rusher blind-sided him. As Havens fell to the ground, the ball came loose and Blue Hen Paul Worrilow scooped up the ball at the Delaware 33-yard line.

Quarterback Pat Devlin capitalized on the fumble, driving the Blue Hens to the other end of the field and throwing a 15-yard strike to Mark Mackey. Anthony Monette blocked the ensuing extra point attempt, putting Delaware up 6-0.

UMass found little success on its next drive as it went three-and-out and the Blue Hens would score again on a 22-yard touchdown pass by Devlin.

"Well we recruited [Devlin], I know the kid and I knew he was going to be a really good player," Morris said. "He showed it on tape and it showed more of the same tonight."

Devlin gave UMass' defense trouble all night. The Penn State transfer finished the night 19-of-26 for 284 yards and four touchdowns with one interception. Devlin also showed off his legs throughout the game, rushing five times for 18 yards.

On the Minutemen's next drive, Nelson fumbled the ball when Delaware's Chris Morales jarred it loose by tackling him. The Blue Hens' Marcus Burley picked up the ball and returned it 42 yards to make the score 20-0 with 4:17 remaining in the first quarter.

UMass scored on its next drive on a career-long 51-yard field goal into the wind by

See FOOTBALL on page 6

UM splits pair of one-goal games against Dayton, Xavier

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The start to the Minutemen soccer team's (4-3-3, 1-1-0 A-10) conference schedule began this weekend, as the Flyers (7-3-1, 2-0) found a way to beat UMass for the second straight year Sunday afternoon in double overtime, 1-0.

After a highly-contested match characterized by strong defense and physical play by both teams, Alex Torda scored the golden goal in the 106th minute to give the Flyers their seventh straight win of the season, while keeping them undefeated in conference play.

Evan McCreary touched the ball to Torda, who chipped a shot that deflected off Minuteman goalkeeper Chris Piekos' hands, crossing the goal-line for his third tally of the season.

Piekos had a career-high eight saves in the match, while there were five yellow cards and 27 fouls issued among both teams.

UMass struggled in their third, however, registering just four shots on goal throughout regulation and overtime. Sophomore forward Chris Roswess contributed five shots in the game, but without Mark DeSantis, the Minutemen could not find the back of the net.

Along with Roswess, freshman forward Matt Johnson and Michael Doherty had opportunities to score, but came up empty-handed.

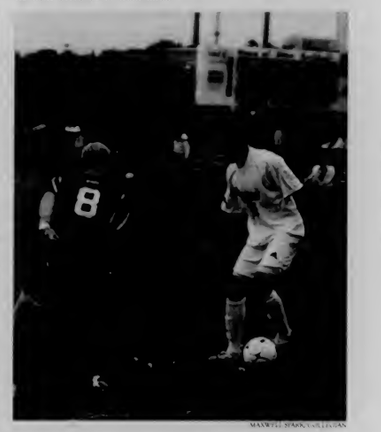
The Flyers frequently generated offensive opportunities throughout the game, especially in the first frame, outshooting UMass, 8-4. Piekos was busy with six saves in the first half.

DeSantis, the Minutemen's leading scorer, did not play in the game against the Flyers or in UMass's 1-0 win over Xavier on Friday.

The Minutemen shut out their fifth opponent of 2009 en route to their first A-10 victory of the season over the Musketeers (2-6-1, 1-1-0 A-10).

Sophomore defender Andrew Henshaw scored his second career goal, as the UMass defense again came to play and the offense put together some chances to capitalize against the Musketeers.

Fellow sophomore defender Mark Dangleis took one of six Minuteman corner kicks in the contest that found Henshaw's foot in the 35th minute to put UMass ahead.



Henshaw's score made him the sixth different goal-scorer for the Minutemen in 2009, making him ing just one goal. In Pieko's six starts as a Minuteman, he allowed just two goals, and is ranked first nationally with a .0943 save percentage.

In another physical match-up, four yellow cards were issued, including one player — Musketeers forward Brandon Butcher — being ejected in the 74th minute.

This weekend displayed the Minutemen's stellar defensive play, as UMass is first in the A-10 in goals allowed (6), goals against average (0.60) and is ranked second in shutouts (5).

The Minutemen continue conference play this coming weekend at Rudd Field, when UMass begins a five-game home stand, facing Temple on Friday at 3:30 p.m. and Saint Joseph's Sunday at 1 p.m. UMass is in a three-way tie with the Owls for fifth in the conference after the first weekend of A-10 play.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Senior forward Mark DeSantis eludes a Colgate defender in a game earlier this season. DeSantis leads UMass with three goals this season.

Minutewomen not generating offense

UMass scores three on weekend allowing three in each game

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

Once upon a time, the Massachusetts women's soccer team was 2-0 in the Atlantic 10 conference.

The Minutewomen opened their conference schedule with consecutive wins against Saint Joseph's and Duquesne in late September, but they have not won a game since. After recently dropping two 4-0 decisions against Saint Louis and Charlotte on the road, UMass women's soccer returned to Rudd Field last weekend where they hoped to regain their successful form.

Home field advantage proved to be not much of an advantage at all, however, the Minutewomen fell to both La Salle and Fordham. UMass women's soccer coach Angela Napoli believes the games were winnable, as well as questionably officiated.

"This weekend was very frustrating. We were in situations where we could've won both games," Napoli said. "We got two very, very bad breaks. I'm not one to disagree with refs, but Friday was bad."

On Friday against La Salle (8-5-2, 2-3-1 A-10), the refs whistled the clock dead for a foul against UMass. However, the refs never whistled the play up again, instead saying, "Let's go!" The Minutewomen waited for the whistle that never came.

"We were unorganized from there and a goal came from it," Napoli said.

All mistakes aside, the 3-1 loss did not represent the type of game UMass played. The Minutewomen outshot the Explorers, 17-12, and had ample scoring opportunities.

The frustration continued on Sunday, when UMass hosted Fordham (4-10-1 overall, 3-3-0 A-10) for the final game of the weekend set. The match required an overtime period to declare a winner, and the Minutewomen found themselves on the losing end again.

"This game was a story of two halves. First half we were not playing our style," Napoli said. "The second half we were more focused and we were playing with our feet. Overtime was really unfortunate for us, when Fordham capitalized on a bad turnover."

The turnover occurred in UMass' defensive zone, when a Minutewoman defender had her pass intercepted just outside of the goal. That enabled a one-on-one situation with goalkeeper Emily Cota, who never had a chance on the play.

Sydney Stoll and Therese Smith, two of UMass' top players, overcame an early 2-0 deficit by scoring two of their own goals late in regulation. However, one mistake in overtime sent the Minutewomen home defeated.

See NAPOLI on page 6

UMass goalkeeper Emily Cota gave up an average of nearly four goals per game in the Minutewomen's last four games.

Napoli still trusting freshman GK Cota

By Mike Mastrone
Collegian Staff

After appearing to be nearly unstoppable in her first eight appearances, Massachusetts freshman goalkeeper Emily Cota is currently in the first rough patch of her blossoming career.

The Green Lane, Penn., native has struggled as the Minutewomen's soccer team (3-8-2, 2-4-0 Atlantic 10) press on to the second half of their conference schedule. Prior to conference play, she allowed three goals in seven games. However, after shutting out St. Joseph's (6-5-3, 3-2-1) and Duquesne (3-9-0, 0-5-0) in 135 minutes of action, her struggles have greatly increased over the past two weeks in games against top offensive competition.

In a tough weekend at Saint Louis (6-6-2, 3-2-1) and Charlotte (11-2-1, 5-0-1), Cota allowed four goals in back-to-back games, with UMass being shut out in each. She then followed up those efforts over the weekend by allowing three goals in consecutive games against La Salle (8-5-2, 2-3-1) and Fordham (4-10-1, 3-3-0). Over that four-game span her save percentage plunged from an Atlantic 10-leading .909 to .773.

Following the loss to Charlotte, UMass coach Angela Napoli still had faith in Cota.

"I don't think the last couple of games were decided by the goalies," said Napoli. "La Salle is a tough team. She played fine and saved everything she could have. The goals more or less came from the run of the play and there were some let downs on the field and some good finishes by the opposing players."

Despite her recent struggles, Cota leads the A-10 with .58 saves, with La Salle junior Melissa Sanger and Xavier senior Kelly Farrell tied for second with .57. She is also 10th in save percentage, seventh in saves per game (4.83) and has one shutout.

Waiting in the wings is Lauren Luckey, who has already proven to be more than capable at holding things down on the defensive end.

After starting the first eight games in net for the Minutewomen, the senior has not seen any action since being taken out at halftime versus St. Joseph's. In those eight games, she allowed six goals in 405 minutes and compiled a record of 1-2-0. At one point, her .838 save percentage placed her in the top 10 in the conference, but she no longer has enough minutes to qualify.

She opened the season on a shaky note after allowing two goals to both Holy Cross and Boston University. She responded by allowing a total of two goals over her next six appearances, including a combined shutout with Cota against New Hampshire in a double-overtime tie on Sept. 13.

In her first season as a starter, Luckey played every minute of the 2008 season and finished top 10 in the conference in several categories including goals-against (sixth), save percentage (second), and saves per game (seventh). She also recorded five shutouts.

"It's not exactly who is in goal, but we need to make tweaks with other players," Napoli said. "This week in practice, we will look at the goalies again and reassess the situation."

Cota, Luckey and the Minutewomen are back in action on Saturday afternoon as they host Rhode Island (4-8-1, 2-4-0) in the final leg of a three-game home stand.

Mike Mastrone can be reached at mmastrone@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 52 LOW: 29 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 2009

Memorial planned for UM student

Tanning salon remembers employee killed over summer

UMass student Jane Elizabeth Burton was killed in an automobile accident in Tucson, Ariz. just before the start of the fall semester.

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts student Jane Elizabeth Burton passed away far from campus, in El Paso, Texas, just before the start of the fall 2009 semester. Her death was not a quiet one — automobile accidents never are — yet only those whose lives she touched felt the immediate impact. Because the University was still out of session on Sept. 1 when Burton passed, no notification was sent to the campus community at large.

Now her friends and coworkers have organized a fundraiser as a local memorial.

On Wednesday, Oct. 14, Golden Booty Tanning Resort in Amherst, where Jane had worked since August 2008, is holding "A Day In Remembrance of Jane Burton." From 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. the salon will offer half priced tanning, with a portion of the proceeds going to an account on the microlending website Kiva.org that has been set up in Jane's honor.

A TRAGIC ACCIDENT

Burton was returning from her mother's house in Tucson, Ariz. with her friend, UMass student Mary Rafferty, on Wednesday, Aug. 26. She had just purchased a new car and was insisting on driving the over 2,000 miles back to Amherst. Burton had had three accidents previously, but the most serious one happened with her in the passenger seat, and she had taken automobile classes upon the insistence of her mother, Anastasia Siavou-Holler, and her stepfather, Eric Holler.

"Eric made sure she knew how to use every tool that she would possibly need," Burton's sister, Valerie Moga said in an interview.

According to Moga, Rafferty and Burton had been on the road fewer than three hours when Jane's car, which she had purchased just a few weeks prior, began to drift off the road. Burton cut the wheel back a little too sharply, and the vehicle flipped several times, injuring the two and pinning Burton beneath the car.

Rafferty was treated for minor injuries in an Arizona hospital, but Burton had to be transported by medivac to the intensive care unit at University Medical Center in El Paso, Texas. She had sustained severe injuries to her eye socket, clavicle, left arm, spine and legs. Her family flew out to Texas 6 a.m. the next morning, though doctors told Jane's father, Tim Burton, that she wouldn't likely live longer than three hours.

Jane lived five more days.

"The only thing she had going for her was that she was young, and her body was strong. That was the only thing that kept her going," Moga said.

On Friday, Aug. 28, Jane was put into a chemically-induced coma to ease swelling in her brain. Moga said that Jane's body fought to stay alive, but her condition was deteriorating. By Sunday, Sept. 1, Jane's condition had not improved, and her parents made the decision to donate her organs.

"They decided that they wanted to do the organ donation because of Jane's wishes to help others. Jane was too young to have a living will. I'm 27 and I don't have one — so they had to make the decision according to what they thought she would

See BURTON on page 2

Grad student appointed to new green role

By Sam Hayes
Collegian Staff

Graduate student and Eco-Rep creator Josh Stoffel was recently appointed to the new position of Sustainability Coordinator for the University of Massachusetts.

The 23-year-old Franklin, MA native completed his undergraduate degree at UMass, and is now currently working on his master's degree with an individual concentration in sustainability.

In his new role as Sustainability Coordinator, Stoffel said he "hopes to increase the level of awareness and involvement on campus" for environmental protection.

In his position, he aims to help the University take on new projects to promote sustainability, as well as become a model for other universities and even some state governments.

Josh Stoffel was unanimously voted into his new job by the Student Government Association Environmental Committee, after Vice Chancellor of Finance Joyce Hatch agreed to fund the position.

As an undergraduate at UMass Stoffel began the Eco-Rep program, a peer-to-peer student facilitated environmental program.

Eco-Rep is formed by a network of student leaders including a complex hierarchy of peer managers, eco-reps and Stoffel. He said it was formed this way to have support at every level.

The purpose of Eco-Rep is to educate peers on the environment through monthly focuses. Stoffel said he created it to "reach out and push," but thinks it has greater potential and "could be more effective."

Stoffel is helping UMass draft a Climate Action Plan on how to reduce carbon dioxide on campus in the next five-15 years. He said it showed the University's "commitment to the environment."

Along with the Climate Action Plan, UMass is one of many schools part of the President's Climate Commitment, in which the school pledges climate neutrality — energy consumption through the burning of fossil fuels is balanced

See STOFFEL on page 2

Josh Stoffel was named UMass Sustainability Coordinator.

Cyclist injured on N. Pleasant

By Justin Saglio
Collegian Staff

A freshman University of Massachusetts student was hospitalized Tuesday morning after he struck the open door of a parked vehicle with his bicycle while traveling down North Pleasant St. near the Fine Arts Center.

John Colvin, 18, of North Scituate, Mass. was moving past traffic on his bicycle when a car door swung open, blocking the narrow lane designed for bicyclists. Colvin was brought to Cooley Dickinson hospital in a "conscious and alert" state, according to Deputy Police Chief Patrick Archibald. Cooley Dickinson Hospital was unable to comment on Colvin's injuries at printing time.

A passenger was attempting to exit the parked car when the accident occurred. It is unclear who is at fault, according to Archibald, and a UMPD investigation will follow to determine if the passenger of the vehicle will face charges.

"It is up to the people in the car to use caution," said Archibald, "and there should have been caution from the bicyclist."

The incident occurred while Colvin was traveling in the northbound lane of traffic outside the Fine Arts Center at approximately 10 a.m. in the morning. Colvin was the second cyclist to be struck near the Fine Arts Center on North Pleasant St. in the past year. Last fall, a 19-year-old female cyclist was seriously injured after being struck by an automobile while on the crosswalk leading from Bezanson Recital Hall towards Franklin Dining Commons. 25-year-old graduate student Li Cai was also struck by a motorist and hospitalized while crossing nearby Massachusetts Ave. in front of Isenberg School of Management last October.

Nick Bush contributed to this report. He can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

Justin Saglio can be reached at jsaglio@student.umass.edu.

A cyclist was injured after colliding with a car door Tuesday morning on North Pleasant Street near the Fine Arts Center.

UMass alumnus astronaut readys for her third trip into outer space

By Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano
Collegian Staff

As a young graduate student, Cady Coleman was working on her Ph.D. at the top-ranked Polymer Science department at the University of Massachusetts. She dreamed of one day becoming an astronaut. Since she left UMass in 1988, Coleman has flown two space missions and has spent the last four years training for her next mission, which is scheduled to depart in November of 2010. On Tuesday, Coleman returned to the University to speak to students and faculty about her experiences, and attempted to shed a little light on the mysterious "black hole" of space exploration.

Coleman recalled when she was first inspired to be an astronaut. As an undergraduate studying at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, she attended a lecture by Sally Ride, the first female American astronaut. "I remember thinking to myself, 'I really want that job.'" Coleman said. When she saw Ride speak, continued Coleman, she knew that it would indeed be possible for her to excel in what was, at the time, a male-dominated space industry.

Speaking to a crowd of about 100 people, including Chancellor Robert Holub, Coleman began her presentation by thanking the University for providing her "a way to learn" that has stuck with her throughout her professional career.

"UMass is a very special place for me," she said. "The methods of research and critical thinking that I learned here are put to use every day working for NASA."

Coleman traveled to space for the first time in 1995, when she spent 16 days conducting experiments on plant growth in a lab on the space shuttle. Many of the experiments set out to find out the possibility of one day creating a fertile living environment on Mars or the Moon, and produced enough data to give the average person a headache. Coleman described the mission as "a lot of fun," which to those of us stuck here on Earth may seem like an understatement.

"I was in heaven on that first trip," said Coleman. "I didn't want to come back."

Coleman got her chance again in 1999, when she and a crew of four others teamed up to launch the then-new NASA x-ray telescope Chandra, which recently celebrated the anniversary of its 10th year in orbit. The telescope, which was only expected to last five years, is still one of the primary contributors of aerial x-ray photographs. Coleman appeared to

See BLAST OFF on page 3

NASA astronaut and UMass alumnus Cady Coleman spoke on campus Tuesday, describing the journey that took her from Amherst into the Earth's orbit.

ARTS & LIVING

Jazz duo featured at UMass

University of Massachusetts Professor Emeritus Yusef Lateef teams up with fellow jazz artist Adam Rudolph this Thursday in Bowker Auditorium.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass hosts Rhode Island

With Magdalena Ploch back this year, the Minutewomen hope to have a different result against a Rams team that beat them 4-3 last spring.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Writer Lauren Strohmeier explains how to beware the 'frenemies' in your life.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Correspondents Nayelhelle Lucas, Maia McDermott and Rosie Wilmes give a look behind UMass' new social network from our media partners at UTC TV 19.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 26

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shanna Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Annie Keithline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallick
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COMICS Andrew Witts
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Hannah Nelson
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alissa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1995. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

UMass Vice Chancellor Joyce Hatch, seen here accepting an award for sustainability in 2006, oversaw the creation of the new position.

Grad student named to UM Sustainability Coordinator position by green energy initiatives, tree planting and the purchasing of carbon credits. Stoffel called this a "huge task, even for Harvard," whose budget far surpasses UMass'. He joked that they could buy their way to neutrality.

STOFFEL from page 1

Stoffel plans to combat what he sees as a campus flaw – poor communication – with the new Green Portal, an environmental internet hub that could be found at umass.edu/green.

Another high tech plan moving into action is the energy dashboard.

Energy dashboards are flat screen televisions that are planned to be set-up in the lobbies of four dormitories on campus. The screens will have an easily readable meter of the water, steam and electricity being used in that dorm.

The plan is to use the meters to inform the students and reduce consumption. The meters are planned to be set up in Van Meter, Leech, Moore and Wheeler starting next semester and will pit the dorms against each other in contest to see who can use the least energy per student.

Stoffel first became interested in the environment when he was a child. He said he remembers his father and grandfather always bringing him outside and exposing him to the environment, endowing him with "a strong appreciation for nature."

His approach towards conservation is to start out small. This could mean walking rather than driving, as Stoffel walks one mile every morning on his way to work.

He joked it was getting harder and harder to make himself walk past his car every morning as it got colder out.

Stoffel wants to get the faculty involved as well as the students. He said, "sustainability, although it is an environmental thing, it is a human thing. What we have now has to last forever."

Next semester Josh Stoffel hopes to involve students more directly with his new position. He plans to offer internships for either cash or university credit to students.

He said he "needs help, it too much to do alone." Although he is young he admits that younger students are more cutting-edge, and he wants that style of innovation with his project.

Sam Hayes can be reached at sdhayes@student.umass.edu.

Memorial planned for UMass student

BURTON from page 1

have wanted."

Moga said Jane's donation had saved three other lives.

HONORING A FRIEND AND COWORKER

September was a particularly tragic month on the UMass campus.

On September 10, visiting French student Peter Boutarel was struck and killed by an Amtrak train. Just two days later, UMass student Blake Goodman was struck and killed in a hit and run while riding his bicycle in North Amherst. E-mails from Dean of Students Jo-Anne T. Vanin and stories in The Daily Collegian informed the community of the two tragic losses.

But because Jane passed just over a week before classes began, on Sept. 8 – and because it happened so far from Amherst – the campus was not immediately notified about Jane's passing.

"It is not customary for the University to send all campus emails when students pass away during the summer, and this is why no notification about Jane's passing was sent out," Vanin said Tuesday.

Many of Jane's friends found out from her family and one another on Facebook. Micro-memorials sprung up on her Facebook page – to which she had just recently added a photo of her beaming in front of her new car, a used Nissan – by the dozens.

Her friend Alexa Booth, a UMass junior and good friend of Jane's, said she found out from text messages from her friends, and a note on another friend's Facebook.

"It was very strange for me," Booth said. "We've already had three deaths this semester, but people only knew about two."

On Oct. 3, a memorial service was held at St. Paul's Episcopal Church in Dedham, where Tim Burton lives with his wife Hilary. On the back of memorial program was a link to the Kiva.org account, kiva.org/team/people_who_love_jane.

"My wife had recently discovered Kiva and introduced Jane to it, and she took a real interest in it," Tim Burton said. "It's a really unique way to help individuals help themselves."

Kiva is a microlending site that connects people with entrepreneurs around the world and allows them to loan as much or as little as they can. Tim Burton calls it "a type of philanthropy with a considerable amount of dignity."

In the about section of the account page, they wrote: "People who want to honor Jane by helping to improve the lives of others..." As of Oct. 13, it had generated $350.

After the memorial service in Dedham, Jane's friends and coworkers from Amherst decided they needed to do something more local to honor her memory.

"Jane became not only an employee but a very good friend to our employees, my daughters and myself," said Kim Gomes, who co-owns Golden Booty Tanning Resort with her daughter Eden Clark. "She was involved with things outside of the salon on a personal level with my family, so we thought we would try to do what we could."

Moga, who described her sister as her "best friend," said Jane spoke often of her friends at the salon.

"She told me that [Kim] would introduce Jane to people as her Greek daughter," she said.

If the memorial fundraiser is a success, Gomes said she'd like to make it a more permanent fixture.

"This is something we might try to do every year, ongoing, to raise macroloans for this organization," she said.

REMEMBERING A SISTER AND DAUGHTER

When asked to reflect on the life of Jane Elizabeth Burton, her friends, family and coworkers couldn't immediately find the right terms. The words "Like, amazing" abounded. Eventually they found their footing.

"She was just smiling always, being social and wanting others to be happy," her friend Booth said.

Tim Burton recalled a woman who was, from childhood, "very kind, very perceptive."

"From being a very small child, she was the sort to be giving gentle and very sound advice to her mother and her sister," he said, pausing, then adding "– and occasional observations to me."

Moga reinforced her father's impression.

"She possessed a certain level of wisdom that made it easy to talk to her," she said. "When she was 10 years old, I remember her having given me the best advice I have yet to receive."

Moga recalled a recent Christmas when Jane couldn't think of what to get her. She told Jane she needed bookends.

"Instead of one set of bookends she sent me two sets," Moga said.

"A Day In Remembrance of Jane Burton" will be held at Golden Booty Tanning Resort in New Market Center, 6 University Dr., Amherst, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. The Kiva.org page in Burton's memory can be found at http://kiva.org/team/people_who_love_jane.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com.

Take me down to Paradise City...

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The Paradise City Art Festival at the Three County Fairgrounds in Northampton last weekend offered onlookers an unusual assortment of artworks, including this metal sculpture.

Welcome back!

You don't need to be an economics major to know Stop & Shop offers great values that fit perfectly into a student's budget!

- Prepared foods
- Natural and organic foods
- School supplies
- Personal care needs
- Redbox™ DVD rentals
- Plus the convenience of a full-service pharmacy

Save even more with this special bonus coupon!

Exclusive bonus coupon
Valid Wednesday 9/16 - Saturday 11/28
Stop&Shop
$5 OFF a purchase of $20 or more.
Coupon must be presented at time of purchase. Limit one coupon per customer per order. Offer excludes alcoholic beverages, tobacco or combined purchases of tobacco and alcoholic beverages, prescriptions, gift products, gift cards, milk, lottery tickets, gasoline, pharmacy items, postage stamps, prepaid telephone calling cards, Western Union® money orders, Metro passes and any other purchases prohibited by law. Coupon not redeemable at Peapod® by Stop & Shop.
2 10000 01438 18

TOUCH FIRE
CONTEMPORARY JAPANESE CERAMICS BY WOMEN ARTISTS
OCTOBER 9, 2009 – FEBRUARY 28, 2010
OPENING FESTIVITIES: OCTOBER 15, 4-8 PM
Tsujimura Conversation
Tedrick Kennedy, Essayist and Shigeaki Amino, Ceramic Artist
Weinstein Auditorium, Smith College
7 PM Reception, Museum Atrium
Thursday, October 22
2 PM Public Gallery Talk: Tsujimura Kazuko
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART
Advocate museums.us

UMass alumnus set for space once again

BLAST OFF from page 1

be particularly proud of this accomplishment, and wants to make sure Chandra gets the credit it deserves.

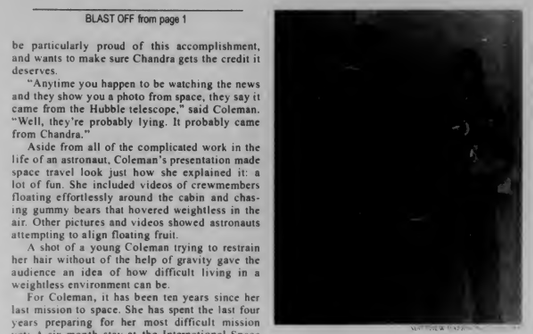
"Anytime you happen to be watching the news and they show you a photo from space, they say it came from the Hubble telescope," said Coleman. "Well, they're probably lying. It probably came from Chandra."

Aside from all of the complicated work in the life of an astronaut, Coleman's presentation made space travel look just how she explained it: a lot of fun. She included videos of crewmembers floating effortlessly around the cabin and chasing gummy bears that hovered weightless in the air. Other pictures and videos showed astronauts attempting to align floating fruit.

A shot of a young Coleman trying to restrain her hair without of the help of gravity gave the audience an idea of how difficult living in a weightless environment can be.

For Coleman, it has been ten years since her last mission to space. She has spent the last four years preparing for her most difficult mission yet: A six-month stay at the International Space Station, set to depart in November of 2010.

The space station is truly a global project, with significant parts of the assembly contributed by 16 different countries.



Coleman noted that the space race of the last century has died down, replaced with global cooperation towards a better understanding of space travel and the universe.

Coleman has completed training exercises at space complexes in Japan, Russia, and parts of Europe. While she enjoys the travel, she says the hardest part is being apart from her husband and son, who live nearby in Shelburne, Massachusetts.

"I miss my family when I'm away for training, but we find ways to stay in touch," she said.

She thanks Skype and video chat for helping her stay connected to her family when she is away. After years of rigorous training, however, Coleman is quite ready to embark on the longest and most challenging mission of her career.

If all goes according to plan, Coleman and five other international astronauts will take off from the Russian Space Station in Kazakhstan just over one year from now, and by around next Thanksgiving she will find herself in space for the third time.

Astronaut Cady Coleman, a UMass alumnus, here receives a bobblehead from Chancellor Robert Holub.

Following a round of applause after her presentation, Chancellor Holub got up from his seat in the front row of the auditorium and personally congratulated Coleman for being "an inspiration to the University." Holub went on to present her with a UMass hat and a Minutemen bobble-head doll.

"I was hoping you could take this with you on your mission," said Holub. "I'd like to see how the head would bobble in a weightless environment."

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at steinbern@student.umass.edu.

In her speech on campus Tuesday afternoon, Coleman detailed her past two missions into orbit, and talked about the focus of her upcoming trip to the International Space Station.

Raging anticipation for Regina

Regina Spektor perform on Sunday

A Day In Remembrance of Jane Burton

OCTOBER 14, 2009
ALL DAY 1/2 price Tanning
(includes surcharges!!)
FREE tingle lotion samples
(Jane's Favorite)
Join us in remembering & honoring a beloved friend & employee
A portion of sales from the day will be donated in the form of a macro-loan to help others in need!
Join Jane's family & friends to help others www.kiva.org/team/people_who_love_jane
Golden Booty Tanning Resort

...ch fruit from our own UMass orchard
...TLE SEVERAL APPLE VARIETIES
OVER 20 APPLE RECIPES
FRESH APPLE CIDER DAILY
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Democracy in need

Ideally, many aspects of our society would keep up with the rapid change that it is undergoing. Yet one of the pillars of our republic – the laws that define our relationships with our government and one another – do not seem to keep up with our ever-shifting reality.

Ben Rudnick

Many old laws are no longer enforced and remain on the books merely as humorous examples of the ideologies and circumstances of bygone days. In Massachusetts, for example, it is still technically illegal to be a witch or Quaker, or to use bullets as currency.

Other old laws have changed with the times, such as the Bay State's ban on tattoo parlors that was lifted in 2001, or the "decriminalization" of small quantities of marijuana that was approved by Massachusetts voters in 2008.

Meanwhile, another group of antiquated statutes, generally known as "Blue Laws," were intended to embed religious morality in our legal code.

Limiting when and where alcohol can be sold, or what days it is legal for businesses to be open. These have only recently begun to be overturned in Massachusetts, and are still in full force in many areas of the country.

In addition, there are the controversial laws that seem to be the constant focus of conflict, both rhetorical and otherwise.

There are many of these, and it is absolutely proper that we engage in a debate about whether they continue to serve a vital interest or should be changed to reflect the supposed new standards of society. For instance, President Obama recently vowed to change the "don't ask, don't tell" policy of the United States military, which will almost certainly require Congress to act to change the law banning gays and lesbians from serving in the Armed Forces.

Despite all this, the "old law" that I believe must be most urgently called into question is the 1929 statute freezing the size of the House of Representatives at only 435 members. My opinion on this issue has changed recently, as it was only about a year ago that I took fellow Collegian Columnist Eli Gottlieb to task for suggesting that Congress might not be large enough to effectively represent the interests of the American people.

Despite all this, the "old law" that I believe must be most urgently called into question is the 1929 statute freezing the size of the House of Representatives at only 435 members.

Don't get me wrong, there is little else in Eli's Oct. 21, 2008 column, entitled "Sorry Mr. Jefferson, America is Changing," that I agree with, but I have come to see the fundamental wisdom of one of his main arguments. Congress, as it is currently constituted, does not truly represent the will of the people.

Article I of the Constitution specifies the structure of the House of Representatives.

There is no limit to the number of people in any given congressional district, and the only requirement is that there be a minimum of at least one Representative for each 30,000 people. However, the Framers' intent in having a legislative body that grew as the population did was to ensure the proportional representation of the people as a balance against the federal states' equalized power in the Senate.

In his Oct. 7 column, "We Need a Bigger House," Jonah Goldberg, editor-at-large of the National Review, quoted from James Madison's Federalist Paper #55 that too small a House would be an "unsafe depository of the public interests" and that "districts would be too large and diverse for any politician to possess a proper knowledge of the local circumstances." He also noted that halting the natural growth of the House in 1929 was "driven in part by a desire to keep immigrants underrepresented."

The non-partisan organization Thirty-thousand.org remarks that one of the original 12 amendments in the Bill of Rights was intended to limit congressional districts to no more than 50,000 to 60,000 people.

Had it been ratified, the House of Representatives would today have more than 5,000 members.

Their website goes into great detail about the in-and-outs of Congressional apportionment, and notes that the average number of people represented by each member of the House is almost 700,000.

Thirty-thousand.org aptly observes that these "super-sized districts" force representatives to spend a huge portion of their time running for reelection, rather than serving the needs of their constituents.

In addition, the cost of being elected in a district of 50,000 would be far less than it is in the huge districts of today. This would reduce the corruptive influence of money in our political system.

To my mind, another benefit of lower election costs would be the influx of representatives from outside the upper class, particularly those who would win their seats via the efforts of real grass-roots organizations.

The House would become a body of citizen legislators as the Framers intended it to be. Finally, as Goldberg suggests, a bigger House would lessen the power of the two major parties, as they would be hard-pressed to prevent the election of candidates representing myriad smaller groups.

Last October, when I wrote my letter of response to Eli's column, I contended that term limits would be the best way to make the House more representative of the people, but I see now that I was wrong. The best way for "we the people" to get better representation in the House of Representatives is to have more of us in it. Does anyone really think that their interests are as well represented by someone who speaks for 700,000 as one who speaks for 50,000?

Ben Rudnick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at brudnick@student.umass.edu

Look out for the 'frenemy'

Please be forewarned: this column doesn't address an issue of great significance, such as the failing economy or the persistent presence of swine flu. Rather, it deals with a more mundane, trivial, yet irritating part of your life.

Lauren Strohmeier

I'm talking about that friend who's also your enemy, otherwise known as the "frenemy." Judging from the wealth of self-help websites dedicated to the topic, it seems as though the frenemy is a universal annoyance. Heck, you may even be one yourself. If that is the case, then reading this column may help you to self-diagnose. After all, recognizing that you have a problem is the first step in finding a solution.

If you're wondering if your friend is a foe, then read on. The friend 'n enemy is usually difficult to identify at first. They mask their true selves under a façade of feigned friendliness and camaraderie.

So don't feel foolish for falling into their trap; they often don't reveal their true colors until after you've fallen into their snare of deceit. As your friendship with the frenemy evolves, the enemy part of the equation begins to reveal itself gradually but surely. Usually, it starts out with a snide remark or two. However, the frenemy cunningly makes sure to buffer the bluntness of the remark by casually saying, "just kidding."

You, uncertain of how to respond, decide to let the remark slide, giving your friend the benefit of the doubt. However, a nagging suspicion begins to eat away at your faith in the legitimacy of the friendship.

Here's another red flag that your friendship may be a fraud: Frenemies are jealous types, and, to them, life is one long competition.

Don't be surprised when your friend seems less than enthusiastic about any good fortune that comes your way. They may respond by saying something derisive about your success, acting indifferent altogether, or even trying to trump your word of success with something of their own. These are all tell-tale signs of a person green with envy. In the mind of the frenemy, friendship is all about checks and balances. Unbeknownst to you, your friend is keeping score, feeling threatened when he feels as though you've checkmated. You're basically in a friendship that is governed by a ranking-system.

To give you a more detailed picture, let me give you another way to conceptualize the frenemy. This type of friend is what I like to call, a "friendship con-artist," or an "emotional leech."

Okay, so I've provided you with the diagnostic criteria for identifying the frenemy. To give you a more detailed picture, let me give you another way to conceptualize the frenemy. This type of friend is what I like to call, a "friendship con-artist," or an "emotional leech."

They extort what they can from their friendship with you in order to acquire some psychological gain. They use their friendship with you as currency to fill some emotional abyss. Now, let me ask one question: Do you wish to be the victim of such insecurity?

I personally have had a couple of dealings with frenemies, like I'm sure most of you have. As I became closer to them, I began to notice their peculiar and maladjusted ways of relating to other people. Their emotional fragility aroused a certain clinical curiosity in me, and I began to feel sympathy for them. However, it wasn't my place to help them through their insecurities, so I ended my friendships with those people. Now, I consciously make an effort to surround myself with people who are truly confident and secure with themselves. Particularly, I tend to gravitate towards those people who are of the down-to-earth, take-me-or-leave-me mold. No false pretenses, no putting on airs, no games. Admit it – sincerity and confidence are sexy traits in a friend.

Now, please don't misunderstand me. I'm not suggesting that you dispose of all your fraudulent friendships, especially if most of your social repertoire consists of frenemies. Your friendship with the frenemy may have redeeming qualities, which make it worth holding on to.

I would then suggest trying a more empathetic approach. Try talking to them about their off-putting behavior by letting them know that it bothers you. Give them the sense that you want to help them understand the root of their behavior. However, since this obviously is a sensitive issue, you may want to exercise a bit of subtlety and empathy when broaching the topic. Being downright accusatory will put them on the defensive, which can be an uncomfortable situation for anybody.

Don't get discouraged if your well-intentioned honesty is met with hostility or denial.

Change takes time and a graduated increase in awareness and recognition. By being honest with your frenemy, you have implanted that little seed of doubt in their mind about the health of their friendships. That seed of doubt will, in turn, sprout a shoot of awareness. Hopefully, the frenemy will attempt to alleviate some of the discomfort caused by this self-knowledge by changing their behavior. Trust me: you'll be doing your friend a service.

Lauren Strohmeier is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lstrohme@student.umass.edu.

Islam; a discussion of prayer and rights

Subhan Tariq

The last time I wrote a column I decided to change the way that I wrote.

I will write more substantive, informative pieces where you, the reader would actually be able to learn something. I decided to dedicate my columns for the rest of the semester to addressing misconceptions about Islam and give a brief overview of the religion.

I began by talking about the first pillar of Islam, faith – what it was and what it translated to in English. I also debunked a few misconceptions about what the faith truly stands for. After my column, a few people who had questions had the courage to email me with them, for this I was very happy. That meant people were reading and had more questions.

I encourage everyone who is reading this to ask questions if you have them.

A number of the questions following my column regarded the treatment of women and the use of violence in Islam. As a result I've decided to address these concerns.

Preemptive use of violence is not allowed in Islam. Islam only allows for defensive wars, but just as with other religions, people hijack religions and do whatever they want.

It is important for people to look into what Islam is really about rather than focusing on what Fox News or any other news agency is saying.

Just like with Christian and Jewish extremists, Muslim extremists have used religion to justify whatever they want to do. Islam does not allow the killing or use of violence against innocent people. In Surah (chapter) Ma'idah (the table spread with food) Allah says, "and if any one saved a life, it would be as if he saved the life of all mankind."

There is an incredible amount of emphasis on the spreading of peace and the prevention of war or harm in Islam. But just like with other religions' causes, people take things to the extreme and misquote and misinterpret to push their own political agenda. It is important to note that their agenda in no way reflects the agenda of 1.5 billion Muslims in the world.

The other main misconception was about violence against women, mainly about female genital mutilation. Let me begin again by saying this is not in the religion. Islam does not allow for violence against any person especially women and doesn't allow mutilation.

People have made culture into religion in many places, so they portray their cultural actions as being part of the religion when it clearly isn't. People at times try to justify ridiculous things by using the name of religion, when they know nothing about the religion, which they claim to represent.

During my last column I went over the first pillar of Islam – faith. This time I'll do the second – prayer. There are five prayers per day for Muslims: fajr (dawn), zuhr (noon), asr (afternoon), maghrib (sunset), isha (night).

Muslims pray towards Mecca and pray to Allah. In Muslim tradition, there are differences in each prayer but each has its reasons.

It is important for people to look into what Islam is really about rather than focusing on what Fox News or any other news agency is saying. It is important to look for the truth behind rumors.

I encourage everyone to ask questions of me or of the Muslim Students Association on campus to clear up other misconceptions or questions you may have.

Through learning and fixing misconceptions, we have the ability to spread the truth and truly get to know other people.

Subhan Tariq is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at starig@student.umass.edu.

Why you should be absurdily ambitious

A couple weeks ago, I read an article on Reuters about a man named Dalton Chisholm. Aside from his fairly awesome namesake, he doesn't really have much of a reason to be a newsworthy figure, except for one particular datum: Chisholm is suing Bank of America for $1,784 billion trillion, or, in more compressed form, $1.784 septillion.

Dave Coffey

For those of you like me who didn't know (I'm no rocket scientist, but I had never even heard of that word before, mathematically or otherwise), it's a one with 24 zeros behind it. Yeah, let's take this all in for a second. This guy is suing Bank of America for a number that probably takes longer to write down than it does to produce one of the "Saw" sequels. For comparison sake, the article also says that if Bank of America were to consider paying this amount out, it would have to pay its entire worth of $196 billion about 9.1 trillion times over.

I don't know about you, but regarding this suit, here's the first word that comes to mind: ambitious. And by ambitious, I mean that's the first word that pops into my head when I wonder, "What in the name of Ringo Starr is this guy driving at?"

The actual complaint that Chisholm is suing on the grounds of, according to another article on DailyFinance.com, is that, "…Bank of America would not deposit some of his checks due to problems with their routing numbers," which made him "unhappy."

I can maybe see this causing some "unhappiness" in one's life. I have never, however, been unhappy enough to prompt a civil suit in which the damages requested are most likely sufficient to buy Jesus with a two-year warranty.

I might have understood if he claimed the minor checking account mix-up resulted in psychosis, because that's what this is. This is pretty much his logic: you guys didn't deposit my checks correctly based on a clerical error, so, counting the bills I wasn't able to pay, the necessities I was unable to buy, etc., coupled with mental anguish, let's see… by my math, that adds up to more money than Stephen Hawking's and Chuck Norris' combined efforts could count to. Check, please. I'll take the first $100 billion in cash, and you can give me the rest in shell companies off the Southeast coast of China and a lifetime supply of green-and-blue-only Jolly Ranchers.

But as I was thinking more about this insanely ambitious lawsuit, another a-word came to mind. If I may pull your mind out of the gutter, the a-word I was thinking of was "absurd." No one can doubt that this particular effort to collect more than $1 septillion dollars is obviously ambitious. But what if a secondary, if not similarly imperative factor of this lawsuit is indeed absurdity? And if so, is it absurdly ambitious, or ambitiously absurd?

I highly recommend following Chisholm's lead on this one. Everyone likes some good, cheap fun, and everyone likes to get his or her own 15 minutes of fame.

When I thought about it long enough, I eventually realized this story of a ridiculous lawsuit was a belated reaction to the general social atmosphere created by the havoc that was wreaked upon the economy. In one fell swoop, this guy was able to poke some absurd fun at the aspect of the economy, get his name in the news and probably kill some time one boring weekend pursuing the lawsuit, time which he could have passed by doing something expensive like going to see a psychiatrist. But waging the world's most ambitiously absurd lawsuit? Priceless. And for anyone who's going to whine, "But the court costs and what not, boo-hoo-boo," you need to take a minute and unthink.

I highly recommend following Chisholm's lead on this one. Everyone likes some good, cheap fun and everyone likes to get his or her own 15 minutes of fame. But don't just copy Chisholm's idea of world's craziest lawsuit. Make up your own fun.

For example, claim that you watch the hit medical drama "House" so religiously that you inherently deserve a tax break on your property, which is to be referred to officially as the "First Orthodox Church of Hugh Laurie."

Or, buy the album "Dark Side Of The Moon" by Pink Floyd, and shortly thereafter sue the tight, leather pants off Roger Waters for the costs of a hallucinogenic drug habit and one copy of "The Wizard of Oz" on DVD. Or, if you're feeling particularly absurdly ambitiously absurd, while filling out your annual income taxes, fill in your occupation as "Love Machine", and subsequently write off your annual cost for prophylactics and/or birth control methods.

The bottom line is, we have to try our hardest to push the envelope on ambitious absurdity – or whatever phrase I made up a few paragraphs ago – to see that the absurdity is heard by the people. Because if we don't, our headlines will merely be filled with real news, and who here wants that? Nobody, that's who.

Hearing about some boring G20 summit that Obama and other world leaders attended in order to address the growing issue of the international wealth gap and the severe situations in third world countries across the world is just that: boring. And frankly, it's not as interesting as hearing the outlandish "septillion" demands of that what's-his-face guy that I mentioned before.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

DAYS SINCE THE NEW RECREATION CENTER WAS SCHEDULED TO OPEN: 16

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Modern Jazz Duo Comes to Bowker

COURTESY MYSTIC ECOM

In addition to being a highly influential jazz and world musician, Yusef Lateef is also a Professor Emeritus at the University of Massachusetts, where he earned his doctorate degree in 1975.

By Christiana McDougal
Collegian Correspondent

Yusef Lateef and Adam Rudolph, two of the most prominent jazz musicians still performing and composing music, will be playing at Bowker Auditorium in Stockbridge Hall on Thursday, October 15th. Both musicians have a long legacy of playing an infusion of jazz and world music and have been performing together and transcending musical barriers to demonstrate the empowering spirit of their music.

The duo, despite the 30-year difference in their age, has been playing together since 1988, releasing numerous albums. Lateef has played alongside jazz giants such as Dizzy Gillespie, Charles Mingus and Cannonball Adderly. He found his way into his own musical niche by deviating from the jazz norm and combining jazz techniques with Middle Eastern and Asian reed instruments. Rudolph has also played with notable musicians including Cuban jazz pianist Omar Sosa, jazz trumpeter Don Cherry and jazz great Herbie Hancock.

Lateef plays tenor saxophone, shehnai, piano, oboe, shofar, arghul, koto and various forms of the flute. He is a Grammy Award winning composer, author, educator and professor. He has taught at the University of Massachusetts, Smith, Hampshire and Amherst College and is currently a Professor Emeritus at UMass. His teaching emphasizes the methodology behind the workings of auto-physiopsychic music, which is deriving music through one's spiritual, emotional and physical being. He earned his doctorate in education from UMass Amherst in 1975, and in 2007 was named the University's Artist of the Year.

Aside from playing and teaching, Lateef has composed pieces for various symphonies, chamber orchestras, ensembles, pianists and vocalists. He has also been given the title of American Jazz Master for 2010 by the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) due to his musical contributions. The NEA stated that Lateef has been "a major force on the international musical scene for more than six decades, and was among the first to incorporate world music into traditional jazz through his mastery of Middle Eastern and Asian reed instruments."

Playing alongside Lateef, Rudolph is a percussionist who the New York Times has referred to as "a pioneer in world music." He focuses his performances on hand drums, djembe, bendir, talking drum and the didgeridoo. Having graduated from Oberlin College with a self-designed degree in Ethnomusicology, he has also been drawn to non-Western music theory, fitting harmoniously with Lateef's musical interests and aspirations.

After traveling to Ghana in 1977, Rudolph returned to Chicago a year later with musician and composer Foday Musa Suso. The two collaborated and created a fusion of jazz, R&B and traditional African music. Continuing his legacy, Rudolph currently plays with his own group, Moving Pictures.

Rudolph has referred to Lateef as his "most important mentor since 1988." The fact that these two musicians, with seemingly different backgrounds, are able to collaborate proves their strong connection – an affinity for jazz infused with world music and traditional non-Western instruments. The chemistry between the two will surely be undeniable as they perform.

The concert will be held on Thursday, October 15 in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Tickets for the general public are $10 and $5 dollars for students. Tickets can be purchased at the Fine Arts Center Box Office or online on the Fine Arts Center website.

Christiana McDougal can be reached at cmcdougal@student.umass.edu.

Coen brothers get 'Serious' to address latest movie release

By Colin Covert
Star Tribune (Minneapolis)

MINNEAPOLIS — Since their debut with "Blood Simple" in 1984, Oscar winners Joel and Ethan Coen have created an innovative, iconoclastic, idiosyncratic body of work that reflects their unique sensibilities. They have also been filmland's main interpreters of Minnesota's culture, ethnicity and behavioral ties to the outside world.

Returning to their home state for the regional premiere of "A Serious Man" they discussed their careers, their image and the importance of their regional roots.

Q: You guys are at the top of your game right now. What's the best thing about this job you have?

Ethan: One thing that's really good is the travel for every movie. We've revisited a couple of places, Minnesota being one of them, but going around to different places to shoot a movie is interesting. It's one of the things that keeps us stimulated. The gypsy thing, there are bad things about it, but it's part of what keeps us stimulated, as well.

Q: What do you think is the most annoying misapprehension people have about you?

Joel: There are things that have dogged us for 25 years and you think that. …

Ethan: The film geek thing.

Joel: Everything we do was copying other movies, but the movies we supposedly were influenced by or were copying were things we'd never seen. The reviewer had, but we didn't.

Ethan: Yeah, that got repeated from reviewer to reviewer but then it faded away. We don't get that much anymore.

Joel: The misanthropic, "you hate your characters" thing has always been a little bit bizarre. And then there are other things that dog you in interview situations. You know, "Do you guys fight a lot?" and that kind of stuff. You kind of go, 'It seems to me we've been answering that for at least two decades. The answer must be somewhere that these people can find it!'

Q: How do you think coming from Minnesota is connected with your identity?

Ethan: We're not self-analytical or self-reflective people, but yeah, it's totally part of our identity. Part of this movie is not about us, per se, as individuals but about this business that seems a little strange to us, the combination of being Jewish and Midwestern. And specifically Minnesotan. That's a little of what this movie is about. So it's big and important; it is our identity.

Joel: Right. It's there, but it's a little bit hard to analyze. It's just like an actor's body and their voice are their instruments, that's your identity, that's what you have to work with. If you grew up in Minnesota, that's what you have to work with. It's what we have to work with. We're so intimately connected with this place.

Q: What was it like to revisit your old haunts? Was shooting here more emotionally resonant for you than filming in another location, like West Texas on "No Country for Old Men"?

Joel: Yeah.

Ethan: Oh, yeah. It's strange, weird, coming home after 35 years. Not that we've been away all that time. We still have family here, so we visit back and forth. But not having lived here for a long time. That's always strange. Always a jolt.

Joel: There were spaces that we remembered that we were trying to re-create. That was true of "Fargo," too. We were combining things and pulling stuff out of what we remembered from being here.

Q: How did you create the character of Marge Gunderson, the naive, chipper chief of police in "Fargo"?

Joel: We may have thought of some of the story before we thought of that character. It was also colored by the fact that we were thinking of Fran (Joel's wife, actress Frances McDormand, who played the role) early on. But certainly as it was for many of the characters in the movie, thinking about the region informed very much who we thought the character should be.

Joel, left, and Ethan Coen have both written and directed their films, which have fallen under various genres, including comedy and thriller.

Q: Were you surprised by the state's reaction? It was sharply divided; some people thought you were being condescending to the hicks. Other people loved it.

Ethan: Surprised? No. Whenever you get specific. Like "Barton Fink," a movie about a Jewish character, whenever you get specific ethnically or geographically and touch people's identities, some people love it and some people don't.

Joel: Same with "Raising Arizona." There's always a certain number of people who for some reason are offended or think you are winding them up somehow.

Ethan: And others that are tickled.

Owen works with young co-star

By Moira Macdonald
The Seattle Times

TORONTO — The British actor Clive Owen has famously shared the big screen with the likes of Julia Roberts, Angelina Jolie, Keira Knightley and Cate Blanchett. And yet, for his new film "The Boys Are Back," it all came down to finding chemistry with a 6-year-old.

Based on a memoir by journalist Simon Carr and directed by Scott Hicks ("Shine"), "The Boys Are Back" is a new kind of screen role for Owen: that of a parent. In the film, he plays Joe Warr, a single father (his wife dies of cancer in the early scenes) who must find a way to renew his connection with his two sons and raise them alone.

"I was nervous, genuinely nervous," said Owen, at the Toronto International Film Festival earlier this month, about the prospect of acting alongside a youngster – and knowing that this film, for which he is an executive producer, needed to find a very unusual performer to play his character's younger child, Artie, who loses his mother at the age of 6. But, as a father himself, he was moved by the story ("I cried every time I read it") and felt driven to make the film.

The search process to find Artie involved "an enormous amount" of boys all over Australia, where the film was to be shot. Many of the children were "really interesting, lovely kids," said Owen, "but if there's a scene or two when they're not quite believable, you've kind of lost. Everyone sees that and steps out (of the movie)." Finally, Hicks showed Owen tapes of 6-year-old Nicholas McAnulty, a native of Sydney who had never been in a film before.

"Nicholas was this bundle of unpredictable energy," said Owen. "I always think of young kids before they've reached 8 or 9 as little maniac obsessives. Slightly crazy, young kids, aren't they? In a lovely way. He was full of that."

Owen arrived in Australia early for the shoot for the specific purpose of bonding with Nicholas, taking the boy on outings to a safari park, a fun fair and other adventures. "We did things together so that by the time we got on the set he could trust me, he could fool around, because I was very concerned that you would smell it if he didn't," said Owen. "Even if he was acting well, doing the scenes well, if he wasn't comfortable and feeling free, you could notice that."

Much of the first half of the film is just Owen and McAnulty, as father and son learning how to cope with each other's moods and habits without an intervening mother. (The second child, played by George McKay, joins them later in the film; he's Joe's teenage son from an earlier marriage.) Owen said he realized very early that he would need to change his usual method of working, just as his character has to change his way of life – children, both on-screen and off, don't always stick to a script.

"Though Nicholas was terribly bright and would understand about the repeating and what the scene was about, he was still very unpredictable, and in some ways capturing that was magical. I'm someone who likes to read a script a lot of times, to prepare, but there was a sense that you have to be open. You have to leave that a little and just be ready to react with him, to make it natural. It was challenging but also very, very exciting because I was exploring something new."

Owen, who's worked steadily on screen since his breakthrough role in 1998's stylish casino drama "Croupier," said he's between roles right now, though a sequel to Spike Lee's "Inside Man" is in the works. Formally trained at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, he's considering a return to the stage – he hasn't done theater work in "six or seven years" – but will wait for the right role. "It would be lovely to do a new play."

And he spoke fondly of his previous film, the Tony Gilroy caper "Duplicity," released in theaters to disappointingly small audiences this past spring and now on DVD. "I called my agent, the minute I finished the last page (of the script), and said, 'This is dynamite, some of the best dialogue I've ever read for a movie.' I thought it was incredibly smart, really good fun, really sophisticated."

But "The Boys Are Back" was, he said, a special project, his first as executive producer, and a four-year effort from start to finish. Speaking of two of McAnulty's scenes – a very realistic tantrum and a joyful frolic in a motel bathtub – he smiled.

"That is the richness of children, isn't it?" he said. "That is for me the beauty of the film, seeing all of that – seeing the difficult times and seeing the fantastic times."

COURTESY WIKIMEDIA.ORG

British charmer Clive Owen trades his usual leading ladies for youngsters in his latest film, "The Boys Are Back," for which he also served as executive producer.

Manning lifts UNH

FOOTBALL from page 8

final quarter to give UNH a four-point victory and upset the then-No. 2 Wildcats. New Hampshire, who was ranked fifth last week in the Sports Network FCS poll, moved up a spot to No. 4 as Villanova dropped down to sixth.

New Hampshire's Scott Sicko led all receivers with 135 yards on three catches with one touchdown. His quarterback, R.J. Toman, completed 15-of-28 passes for 292 yards with one touchdown and one interception.

Villanova's two-quarterback system ultimately could not create enough offense against UNH's defense. Quarterback Chris Whitney ran 19 times for 33 yards and completed 10-of-18 passes for 109 yards with one touchdown and one interception.

Fellow quarterback Antwon Young threw for 62 yards on 7-of-15 passes but ran nine times for 39 yards and a touchdown.

Villanova (5-1, 2-1 CAA) will try to rebound from their first loss of the season next week on the road against JMU. Coming off of the win, UNH (5-0, 2-0 CAA) will travel to Amherst to face UMass this Saturday.

COURTESY OF UNH MEDIA RELATIONS

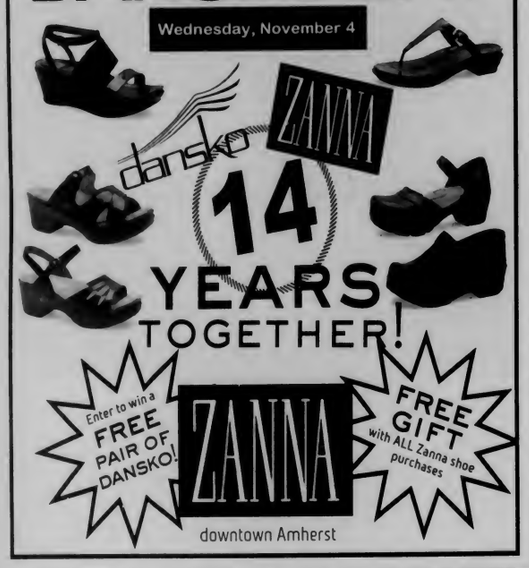
UNH quarterback R.J. Toman went 15-of-28 for 292 yards with one touchdown and one interception in the Wildcat's 21-17 victory over Villanova. Toman and UNH will take on UMass this Saturday in Amherst.

Tribe comeback

Although William and Mary trailed 7-6 to Northeastern University at halftime, the Tribe scored 28 unanswered, second half points on the road to defeat the Huskies 34-14 on Saturday.

Halfback Jonathan Grimes sparked the Tribe's second-half rally with 14 carries for 91 yards and two touchdowns. Fellow Tribe running back Courtland Mariner added 40 yards on 10 carries and a touchdown.

Redshirt freshman quarterback Matt Carroll led Northeastern with 238 yards passing, completing 16-of-28 passes with two touchdowns and two interceptions. However, Carroll received little help from the rest of the offense as the Tribe defense held all Huskies to fewer than 100 yards rushing combined.



William and Mary quarterback R.J. Archer had an efficient performance while completing 22-of-31 passing attempts for 188 yards. Archer also added 26 yards on seven carries with one rushing touchdown.

With the win Tribe (5-1, 2-1 CAA) moved up to seventh in the polls, while Northeastern (0-6, 0-3 CAA) stays winless on the 2009 season.

Neil Carrol can be reached at nacarrol@student.umass.edu.

DANSKO DAY

Wednesday, November 4

14 YEARS TOGETHER!

Enter to win a FREE PAIR OF DANSKO!

ZANNA

FREE GIFT with ALL Zanna shoe purchases

downtown Amherst

A-10 struggles with non-conference foes

By Daniel Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

Last week, the Atlantic 10 field hockey conference faced considerable adversity, losing nine of 12 non-conference games. This week, the field of seven did well to alleviate those woes by splitting six games with their unfamiliar foes.

All six games resulted in shutouts as the seven A-10 squads weathered out their non-conference schedule.

A-10 Field Hockey

The first three foreign tilts ended in lopsided losses as Richmond dropped its match to No. 11 James Madison, West Chester fell against Lafayette and UMass conceded to Connecticut, each game ending in a score of 3-0.

The conference challengers avenged those losses by reeling off three straight victories. UMass rebounded with a 1-0 win over Harvard, La Salle bested Villanova 2-0 and Saint Joseph's downed Rutgers 4-0 to end the week's action.

It has been the case all season that the A-10 has faced unfavorable opponents, and this past week was no different. The combined record of the opponents faced in this past week's losses is 31-10.

Saint Louis and Davidson were slated to tangle, but their game was cancelled when the Billikens were unable to fill a complete roster.

As a whole, the conference will be glad to rid itself of non-conference opponents as they managed to win just 32 games out of 85, a winning percentage of .380.

West Chester and Temple are relieved of those pressures while the remaining five teams gear themselves up for one more non-conference match apiece.

St. Joe's on the rebound

St. Joe's made good use of a 12-day rest as they ran away with two wins this past week. The Hawks (4-7, 1-0 A-10) play is showing marked improvement since a lackluster 0-5 start.

St. Joe's recorded a pair of 4-0 shutouts against Temple and Rutgers behind the stifling play of Kelly Swanick in goal. Swanick's defense kept the ball away from her end of the field for most of the weekend allowing only eight shots total in 140 minutes of play. But her flawless net-work did earn her the recognition of the A-10 Co-Player of the Week award.

Sunday was Swanick's third shutout of the season giving the junior seven for her career.

The Owls have now let up just three goals in their last four games.

At the forefront of St. Joe's offense is Anne Schreuders who scored five points in this week's action (2 goals, 1 assist). In the past six games since the Owls first win, Schreuders has had four goals and two assists. She is third in the conference in shots (40), goals (20) and assists (8).

The Owls' first five games were played on the road, compounding the fact that they played top-tier opponents including two ranked teams in No. 10 Duke and No. 14 Drexel.

Luckily for St. Joe's, the slate is clean when it comes to conference play.

Richmond setting records

Richmond put together a record setting performance on Friday and then went scoreless on Sunday. The Spiders (6-7, 1-0 A-10) are becoming a model for consistency – that is, consistently mediocre.

Friday was a day for the record books in Virginia as the home team walloped Saint Louis 12-0 to tie a school record in goals scored. Sarah Blythe-Wood and Megan Thompson led the offensive barrage setting their own school records with five goals and three assists, respectively.

Blythe-Wood's performance comes as no surprise to anyone who follows the Spiders as she has been a catalyst for the Richmond squad all season long. Including an assist in the second half, the senior had 11 points in the match-up against the Billikens as she is climbing up the school leaderboard in single-season and career numbers. She moves one goal and three points away from 10th place in single-season goals scored and points scored. She also trails Thompson by one point on the all-time Richmond scoring list.

The back-forward tandem has been potent this season leading the league in goals scored (Blythe-Wood, 14) and assists (Thompson, 8). Blythe-Wood also ranks third in assists putting her well atop the conference in points (35), 14 more than West Chester forward Melissa LeNoir who ranks second. Her performance earned her Co-Player of the Week honors.

As good as their offensive effort was against Saint Louis, the Spiders could not seem to buy a goal in their game against James Madison. The No. 11 Dukes shot half as many times as Richmond, but made the most of them holding the opposition scoreless in a 3-0 win.

The Dukes shot for quality more than quantity in this match as they made the most of their penalty corners scoring on three out of four while giving up eight to the Spiders.

Richmond seemed to have trouble starting off the halves as they gave up one goal in the ninth minute of the first half and two coming out of the gate 10 minutes into the second half.

The Spiders won two of their last four and four of their last eight. They have won and lost back-to-back games twice this season. The Spiders will play five of their last six games against the A-10, though, where they have been stellar going 55-5 in their last 60 games.

Daniel Gigliotti can be reached at dgiglior@student.umass.edu.

Dixon looks to Ploch, Carpenter to compete

TENNIS from page 8

Ploch and Julia Comas.

Amanda Barletta and Pam Emery lost their doubles match at UMass last year. They will try to turn that around in the No. 3 matches versus Hodgson and Kaitlyn Carpenter.

Carpenter suffered an injury in the UConn match but has been cleared by the trainer to compete according to Dixon. She'll need to rehab but will be playing in both the singles and doubles matches today.

Kirsten Leikem, who was able to pull out a singles win last year against Boney, will take on Ploch in the No. 1 singles match.

Emery was also victorious in singles in the April match, but to do so again, she will have to get through Julia Comas. The rookie has yet to run into any trouble so far this season.

Boney will take on Tristany Leikem in the No. 3 singles match and Lecluyse will face off versus Cadigan in No. 4 singles play.

The No. 5 singles match will be another key one for Carpenter, who won two matches in last year's contest. Her opponent will be Barletta who was victorious last year in a three-set hard-fought singles match.

Hodgson will take on Hoover in the No. 6 singles match. Hoover has won all of her sets this year, sweeping four of them.

Dixon wants to see some better results from her No. 4-6 singles players, all of whom suffered losses in last week's match.

Following this match, UMass will go nearly two weeks without a competitive match. The Minutewomen were originally scheduled to host Fordham Friday, but that game has been postponed due to impending inclement weather.

The following Monday, UMass planned to travel to Albany, but that game has also been postponed due to cold temperatures.

Three Minutewomen will travel to New Haven, Conn. the following weekend to compete in the ITA Regional Championship at Yale. Each team is allowed to bring one singles player and one doubles team. Representing UMass will be Ploch and the dynamic duo of Lecluyse and Boney. They will be competing against the "best of the best in the region," said Dixon.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@daily-collegian.com.

GRADUATE STUDIES OPEN HOUSE

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22 • 3 - 7 PM
ADANTI STUDENT CENTER
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT STATE UNIVERSITY

- Meet graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study.
- Learn about master's, doctoral, and sixth year professional diploma programs, many offered with Connecticut teacher certification.
- Find out about financial aid and career services.

Southern Connecticut State University
SCSU SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES

To register for the open house, call 800-448-0661 / 203-392-5240 or visit www.SouthernCT.edu/grad

SCHOOLS OF BUSINESS · EDUCATION · HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES
ARTS & SCIENCES · COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE

49ers split weekend set with GW, UR

SOCCER from page 8

Gross's third goal of the season.

There was a second penalty kick during the match against George Washington (6-5-0, 0-2-0 A-10) taken by Luke Exley.

The final goal of the match was put in by freshman Jenning Rex, who scored the goal off of a corner kick.

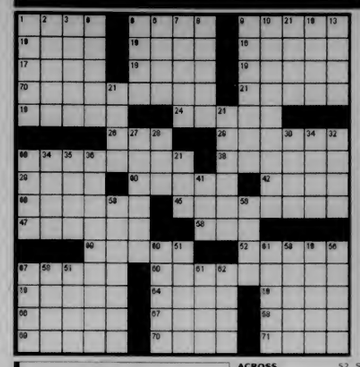
After such an offensive showcase against the Colonials, Charlotte could not seem to find the back of the net in its double-overtime thriller against the Spiders (3-7-1, 0-1-1 A-10).

Just because the 49ers did not score, does not mean there were not plenty of shots taken. Charlotte took eight shots towards the goal, five of which were stopped by Richmond goalkeeper Brock Tomlinson.

On the other side of the field, 49ers goalkeeper David Martin showed his stopping ability with five saves. For Martin, this was his 22nd career shutout and third of the season.

Gross and Rex led the team in shots taken, both with four a piece. Neither though could find the back of the net which lead to the draw in the overtime match.

With the draw, the 49ers continue their unbeaten streak (now at 10 games). Charlotte will look to maintain this streak when it plays St. Louis on Saturday.



Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?

Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COMICS

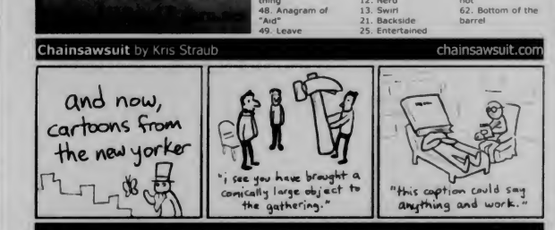
CROSSWORD

UMASS AMHERST

New Schedule for Winter Session

Earn credits during break!

Online classes begin: December 21, 2009



On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010

Sneak peek of [illegible] listed at

ACROSS
1. Bring
5. Bland
9. Military blockade
14. Matures
15. Wheel shaft
16. Not married
17. The period preceeding Easter
18. King of the jungle
19. Horse
20. Underscore
22. Cheerful
23. Shop
24. Aromatic solvent
26. Donkey
29. Reside
33. Riverbank
38. Record player
39. Chilled
40. A hardy wheat used as livestock feed
42. Dock
43. Determine the arrangement of data
45. Pass
47. The whole thing
48. Anagram of "Aid"
49. Leave
52. Stockpile
57. Squeeze
60. Verandahs
63. China grass
64. Arch type
65. Auspices
66. Pergola
67. Ascend
68. Receptacle
69. Spring bloom
70. Exploits
71. Products of human creativity

DOWN
1. Anklebone
2. Spy
3. Japanese stick fighting
4. Aromatic compound
5. Autumn
6. Sixty-two in Roman numerals
7. Without company
8. Article of faith
9. Believe to be guilty
10. Seize on its way
11. Pitcher
12. Nerd
13. Swirl
21. Backside
25. Entertained guests
27. Not a brother
28. Deplete
30. Hurries
31. Glance
32. Bygone time
33. Excessively abundant
34. Religious figure
35. Vivacious
36. The right to enter
37. Prefix meaning "New"
41. Fifty-six in Roman numerals
44. The sport of shooting arrows with a bow
46. Competition involving speed
50. Ancient Greek marketplace
51. An illusory feat
53. Betel palm
54. Stooge
55. Holdup
56. S S S S
57. Crummy
58. Scarce
59. Eardrum
61. In order that not
62. Bottom of the barrel

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Play an instrument with your teeth to achieve a purty mouf.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Why aren't feelings bottled by the Coca Cola Co.?

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Today, you're that lonely black sheep in Farmville.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Don't take too many things seriously. I'll bet you never enjoyed Starship Troopers.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You always did lose at life. The board game, that is!

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
For peace and calm, organize your day around this one simple thought: Marge Simpson in a bikini is just outrageous!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The Antichrist has the initials, "A.I.G."

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Take a line from stoner Descartes: "I munch, therefore I chill."

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Fight school stress with the sounds of Kenny G hyperventilating.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Have you ever truly tried to salute your shorts?

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It's too bad that your lifelong goals will all be completed the day "Duke Nukem Forever" comes out.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you're feeling like you need a confidence boost, you probably just need more midi-chlorians.

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

Part-time Personal Care Attendant, about 10-12 hours/week. Flexible hours, Please call Patrick. (413)-275-7928

FOR RENT

Nice 5 bedroom house, music room, washer/dryer, on bus line, ample parking near UMass. $1,875+ per month. Skibiski Realtors (413)-586-1827

LOST

Lost-silver bracelet with heart charm, engraved with initials DLP and date on back. Sentimental value, will offer reward. Please call 978-273-7298. Thank you.

SPRING BREAK 2010

Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guaranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends, From $89. Includes Hotel, Bus, and clubs. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
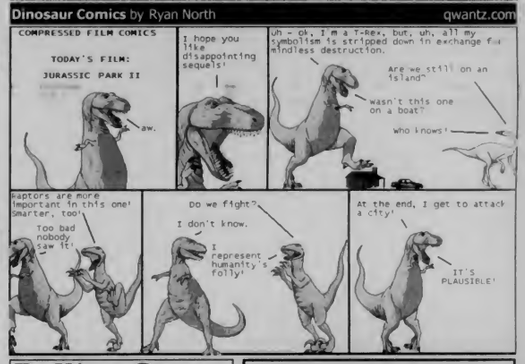
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro — travisdandro.com



My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees — mnftiu.cc

Wondermark by David Malki! — wondermark.com

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com

Rolling Green
All Rents Include: heat, hot water, and electricity!

Move-in Special:
$99 security deposit.
NO application fees.
NO non-refundable move-in fee.

1 bedroom: $980*
2 bedroom: $1135*
2 bedroom townhouse: $1275*
3 bedroom townhouse: $1500*
4 bedroom townhouse: $1995*

Call for our Fall Specials!
Contact us:
(413) 253-3000
rollinggreenamherst@eqr.com

*Pricing fluctuates. All pricing listed is based on a 12 month lease. Shorter term leases are available. Please contact us for availability.

SUDOKU

	1			9	6		4
							5
7	9		5		4		8
				1		6	7
2	6					5
		9						2
						3
3		5	4				2
				3	9

EVERY WEDNESDAY: Poker Night
EVERY THURSDAY: Promo & Trivia Night
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15TH: Mich Ultra
EVERDAY: $1.00 Drafts!

Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery

ARIZONA PIZZA

ORPAZ AUTO REPAIR
RELIABLE & AFFORDABLE FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC AUTO SERVICE

CRAIG EYAL BLOCK TORNOVISH
ASE MASTER TECHNICIAN

48 BELCHERTOWN RD
AMHERST, MA 01002
orpazautorepair@verizon.net
413 256 3600
413 835 1135

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass hopes to stay perfect, face Rhode Island to go 3–0

Seeks revenge against Rams, looks to Ploch at No. 1 singles

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

Coming off of two consecutive victories to open the season, the Massachusetts tennis team is ready to begin conference play with a home match against Rhode Island today at 2 p.m.

While UMass coach Judy Dixon wants the Minutewomen (2-0) to focus on what lies ahead, she cannot help but reflect on the last time the teams met, a 4-3 loss to the Rams (3-0) in Amherst last April.

"It was heartbreaking," Dixon said. "For them, it was probably one of the best wins in their school history. They're going to come in [this year] with more confidence and it's up to us to stop them."

In the spring contest, URI won critical singles matches in the 1, 3, 5 and 6 matchups. UMass was playing without the full use of star Magdalena Ploch, who was only able to compete in doubles that day. Dixon is hoping that having Ploch play twice this year will help swing the score in their favor.

Most of the Rams who played in the April match are back again.

"This team is clearly the best they've ever had," Dixon said. "They fight hard and get a lot of balls back. We have to prepare to play long points."

Dixon said winning the doubles point, which has yet to be a problem for the Minutewomen, is critical in securing a win. She also said she is looking for everyone playing singles to step up.

"We now have two matches behind us. We should be ready to play," Dixon said.

While both teams are undefeated, the Rams have showed complete dominance this year. They have swept all three of their matches and have lost only one set.

The Minutewomen managed to hang on for a 4-3 win last week against Connecticut, despite several "mental errors." Dixon has worked on improving the "mental toughness" of her team in practice the past two days, dedicating a portion of time toward drills and "playing for points."

The team has also worked on drills to improve shot selection.

"We've been hitting the ball too much down the middle of the court," Dixon said of the team's play so far this fall. "We want to open the court up more."

The lineup for the Minutewomen will look the same as it did in the UConn match.

Maude Leeluyse and Candyce Boney will take on Kirsten and Tristany Leikem in the No. 1 doubles. The Rams twin duo lost to Tanisha Hodgson and Magdalena Ploch 8-3 last year. The Leikems are undefeated this year but have not been so dominant as two of their victories came in the form of hard-fought matches, 8-4 and 8-5.

Juniors Christen Cadigan and Brooke Hoover will represent URI in the No. 2 doubles against

See TENNIS on page 6

Sophomore Magdalena Ploch volleys the ball back to her opponent in a match earlier this season. Ploch will play the No. 1 singles against URI.

Dayton remains one of three unbeatens

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

Dayton's women soccer team remains one of three unbeaten Division 1 teams after this weekend of play. Stanford and South Carolina are the other remaining two.

Dayton (9-0-5, 5-0-1 Atlantic 10) tried to take the lead in conference standings Friday night against Charlotte (11-2-1, 5-0-1, A-10). However, neither team scored after going into double overtime. The Flyers have never beaten the 49ers, but they did outshoot their opponents 30-11.

A–10 Soccer

Flyer's goalkeeper Katherine Boone also recorded her eighth shutout of the season. Dayton's defense played just as well, stopping a Charlotte offense that averages three goals per game. The tie moves Dayton's winning streak to 13 games, keeping them as the top-ranked team in the A-10 conference.

Sunday's game against Saint Louis (6-6-2, 3-2-1 A-10) continued Dayton's dominant play with a 2-1 win in overtime. Senior Mandi Bäck, for the second time in two weeks, contributed the winning goal.

In the 18th minute of play, Colleen Williams struck first off an assist by Lauren MacCormick, giving the Flyers a 1-0 lead. The Billikens evened out the score in the second half, forcing overtime. With one minute left in overtime, Bäck cleaned up a blocked shot from Williams to give Dayton the win.

The impressive winning streak ranks Dayton 26th out of 64 in the Top Drawer Soccer Tournament. The Flyers are also ranking No. 32 in the NSCAA National Poll and No. 39 in the Soccer Times College Coaches Poll.

La Salle Earns POW Honor

Tracy DePasquale, a senior at La Salle, scored and assisted two goals last weekend to earn the A-10 Player of the Week award.

In Friday's 3-1 victory at the Massachusetts, DePasquale started off her scoring with a goal in the 23rd minute off of a header from Ally Kenney. The Minutewomen (3-8-2, 2-4-0 A-10) also scored in the first half. However, the Explorers (8-5-2, 2-3-1 A-10) took the lead two minutes into the second half with a goal by Kenney, assisted by DePasquale. DePasquale wrapped up La Salle's scoring with an insurance goal in the 61st minute.

She continued her streak in Sunday's game against Rhode Island (4-8-1, 2-4-0 A-10), where she assisted Melanie Gamble's goal in the 40th minute. Erin Brennan scored again for the Explorers in the 60th minute to give her team a 2-1 victory over the Rams. The assist was DePasquale's ninth of the season and 27th of her career.

The pair of goals and assists increased DePasquale's points to 23, moving her into first place for points and assists in the A-10. She is also tied for third place in goals. In national standings, DePasquale is tied for ninth in assists per game and is just one out of seven players who has scored at least seven goals and seven assists.

Duquesne drops six in a row

Duquesne fell to Saint Joseph and Temple this past weekend, making it six straight losses in A-10 conference play.

The Dukes (3-9-0, 0-5 A-10) took an early lead against the Hawks (6-5-3, 3-2-1 A-10) with a goal in the 11th minute by Gabby Murrin. Saint Joseph evened the score five minutes later and the scored remained tied until the second half. In the 80th minute, the Hawks scored again to take the win over Duquesne.

The Dukes gave up a similar loss on Sunday to Temple (5-8-1, 1-5-0 A-10). Duquesne once again took an early 2-0 lead and kept it up until the second half. Temple scored its first goal in the 70th minute, and then tied up the game 10 minutes later. With four minutes remaining, the Dukes could not hold on for the win as the Owls scored yet again. The loss marked Duquesne's sixth in a row as it still has not found a win over any other team in the A-10 conference.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu

Dayton is one of three remaining unbeaten teams this season with Stanford and South Carolina being the other two.

The Spiders celebrate after a touchdown during a game earlier this season. Richmond avoided an upset by JMU to remain No. 1 in the polls.

Spiders hold on, beat JMU

UNH tops then-No. 2 'Nova, Tribe rally to be Northeastern

By Neil Carbo
Collegian Correspondent

The No. 1 Richmond football team held off No. 16 James Madison, 21-17, in Colonial Athletic Association football on Saturday, due to timely defense and a fourth quarter touchdown pass by Spiders quarterback Eric Ward.

Richmond (5-0, 3-0 CAA) trailed James Madison (2-3, 0-2 CAA) by three points with seven minutes, 20 seconds left in the game, until Ben Keating caught Ward's seven-yard pass in the end zone. The catch made the score 21-17, and allowed Richmond to rely on its defense to hold off the visiting Dukes in Virginia.

CAA Football

Keating, a redshirt junior fullback, had two 1-yard touchdown runs in the first quarter, and also added three catches for 24 yards receiving with the go-ahead touchdown catch.

After Keating's score, JMU drove the ball 40 yards in six minutes to the Richmond 6-yard line. However with under a minute to play and first and goal, Dukes quarterback Justin Thorpe fumbled the ball on a rush, and Richmond recovered ending any chance that the Dukes had at winning the game.

Thorpe finished the game with 14 rushes for 58 yards, and completed 7-of-15 passes for 87 yards and two interceptions.

The Richmond defense, led by senior linebacker Collin McConaghy, shut out James Madison in the second half. McConaghy's 14 total tackles were the most for either team.

Wild-Cat-Fight

Thanks to kicker Tom Manning's two fourth quarter field goals, New Hampshire upset undefeated CAA opponent Villanova, 28-24, on Saturday at home.

Manning booted two kicks of 35 and 22-yards through the uprights in the

See FOOTBALL on page 6

St. Louis grabs A–10 awards

Flyers at top of A–10 standings, 49ers beat GW led by Gross

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

The Saint Louis men's soccer team earned top honors from the Atlantic 10 this week when defender Tim Ream earned A-10 Co-Player of the Week, and forward Alex Sweetin received the Co-Rookie of the Week award.

But that isn't where it stopped for Ream. Ream obtained a cap on CollegeSoccerNews.com National Team of the Week.

The duo of Ream and Sweetin hooked up nicely in Saint Louis' (7-4-0, 2-0-0 A-10) match against Richmond. Sweetin set Ream up with a pass, which Ream took and shot into the back of the net from 25 yards out. This was the Billikens only score of the match, but it was just enough to hand them the victory.

The duo proved to be quite offensive in the match against George Washington. Of the four goals that Saint Louis scored, three came from Ream and Sweetin. The goal scored in the 22nd minute was Sweetin's first goal of his career, a goal that tied up the match. When the Billiken's found themselves down 2-1, Ream went on a tear and put two balls in the goal. With those two tallies, Saint Louis achieved its fourth-straight victory.

Ream and Sweetin will look to continue their honorable performances when the Billikens face off against No. 15 Charlotte (7-1-3, 1-0-1 A-10), who travel to Saint Louis for this highly anticipated battle.

Dayton moves atop standings

Dayton midfielder Isaac Kissi had a weekend to remember. A hat trick during the Flyers' match against Rhode Island led to Kissi's earning A-10 Co-Player of the Week, as well as a spot on TopDrawerSoccer Men's College Team of the Week.

Dayton scored five goals over the weekend, not allowing any shots to pass the defense. With this showing, the team moved into first place in the A-10 standings.

The Flyers (7-3-1, 2-0-0 A-10) dominated the New England region of teams, shutting down Rhode Island and Massachusetts. While the match against Rhode Island was quick and easy, the match against UMass took a period of overtime to decide the victory.

A–10 Soccer

The Rams (3-7-1, 0-2-0 A-10) barely put up a fight against Dayton, who outscored its opponents 17-8. The Flyers committed 10 fouls in their dominating performance as well.

Kissi proved to be the difference maker between Dayton and Rhode Island. He scored three of the four goals against the Rams in his first just four minutes into the match. His second goal came off a penalty kick, and his final one off a rebound.

Going into the UMass game, Dayton was on a six-game unbeaten streak. After a hard-fought battle and an equal performance by both sides, senior Alex Torda was able to capitalize in overtime and score the coveted golden goal for the Flyers in the 107th minute.

Dayton's unbeaten streak remains intact, as the team looks ahead to Friday when they play St. Bonaventure.

Gross leads 49ers

While the 49ers' (7-1-3, 1-0-1 A-10) weekend started off strong with a 6-0 stomping over George Washington, the team ended the weekend with a scoreless draw against Richmond.

Senior Adam Gross had a breakout performance against the Colonials. Gross scored two goals on the three shots he took, followed by two assists. Both of Gross's goals found the back of the net in the first half, the first being seven minutes into the match. This goal came off of a penalty kick, and was

See SOCCER on page 6

Senior Isaac Kissi earned A-10 Co-Player of the Week honors after scoring a hat trick in the Flyers' win over Rhode Island.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 49 LOW: 35 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2009

Mass Budget issues stimulus report

Policy group says state will receive $17.7 billion

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Budget and Policy Center released a budget report Wednesday assessing the impact of the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA), colloquially known as the Stimulus Bill, on Massachusetts.

Mass Budget, as the organization is known, estimates that the Commonwealth will receive a total of $17.7 billion from the bill. Of that, $3.6 billion will go to helping the state bridge its budget shortfall, with increased federal reimbursements for Medicaid costs and grants designed to protect public education, public safety, and other state programs susceptible to harm from budget cuts.

$5.8 billion will go to tax benefits to citizens, with components included for tax relief for working class families, parents, and low-income students and a stipend to prevent the federal Alternative Minimum Tax from affecting a sizeable portion of Massachusetts families.

Another $2 billion will be put towards other direct benefits to citizens such as better unemployment compensation, Pell grants for college students, which could potentially alleviate the financial burdens of some Five College students, nutrition assistance for low-income families, and funds for health insurance coverage for recently laid-off employees.

An additional $942 million will be spent improving Massachusetts' infrastructure. ARRA provides large blocks of funding for bettering the state's roads, public transit, and municipal water systems.

A final large chunk will be used for workforce training, education, research, energy efficiency and other goals stipulated in ARRA. Of this $5.4 billion, some will be dispersed to the state through grants, some will go to businesses, schools and other organizations through a selective application process, and some will be awarded to eligible cities and towns.

Since ARRA's passage in February, the Commonwealth has already received $4.3 billion in stimulus money. Of the $4.3 billion the state has already been given, $1.8 billion went directly to state government for reducing cuts and making what the budget report calls "targeted investments" in health care, education, "and other important government services."

The additional $2.5 billion has already gone to tax reductions, Pell grants and unemployment benefits, among other uses.

According to the report, early estimates reveal that the stimulus's impact could be quite positive for building jobs in Massachusetts.

The report cites a study conducted by the White House Council of Economic Advisors which states that the stimulus created or saved some 27,400 jobs in Massachusetts. These jobs are largely in public services such as teachers and police who would have faced cuts and in construction and infrastructural work undertaken since the bill's passage.

The budget report estimates that Massachusetts will receive a share of stimulus money approximately proportional to the state's percentage of national population, about two percent, meaning the state will net about $17.7 billion out of a federal total of about $865 billion.

In examining the amount the state will receive by type of funding, the report states that the Commonwealth will likely take in about $2.6 billion out of a federal total of $85.6 billion in health care funds.

The ratio for determining what a state receives in health care monies, according to the report, corresponds to the rate at which the federal government reimburses states for their Medicaid expenses.

With the stimulus money, the state's reimbursement rate has risen from 50 to 56.2 percent, according to the report, which also reasons that without these funds, the state would have had to drop many citizens from its health care benefits, especially those who were recently included in it through the state's new health care system.

The report also estimates that because the state's unemployment rate continues to rise, more people will be covered by these benefits, meaning the reimbursement rate of Medicaid costs from the federal government will rise to 61.2 by the end of the current fiscal quarter.

Further funding will go to nutrition and food programs, with $2.1 million going to the Women, Infants and Children (WIC) program, $317 million budgeted for the Supplemental

See BUDGET on page 3

The Massachusetts Budget and Policy Center announced in its stimulus impact report that Massachusetts will take in $17.7 billion in funds from the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA).

Group hosts feminism talk

By Elizabeth Murphy
Collegian Staff

What is love? What defines love? And who "gets" to love and be loved?

On Wednesday, October 14 the Women Gender Sexuality Studies department (WGSS) presented "What's Love Got to Do with It? Reflections on Feminism, Desire, and Sexuality." The topics were vast, and the discourse was varied. But in the end it came down to a central theme of love, and the role that love plays in feminist academia, and within American society as a whole.

"What's Love Got to Do with It?" was the second in a series of monthly forums called "Feminist Foundations/Feminist Futures." These forums are being presented to reflect on the 35 years of the Women's Studies Program at the University of Massachusetts. UMass has one of the oldest Women's Studies programs in the country.

The Women's Studies Program was recently renamed the WGSS program to acknowledge that the program has shifted its focus. The WGSS website says "we and the field have moved from an exclusive focus on women to one that embeds gender within a complex web of interlocking social formations including gender, race/nationality/ethnicity, class and sexuality."

Sociology professor Janice Irvine, Ph.D., said of the renaming of the program, "I think this change reflects the centrality of sexuality in the conceptions of our field today. But the field is also very broad with complementary and contradictory contours."

Irvine was scheduled to moderate the presentation, but was unable to attend.

Women's studies, sexuality studies and gender studies can be looked at from numerous other fields; they are their own fields of study, as well as aspects of others.

The turnout was between 20 and 30 people; a moderate group, but attentive. The speakers at the forum came from distinctly different backgrounds, providing an interdisciplinary look at the intersection of feminism, desire, and sexuality. Their fields of study range from political science to Afro-American studies, and from public health to sociology.

The speakers were Amy Schalet, Ph.D., Kym Morrison, Ph.D., Tameka Gillum, Ph.D., and Barbara Cruikshank, Ph.D., all of UMass, and Viera Lorncova, Ph.D., from Fitchburg State College. Banu Subramaniam, Ph.D. from the WGSS Department was the moderator.

Topics broached included the emergence of lesbians within feminist movements, and the transition from being invisible to being visible; the issue of adolescent heterosexuality especially in regard to females; the role or race, or perceived race, within gender studies, and the prevalence of dating violence among LGBTQ youth.

Despite the theme, "What's Love Got to Do with It?" it took until the end of the presentation, during the question and answer segment, for the issue to be addressed. Each of the speakers evaded the notion of love throughout their segments, although it was the connection between all of their topics.

Decidedly, love and intimacy are difficult to address. In fact, one person raised the idea that within American society, there is no context in which to discuss intimate relationships. The idea of love and of relationships is often talked around in American society.

We are comfortable pointing out the negative side, the problems with relationships. For example, Tameka Gillum mentioned that when dating violence occurs, the victim often views the abuse as a sign of their partner's devotion. But we do not discuss what makes for a healthy relationship, especially intimate partner relationships.

Barbara Cruikshank brought up that in her interviews with adolescents many mentioned that they would like to be taught what makes for a healthy relationship. It was also said that love is associated with unrealistic expectations and a belief that there needs to be a sacrificing of self in order to prove feelings of love and affection.

Elizabeth Murphy can be reached at emurphy@student.umass.edu

Rec Center opening on hold

The new Recreation Center remains unopened despite an expected opening date of September 28. The University is still awaiting approval of building permits for the new building and is uncertain when they will be approved.

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

In a release sent on October 6 to University of Massachusetts students by athletic director John McCutcheon, the delay in opening UMass' new recreation center was explained as a result of needing to "document and verify that all safety systems are operating."

The release also stated that it "may take several weeks" to get an occupancy permit from the state building inspector.

"They should have taken care of these inspections over the summer so that it would be ready by the time they said it would be," said sophomore Mike Powers.

Officials from campus recreation refused to comment over the phone on the building's delay in opening.

According to Ed Blaguszewski, director of News and Information at UMass, "The process is still underway. The way this works is that in order for [the recreation center] to open there has to be an overall occupancy permit that is approved by the state building inspector, and there are multiple elements to that because there are many systems within the building. There is heating, ventilation, electrical, and fire safety – those are just examples of the type of systems in any building that a building inspector must approve. There are also different people that will assess and certify the different systems." So really my understanding is that essentially what we're doing is focusing on the fire safety systems.

"All I know is that they don't have all the permits [to open]," said Patrick Callahan, Associate News Editor from UMass' news and media relations office. "I just know they're still working to get some kind of safety permits."

At the present time, it is unclear what specific permits, other than an occupancy permit, are needed to clear the building for use. Additionally, it is also unclear whether gaining these permits was budgeted into the original plans of opening the building or if the managers of the recreation center did not predict needing these permits.

According to Blaguszewski, the cost of the building for students and UMass will not be altered by this delay in opening because "it is the responsibility of the contractor to finish the job."

"It's a very complicated process," said Blaguszewski about the process of gaining approval from the building inspectors. "It's a state of the art building, and there are a lot of safety things involved. It took longer than we expected to open the building, but we did have a very aggressive and ambitious schedule to get the buildingdone. It is still going to be a great building."

During the Family Weekend tour of the recreation center, students and families were told that the Recreation Center's opening would only be delayed from Monday, Sept. 28 to Wednesday, Sept. 30.

After seeing the recreation center during the Family Weekend tour, sophomore Courtney MacFarland, a sports management major, said about the recreation center, "It's perfect. I was worried there weren't going to be enough machines, but there are plenty for every student. It's the best gym I've ever seen."

"We had hoped to finish this earlier," said Blaguszewski. "But [the opening of the recreation center] took a little longer than anticipated. The important context to keep in mind is that this is a building that has been hoped for by students for many, many years. In the short-term, it is a little frustrating that we couldn't get it open as soon as we would have liked, but students really will have a great time using it when it opens within the next few weeks."

Blaguszewski also said that they are currently on the same "timetable" the press release on Oct. 6 sent to students outlined; therefore the building should be open after inspections in a few weeks.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

ARTS & LIVING

Homecoming kicks off

UPC kicked off its week-long Homecoming events with the RSO Talent Show Tuesday, followed by Spirit on the Commonwealth Concourse yesterday. The event will close with Club U Friday night.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

UMass takes on Wildcats

The Massachusetts football team hosts UNH this weekend for homecoming in a heated New England match-up.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Nick Milano says that Chancellor Holub's plan to recruit out-of-state students is unfair to in-staet students who can only afford state schools

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Correspondents Navchelle Lucas, Maia McDermott and Rosie Wahmas give a look behind UMass' new social network from our media partners at UTC–TV 19

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 27

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3999
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sorkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Bush

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

ESPN reporters visit UMass

Sportswriters discuss future of journalism industry, how to land jobs

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

A panel of three employees from ESPN spoke in Bartlett Hall Wednesday afternoon regarding the changing environment of journalism, and how it affects the day-to-day activities of their jobs.

The panel featured ESPN.com Senior Editors Jena Janovy and Matthew Lee, along with Associate Editor for the News Desk Sarah Goldstein, and the three ESPN employees used the opportunity to discuss how the Web is changing the speed at which journalism is delivered, but still opens the door for feature writing and quality reporting to exist.

Many students, who expressed concern over a more competitive job market, left the panel optimistic after learning of the different ways journalism is evolving.

"It's interesting that rather than talking about the death and dying industry of journalism, it's just changing," junior B.J. McDonald said.

All three panelists agreed that in order to do their jobs, having a basic grasp of journalism skills are important.

"First and foremost, journalism and basic skills you need to write a proper story are the same no matter what," Goldstein said.

"Those fundamentals will always be valued among anything else," Janovy added. "You'll be able to take that knowledge and adapt it to whatever you'll need."

Janovy, who is in charge of assigning, planning, editing and producing long-form features for ESPN.com, said that online journalism allows her staff the time, resources and energy it takes to put together a long-form feature.

One example of how online media has an advantage over print is the ESPN feature published by writer Wayne Drehs in October 2007 of former North Carolina Tar Heels mascot Jason Ray, who died after a car struck him earlier that year. However, the feature was not about his death, but the lives he saved.

Ray agreed to be an organ donor right before he died, and his action helped save the life of four people in New Jersey.

Drehs's story took six months to produce and was also in cooperation with E:60, ESPN's weekly investigative newsmagazine show, which debuted with the story on Ray.

The story took six months to produce and eventually won an Emmy. But for Janovy, she cared more about the impact it had, instead of the recognition the story received.

There were links throughout the story where people could volunteer to become organ donors and thanks to the story, 50 to 60,000 people signed up as donors.

"This is one of the reasons we get into this business, to change lives," Janovy said. "To this day, we feel that's one of the most amazing stories we've ever worked on as journalists and probably the most amazing story we will ever work on."

She said that unlike newspapers, the online platform has no page limit and doesn't have to worry about being too understaffed for a writer to spend as much time as Drehs spent on his story. Being online also helps with speed.

While Janovy said the average reader spends about eight minutes on a long-form story, Lee never expects anyone to spend more than three minutes on his story. He not only has to worry about making the story a quick read, but also easy to find.

"Users will spend three seconds on a site looking for what they want, and if they don't get it, they will go to another site or type it in the search bar," Lee said.

As a result of the reader's need for information quickly, Lee, who is the site's editor for the NFL, college football and MLB blogs, has 15-16 writers who have to write at least eight posts per day.

Part of the change that Lee has seen over the years is not just the need for more updates faster, but also the importance of localizing the stories. Having many bloggers allows for ESPN to give updates on more teams so the fans are more interested Localizing the stories also includes a recent initiative where ESPN now has hyperlocal sites for Boston, Chicago and Dallas. Lee said New York and Los Angeles are on the way.

"We want to get in there and cover teams and compete with local papers," Lee said.

The constantly-changing field of journalism allows Lee to have a department that is still growing and hire cheap talent that otherwise would be without a job. But for student journalists, he sees limited opportunities available since they now have to compete with veteran writers for a position.

All three panelists said that the best way to break into the industry is to get experience with internships at local newspapers, even if they are unpaid.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

Reporters traveled to Amherst Wednesday from ESPN's headquarters in Bristol, Conn., to speak to Steve Fox's sports journalism class.

COURTESY WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

ESPN reporters described how their company's focus has shifted from its popular television programs like Sportscenter to web-based reporting.

Weekend fight hospitalizes one

The Amherst Police Department announced that early in the morning of last Friday, October 9, police were called to the scene of a fight between North Pleasant Street and Amity Street near downtown.

Upon arrival at the scene, officers found a victim with what Lieutenant Ronald Young described in a statement as "severe facial injuries that are not life threatening."

The victim is an unnamed 22-year-old Amherst man, not affiliated with the University of Massachusetts, who sought further medical treatment over the weekend at an undisclosed location.

Further investigation revealed that the victim had been stuck in the face, and then fell to the ground. Two males then allegedly kicked the victim repeatedly in the face while he was on the ground, causing his facial injuries. Police said it is unclear what prompted the incident.

One of the two suspects was located and arrested near the scene. Akeem K. Lavalley, 20, of Hadley, was charged with assault and battery by means of a dangerous weapon (in this case, his shoe).

The other assailant is still at large. The Amherst Police Department investigation is ongoing.

– Collegian Staff

COURTESY AMHERST POLICE DEPARTMENT

Amherst Police arrested Akeem K. Lavalley, 20, of Hadley, in connection with a Friday morning fight on Amity St. in Amherst.

Start Your Career in Accounting.

Northeastern's MS in Accounting/MBA for non-accounting majors:

- Earn two degrees in just 15 months.
- Complete a 3-month paid residency at a leading accounting firm.
- Proven track record of 100% job placement.

Take the first step.

Visit our booth at the U. Mass Amherst Graduate School Fair.
Date: October 28, 2009
Time: 11:00 am - 3:00 pm
Location: Student Union Ballroom

Learn more about the program and upcoming events at: www.msamba.neu.edu.

617-373-3244
gspa@neu.edu
www.msamba.neu.edu Northeastern University

Budget report assesses stimulus's impact

Mass Budget says ARRA bill will help Commonwealth keep jobs, bridge budget gap

BUDGET from page 1

Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP), previously called food stamps.

As of June, the report states that 654,000 people were on SNAP in Massachusetts, up 27 percent from last year. ARRA will expand federal SNAP funds by 13.6 percent through 2013. Through this increase, the maximum monthly allowance for a family of four would rise by $80.

Lastly, $2.1 million will go to elderly nutrition assistance programs.

Beyond health-related issues, the stimulus funds cover a wide range of public benefits.

Massachusetts has been allocated $69 million out of a federal pool of $5 billion for Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) funding. TANF provides monetary stipends, temporary shelter, and employment assistance to needy families. The amount allotted for TANF funds can go up no more than 50 percent from 2007 levels before 2011, meaning the ultimate amount the state receives could increase from the original $69 million. The state has also received a $24.9 million Community Services Block Grant (CSBG). CSBGs are awarded to states to combat poverty at a local level. The funds will go to 24 designated Community Action Agencies, which will dispense the funds locally.

Infrastructural improvements will also be a primary focus of the stimulus money.

Massachusetts will net $319.7 million in public transportation improvement funds, the sixth largest stipend for any state based on the Commonwealth's heavy concentration of urban areas.

The state will garner $437.9 million for highway and bridge infrastructural improvements, which must be completed in three years and promote projects in economically distressed areas as well as maximizing job creation, according to ARRA's specifications.

Massachusetts will take in $29.1 million in Community Development Block Grants (CDBGs), used to provide housing and economic opportunities for low to moderate income families.

Another large portion will go to the Public Housing Capital Fund. $81.9 million will go to grants to public housing agencies to update and modernize federal public housing developments. The fund provides direct monies to more than 60 public housing agencies in the Commonwealth, with nothing going to agencies designated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) as troubled.

$59.6 million will go to low-income tax credits through the federal Low-Income Tax Credit program. The funds will be put towards building and maintaining affordable housing.

Another $119 million will be used for Project Based Rental Assistance. These monies fall under HUD's Section 8 program, which provides rental vouchers to low-income families, elders, and people with disabilities to help them afford and keep housing.

$44.8 million of the ARRA funds will go to homelessness prevention, while the report estimates that $56.1 million will be used for workforce development programs, which help give employment training to at-risk youth and other people likely to be unemployed.

Another $162.7 million will be used for unemployment insurance modernization.

ARRA also emphasizes environmental improvements.

Massachusetts will receive $42.2 million in energy efficiency block grants, which provide money to cities to improve energy efficiency and reduce carbon fuel dependency.

$186.6 million will be used for clean and safe drinking water improvements, while $54.9 million will go to overall state energy initiatives. Lastly, $122.1 million will go to weatherization improvements.

$40.8 million will go to Justice Assistance Grants (JAGs), used to train and provide better equipment to public safety personnel. $29 million will go to the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program for hiring and rehiring police officers.

The Commonwealth will net $813 million in education block grants to better fund public school districts and state higher universities.

$162.8 million of this block will go to the state's higher education budget to ensure that each campus will receive the same level of funding it did last fiscal year, although the stimulus monies will expire at the end of this year, meaning they will have to find a way to bridge an anticipated gap next year.

The state will net $181 million in flexible block grants, which can be spent on almost any form of public service, from education to law enforcement.

$299.3 million will go to special education funding, while $163.4 million will be spent on Title I, which aims to benefit educational outcomes for low-income students.

$23.9 million will go to Child Care Development Block Grants (CCDBG), the primary federal grant for child care services.

Lastly, $10.1 million will go to the head start and early head start programs, which provide a comprehensive array of services to low-income preschoolers in nutrition and education.

Finally, the state will receive various tax breaks.

SMC '13

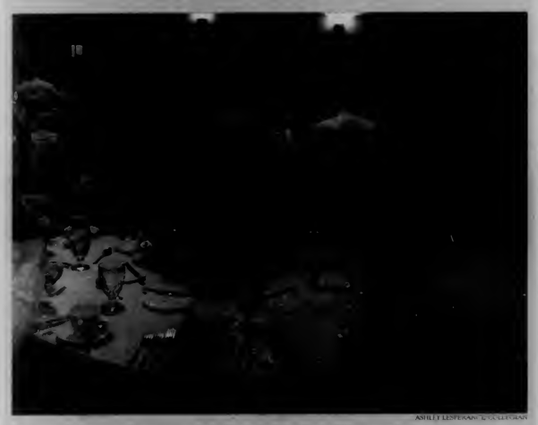
Governor Deval Patrick has procured $17.7 billion in stimulus money for Massachusetts which he hopes will help balance the state's budget gap.

$2.6 billion go to "Making Work Pay" tax credits, which will go to an estimated 2.45 million workers in the state. The credit will be up to $400 for individuals and up to $800 for married couples filing joint tax returns.

$66 million will go to the Earned Income Tax Credit, which provides relief to low to moderate-income workers.

The state will take in $177.6 million for the Child Tax Credit which gives greater tax benefits to families with more children. Taxpayers with qualifying children under 17 years old will be able to claim $1,000 per child with an estimated 155,000 citizens benefiting.

Another $193.5 million will be put to the American Opportunity Tax Credit, a modification of the preexisting Hope Credit, which helps taxpayers offset the first two years of post-secondary education.



This would directly benefit financially independent university students, who would be eligible to receive a $2,500 tax credit, benefiting up to 71,000 students in Massachusetts.

The state will also receive an additional $2.5 billion to offset the effects of the Alternative Minimum Tax, which has inadvertently pulled middle-income families into paying a tax originally designed only to make high earners pay a minimum share. Families earning more than $70,950 must pay the tax, and the $2.5 billion will go to helping to reimburse some financially vulnerable families who will still have to pay the ATM tax.

The state will net $306.5 million in one-time economic recovery payments, for retirees and social security recipients.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

The Daily Collegian needs YOU on News.
Share your tips with us at:
massdailycollegian/submit-a-tip
SOS

ASHLEY LESPERANCE/COLLEGIAN

Students learn how to properly crack shrimp cocktail at a proper etiquette dinner function hosted Wednesday at Campus Center.

Fine dining at Campus Center

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Gloss Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

DANSKO DAYS
Wednesday Oct. 14 - Saturday Oct. 17
dansko $20off
All Danskos! Take $20 off any pair - as many as you want.
This is your opportunity!
Hurry - while we have your style, size and color!
ALL DANSKOS 4 DAYS!
ZANNA
Women's clothing, shoes and accessories
Amherst Williamstown

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES
We may be rivals on the field, but we are friends in the kitchen.
UMass Welcomes
UNH Executive Chef
Ralph Coughenour
THE GAME:
UNH vs. UMass • Saturday, Oct. 17 • 3:30pm
Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com
UNH Dining UMASS MINUTEMEN
Go UMass!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Facebook privacy threat

Alyssa Creamer

Your alarm rings. You're alone as you wake up in your dorm. It was a wild night, but today is a new, normal day. You update your status on Facebook, like every morning, before chomping on Frosted Flakes and drinking fruit punch out of the container. You know no one can see you as you press your nose into yesterday's jeans, smelling before deciding they're okay to slip into.

No one knows those dirty secrets because it would be completely outrageous if someone were covertly snapping photos of your every move while tape-recording your every sentence. Since even before the book 1984 came out, the idea of Big Brother watching over your every move has freaked out just about everyone.

But today, government scrutiny of our generation might be slightly less of a threat to students who fear their secrets spilling out into the streets than the mouths and finger work of these students.

It is hard for many students to think that they are their own worst enemy when it comes to privacy. But whatever the reason, it seems as though students have an absolute need to constantly be updating the rest of the world about what they are doing. Facebook, in all its glorious social networking powers, is still a public forum, in which every status update a person makes is sent into all of his or her friends' news feeds. And it doesn't end there. The update is also left up on a personal "wall" that is the first thing seen by anyone – friend or foe – who visits that page.

Don't believe Facebook can be a privacy issue? Well, two University of Massachusetts students will learn otherwise in court. Their brief joyride in a research car at the end of September caused $8,400 in damages. Their Facebook statuses implied what they had done that night and "can and will" be used against them. The information they posted online was seen by police officers and will undoubtedly be used as evidence. For allegedly stealing the car and smashing it into the guardrail outside one of UMass' buildings, the young men could face up to 36 months in prison.

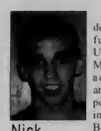
People who students want to impress, such as future employers, admissions officers, family members and even potential friends or dates, can discover unflattering images of a person on Facebook.

That's not to say that our tax dollars are going towards police officers spending their free time surfing through student pages to catch a culprit – they don't get paid enough to be that creepy. However, if you commit a crime and the cops need evidence on you, saying nothing might be better than putting up a status that says "OMG, I am so screwed."

"I know there have been situations and circumstances where the UMass Police Department (UMPD) has used Facebook to gather information when we have access to the pages," said Patrick Archibald, Deputy Chief of UMPD. "It's not a regular tool we use at the police department, because Facebook information isn't all that reliable so it's not a place that we turn to frequently. It is one of many tools that we use though."

People who students want to impress, such as future employers, admissions officers, family members and even potential friends or dates, can discover unflattering images of a person on Facebook. According to a news report in June 2006 done by CBS correspondent Sharyn Alfonsi, some employers, "estimated that about 20 percent of companies are secretly scanning online profiles before they interview applicants. What they often find is shocking – including profiles that detail drug use, orgies and illegal behavior."

Plus, half the statuses people put up, no one cares about.



"We don't want to hear you rant to yourself on your Facebook status," said sophomore Kristina Evans. "Get a diary."

If you don't want the entire world to know every little thing you do, don't post it on Facebook. If you smoke cigarettes and your parents don't know, don't post pictures of you smoking so that cousin Al who secretly hates you can use them for blackmail. Really want that sweet job at the Apple store? It's probably a really good idea not to show them you spend your Saturday nights boozing at the fraternity and letting loose before your Sunday afternoon shift. It seems like common sense, but there are millions of Facebook users in this country, and a large portion of photos uploaded into profiles involve party scenes complete with keg stands and sloppy, scantily-clad red-cup bearers.

No, today it is far more important to be watching what you type and upload onto the world-freaking-wide Web, than to be watching your back.

Alyssa Creamer is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

In-state students out of luck

Nick Milano

With the decline in state funds, the University of Massachusetts administration announced a new policy, reported in Sunday's Boston Globe, to "aggressively court out-of-state students."

The reasoning behind this decision may have something to do with the fact that students from states other than Massachusetts pay nearly twice as much in tuition and fees than those of us who live in-state. While there are some price reductions for students who live in New England through a special program, those from outside Massachusetts pay substantially more. The administration's plan, though, misses the mark. Being a public institution, plans to increase enrollment should be aimed at in-state students whose families pay taxes to support UMass.

The plan, according to The Boston Globe, is that by "exclusively courting out-of-state students" over the next 10 years, UMass will double the out-of-state undergraduate student population to 6,500 while maintaining the in-state student population at around 16,000. In doing so, revenues to the UMass system and our campus will grow thanks to higher tuition and fees from the out-of-staters. It is easy to understand the logic behind the plan, but it is even easier to break the argument down.

With decreasing tax revenues, thanks to the poor economy, UMass has seen its subsidies from Beacon Hill drop precipitously. According to the same article, funding fell 16 percent in the last year alone. Faced with these realities, something must be done to increase funding. Growing the out-of-state student population is one answer, but it is not the right one. There are plenty of other options that could be added to the mix.

Gaining entrance to UMass is getting more difficult for state students as it is. To make it much harder is going to hurt the very people who most support the institution.

This is a Massachusetts public institution, it is the property of the people of the Commonwealth and any plans to increase the enrollment must benefit them first.

To set aside another 3,000-plus seats that are not open to citizens of Massachusetts is insulting to those who live in and support the Commonwealth. It would be one thing if the institution announced it was going to expand enrollment. But, marketing strongly towards out-of-state students is another thing entirely. Instead, the university is reserving additional spots just for those not from Massachusetts. This program could not come at a worse time. With the economy continuing to struggle and with college costs exceeding the ability of some families to pay, more and more people have applied to UMass in recent years. This plan is going to force potential taxpayers of Massachusetts to force their kids to go to a more expensive, private school or a lesser state school. Last year, according to the same Boston Globe article, at UMass, "a record 29,500 students applied ... driving the acceptance rate down to 65 percent, from about 80 percent in 2003."

Obviously, more and more people view UMass as a viable college and its academic prestige is growing at the same rate.

Just look at the current freshman class, which had the highest SAT scores and GPA ever for an incoming class at UMass. Gaining entrance to UMass is getting more difficult for state students as it is. To make it much harder is going to hurt the very people who most support the institution.

This should not come off as a blatant attack on out-of-state students in a "get them out of here" movement. But we have to consider what the purpose of UMass is. As a state school, it is supposed to cater to the residents of this state; this new policy leaves them behind. The Globe article cites downsides to increasing enrollment, namely that new professors will have to be hired to have enough classes to satisfy new demands. Also, the new seats will be filled gradually, with a goal of 300 additional out-of-state students next year. If the seats are going to be filled gradually, then the financial benefits will not be seen in the near future. Why not consider other options?

The sorry state of the UMass Alumni Association has been chronicled widely. Two years ago the Boston Globe exposed some disappointing facts, noting that just three percent of living alumni participate in the association. Granted this was two years ago, but cannot the university attempt to tap its alumni for funds instead of hurting in-state students? Last year, the state cut aid to UMass substantially, can't the University organize a lobbying outing to get politicians on Beacon Hill to appreciate the state school system.

Just as Barney Frank chastised the gay rights march last year, suggesting that they instead call, mail and walk in on their representatives, UMass should organize something similar – MassPirg cannot do it all. The University of Massachusetts is a state school. Those who live here should not be shut out when enrollment is increased.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

See this empty space?
You could fill it with YOUR COLUMN!
Ed/Op is looking for columnists and guest submissions.
Send yours to:
Editorial@Dailycollegian.com

Days since the new Recreation Center was scheduled to open:

17

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

CLEARING UP RSO CONFUSION

RE: "The UMass administration is not your mother," Brian Benson, October 8

Dear Editor,

In reference to Brian Benson's editorial last Friday, there are a number of very important corrections to make:

1. The Student Government Association (SGA), not the Center for Student Development, approves all Registered Student Organizations (RSOs).

2. Student activities fees, not tax dollars, fund RSOs.

3. Any group of ten or more students who share a collective interest may petition to become an RSO.

4. The Center for Student Development provides a range of services to assist RSOs, in particular, advising RSOs about various university policies. Advising does not mean that we create these policies.

5. Spaces in the Student Union and Campus Center are overseen by Auxiliary Services. Accordingly, the policies for these spaces are set by Auxiliary Services.

6. The Student Government Association allocates RSO office space in the Student Union building.

7. Electrocution is an ugly way to die and cutting into a power line is a quick way to get there. This is why folks who want to stake items into the grounds of public areas are required by Massachusetts Law to obtain Dig Safe permits. UMass Physical Plant is charged with ensuring that these laws are complied with. Dig Safe permits are FREE. There is no cost involved, only a little extra time.

8. EMTs are not required for all events serving food. They are stationed at events where there is possible risk to student safety.

If Brian or anyone else has further questions, please feel free to come by and visit us in room 416 in the Student Union Building. We will be happy to explain the processes involved with hosting successful campus events.

Center for Student Development Staff

OBAMA ON WRONG COURSE

Dear Editor,

President Barack Obama is trying to develop our military strategy in Afghanistan. He is mulling over input from his civilian and military advisers, and members of Congress, but he cannot make a timely decision because of his lack of military and national security experience. His community organizing background is not very helpful in this situation.

It appears he will follow a path of political compromise similar to the policies that handcuffed our military in Vietnam. Obama is attempting to stifle his generals and turn them into Obama puppets, which will kill initiative and inhibit candid assessments of the war. This is a recipe for disaster in Afghanistan and could produce another war dominated by unsound military decisions made by politicians.

Predator drones, air power, missiles and mechanized armies cannot defeat the Taliban and al Qaida because of the extremely rugged terrain that is home to these fighters.

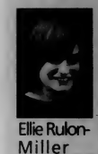
General Stanley McChrystal should receive the additional ground combat troops he requested, including special operations forces. And, we need to speed up the training of the Afghan army.

We need a decisive military strategy for Afghanistan, not the indecision exhibited by the Obama administration, which could lead to a debacle. If Afghanistan goes, Pakistan could follow.

Donald A. Moskowitz
Londonderry, NH

WANT TO WRITE TO US?

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Halloween do-it-yourself decoration tricks and treats

Ellie Rulon-Miller

During the long weekend, I took a trip to my hometown of Beverly, Massachusetts. When I got off the highway at my exit, I passed one house that is, regardless of whether or not there is a holiday coming up, always extravagantly decorated with what must be hundreds of dollars worth of tacky Walgreens purchases. This weekend the house was covered in plastic skeletons, phony spider webs, giant felt spiders and the like.

On Monday, my brother Sam and I drove to his friend's house in Marblehead so I could sit in on their band practice. Driving through Salem, famous for its Halloween celebrations, I saw another house decorated much like the one just off the highway, only much more carelessly. There were ropes hanging loosely over the driveway, giant felt bats hanging from them, and even more fake, cottony spider webs. I was amazed that in a place that goes all-out in every way for Halloween, the people who live there would take the easy way out with CVS décor - they even had a Frankenstein "wacky waving inflatable arm-flailing tube man."

I started searching the Internet and other retail locations for cool-looking, cheap decorations that I could make myself for my dorm. Walking around campus, it's always nice to see the little things students have put in their windows for passer-by to see. The only bummer is that candles are not allowed in residence halls, so I couldn't carve a pumpkin in the traditional way (and keeping one in my dorm room would be problematic because they rot and I never throw anything away). But who needs traditional, right?

One of my favorite ideas that I found in my search for DIY inspiration was the 13-hour clock. The project is easy; find a cheap clock (Target has a nice selection), unscrew, or otherwise unfasten, its face, take off the piece of paper that has the numbers of hours on it, and draw the new numbers on its opposite side, using a giant number 13 instead of the usual 12. After creating your new, hopefully spooky-looking letters (this is Halloween you're decorating for), screw the cover back on and hang it up.

The easiest decoration I found was a spider web weaved on a porch using white yarn. I decided to create my own in the window in my dorm room, using black yarn so it would be more visible. All you need to do is tape two pieces of yarn to whatever frame you're working with – one horizontally and one vertically. Then, tie a new piece to one of the first and connect it to another with a knot. As you go along, add more support strings (attached to both the frame, in my case a window frame, and the web) and continue to tie yarn to those as well. You can also use clothespins and paperclips to attach photos and other lightweight things to the web, effectively turning it into a much cooler (and spookier!) bulletin board.

You can also go the "alien in a jar" route if you're into sculpting, using Crayola modeling clay. Just mold the clay into your desired alien shape leaving small indentations for eyes, should you choose to give your creation any. Allow the creature to dry, then bake it in a 375º oven until it's an even shade of light brown. Then paint it, allow it to dry, and put it in a jar filled with water. To make the water look more like formaldehyde, dye it with food coloring.

Halloween décor is easy to make. It's fun to show your festivity and excitement for (arguably) the best holiday there is, whether it be through decorations, costumes, or the funky-looking foods you put out at your Halloween party (whatever it is, throw in some doll limbs for an extra creepy effect). You can find a plethora of easy-to-follow tutorials like these at instructables.com. But for everyone's sake, don't be generic with your celebration like the-house-off-the-highway. Six-foot-tall plastic skeletons get less scary with each passing year.

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu.

UPC holds Homecoming events for students and alumni

School spirit echoes in campus center as part of UPC events

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Sam the Minuteman appeared for U.P.C.'s Spirit on the Concourse event yesterday afternoon.

By Cal Scannell
Collegian Staff

You may have seen the enormous flat screen TVs in the Campus Center yesterday afternoon, or heard the dazzling/ glass-shattering vocals of your peers echoing throughout the concourse. If you were lucky, you may even have walked away with a Minuteman t-shirt, or a mini foam football (score!)

It's all part of this week's line-up of Homecoming events presented by the University Programming Council (UPC), an entirely student-run organization that presents students campus events including the yearly Spring Concert.

This week, in anticipation of the big athletic games and alumni weekend, the UPC has organized a number of events to get community members in the spirit. They kicked-off the festivities with Tuesday's RSO Talent Show.

Wednesday followed with Spirit on the Concourse, designed to give students a happy break from the daily grind. The activities available included Rock Band and Dance Dance Revolution set-ups where students could stop and perform on the way to and from class.

Kasey Beckerman, senior event planning and public relations major and executive director of UPC explains, "Spirit on the concourse is a new event for us. This is the first time we've done this."

According to Beckerman, organizers "wanted to get athletics involved" with an appearance by and photo-op with Sam the Minuteman. "This was more about just getting people in the homecoming spirit," she said. "We have some free giveaways, like the basketball and the football and the novelties and rock band during the day, just [for students] to have a nice time between classes."

The main goal of the events is to set the tone for the upcoming games against the University of New Hampshire. "Homecoming is all about the students and getting them amped for the big game," Beckerman said. "UPC is all about doing things for students, so being able to put on events this week is a big deal for us. We want to give them a good time for such a big week. It's also a big week for alumni. It's a big week for everybody."

The week's UPC events will culminate in Club U on Friday at a massive dance party for UMass students. "It's our second year for Club U. Last year we sold out," recalls Beckerman.

"It's bigger than a [dance party]," she explained. "We have this great D.J., Club T who came for our first event, the Student Union Shutdown, and they're bringing all this great equipment so we'll have music videos playing in the background like an actual club scene and we'll have glow sticks. We're going to be going all out for a big club here at UMass and there's going to be pizza and drinks and it's free!" Non-UMass students will have to pay a $5 entrance fee.

UMass students can also look forward to a full line-up of events next semester from UPC., including UMass' Best Comedy, the winner of which will M.C. the Spring Concert and UPC's yearly highlight, Battle of the Bands. "There's a lots to look forward to, we're really excited," Beckerman said.

Her advice to students: "Just come. It's really fun and we all put so much work into it and we just want everyone to have a good time."

Cal Scannell can be reached at cscannell@dailycollegian.com

RSOs sing, dance, step and jive at talent show Tuesday

By Rachel Dougherty
Collegian Correspondent

Tuesday night's Registered Student Organization (RSO) talent show marked the first in a series of Homecoming events organized by the University Programming Council (UPC). The show was hosted by guest comedian Tim Young and featured performances by the UMass Ballroom Dance Team, Zeta Phi Beta, Insanely Prestigious, the Haitian American Student Alliance (H.A.S.A.), Straight Hip-Hop and the Dynamics.

Tim Young was less comic gold than comedy kryptonite with his rehashed jokes about campus life. Drunk people are funny, right? End joke. Mercifully, Young's act lasted only about fifteen minutes as an introduction to an otherwise enjoyable show.

The true talent Tuesday night came from select campus RSOs, who danced, stepped, jived and sang for the chance to win $500 to put toward one of their upcoming events, courtesy of the UPC. The RSO talent show is a part of the homecoming events hosted by the UPC this week in anticipation of the football game against the University of New Hampshire on Saturday.

"It's a good event for homecoming because it's a way to collaborate with all the different RSOs on campus," said UPC Secretary Brianne Niego.

The show opened with a performance by the UMass Ballroom Dance Team who performed a rumba to Robin Thick's "Lost Without You" and a jive to "Candyman" by Christina Aguilera. Zeta Phi Beta followed them in a recitation of the poem "Beautiful," which began as a song but broke into spoken word in the middle of the performance. Insanely Prestigious performed a stepping routine, which won the audience vote for the first three groups.

The second half of the show featured a skit performed by H.A.S.A., a hip-hop routine by Straight Hip-Hop, and an a capella routine by the Dynamics. The Dynamics won the audience vote of the final three groups.

Some of the most spontaneously entertaining moments of the night came at halftime breaks between performances, in which audience members were called to stage and asked to dance for the chance to win gift certificates to Six Flags, Bueno y Sano and Food for Thought Books.

One of the more poignant acts of the night came from H.A.S.A. Members who performed a skit about overcoming domestic violence, set to the song "This Woman's Work" by Kate Bush. The skit depicted a woman in an abusive relationship who ultimately has the courage to leave her husband. H.A.S.A. member Daniel Lauture, who played the abusive husband in the skit, feels that the message about overcoming abuse and neglect in relationships is relevant not only on college campuses, but everywhere.

"I think that the main message is, from the abused person's perspective, to stay strong in relationships," said Lauture, "And from the abuser's perspective, it's not to take love for granted."

The skit was followed by a poem written and performed by H.A.S.A. President Leo Jean-Louis about the consequences of not appreciating women. Jean-Louis first wrote the poem for a spoken word event at Mt. Holyoke, and worked with H.A.S.A. to create the skit, providing audience members with an increased visual connection in the performance.

"I think it serves as a model for relationships," said Jean-Louis "and how it's ok for people to get out of that situation."

H.A.S.A. came in third place in the overall competition. First prize was split between the UMass step group Insanely Prestigious and the Dynamics a cappella group. These same groups won second and first place in last year's talent show, and were clear audience favorites again this year. The two teams will split the $500 prize money from the UPC.

This is the second year the UPC has hosted its RSO talent show, which is open to any RSO on campus and welcomes talents of all kinds.

"Any RSO is welcome to participate," said Azajuah Johnston, Multicultural Chair of the Programming Council. "We send out emails to the various groups and the ones that contact us get in the show."

Johnston, who organized the event, thought the show turned out "good, really good," and that the talent show will likely return next year. This sentiment was reinforced by the participating RSOs and audience members.

"The talent show was really awesome," said Katie Zavoski, captain of the Ballroom dance team. "It was really great to see the other student organizations on campus. I really enjoyed watching all of the groups perform and I liked how each of the acts was different from each other. It gives a good perspective on how diverse UMass is."

The talent show was just the first of a series of events UPC will host for Homecoming this week. Other events include Wednesday's 'Spirit on the Concourse,' in which UPC sponsored free giveaways in the campus center from 10 a.m.-2 p.m., Club U from 9 p.m.-1 a.m. on Friday at the Curry Hicks Cage, and a late-night screening of "The Proposal" at 8 p.m. on Friday night.

Rachel Dougherty can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu

JUSTIN GAGNON/COLLEGIAN

Colbie Callait performed last week at the Orpheum Theater in Boston to adoring fans. Opener, Howie Day delighted audiences as well.

Cali gal Callait proved more than just a pretty face at Boston show

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

Colbie Caillat, one of the West Coast's most beautiful and talented young artists, stopped in Boston at the Orpheum Theater this past Sunday night. In an almost flawless performance, she established that her proliferating fame is no fluke, and that a pretty face, a hit song and a nice voice are not the only assets she brings to the table.

Howie Day, the opening act following young up-and-coming Trevor Hall, left a lasting impression on the crowd. Day's first few songs were just like any typical opening act with people still shuffling into their seats, talking just loud enough to be audible.

Day's forth song, "Ghost," was very good. It was so good, in fact, that a group of teenage girls simultaneously stopped whispering, giggling and texting as if they were scheduled to do so.

Playing the song with no band behind him, he used a series of "loop pedals." The electronic instruments allowed him to record short vocal, drum and guitar riffs that repeated as he mixed in other clips, sang and jammed out to the song. Essentially, Day was recording and concurrently mixing the song live.

At first, the use of the pedals was confusing as it seemed like he was simply lip-syncing and playing his guitar to a recording of the song (see: Ashlee Simpson on SNL). Once the crowd caught on though, he had their total approval and they were not quiet about it.

He then questionably slowed down for the next song, even apologizing to the crowd. He said, "Sorry guys, I'm gonna do a slow one."

The song, "Weightless," was fantastic, and began to make sense as he used it as a transition to his hit "Collide."

The 2003 mainstream Top 40 countdown song demonstrated Day's potential star power and further emphasized what a talented artist he truly is. The live version trumps the radio version by a substantial margin. Although most of the audience seemed to have thought this was his final song, it is still rather notable that he received a partial standing ovation at the conclusion of "Collide," despite some obvious confusion.

Finally, he played a song called "Madrigals," which has all the ingredients to be yet another mainstream hit. Again, he utilized the loop pedals and once the crowd realized what he was doing, they began to cheer and whistle in what was a sturdy mix of surprise and appreciation.

In a very, very rare instance – for an opening act, that is – at the end of the extended version of the song, the crowd burst out their seats and gave Day the ovation he deserved.

After a very long intermission, Caillat's band took the stage one by one. The beautiful 24-year-old walked out to expected applause, and went into her first song, "I Won't," off her latest album "Breakthrough."

Dressed simply in a black backless shirt and jeans, Caillat epitomized natural beauty and the "Southern Cali girl" look.

She successfully paced her set list smoothly and kept all in attendance interested throughout the show.

Just before she began "Realize" from her first album, "Coco," a middle-aged man yelled out to her in what was a blatant attempt to talk to her and consequently embarrass everyone he was with. He explained that he had met her in the Bahamas and his 5-year-old son, Alex, had given her a white bracelet. In sincere appreciation, Caillat smiled and dedicated her next song to him.

"Realize," which is a relatively slow moving and soft song, utilized the band behind her and rather than sticking to an acoustic version, stressed a variety of strings and even included an astoundingly fitting guitar solo.

Caillat played her persona to a tee, flirting with all her band members throughout the concert and suitably performing a cover of "Don't Cha" by the Pussycat Dolls. A crowd member who chose to remain

See CALLAiT on page 6

Class action screening of 'Capitalism: A Love Story' left audiences with bitter hearts and shattered American Dreams

COURTESY CAPITALISMALOVESTORY.COM

Michael Moore's latest film, "Capitalism: A Love Story" investigates the causes of the financial crisis and explores surrounding social inequalities. The screening and discussion session last week was organized by Class Action.

By Steven Baum
Collegiate Correspondent

Last Wednesday, Class Action, an organization that strives to raise awareness of social inequality and rid the world of classism, screened Michael Moore's latest film, "Capitalism: A Love Story." The event consisted of a brief introduction to the movie by Kristen Golden, the executive director of Class Action. She spoke briefly about the organization's history and goals, as well as how the film's focus on capitalism relates to the creation of a society with roots in classism. The event also involved a discussion session following the film screening about issues raised in Moore's film.

"Capitalism: A Love Story" is Moore's most shocking and, in some ways, scary film to date. The production profiles the wealthiest top one-percent of Americans and their plans to shape America into a plutocracy essentially run by the wealthy. It narrates the troubles of those Americans who have been beaten into submission by the financial crisis. Through interviews chronicling the hardships of a few families who were devastated by foreclosures, evictions and factory closings, the film suggests that their suffering is part of deliberate actions to allow the already wealthy to hoard more money.

Twenty years after his first documentary, "Roger & Me", Moore's usage of archival footage and personal testimonies of average Americans continues to effectively paint pictures of parts of America that are not seen every day by many Americans. In this film, Moore uses these devices to show the hardships of just a few of the people hit hard by the current financial crisis. His criticism of the United States and those (supposedly) in charge are backed by leaked official documents and salary figures of obscene proportions.

The film will leave viewers with the sense that the American Dream has gone awry, starting with the financial system and government policy. Moore makes his case very convincingly, provoking viewers' curiosity about the details surrounding those responsible for the financial crisis.

Following the screening of Moore's film, Rachel Rybaczuk, the program coordinator for Class Action opened the discussion. She prefaced the talk by briefly recounting her own experiences growing up in a racially diverse and economically underserved neighborhood in Miami, Fla. The audience conversation following the movie consisted mostly of shock at the depiction of the financial crisis, as well as criticism of the way the film was made and how it sometimes one-sidedly presented facts.

Some people made comments about how the film left them speechless at points and that some of the images and figures served as wake-up calls and inspired them to take action. One audience member rhetorically asked the rest of the crowd if accepting the economic issues shown in the film as the "norm" is the way to live, stating rather defiantly that not only should people act for change, but people must act for change. Others hoped that this film would establish conversations across America regarding capitalism and the financial crisis, hopefully resulting in swift steps to fix the problems.

In terms of evaluating the actual film and Moore's methods, one woman faulted the film for not going deeper into race and gender issues that have come about as a result of the financial crisis, saying that she felt as if it was a "film for white people." But the highlight of the discussion was when one man told two particularly long-winded tales. The first involved a correspondence that apparently took place between Mahatma Gandhi and Mao Zedong, in which Gandhi told Zedong that his government wouldn't last. In the second story he reflected on his time spent as a board member for Ben and Jerry's ice cream, the punch-line of which was unclear as he got cut off abruptly due to time constraints. His overall point though was that he disliked the way the film, "polarized the poor against the rich," as opposed to covering the issue from a more neutral position.

On the whole, the event's screening and discussion provided much material for debate and food for thought. "Capitalism: A Love Story" is a provocative film that will leave viewers questioning whether or not the financial crisis could have been avoided if not for the greed of others. It is sure to spark many debates regarding the issues discussed in the movie. The film offers insights into a world known only to the wealthy and powerful, and brings to light realities of hardships that the unfortunate minority must endure. Whether the film serves as a call to action or just another criticism of America, viewers will leave the theater more informed on, and perhaps disenchanted by the supposed "land of the free and the home of the brave."

Steven Baum can be reached at sbaum@student.umass.edu.

Callait plays near-perfect Boston set anonymous said that her rendition of the song was "way better than the original."

CALLAIT from page 5

The Cali darling showed her talent branches far beyond her beautiful voice in a ukulele battle with lead guitarist, Justin Young.

The most shocking moment of the night occurred when Caillat handed stage manager the microphone in what seemed to be an unscheduled addition to the show. Headset and all, the stage manager performed an almost flawless cover of Bob Marley's "No Woman, No Cry."

An acoustic "I Never Told You," which progressively brought the rest of the band into the song, followed by "Little Things" led the set right into her biggest hit on the radio right now, "Fallin' for You."

The song, unfortunately, proved to be the single flaw of the evening. The studio version follows Caillat's voice more so than the instruments themselves, but the live version used loud bass and guitar, which was at times overwhelming and even drowned out the vocals.

A standing ovation like none other capped the end of the regular set list, and continued persistently till the soft lighting fixtures revealed an encore.

She finished with "Lucky," a duet with guitarist Young, which was originally recorded with Jason Mraz, and finally her most popular song, "Bubbly." Her last song brought the crowd to their feet to sing along and even stirred some dancing in the aisles.

Caillat's performance was not an inch short of excellent and demonstrated her dynamic musical talent. Her hit songs shift wonderfully from the studio to the stage, but more skillfully than often seen, she promoted her lesser-known songs and received unanimous approval from her fans. Using unique percussions and strings (e.g. the ukulele), she and her band created a sound that brought the audience to Malibu, broke their hearts and made them fall in love again.

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jgagnon@dailycollegian.com.

GRADUATE STUDIES OPEN HOUSE

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22 • 3 - 7 PM
ADANTI STUDENT CENTER
SOUTHERN CONNECTICUT STATE UNIVERSITY

- Meet graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study.
- Learn about master's, doctoral, and sixth year professional diploma programs, many offered with Connecticut teacher certification.
- Find out about financial aid and career services.

Southern Connecticut State University
SCSU SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES

To register for the open house, call 800-448-0661 / 203-392-5240 or visit www.SouthernCT.Edu/grad

SCHOOLS OF BUSINESS · EDUCATION · HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES
ARTS & SCIENCES · COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE

100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2009 IDEAL

Day one and you're giving back

Day one and your job is more than a job. It's an opportunity to do your part. That's why Ernst & Young opens up lots of ways to make a difference. So you can feel good about our global goals to help inspire school students or get involved with our entrepreneur network. You can even find a cause that matters to your colleagues. And that makes coming to work even better.

Explore your career options in assurance, tax, transaction or advisory services.

What's next for your future?
To learn more, visit ey.com/us/dayone and find us on Facebook.

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

MAXWELL SPARK COLLEGIAN

James Marcou looks for the open man en route to a 5-2 win over R.P.I last week. The junior was named to Hockey East Performer of the Week thanks in part to four assists against the Engineers.

Powerplay effective for UM, Marcou honored for third time

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The power play unit of the Massachusetts hockey team dominated in the win over Rensselaer last Thursday, scoring four of its five goals on the man advantage.

Both of defenseman Matt Irwin's goals came on power plays in the third period, as the Minutemen defeated the Engineers, 5-2 in its first game of the 2009 season. The high-intensity game saw 24 penalties issued between both teams, 14 by RPI, as officials issued four penalties for hitting after the whistle and two for roughing.

Last season, UMass (1-0) scored roughly 25 percent (31) of its goals on the man advantage, and had a .170 conversion percentage.

Irwin believes that the Minutemen won't see games with as many penalties as they saw against the Engineers as the season goes on, but that doesn't mean that UMass can take early-season games lightly.

"We started off slow in the first period, 0-for-4 [in power play opportunities] but in the second and third periods we picked it up. When you get a chance like that, especially in five-on-three's and four on three's, you have to make something happen, and fortunately we did that," Irwin said.

In terms of UMass' upcoming game against No. 2 Boston University on Friday, Irwin knows that the Terriers return younger members of the front-line unit that led the conference in scoring last season, and pose a threat offensively in 2009.

He knows the caliber team that UMass faces, and judges goals on effectiveness, not style points.

"They don't have to be pretty, they all count," Irwin said. "We have to put shots to the net, and hopefully get a rebound and get an ugly goal."

Marcou recognized

Junior James Marcou earned Hockey East Performer of the Week honors for his career-high-tying four assists against RPI Thursday, as the All-American winger helped on four of the five goals scored by the Minutemen on the night. At least for one night, Marcou helped Irwin become the then-leading scorer (two goals) in the nation, and also aided freshman Rocco Carzo in attaining his first goal of his collegiate career.

This is not the first time Marcou has earned the Hockey East Conference distinction. Last season, he received the award during the week of Nov. 3 and Feb. 23. During those weeks, Marcou tallied three goals, five assists and one goal, four assists, respectively. Marcou facilitated Chase Langeraap's game-tying goal to send a game against Maine into overtime, where Brian Keane would score the winning goal for the Minutemen, 11 seconds into sudden death.

Marcou is a player who makes his teammates better while sharpening his own skills as well.

"I don't think James tailors his game around any other player," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "I think he just has a [skill set] in himself, and it's just an incredible amount of hockey sense and savvy. He makes other people better by getting people pucks at opportune times on a regular basis."

Marcou had seven multi-assist games last season, and compiled five multi-game assist streaks, including a six-game span between Jan. 10-Jan. 30, when he tallied 10 assists.

Hockey East Play Begins

Unlike many collegiate sports, hockey injects conference play almost immediately into team schedules.

The Minutemen face the first of three October Hockey East opponents Friday in the Terriers. The game serves as the defending national champion Terriers' season opener, as UMass eagerly anticipates the matchup. The Minutemen defeated 2007 national champion and Hockey East foe Boston College in their first meeting last season, and look to deny any momentum of yet another defending champion.

"Regardless of what this game means," said Cahoon, "the two points count."

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Piekos gets the nod in goal, DeSantis not likely playing

DeSantis from page 10

The Owls are fourth in the conference with 1.30 goals allowed on average, while the Hawks are dead last, allowing an average of more than three goals per game.

"He's a big presence on this team so obviously we miss not having him, but you have to adjust and you have to adapt," Koch said.

Piekos officially starting

Goalkeepers Chris Piekos and Shane Curran-Hays have been successful thus far in replacing All-American netminder Zack Simmons.

After splitting time with Curran-Hays at the beginning of the season, Piekos started back-to-back matches against the Musketeers and Flyers this weekend, and is officially the starter in goal for UMass.

Against the Flyers, he had a career high eight saves, and got a hand on an impressive shot that gave Dayton the victory on Sunday. In the six contests Piekos has started, he has allowed just two goals in 596 minutes in net, and is a big reason why the Minutemen top the A-10 in goals allowed (0.60), goals against average (0.55) and are second in shutouts (5).

Piekos is ranked first in the country with a .943 save percentage, and fourth with a 0.30 goals against average. In conference play, Piekos leads the A-10 in goals against average and is tied for first in shutouts.

"He's been a part of the group and he's been a positive influence like everyone else has," Koch said. "He's doing a good job."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Junior forward Shawn Saunders moves the puck against R.P.I last Thursday night. The Minutemen face the defending national champion and second-ranked Boston University Terriers Friday night. The game will be UMass' first Hockey East contest of the 2009 season.

Cahoon and Co. face No. 2

Terriers, Minutemen collide in Hockey East showdown Friday

UMass faces early home test, game slated for 7 p.m. at MC

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

In only its second game of the season, the Massachusetts hockey team will get a crack at the defending national champion and No. 2 ranked Boston University this Friday at the Mullins Center.

After a 5-2 win over Rensselaer last Thursday, UMass is searching for a 2-0-0 start and a second straight season with a victory against a defending national champion. Last season, the Minutemen defeated Boston College, 4-3 in overtime after dropping a 2-0 loss to the Eagles the previous night.

UMass coach Don Cahoon realizes this game is considered significant, but is treating it as if the Minutemen are playing any other opponent.

"Regardless of what this game means, the two points count, and count as much as any other two points, so for that reason alone, it's an important game," he said. "If you look at our schedule, there're just a lot of big games. Sure, the fact that they won the national championship last year heightens everybody's awareness of what this game's all about, but there are a number of good teams on our schedule, and we're going to play them multiple times."

Cahoon's players, however, realize what this game means, and are excited for the chance to play an opponent as high a caliber as the Eagles.

"When you get an opportunity to play the defending national champions in your own building, it's definitely something everyone looks forward [to]," UMass' leading scorer, Matt Irwin said. "It's an opportunity to hopefully knock them down one game, and get off to a good start in the first two games of the season."

BU meanwhile will open up regular season play after two exhibition games, in which the Terriers tied 2-2 and won 3-2 against St. Francis Xavier and the U.S. Under-18 Team, respectively.

In the all-time series, BU has dominated UMass with a 45-8-3 record dating back to 1919-20, when the Minutemen overpowered the Terries for a 10-2 victory in their first ever meeting.

The last three seasons have been much more evenly matched, with BU holding a slight edge of 4-3-2 over that span. UMass took the season series two years ago with two wins in three games, while the Terries reversed the series last season with two wins of their own.

In their first game in 2008-09, the Minutemen were able to defeat then No. 1 ranked BU, 5-1, for the Minutemen's first win over a No. 1 team since bringing down Maine, 4-2 in 1995.

However, following the first matchup, the next two meetings were a different story. The Terriers controlled UMass, and decisively won on back-to-back days, 6-3 and 7-2.

"We played an excellent game the first game, and I don't know if they took us lightly, but we knew what they were capable of doing," Irwin said. "The following games, we got off to good starts, but with a team like that, you can't let off."

Cahoon has history with Terriers, having served as an assistant coach under BU coach Jack Parker in three different stints during 1974-79, 1987-88, and 1990-91. In his time as a player, Cahoon helped the Terriers win two national titles, though as a coach against BU, he hasn't had much success, holding a 9-24-3 record against BU.

Nonetheless, Cahoon won't be feeling many emotions when the Minutemen take on his alma mater.

"I've [played the Terriers] so many times. Maybe the first time at Princeton and the first time at UMass were unique experiences," he said. "I'd like to play them for a Hockey East championship someday, or play them for a national championship someday, that would be a dream come true. Then, I might have some feelings."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

MULTIBAND POPS

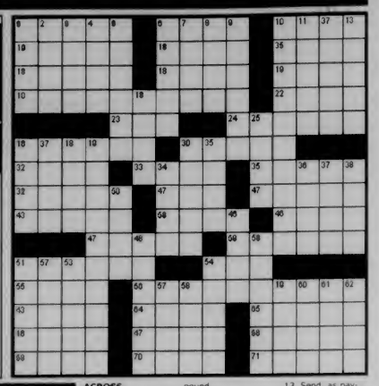
34th Annual Extravaganza of Music & Dance
Friday, October 17
8 pm, Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Homecoming Weekend

Minuteman Marching Band, Dance, Jazz, Wind, Percussion, Orchestral & Choral Music!
Producer: Jeffrey W. Holmes

Tickets: Fine Arts Center Box Office, 413-545-2511
$20: General public • $15: Elders, college students and children under 18

UMass Amherst Department of Music & Dance

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?



Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Domino's
TODAY ONLY!
Large Cheese Pizza for only $4.99
(413) 256-8911
Route 9, Hadley
Domino's Pizza
Toppings Extra
Delivery Charge Applies
Valid 10/15/09 Only

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

SUDOKU

4
				5		2	7
						5	3
			3					2
3	1		9	8
					4			8
5				6		3		7
7				1
	6		3	9		1	2

LA PIAZZA
Sundays Open at NOON
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us
1 lb boneless wings with a tossed salad for $14.99
Pickup or delivery only
Valid through 10/21/09

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 10/15 DJ Consruc — Top 40, HipHop, MashUps & Dance
Fri. 10/16 DJ Consruc — Top 40, HipHop, MashUps & Dance
Sat. 10/17 Yeah Guy & Hott Sizzle — Top 40, Hip-Hop & Dance from Today & Yesterday in Honor of our Alumni Guests
Tues. 10/20 "Neon Party" Techno Tuesday — If it Ain't Neon, It Shouldn't Be On! Top 40, Hip-Hop Techno & Dance
413-259-1600
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

MIX TAPE THURSDAYS
HOSTED BY DJ VID KID
HIPHOP DANCE R&B MORE
EVERY WEEK DOWNSTAIRS AT AMHERST BREWING CO.
NO COVER - DRINK SPECIALS
BEST DANCE PARTY IN TOWN
21 PLUS

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
sunraise printing
Custom Printed Tees
Student Discounts
586-7133
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035

amherst cinema

Fri Oct 16 - Thu Oct 22

Bright Star	1:45 4:30 7:15 9:45 +11:15am Sat & Sun
YOO-HOO MRS. GOLDBERG	2:00* 7:00 *NO 2:00 Sat or Sun NO 7:00 Thu
CAPITALISM: A LOVE STORY	2:15 4:45 7:30 10:00 +11:30am Sat & Sun
AMREEKA	4:15 (5:00 Sat & Sun) 9:15 (NO 9:15 Thu) +11:45am Sat

28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst
www.amherstcinema.org
(413) 253-2543

PLEASANT STREET THEATER

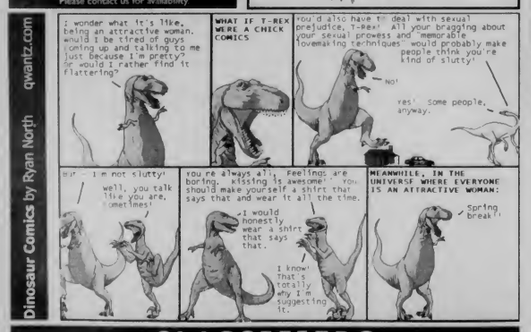
Fri Oct 16 - Thu Oct 22

CAPITALISM: A LOVE STORY	4:15 7:00 9:45 (9:30 Sat) +1:45 Sat & Sun
SOUL POWER	4:00 9:15 +2:00 Sat & Sun
The Baader Meinhof Complex	6:00
ZERO HOUR FILM SERIES: DRILLER KILLER	Sat. Oct. 17 Midnight! Special Admission $3!

27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton
www.pleasantstheater.org
(413) 584-5848

ACROSS
1. Having a specified value
6. Stair
10. The Sun
14. Armadillo
15. An ancient Toltec city in central Mexico
16. A thin flat slab
17. Fabric for jeans
18. Fabrics made from goat hair
19. Ancient kingdom
20. Narrow-minded
22. Hindu princess
23. Before
24. Egg dish
26. Afternoon snooze
30. A small insectivorous American bird
32. Fail to win
33. Wearing footgear
35. Swagger
39. Prize
41. Dined
42. Doglike mammal
43. Brownish gray
44. Its symbol is Pb
46. Resound
47. Aromatic compound
49. Beneficial
51. Smells
54. Allow
55. Fluff from a dryer
56. Food for koalas
63. Decorative case
64. Snare
65. Rent
66. Acquire deservedly
67. Transgressions
68. Gastric woe
69. Bend this to propose
70. Lack of difficulty
71. Shop

DOWN
1. Dry riverbed
2. Not closed
3. Rave
4. Threesome
5. Small village
6. Impolite look
7. Large brass instrument
8. Flair
9. Minister
10. A formulaic conception
11. Like some currents
12. Without company
13. Send, as payment
21. Historical periods
25. Net
26. Strip of wood
27. Corn Belt state
28. Jacob's brother
29. Snakelike
30. Elector
31. Brainstorm
34. Fit as a fiddle
36. Coral ridge
37. A Central American sloth
38. Not short
40. Writing table
45. Affaire d'honneur
48. Spreads sleeping sickness
50. Phonograph needle
51. Streamlined
52. Moon of Saturn
53. Become accustomed (to)
54. Oversight
57. Murres
58. Tins
59. Bombard
60. Meal in a shell
61. Utilizer
62. And



Rolling Green
All Rents Include: heat, hot water, and electricity!
Move-in Special:
$99 security deposit.
NO application fees.
NO non-refundable move-in fee.
1 bedroom: $980*
2 bedroom: $1135*
2 bedroom townhouse: $1275*
3 bedroom townhouse: $1500*
4 bedroom townhouse: $1995*
Call for our Fall Specials!
Contact us:
(413) 253-3000
rollinggreenamherst@eqr.com
*Pricing fluctuates. All pricing listed is based on a 12 month lease. Shorter term leases are available. Please contact us for availability.

Labrat by Richard Martelly

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro — travisdandro.com

FOOD, FUN, SPUDZOOKAS!
Weekends & Holidays 10am-5pm thru Nov 1
S. Main Street Rt. 47 Sunderland
www.mikesmaze.com
413-665-8331

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The Reuben is an old standby, it's true. But maybe it's time to change your signature sandwich.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
"Obama" has two "a's." So does "NASA." Coincidence?!?!?!!!?

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Be a good samaritan today: come between a zombie and its prey.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your roommate has finally declared a major: BDIC for Trapeze. Sequined leotards take up a lot less closet space.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Friend Deval Patrick on Facebook, and he'll accept. But don't even think about trying to look at his Livejournal.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Shakespeare's lines don't spark romance. Biggie, on the other hand...

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The UMass Heating Plant is housing Typhon. He feeds off the $$ taken from the College of Arts and Humanities.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
A whole box of Scooby Snacks just wouldn't be enough to get Scooby and Shaggy to solve your mystery.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
The cavemen made beautiful wall paintings. All we have are dirty sex line numbers in restroom stalls.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Driving through campus is way too much like the Death Star trench run. Use the Force, Luke.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you think a "D-" is bad, don't even think about what Ghengis Khan would give you for your crappy paper.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Michael Jackson didn't just build Neverland – he defiled it.

Hits Now 94.3 FM
The Valley's Hit Music Now in HD on 99.3 HD2
www.hits943.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

Part-time Personal Care Attendant, about 10-12 hours/week. Flexible hours, Please call Patrick. (413)-275-7928

FOR RENT

Nice 5 bedroom house, music room, washer/dryer, on bus line, ample parking near UMass. $1,875+ per month. Skibiski Realtors (413)-586-1827

LOST

Lost-silver bracelet with heart charm, engraved with initials DLP and date on back. Sentimental value. will offer reward. Please call 978-273-7298. Thank you.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends, From $89. Includes Hotel, Bus, and clubs. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

Big Y WORLD CLASS MARKET
Only The Best..:
SCORE BIG!
UNIVERSITY DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • 253-0416
WE ACCEPT OCMP! VISIT US AT WWW.BIGY.COM

Blue Plate special
From Our Kitchen
$4.95
AVAILABLE 11:30AM - 1:30PM AND 4:30PM - 6:30PM DAILY
Not Available In All Stores. For A Limited Time Only.
Monday Only: Salisbury Steak With Gravy
Tuesday Only: 3 Piece Fried Chicken Dark Meat
Wednesday Only: Tender Roast Turkey With Gravy
Thursday Only: Roast Beef With Gravy
Friday Only: Homestyle Meatloaf With Gravy
Available All Week: Chicken Tenders* With Fries *Does Not Include Two Sides
Served with your choice of TWO of the following sides:
Buttered Corn, Macaroni & Cheese, Mashed Potatoes

APPETITE STIMULUS PLAN
FROM OUR KITCHEN
Bigger Bird Rotisserie Chicken — All Natural, Cooked Weight, 2.5 lb, Serves 3 to 4 — 6.98
Large Grinder — 12 Inch, Assorted Varieties On a White or Wheat Roll, Made To Order — 4.85
Large Pizza — Cheese or Pepperoni, 18 Inch, Made To Order — 7.95
8 Piece Fried Chicken — 2 Drumsticks & Breast Slices, 2 Thighs & 2 Wings — 7.95
For A Limited Time Only.

FEED THE WHOLE TEAM!
FRIDAYS ONLY!
FAMILY SIZE CHEESE PIZZA
40 Pieces
$12
SATURDAYS & SUNDAYS ONLY!
30" GRINDER
YOUR CHOICE OF HAM, TURKEY OR ROAST BEEF
$9
Cannot Be Combined With Any Other Offer.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rivalry renewed on Saturday

Minutemen host Wildcats in Homecoming match-up
Havens, Nelson, defense look to bounce back after defeat

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

After a dissapointing loss to Delaware, the Minutemen will look to bounce back against UNH in the Homecoming Game Saturday.

After suffering a 43-27 loss to Delaware last week, the No. 18 Massachusetts football team faces its toughest challenge of the season Saturday, as it faces off against No. 4 New Hampshire on Homecoming Day.

The Minutemen (3-2, 1-1 Colonial Athletic Association), look to bounce back after giving up 43 points against the Blue Hens, while giving up just 13.8 points per game through the first four games of the season. To solve their issues on defense, the Minutemen are looking to simplify things and get back to the basics.

"We've just got to simplify the game," senior defensive back Jeromy Miles said. "[We need to] eliminate all the missed assignments and errors by decreasing the number of plays that we have. Now, we're just trying to run a couple of basic plays, and really start to make them crisp."

UMass will need to perform well on both sides of the ball if they hope to knock off the Wildcats (5-0, 2-0 CAA). UNH is currently ranked at the top of the CAA in both scoring offense (35.2 points per game) and scoring defense (15 points per game). The Minutemen, meanwhile, are right behind their rivals at second in scoring offense (32.4 points per game), but have dropped back to sixth in scoring defense (19.4 points per game), after being shredded by the Blue Hens last week.

Quarterback R.J. Toman and the Wildcats are fresh off of their victory against then-No. 2 Villanova and feature a stiff defense along with one of the best offenses in the country.

UMass, after facing off against one of the conference's top passers, Pat Devlin, will be taking on another elite passer, Toman. Usually considered a dual-threat quarterback, Toman has been hampered by a foot injury, but remains a threat for the UMass defense.

The last time UMass and UNH played, the Wildcats ran away with a 52-21 win in Durham, N.H. In that game, Toman threw for 295 passing yards and four touchdowns, running for 61 yards and a score on the ground.

Morris, though, is less concerned about the daunting UNH offense than he is about focusing on improving his defensive unit.

"If we play, there shouldn't be any matchup problems," Morris said. "We're more concerned about us and getting our assignments right [and] our alignments right. We didn't do that well on Saturday night last week, so we need to go out and take care of UMass."

This weekend's game marks the 72nd meeting between the two CAA foes, with the Minutemen holding a 42-26-3 lead in the all-time series. In recent years, the UNH-UMass rivalry has developed into one of the fiercest in the Football Championship Subdivision.

Homecoming will likely be a good omen for the Minutemen, who are currently winless on the road, but are undefeated when they've played in Amherst.

"For us, it's good because we're bringing all the tradition to McGuirk Stadium, bringing all the tradition back into the house. We want to represent with the 2009 edition," Morris said. "Homecoming's very important. Being a CAA game, it's obviously very important because we want to win the CAA conference."

Some of UMass' most important games in recent memory have come against UNH. Two years ago, the Minutemen claimed the CAA North title after they defeated the Wildcats 27-7. The year before, UMass beat UNH twice, the second coming in an NCAA quarterfinal game that ended in a 24-17 UMass win.

The history between the two teams only compounds the importance of the next game for the Minutemen.

"It's New Hampshire, [it] is what it is," Morris said about the challenge presented by his team's upcoming opponent. "It doesn't matter what the rankings are or anything else. We're playing New Hampshire. That's a good rivalry game for us and we always want to beat New Hampshire."

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

UM drops in poll, relying on the run

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

With the success the Massachusetts football team has had this year at home, the team must be happy to return to Amherst, especially when facing an opponent like No. 4 New Hampshire.

On the year, the No. 18 Minutemen are a perfect 3-0 at McGuirk Stadium, but winless in two tries on the road, after their 43-27 loss last Saturday at Delaware. With the Wildcats (5-0, 2-0 Colonial Athletic Association) coming to campus on Homecoming weekend, UMass (3-2, 1-1 CAA) will hope to continue its perfect record at home, and make a statement in a game that few can deny could have big implications down the road.

"We've got to come back and make a statement that we're still competitors in this conference," quarterback Kyle Havens said. "We still have faith that we can win this conference, so it's a big game."

Havens, as well as UMass coach Kevin Morris, are happy to have a home-crowd advantage at the game after traveling to Delaware, where they faced a tough Blue Hens squad and a crowd of over 22,000 fans. But regardless of whose side the crowd is on, Morris feels his team shouldn't be affected by it, and should be able to play the same on the road as they do at home.

"Home or away, we still have to play well at both places," Morris said before Tuesday's practice. "We obviously have to get better at doing that, but we love playing at home because we have the great home crowd."

The Minutemen have controlled the all-time series against UNH, especially at McGuirk, where they hold a 15-7 record against the Wildcats.

When it comes to hosting Top 5 teams since 2002, the Minutemen have also fared well, going 4-2. The last visit by a Top 5, however, came in 2005, when the then-fourth ranked Wildcats squared off with then-seventh ranked UMass, with the Wildcats coming out on top, 34-28.

UMass has always played well in McGuirk, going 22-2 since 2006 and 48-11 since 2000.

Keep on running

When the Minutemen fell behind 20-0 to Delaware last Saturday, it had to change its mentality on offense, as it found itself playing catch up. With that mentality, tailback Tony Nelson had one of his worst statistical games in a UMass uniform.

Nelson averaged just 2.2 yards per carry on 15 carries for a total of 33 yards in the loss.

"It was definitely playing catch up, and a matter of that we didn't play well," Morris said. "We didn't block well, we didn't tackle well, all of those fundamental things, but we didn't get it done, and that took away from our effectiveness on both sides of the football, and that hurt our running game."

Morris hopes for his team to not find themselves in an early deficit as they did against the Blue Hens, in hopes of being able to keep Nelson as a full part of the offense. Last year, when UMass traveled to UNH, they found themselves in an even greater deficit, as they trailed 31-0 less than two minutes into the second quarter.

"Any game in the CAA, if you're going to give points away like we did, you're going to put yourself into a hole that is really hard to get out of," Morris said. "We did that, and we couldn't get out of that hole."

Drop in the polls

With the loss to Delaware, UMass dropped six spots, its lowest ranking of the year to No. 18. The drop was tied for the second largest drop of the week, with only Eastern Kentucky falling further from No. 16 to No. 24.

The win also boosted the Blue Hens into the Top 25 at No. 23 after not being ranked the week before.

Prior to this week's rankings, the Minutemen had been as low as No. 17 in the Sports Network Poll. UMass started the year at that spot, and remained there until their win over Rhode Island boosted them to No. 15. While the Minutemen may have dropped in the most recent poll, they have still been one of the most consistent teams in the Top 25, claiming a spot in the polls for 60 of the last 61 weeks.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Temple, SJU entering Amherst

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team begins its five-game home stand against Temple and Saint Joseph's this weekend without starting forward Mark DeSantis.

The senior was out of Wednesday's practice with an undisclosed illness, and missed the start of the Atlantic 10 schedule against Xavier and Dayton. UMass coach Sam Koch said he didn't know when to expect his captain to return, but is not expecting him to play this weekend.

Without DeSantis's help, UMass split its first two games of the A-10 schedule on the road. The Minutemen (4-3-3, 1-1-0 A-10) come off 1-0 win over the Musketeers before losing a 1-0 double-overtime game to the Flyers in similar fashion to last year's A-10 Championship match.

"We want to put our hearts back together," UMass coach Sam Koch said of his team's recent loss to Dayton. "We want to bounce back and focus on things that make us a good team."

With a week's worth of rest, the Minutemen now have to turn their attention to this weekend at Rudd Field.

UMass holds a slight edge over the Owls with a 10-9-2 record.

Although the series with Temple is close, the Owls have the edge from the last time the two teams met. The Owls came out with a 1-0 victory in Philadelphia the last time they played the Minutemen in 2007.

However, UMass will need to ignore history if it expects to beat Temple (6-3-1, 1-0-0 A-10) on Friday. The Owls are one of the hottest teams in the A-10, as they are in the midst of a five-game winning streak, with their last loss coming at home on Sept. 18 against Navy.

Temple's strength comes from an offensive tandem featuring midfielders Tyler Witmer and J.T. Noone. Witmer leads the team in goals (four), while Noone leads the A-10 in assists (seven).

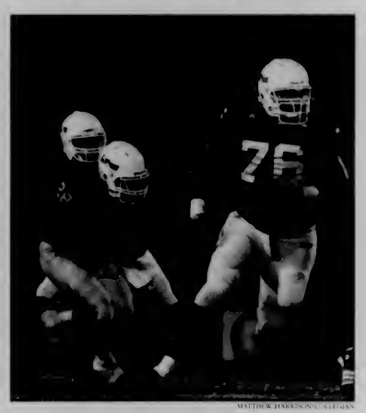
Noone's play-making abilities have made him a Hermann Trophy candidate along with UMass midfielder Ben Arikian, who will have to help the defense stop Noone from creating opportunities on offense.

"Our midfield has to step up and do a better job controlling the midfield than we did on Sunday," Koch said, pointing to the Owls' strength.

But if UMass really hopes to hold off the Owl attack, it will need help from goalkeeper Chris Piekos, who despite giving up a goal against Dayton, has the A-10's best goals against average (0.30) and save percentage (.943). He not only has taken over the A-10 as the best keeper, he is also considered as one of the best in the NCAA.

In his last game against the Flyers, Piekos finished with a season-high of eight saves, and will need a similar effort if he hopes to duplicate his success so far against a team with a strong offense.

"[Temple] is coming in having played very well, and they're a tough opponent," Koch said. "They're the next opponent, so they're the most important game we have to worry about."



On Sunday, the Minutemen play the A-10's worst team in St. Joseph's. The Hawks (0-9-0, 0-1-0 A-10) will try for their first win, although with the way they have fared thus far, having any sort of success against UMass will be difficult.

SJU is at the bottom of the conference in goals allowed (29) and goals scored (four). Their goal against Temple in an Oct. 10 loss was the first time in nearly a month that the Hawks scored against an opponent. Prior to that game, they were shut-out three times and allowed 10 goals.

Historically, the Minutemen have done well against St. Joe's with a 14-4-2 record. The last year they played was 2007 when Arikian contributed to all three goals (one goal, two assists) in a shutout over the Hawks.

One of St. Joseph's biggest problems is that it has yet to find a lineup that can stick. The Hawks have rotated 18 players, and if Koch has his way, UMass should have few problems taking advantage of the turbulence that is plaguing St. Joseph's.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Tailback Tony Nelson takes a handoff earlier this season. The senior was held to 33 total yards in Saturday's 43-27 loss to the Blue Hens.

Senior Mark DeSantis takes on an opponent earlier this season. The Minutemen will likely be without DeSantis for the second straight weekend due to an undisclosed illness.

Home-field advantage to help UMass against Owls, Hawks

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team knows a thing or two about winning games on Rudd Field. The Minutemen (4-3-3, 1-1-0 Atlantic 10) have recorded shutouts 24 times there, and have posted a 43-19-7 at home since the facility opened in 2002.

UMass has won 70 percent of its A-10 match-ups at "Fort Rudd," and will host five of its seven conference games in 2009 at home. This weekend, the Minutemen open their A-10 schedule at Rudd against Temple on Friday and Saint Joseph's on Sunday, after opening its conference schedule on the road.

The Minutemen split last weekends A-10 opener with a loss to Dayton on Sunday, 1-0 in a double-overtime match that was a rematch of last seasons A-10 tournament final. UMass defeated Xavier on Friday, 1-0 for its first conference victory of the season. After two A-10 games, the Minutemen have scored one goal while allowing one goal, but have been out shot by opponents 30-19 in the two game span.

With one win at home so far in 2009, a 3-0 victory over Colgate, UMass coach Sam Koch knows how important it is to get wins at home, especially against conference opponents.

"It's really important for us to have a good result," Koch said. "We have to defend well as a team, [and] we have got to make it difficult for them to play."

The Minutemen outscored opponents 7-2 in four A-10 games last season at Rudd, winning all four games against Richmond, George Washington, Saint Louis and Charlotte. UMass defeated the nationally-ranked Billikens on Nov. 7, 2-1 in double overtime to earn a bid to the A-10 tournament, a tournament in which the Minutemen reached the championship game.

DeSantis out

In the opening weekend of A-10 play, the Minutemen were without their best offensive threat, as senior forward Mark DeSantis did not see action in either of UMass' contests against the Musketeers and the Flyers.

Koch had no comment on what the status of his captain's illness was and didn't say how long he would be out for.

In eight games started this season, DeSantis leads the Minutemen with three goals on sixteen shots, including six on goal with one game winner. DeSantis also makes everyone around him better, as UMass has scored just one goal in its past two contests without him. Ben Arikian has helped facilitate four of the Minutemen's nine goals this year, as DeSantis has been on the end of two of them.

See DESANTIS on page 7

the daily collegian

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2009

inside this issue:

SPORTS

SEE PAGE 13

ARTS&LIVING

SEE PAGE 7

NEWS

SEE PAGE 4

Suspended players may see game time

Facing drug charges, four Minutemen allowed to return

See page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 27

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Kerthline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. SULLIVAN

COPY EDITOR
HANNAH MCGOLDRICK

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

UM players set for game

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

The lineup for the University of Massachusetts Homecoming game Oct. 17 against the University of New Hampshire will include the four UMass players arrested for possession of cocaine two weeks ago.

The four players — James Carven, Bob McLaughlin, Mike Mele and Shane Viveiros — were penalized with a suspension of 10 percent of their season, and allowed full privilege to practice with the team starting last Wednesday. This punishment is in accordance with University policy and the drug and alcohol policy of the athletic department, according to University officials.

While neither Athletic Director John McCutcheon nor head coach Kevin Morris were available for comment at the time of press, UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said of the general situation, "If the students are able to participate in athletic activities they are currently enrolled and allowed to attend classes. Otherwise they wouldn't be allowed to play."

The four players have been practicing with the team since Wednesday in preparation for Saturday's game against the University of New Hampshire.

All four players are currently fully reinstated and eligible to play in this weekend's homecoming game, although it is unknown whether or not any will actually play. Viveiros, a sophomore from Fall River, Mass., has started three of the first four games and proved himself as a strong player making 19 tackles. Carven, sophomore, Hanover, Mass. plays majority of his time on the special teams. McLaughlin, junior, Brewster, Mass. is a second-string defensive end and has made three tackles this year. Mele, junior, Sea Girt, N.J. has yet to play due to an injury.

Though the players are allowed to play in this weekend's game, they are still expected to stand trial.

Currently they all have been charged with possession of a Class B substance. Viveiros and Mele are also facing Class 3 misdemeanor charges of using false identification. For the possession charges the students may face up to a year in prison for a first offense.

All have pleaded not guilty to all the accused charges. Their next court date is scheduled for November 16th.

The four players are also expected to go before the University judicial system, pending the results of their court cases. Evidence from the criminal court case as well as the verdict will be sent to Dean of Students Jo Ann Vanin's office.

According to the UMass Drug and Policy Handbook, "unlawful possession of a controlled substance is prohibited." If any of the students live in University housing they may face a range of punishments.

While the University was not allowed to speak of the students directly due to federal privacy laws, the Drug and Policy Handbook states that for a first offense there is a housing probations for two semesters and the requirement of the BASICS I class. For a second offense, housing is deferred for two semesters and mandatory BASICS II class. A third offense results in permanent housing removal and restriction from current residence hall.

Though the players were suspended for 10 percent of their seasons, it is unclear how this punishment was determined. The University's Athletic Department does not specifically address arrests for drug possession. However, a 10 percent suspension is the set punishment for student athletes who fail to pass a drug test.

It is unknown if the four boys were tested for drugs after their arrest by the University or by the Amherst Police Department.

With the homecoming game this weekend, some worry about the effect of negative publicity on the team.

"Arrests do nothing but bring negative publicity to the school because the local media is aware of everything that goes on with athletics at our school," said Jeff Smith, the associate athletic director for sports medicine.

"As an athletics department, we work hard to educate our athletes so that these incidents do not happen, and that the news about UMass athletics is all positive," he said.

Smith said that drugs such as marijuana, cocaine and performing enhancing drugs are banned by the NCAA.

As the players did not fail a drug test mandated by the NCAA it is unknown whether the national organization will become involved at this time.

When asked on how the behavior of a few students can affect an entire team, Smith said, "A few individuals can disrupt everything. A team is only as strong as its weakest link. Especially seniors, they are the example setters, and if they do not set a good example the younger guys will follow their bad example and it could really ruin a season."

Michelle Williams can be reached at mmwilliams@student.umass.edu

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
TOY STORY - DOUBLE FEATURE - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [G] 100 500 900
TOY STORY 2 - DOUBLE FEATURE - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE) [G] 255 655 1055
◆ LAW ABIDING CITIZEN [R] ⓘ 135 415 725 1010
◆ THE STEPFATHER [PG13] 150 435 750 1020
◆ WHERE THE WILD THINGS ARE [PG] 105 430 705 935
◆ COUPLES RETREAT [PG13] 140 240 420 520 700 800 940 1040
◆ PARANORMAL ACTIVITY [R] ⓘ 155 440 745 100
CLOUDY WITH A CHANCE OF MEATBALLS - 2D [PG] 250 510 730 945
THE INFORMANT! [R] ⓘ 125 420 710 1000
THE INVENTION OF LYING [PG13] 130 410 720 955
WHIP IT [PG13] 110 400 735 1015
ZOMBIELAND [R] ⓘ 205 445 740 1025
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Homecoming arrives

WWW.UMASS.EDU

Families and friends of students are likely to descend on the UMass campus for the annual homecoming weekend.

Hitchcock Center hosts nature hike

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

The Hitchcock Center of Amherst will host a nature hike conducted by naturalist and educator Ted Watt, as well as Biommicry Guild biologist Tim McGee on Saturday, Oct. 17, exploring the process of biommicry.

In an interview, Watt described biommicry as "the process by which humans appropriate adaptations from the natural world to our advantage, to accomplish specific tasks."

Watt and McGee will lead attendees on a natural history hike of Mount Toby with a specific look at the adaptations and design of plants and ecosystems, according to the Hitchcock Center's website.

"Tim is full of fascinating examples [of biomimicry]," Watt said. "One that I remember is the self cleaning skins of fish with their scales. Dirt particles do not adhere. So designing industrial membranes to mimic fish scales enables the surfaces to remain clean."

As a naturalist, Watt said that he is intrigued by the complexities inherent in natural systems, as well as the interactions between species in nature.

Watt and McGee seek to educate the public in the value of the study of nature.

"The goal is to introduce people to our native ecosystem with an eye for function," McGee said.

He added, "[The hike will] hopefully share some inspiring stories along the way of how others have used seeing function in nature for inspiring innovative and sustainable technologies."

The idea for the biomimicry walk came from the previously held, "Fern Hike" which was also attended by both Watt and McGee.

"It was a beautiful hike through the old woods, and everyone had a great time learning more about our local ferns," McGee said about the hike. "I couldn't help myself as a biomimicry professional, I see function, and possibilities everywhere- so I shared a story about one of the ferns we saw growing on top of a rocky outcropping."

McGee added, "The fern has access to very little soil, and limited access to water, and it regularly is able to withstand dehydration. Ted told the group that the fern is also related to the resurrection fern... this triggered for me a story about the sugar molecule trehalose, that this fern likely uses... the molecule trehalose has been used to stabilize vaccine proteins outside for refrigeration. This means that a vaccine doesn't need to be kept cold, and can be transported long distances. This greatly saves on energy costs, as well as helping deliver vaccinations to a much broader audience without refrigeration. All from studying a fern in our own backyard."

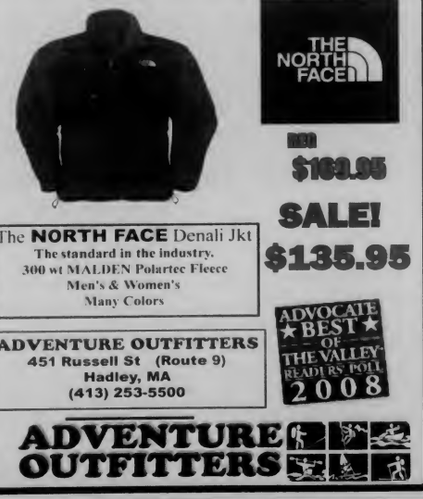
McGee and Watt both said that they will seek to recreate this experience of discovery.

"This walk will be an exercise in keeping our eyes and mind open as we look to nature as a model, mentor and as a measure for our own technologies," said McGee. "We don't know what we will find on this trip, but I'm excited about the adventure."

McGee is a member of the Biomimery Guild, which, according to its website, uses deep knowledge of biological adaptations to help designers, engineers, architects and business leaders solve, design and engineer challenges for sustainable use.

The Hitchcock Center is scheduled to hold additional workshops and lectures involving nature throughout the year.

In addition to the nature hike, the Center will be holding bird watching expeditions, tutorials on how to use simple tools like the compass to navigate through the woods and more hikes throughout the rest of the year.



The event will begin 10 a.m. Saturday morning and will run until 1 p.m. at Mount Toby in Sunderland. Massachusetts and is open to the public. Mount Toby is located about 10 miles north of The University of Massachusetts and is also home to 755 acres used by the UMass Department of Natural Resources Conservation as a demonstration forest.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The hike will be led on Mount Toby Oct. 17 to explore the process of biomimicry through which human sustainability is inspired by the elements of nature.

THE NORTH FACE
WAS $169.95
SALE! $135.95
The NORTH FACE Denali Jkt
The standard in the industry.
300 wt MALDEN Polartec Fleece
Men's & Women's
Many Colors
ADVENTURE OUTFITTERS
451 Russell St (Route 9)
Hadley, MA
(413) 253-5500
ADVOCATE ★BEST★ OF THE VALLEY READERS' POLL 2008
ADVENTURE OUTFITTERS

MULTIBAND POPS
34th Annual Extravaganza of Music & Dance
Friday, October 17
8 pm, Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Homecoming Weekend
Minuteman Marching Band, Dance, Jazz, Wind, Percussion, Orchestral & Choral Music!
Producer: Jeffrey W. Holmes
Tickets: Fine Arts Center Box Office, 413-545-2511
$20. General public • $15: Elders, college students and children under 18
UMass Amherst Department of Music & Dance

UMass honors awareness month

By Angela Hilsman
Collegian Staff

With October being breast cancer awareness month, students and faculty of the University of Massachusetts gathered Oct. 15 to admire 1,000 colored cranes for the purpose of raising campus awareness.

Hanging from the ceiling of the Commonwealth College lounge in Goodell, there are 1,000 cranes created by the Commonwealth College Student Advisory Board. To provide a visual representation of the statistic that 1 in 8 women will have breast cancer in her lifetime, students folded every eighth crane out of pink paper in honor of the recognized color of breast cancer awareness.

Meredith Feltus, director of external programs for Commonwealth College, said the Student Advisory Board developed the idea of folding cranes around mid-September and added it was worth the effort.

Charlotte Anderson, a junior and co-chair of the program committee for the Student Advisory Board, said approximately 30 students gathered on Sept. 24 for a night of crane-making.

"Over 400 cranes were made that night," Anderson said.

According to Anderson, 1,000 cranes were finished by Oct. 5, with 100 having been made by Anderson herself. The display officially went on display Monday Oct. 12.

"It's really impressive to see what it really looks like to have 1,000 cranes," Anderson said.

Timothy Alden, a senior at UMass and chair of the Student Advisory Board, said the idea of crane-making was proposed two weeks into September. It was not an easy undertaking, he said, adding that the group did not want to proceed with the task of folding 1,000 paper cranes unless everyone involved was committed.

"We were able to make 1,000 cranes which was very exciting," Alden said. "I think it looks great, better than I expected. It's very eye-catching, which was the goal."

"If people don't notice, they won't educate themselves," Alden added. "It's one thing to be aware, it's another to support the research"

Both Anderson and Alden agree that breast cancer is a universal issue explaining that everyone knows someone who is affected by breast cancer. Alden said he hopes people will also take the precaution of learning to self-check for signs of cancer.

Anderson applauded the efforts of the students and faculty who took the time to make cranes, adding that in addition to the 400 made on Crane-Making Night, students took paper home to make cranes in their own time, so cranes were continuously "trickling in".

Alden says he was impressed with both the generosity and the diversity of students who showed up for crane-making, adding that there were a lot of new and familiar faces.

"Students are looking for an outlet to give back," he said. "This was an opportunity for them to do that."

Angela Hilsman can be reached at ahilsman@student.umass.edu

COURTESY WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

In honor of Breast Cancer Awareness month, the Commonwealth College Advisory Board created over 1,000 paper cranes like the one seen above.

University offers video games as course option

By Mara Rose Williams
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Menacing, metallic and mega-gun brandishing, the cyber super soldier looms over Richard Fleming's desk.

Not exactly stereotypical for a professor's office at Johnson County Community College in Overland Park, Kan.?

Well, as the "Gears of War" crowd might say: "Eat boot! Suck pavement! Get back into your hole!"

This professor under the "Halo 3" figure teaches video game development. So lock and load, rappers of Nazi zombies or the locust horde. All those hours wearing out your thumbs in front of "Halo" or "Gears" actually could mean a college degree and fast career path.

Before you drop your joystick, remember a degree in video game design is math and science laden. Or it could involve serious art skills.

This year, 254 of the nation's colleges and universities in 37 states have such programs, up 27 percent over the year before.

At first, computer information science program leaders resisted bringing in video game courses, recalled Jeff Huff, assistant professor of graphics at Missouri State at West Plains.

"They didn't see them as worthy," Huff said. "It was real easy to dismiss it by saying, 'They are video games, how important could it be?' "

According to the Entertainment Software Association, which monitors the game industry, video game design is the fastest-growing industry in this country.

"A generation that has grown up playing video games is entering college," said Rich Taylor at the association. "Schools are responding to that."

Besides a favorite pastime, video games are developed for use in military training, education, Hollywood, and for virtual training in a variety of fields, including medicine and mechanics.

"In the last 12 years, software sales have quadrupled," Taylor said, taking video game sales with it. Last year, games and game consoles reached $22 billion in sales.

At a time when students are graduating into a shrinking job market, this industry is flourishing, Taylor said.

More than 80,000 people are employed by the video game industry, said Taylor. "It is indicative of schools realizing that video game design is a viable industry."

Most of the schools with video game programs are in New York, Texas, North Carolina and California, with the University of California-Irvine recently establishing a center for games and virtual worlds research. The Midwest has its offerings, too.

The Entertainment Software Association listed JCCC as the only school in Kansas with video game design degrees.

JCCC began drafting its two-year associate's degree programs in game development and animation in 2006 because that's what students wanted. The school had four to six classes that dealt with game programming.

At the time, Fleming and a colleague, Jeff Byers, who teaches animation, were adjunct professors. Now they run the degree programs, which have three other instructors teaching 63 classes for the 64-credit-hour game-developing degree and 47 classes for the 66-credit-hour animation degree.

"It has been steadily growing," Fleming said. They added four sections this year.

Technology is moving so fast that every year instructors at the community college update class curriculums.

"As soon as we open a new animation section, it fills up within 24 hours," said Kelly Gernhart, the school's assistant dean of computer science and information technology.

Those with a flair for art and design who can create colorful characters and scenarios won't need the same level of computer science, but it is technology driven.

Video development provides the framework of the game — makes it operate — but, Fleming said, "it's not too pretty to look at." Developers can make a plane fly, dive and shoot but they need an animator to design the plane.

Ben Mora of Olathe, Kan., is in the second year of his video animation degree. Mora played a lot of video games in high school. Then he started drawing animations.

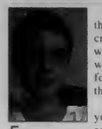
"I thought, I love animation and I love video games; why not put them together?" Mora said.

The next step for JCCC is game development and animation students in the same classroom.

Among the schools that offer degrees and courses on the Missouri side are the University of Missouri, Missouri State at West Plains, and ITT Technical Institute in Arnold and in Earth City.

A lot of schools began adopting video game design programs to offset the decline they saw in the number of students interested in the traditional computer information science courses, said Dale Musser, director of the information technology program at MU.

Musser's program is five years old and includes a sequence of video game creation courses. "That's one of the things that makes our program affective," Musser said.



MCT

As of this year 254 of the nation's colleges in 37 states now offer degrees in video game design, which is up 27 percent from last year.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Nobel Prize an investment in things to come

Evan Haddad

Giving awards is one thing which always incites criticism. In the western world, who is worthy of what and why is a question for which everyone and their grandma has concern.

The big award of the year, the Nobel Prize, has caused many to question or at least consider what factors warrant the crown of those illustrious words: "peacemaker," "innovator" or "genius."

The most surprising controversy kindled by this year's Nobel is undoubtedly President Barack Obama, whose peace initiatives, or youth or both, have prompted the world community to tip their hats to the U.S. leader.

It is fair to say that, to world media sources, Obama is something of an anomaly. When coupled with the hokey image of his predecessor and his 10-gallon hat, the non-effrontery by which our current President commands his image naturally suggests that there is a bit more to the man.

The contrast is something more than just black and white. The images encircling Obama's media persona have led many outside the everyday American experience to believe he is a born mover and shaker, which he might be. But pictures have a very seductive way about them. Certainly, the Norwegian Nobel Committee was impressed.

Obama's victory has also revived a question that first came up in the weeks following his election: Is a president supposed to qualify the dubious decisions of the past with loaded guarantees of the future?

Many would argue that is not what this year's award was for. It seems that the effusive global applause was the result of Obama's peace initiatives, which seek to restore the diplomatic way of doing the same old dirty work.

It is no illusion that the Peace Prize was offered to Obama "on-spec," as they say in the journalism industry. This means that among the global community, his credit is still good, and that he's trusted to pay back the prize with results — and interest.

It seems that the effusive global applause was the result of Obama's peace initiatives, which seek to restore the diplomatic way of doing the same old dirty work.

Among Obama's ambitious peace portfolio is the Middle East, insurgency in Afghanistan and coercing the Iranians either into nuclear confessions or making them say Uncle Sam with arm-twisting sanctions.

Obama even hopes to make progress with the Russians. In conjunction with President Dmitry Medvedev, Obama's initiatives have also led to a fruitful discussion about the reduction of nuclear arsenals in both countries.

There is also talk of a cooperative missile defense project, which could provide a further deterrent for Iran.

But the pressure is on for more substantial results.

Although in office for a mere 10 months, the thought is already going around that if anything, the Peace Prize highlights the inefficiency and floundering attempts of the President's foreign policy.

From a recent article out of the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, it seems Israel worries that the Nobel Prize could, in fact, weaken Obama's stance towards Iran. They suggest that the prize will undoubtedly effect what role the American military will take, if Iran proves uncooperative.

It is apparently feared that the award might go to the president's head, and, as some said about his election, satisfy his immediate need for personal accomplishment.

The JTA, in the same article, expressed further concern that, "the praise the Norwegian Nobel committee heaped on Obama's advocacy of a nuclear-free world could exacerbate their predicament." A bizarre paradox, but a possible one none the less.

Other explanations for his Nobel victory: President Obama is the first American in a long while to have enraptured European audiences. They see in him not only a progressive, younger politician, but an individual — something which always scores points with Europeans. He's a finely polished makeover of the American image, which to global perspectives, has lapsed into a 3,000-mile slump of homogeny and war.

On top of that, there is the generational difference. There exists in the Western world now a whole new political front, which for better or worse, is inspired out of youth and progressiveness: There is Obama, French President Nicolas Sarkozy, President Medvedev, among others. This out-with-the-old, in-with-the-new mentality seems to center around Obama, probably contributing to the Nobel decision.

Of course, Obama isn't King Midas, although his career suggests something like that. But he's snappy enough to evade the brand of enduring, scoffing, European judgment — he plays his cards close to his chest, yet that is how he's continued to find favor at home and abroad.

Nevertheless, pushing will come to shoving soon, it seems; there are several hot issues on the table, not least of which is General Stanley McChrystal's demand for more troops, which will put Obama's peace initiatives to the test. Then America and the world will really know what kind of man they are dealing with.

But until then, we'll all just have to wait.

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu.

Who Knows?

This semester...

Put your face in a box!

Apply to be a columnist for Fall 2009.

Or send a submission or letter to the editor at: editorial@dailycollegian.com.

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." – Adlai E. Stevenson

Are hybrid online classes a good idea?

Part in-class, all good

Nick O'Malley

On the first day of classes, I showed up to my last class of the day, expecting to take the first step in a year-long commitment. I had it penciled into my schedule. Tuesday-Thursday at 1 p.m., it was on.

But then, about halfway through the class, something weird happened. The professor reminded us that we should stay diligent on the SPARK readings and discussions he mentioned and that we would not be meeting in-class for another two weeks.

Wait, what?

Apparently, unbeknownst to me, the class I had signed up for was a hybrid online class. How this happened without my knowing, I'm not sure. But there is one thing I do know: Hybrid online classes are sweet.

A lot of people talk about online classes at the University of Massachusetts and the benefits and problems with it. The biggest problem, though, rarely gets mentioned. You have to pony up a couple extra hundred dollars to take them. Some people prefer having hundred of dollars over taking a class on their computer, it's just their thing.

With hybrid online classes, though, you don't have to pay. It's just a normal class that meets less often and requires more online work. While the more work thing sounds like a downer, it's really not.

Instead of going to a 50-75 minute lecture where there's only 30 minutes of actual lectures and even less time of you paying attention, a professor posts the lecture online in crisp, clean, pure lecture form. So, instead of sitting through a professor's tangent about his cat or those damn kids with their text message boxes and their rock 'n' roll music, you can have a lecture that you'll probably get more out of in the end. Plus, they're like free notes.

In a normal lecture, you scribble down four lines of notes, a picture of a robot and a quarter of a crossword puzzle only to forget the 50-minute ramble you just heard – not really conducive to learning. In an online leecture, you get a condensed, organized lecture that you can really learn from and can then go right into whatever assignment the professor has waiting for you. Whether the professor wants you to discuss the topic, do a reading or write up a paper, the lecture's fresh in your mind.

Speaking of discussion, hybrid classes – at least so far for me – can actually produce intelligent discussion if run properly. All the professor has to do is create a topic, preferably related to the coursework and then grade you on participation. It's essentially posting on a forum, but is still way better than any in-class discussion.

In case you've forgotten, here's how every in-class discussion on a topic has ever gone. First, one person makes a point just to get it out of the way and get participation points. Second, someone replies for the same reason. Next, someone makes some overly-politicized comment that nobody cares about. Then, someone takes the opposite side of said overly-politicized comment. This continues for a while until the professor doesn't let these kids talk anymore and starts picking off people who haven't spoken yet. In the end, everyone still doesn't give a crap.

In an online discussion, people's points aren't just made up on the spot; rather, they're cohesive, clear points that might actually make someone go, "oh, that's a good point." This, combined with the fact that people can actually research (read: Google it real quick) their points and post them, backing up whatever point is made.

The most important difference, though, is the avoidance of the really awkward discussion moments. You know, when someone starts making a point, realizes it's a terrible idea, but keeps going anyway, leaving everyone in the room uncomfortable because the kid – absolutely not me in my sociology class last year – is just going down in flames? Yeah, that's not very fun.

All of this, of course, is what makes an online class a good idea. However, hybrid classes do have a few distinct benefits.

For one, you will actually see the professor, at least once. While only a couple in-class meetings a month doesn't sound like a lot, it really makes a difference to know that the person grading your papers is willing to show up to the school. The in-class meetings also come in handy for sorting out issues with the class. Talking about it in person is much more effective than each person playing e-mail tag with the professor.

By the way, since you have that 75-minute block free in your day from the class not meeting, you have a nice chunk of time to knock off the work you have assigned. You don't even have to go through the excruciating process of putting on pants and stop eating out of that box of Frankenberry.

Huh? That's just me. Oh well, have fun in your lecture that's a 15-minute walk away.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

We deserve the real deal

Michael Phillis

Online classes are beginning to take a different form at UMass. A hybrid model – a course that takes place mainly online but meets one or twice a month – has started popping up in classes on campus.

This movement to the Internet is not an improved version of an existing classroom experience. Instead, classes that rely on Internet communication and online work degrade the nature of personal education that has proven (at least for me) to be the key to really absorbing course material.

According to the University of Massachusetts website, a Bay State resident pays $20,008 to attend UMass this year. For those of you who do not live in Massachusetts, you can add a little over $11,000 to that number. This amount is far too much to pay to be taught in a way that has little contact with professors or face-to-face interaction with peers.

Some of the most rewarding academic experiences I have gained at UMass have come from talking to professors and engaging in class discussions. In the business school, one of my courses spends much of its time discussing how businesses can position themselves for maximum effect. This class has been a favorite of mine. Its success is largely due to the interactive nature of the course. The professor guides his students through the methods of problem solving helping us reach answers ourselves. This is a teaching method that could never exist in an online dominant environment.

In the end, especially in upper level courses, the material is sophisticated and full of subtle complexities that make instant live feedback and debate essential.

One of the jobs of a professor is to get their students interested in their subject through teaching the material. A professor's passion can help students spend the extra time getting to know the course information beyond what is required. A teacher's excitement (hopefully) creates a classroom where students are not falling asleep and are personally engaged in the material.

This is why I would much rather gain my information from a professor than a textbook. I can instantly ask questions, take notes on what I think is important and weed out important facts from the filler. Moving a course to a mostly online format does little to garner interest in its subject, making the material forgettable in the long run.

This need for inspiration in our education is a more important part of college than we often give credit. When we graduate from UMass, we hope that we have gained enough skills to enter the workforce in an area of which we enjoy. Money is essential to lifelong comfort and happiness, but it is often college that provides people with a platform to better understand their passions. Online-based courses all too often provide you with unadulterated facts in a pre-made Power Point presentation.

Once your online professor has provided that pre-made Power Point, the B.S. often begins. Most of these courses require a "discussion" section where, on your own time, you are asked to post questions or make thoughtful additions on a pre-determined topic. In a classroom environment, discussion might take place in the way of a question and answer period run by the instructor.

I took a marketing course online a couple summers ago, where a discussion section was a part of the course. Students were required to make a small and very manageable number of online comments that would be graded. Once my first comment was given full-credit, I copied the successful format of this first entry and received high marks without much thought from that point on. The further along in the course, the more I realized that learning the material was a distant second priority to getting everything done just well enough for the professor to think it deserved a good grade.

I will admit, for a college student, there are some strengths to this hybrid online model of learning. I like completing discussions and coursework on my own time. Almost no one enjoys going to all of their classes and some of what's offered at UMass is arguably a waste of time. This problem is a reason that so many professors have to deal with the chronic problem of students skipping.

In college, there is nothing out of the ordinary about skipping a few classes. The hybrid online course model does give some people the mentality that working on their own time without having to show up is enough to get by. This is never true in real life and should not be the culture of college learning.

There are benefits of online supplement; it can be quite beneficial to a quality learning experience. Having material online so students can revisit it and learn from past classes is helpful. For $20,000 a year, however, UMass owes the student body professors who teach courses every week.

Funds are down, budgets are tight, but education is the mission of this school. It should not be diluted by the excuse to use the Internet for work that professors should be doing themselves.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu.

arts&living

YOUR WEEKEND GUIDE TO ART, MUSIC, FILM & CULTURE ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Love, death and cinema

Khan reincarnates Bollywood cliches in star-crossed love story

MARK SCHIFFER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

This Sunday, October 18, Amherst Cinema will be presenting Farah Khan's 2007 Bollywood smash hit, "Om Shanti Om." Garnering a total of $39 million at the international box office, "Om Shanti Om" is currently the 7th highest grossing Hindi film of all time. Critics have compared this film to "Singing in the Rain," to an extent. This is because the film's goal is to pay homage to and parody the well-established clichés and staples of classic Bollywood cinema, much like "Singing in the Rain" does with Hollywood musicals.

Starring the current toast of the Hindi cinema scene, Shah Rukh Khan (who is of no relation to the director) and newcomer Deepika Padukone, "Om Shanti Om" tells the classic stand-by tale of two star-crossed lovers who perish, are reincarnated and find love in their new forms. While this ordinarily would be considered spoiling the story, there never really is a question of the outcome. The reincarnation tale is a well-established trope of the Bollywood film industry. Farah Khan's take on it, however, may prove to provide a somewhat more unique experience for audiences than one might expect.

"Om Shanti Om" sets its story in the world of the Bollywood film industry itself, allowing the interactions between the characters to be an examination of the very world that created it. Even the musical numbers have been described as tributes in themselves, allowing for a self-reflexive quality that for some may allow for these sequences to work as both commentaries and as an homage. While the film has received some criticism due to its more uneven qualities, it is difficult not to accuse the entire Bollywood film world as being uneven when viewed on the same terms as Hollywood films. The key to enjoying most mainstream Hindi films seems to be to simply relax, and to allow the films produced under such to act as escapist works. The many positive reviews this film has received have made of this quality.

"Om Shanti Om" also marked Farah Khan's second major directorial success in the Bollywood world. Prior to her 2004 debut with "Main Noon Ha" (which also starred Shah Rukh Khan), she was mainly known for choreographing musical sequences in both Bollywood and non-Bollywood films. She is probably most famous for her work on the films "Monsoon Wedding" and "Vanity Fair," the latter starring Reese Witherspoon, and based on the novel of the same name by William Makepeace Thackeray. Khan has won the Filmfare Best Choreography Award (which is Bollywood-specific) five times through her extensive work on Hindi films. When Farah Khan recently emerged as a director as well, her already known talent made it no stretch for her to become the second female to be nominated for the Filmfare Best Director Award.

"Om Shanti Om" has been the seventh-highest grossing Hindi film of all-time since its 2007 release. Its extravagant musical numbers and humorous insights into the Bollywood industry have won it acclaim from audiences and critics alike. Interested filmgoers are encouraged to head to Amherst Cinema this Sunday at 1 p.m. for the showing.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY EROS ENTERTAINMENT

"Om Shanti Om" director Farah Khan's seminal work about a struggling actor who finds love – and success – after being reincarnated, touches on many typical Bollywood tropes.

COURTESY STUDENTVALLEYPRODUCTIONS.COM

The University of Massachusetts' student comedy group, Sketch 22, will be performing live October 17 at 8 p.m.

'Sketch'-ing the ideal comedy from scratch

BY ELYSE HOROWITZ
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts' student sketch comedy group, Sketch 22, will be performing Saturday night, October 17, at 8 p.m. in the Herter Hall Annex.

Sketch 22, which currently is made up of 12 members, performs self-written sketches at various events throughout the semester. The group holds voting meetings at the beginning of each semester, where everyone is required to write two full comedy sketches. Once a culmination of the sketches has been compiled, the members pick out at least 15 to make a part of their showcase.

During their first show of the semester, the group will be performing over a dozen of their comedic routines, which, according to student producer Peter Storey, are similar to the skits commonly aired on "Saturday Night Live."

Although there are no pre-requisites to joining Sketch 22, a comedy group that is open to students from all of the campuses within the Five College Colloquium, auditions occur at the beginning of each semester. Storey assumes the group will be holding further auditions next February to expand their ranks. According to Storey, two members of the group are new as of this fall semester. At this point, all 12 members are UMass undergraduate students, although UMass alumni have been known to stick around Amherst another year, and continue their membership with Sketch 22.

See SKETCH on page 8

Campus comedians draw fresh talent for Halloween

SKETCH from page 7

While most students in Sketch 22 are theater or film majors, some of whom have continued on to work in theater or comedy post-graduation, Storey says the members are focusing their studies on a "hodge-podge" of majors, including biology.

Following this Saturday's performance, the group will also be showcasing their talent at a Halloween special, alongside Improv with Attitude and Mission Improvable. Sketch 22 is also usually involved in Improvathon, which, according to Storey, was formerly a fundraiser, and is now simply a fun event for comedians to enjoy. At the annual event, members from all three comedy groups test their limits to see how long they can perform for, with different sets and scripts. Storey says the Improvathon usually lasts around five to six hours.

Another annual event which Storey hopes to maintain is the Comedy Jam, which generally takes place during the spring semester. Professional comedians are hired to perform in accompaniment with Sketch 22, including a freestyle rap comedy group that attended last year's show.

"The comedy jam would be the pinnacle," said Storey, in regards to the most interesting show that Sketch 22 has participated in.

Before each show, Storey says the group goes through technical details, dress rehearsals, and running lines. Since most members of Sketch 22 have been participating in theater productions since high school, it is unusual for students to get stage fright before a show.

"We are pretty well prepared. We have a few games we play [before going onstage], there's a lot of shouting," said Storey. "The atmosphere is just intoxicating. It's a great feeling when the audience starts to file in."

"I think we put a hell of a show together, and I'm proud to be affiliated."

Elyse Horowitz can be reached at ehhorowi@student.umass.edu.

Bucci comes to the CAMPUS CENTER!
haircuts $12 413-549-0522

COURTESY AMANDA JOHNSON

Renowned percussionist Dame Evelyn Glennie hits the Fine Arts Center along with Kazen Abdullah and Latin America's premier orchestra, Orquestra de Sau Paulo.

March to the FAC

Deaf percussionist tours campus

By Craig Holland
Collegian Correspondent

World renowned solo percussionist Dame Evelyn Glennie will be performing at the Fine Arts Center this weekend with Latin America's premier orchestra, Orquestra de Sao Paulo. Rising star Kazen Abdullah, whose 2009 tour across the United States began with a notable debut at the Metropolitan Opera House in Manhattan, New York, will conduct the act.

Glennie gained acclaim for herself as the first person to make a career as a solo percussionist. Glennie has travelled the world giving lectures and performing as a featured artist. Her performances dazzle with wide ranging dynamics and a furious passion as she paints pictures with drums.

Among the slew of performers that Glennie has collaborated with include Latin percussionist Nana Vasconcelos and Icelandic sing-songwriter Bjork. Glennie has also worked with jazz singer Bobby McFerrin, best known for the 1988 song, "Don't Worry, Be Happy." Glennie's professional accomplishments stand in stark contrast to other difficulties; according to her website, by age 12 Glennie had lost all her hearing.

She feels and interprets the vibrations of notes she plays, and uses this skill to play the marimba, xylophone and many pitched percussion instruments. She spoke at the 2003 TED Conference, in Long Beach, Calif., explaining how most people listen with their ears, but she uses her whole body as a sensory organ to interpret vibrations. To strengthen this connection, Glennie performs without shoes to get more sensory input from the floor.

Kazem Abdullah was tapped to conduct Orquestra de Sao Paulo after their initial pick for the 2009 tour was unable to make the whole schedule. For Abdullah, who is 30 years old, this tour is only the latest in a series of conducting positions for a relatively young maestro. Abdullah's 2008-2009 season included a highly-anticipated debut with the Metropolitan Opera where he conducted Gluck's Orfeo ed Euridice, which New York Times writer Anthony Tommasini called, "a confident performance - impressively responsive to the singers during their long stretches of orchestra-accompanied recitative - a combination of urgency and flexibility."

His other projects include Treemonisha at the Théâtre du Châtelet de Paris, debuts with the Chicago Sinfonietta, Huntsville Symphony, Dayton Philharmonic and the Staatskapelle Weimar.

Coming to the United States for their third performance, Orquestra de Sao Paulo will be touring from coast to coast, performing orchestral favorites with more modern, tonal and minimalist pieces by native Brazilian conductors.

"In the one work on the program in which the orchestra's performance could be easily measured against the international standard - the Brahms Second Symphony - both the quality of the ensemble's sound and the level of energy it brought to its playing were extremely high," wrote Allan Kozinn of them The New York Times, following the 2009 United States debut at the Metropolitan Opera house.

The ensemble comes to the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall this Sunday at 7:00 pm. Tickets are $40, $30, $15, Five College/GCC/STCC students and Youth 17 and under: $15.

Craig Holland can be reached at dcraigholland@gmail.com.

WE HAVE THE BEST NAMES IN CLOTHING & SKIS ON SALE NOW!
Outerwear by
THE NORTH FACE • SPYDER
UNDER ARMOUR • VOLKI
VOLKI • ATOMIC • KZ • SALOMON
FISCHER • DYNASTAR • LINE
40-70% OFF 2008 & 2009 SKIS
COMPETITIVE EDGE
SKI & BIKE
www.compedgeskibike.com
Rt. 5/Holyoke Rt. 9/Hadley Rt. 83/East Longmeadow

Boney, Lecluyse lead UM to third consecutive win

By Ben Lambert
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts tennis team avenged last year's loss in a dominating fashion yesterday, as it defeated the Rhode Island Rams 7-0 at home in Amherst. UMass (3-0) stayed undefeated with the win, while also handing Rhode Island (3-1) their first loss of the season.

"This was a really good win for us. URI was undefeated," said UMass coach Judy Dixon. "I'm really happy with today's performance." Before today, the Rams were undefeated in their three previous contests this year. The Minutewomen never trailed as they swept all seven matches.

No. 1 singles player Magdalena Ploch defeated Kirsten Leikem 6-2, 6-1 in straight sets. "Maggie played spectacular tennis today," said Coach Dixon. "She really got into the kid's head out there." Ploch improved her record to 1-0 against Rhode Island with the win. As a freshman last year, she did not compete in the match against the Rams.

UMass	7
URI	0

No. 2 singles player Julia Comas and No. 6 singles performer Tanisha Hodgson both overcame strong opponents, coming from behind to earn victories. Comas defeated Pam Emery 7-6(5), 6-1, while Hodgson overcame a first-set loss to beat Brooke Hoover 4-6, 6-4, 1-0(10-6).

"Tanisha and Julia were the come-from-behind-kids today," said coach Dixon.

The Minutewomen also took the other three singles matches. No. 3 player Candynce Boney learned from last year's loss to Kirsten Leikem at No. 1 singles as she defeated Tristany Leikem 6-2, 6-3. In No. 4 singles, senior captain Maude Lecluyse beat Christen Cadigan 6-4, 6-2. Kaitlyn Carpenter, who defeated Cadigan last year at No. 2 singles, triumphed over Amanda Barletta 6-1, 6-2.

Before their success in singles action, UMass started off on the right foot with its doubles play. Ploch and Comas teamed up to beat Kirsten and Tristany Leikem 8-3. Thus far this year, Ploch and Comas are undefeated when playing together.

Boney and Lecluyse won a battle with Cadigan and Hoover, as they took their match at No. 2 doubles 9-8(4). The UMass veterans showed their determination as they won a 7-4 tiebreaker to win the match.

The mental fortitude of her team after the win pleased Coach Dixon.

"The kids showed great mental toughness out there. We fought from behind," said Coach Dixon. "It was freezing, but we beat a team that beat us 4-3 last year."

The Minutewomen now turn their eyes to the future.

"[This win] puts us in the top third of the A-10," said Coach Dixon. The team looks to prove this when they return to action at the ITA Regional Championships.

These matches will be played at Yale University from Saturday, Oct. 24 to Monday, Oct. 26. Previously scheduled matches against Fordham in Amherst and at Albany are postponed due to predictions of inclement weather over the next several days. New dates and times will be announced in the upcoming weeks.

Ben Lambert can be reached at wlambert@student.umass.edu

AMANDA JOHNSON/COLLEGIAN

The undefeated Minutewomen blanked Rhode Island with strong performances from Maude Lecluyse and No. 1 singles player Candynce Boney in both singles and doubles play.

UMass rows next on Charles River

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Correspondent

This weekend, the University of Massachusetts crew team travels 90 miles east on the Massachusetts Turnpike to take part in the Head of the Charles Regatta in Boston, which is the most important race the Minutewomen will compete in this year.

In the biggest race for UMass this weekend, sophomore Julia Richter represented the Minutewomen in the singles race. Richter finished third in her singles race last week at the Head of the Housatonic Regatta in Derby, Conn.

"I'm excited for Julia," said head coach Jim Dietz. "She is a world class athlete, and has already competed at a world class level."

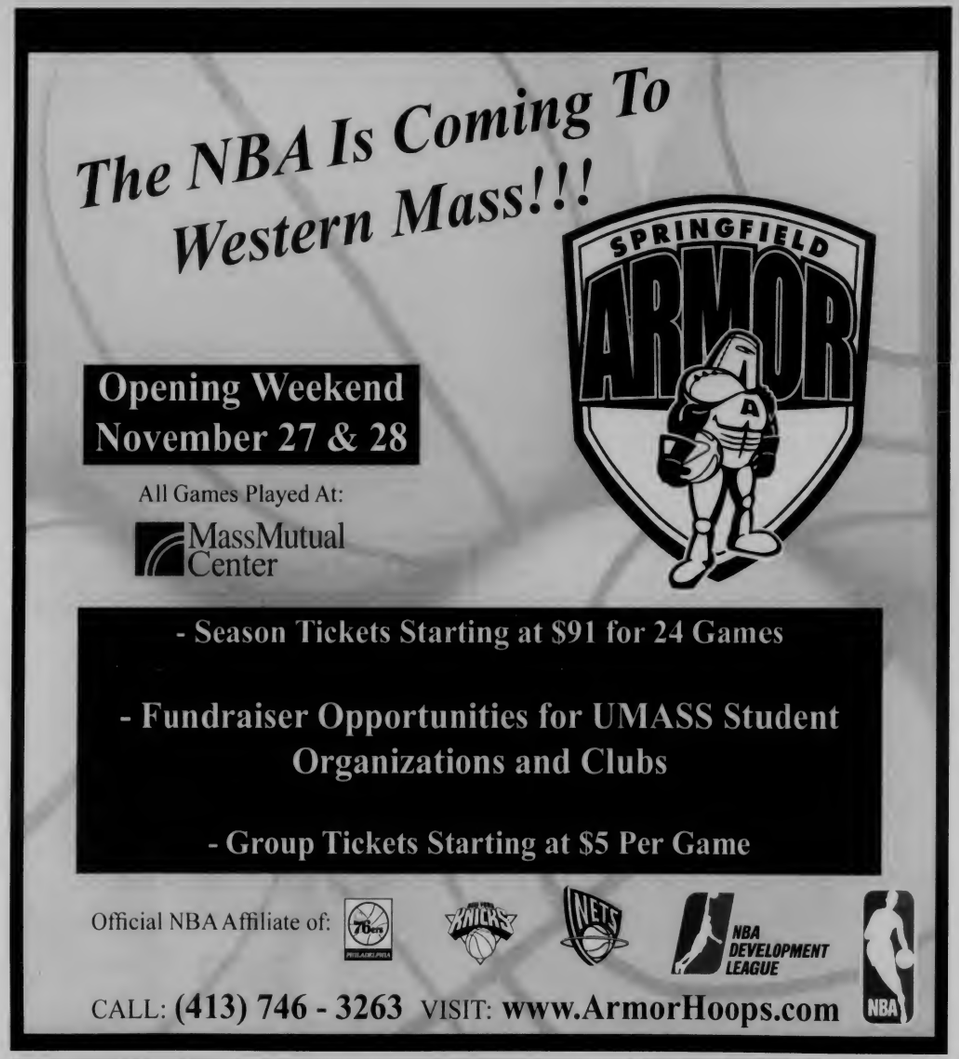
UMass will also enter boats in the lightweight eight and open-weight eight. Also, head coach Jim Dietz will race in the Veteran Singles race, and assistant coach Laura Simon will be a coxswain in the Alumni eight.

In the Regatta, the Minutewomen compete against members of some of the most prestigious collegiate crew teams in the country as well as members of some high-profile national rowing teams. Even if UMass comes home without placing in the top three in any race, Dietz still believes the team can gain valuable experience in Boston.

"College kids like ours are going to be able to see the best in the world rowing," Dietz said. "Granted we're UMass out of the 'small Atlantic-10', the gals are going to be able to see some of the best racers in the world. And if you wanna be the best, you gotta see what the best look like."

The Head of the Charles Regatta is the largest two-day crew event in the world. Over 7,500 athletes from around the world compete in the 55 events hosted on the Charles.

This weekend's race marks the 45th annual Head of the Charles, which the Cambridge Boat Club hosts on the river that divides Cambridge from Boston. Last year, the race drew a crowd of 300,000 people to the riverbanks.



Coach Dietz is happy about his team's progress so far this fall, but similar to his sentiments after the Head of the Housatonic, he said that this week's race will be a learning experience.

"I think that the girls have been training really hard," said Coach Dietz of his team's mentality. "I think they're excited to race, but they're aware that while we're working hard, this isn't our season. Our focus is more long-term."

Even if they come home empty-handed, the UMass rowing team has the opportunity to witness some of the most celebrated rowers in the world converge on the same waters that they will compete in.

Neil Carroll can be reached at nacarrol@student.umass.edu.

DANSKO DAYS
Wednesday Oct. 14 - Saturday Oct. 17
dansko $20 off
All Danskos! Take $20 off any pair - as many as you want.
This is your opportunity!
Hurry - while we have your style, size and color!
ALL DANSKOS
4 DAYS!
ZANNA
Women's clothing, shoes and accessories
Amherst Williamstown

UMass starts its season with BU

UM eyes win after '09 defeat

JEFFREY ENGMANN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The coaches' voices were barely audible, as practice continued to go on in Boyden Gym. The sounds that filled the air as both the men's and women's swimming teams prepared for their first race of the season were that of hard work. The Massachusetts' swimming and diving teams were preparing for homecoming weekend as they embark on the 2009-2010.

As the men's team knifed through their last lap of the day, men's head coach Russ Yarworth enthusiastically went to high five his swimmers and give words of encouragement as they reached the end of the pool to conclude their day.

The energy and intensity transmitted from coach to players seemed spirited and genuine, especially for someone embarking on his 31st season as head coach. The length is the second longest in all of UMass athletics.

"I love coaching," Yarworth said. "I'd rather be on deck than be anywhere else."

Hard work is supposed to pay off and frequently has for the Minutemen, winner of three straight Atlantic 10 swimming and diving championships.

In Yarworth's tenure as head coach, the program won 11th A-10 championships, including last year, which marks the team's eighth victory in nine years. The teams have been training since school reopened in September, and have already made strides.

"The month we've been at it I've been very pleased with the progress. The kids are stronger, they're more fit, and they're starting to be faster and ultimately that's what we're trying to do," Yarworth said.

The Minutemen are led by a strong returning class, including the trio of senior captains: Andrew Wilbrant, Justin Brooks and Tim Smith. Yarworth couldn't say enough about how much the three have embraced their role as the leaders of this team, and believes that their winning attitude permeates through the team.

"They've developed with the program, and have improved every year as individuals and also as swimmers," Yarworth said.

Brooks hopes to build off the momentum he had last season as he was able to finish first in the 1650M freestyle for the third year in a row. However, he didn't seem too interested in talking about individual accolades, more so, he wanted to talk about the team's goals and potential.

"I think the team is really excited. We've been working out hard in the offseason so hopefully it shows," said Brooks.

Immediately following the men's practice, the Minutewomen took the pool. Minutewomen head coach Bob Newcomb is excited about the potential of his team this season as well. The team had several key contributors graduate last semester.

"We have a whole new dynamic and a whole new group and it's exciting," Newcomb said. "They have come together very well they are training very hard and had a great attitude when they showed up. I can't ask for anything more right now."

Nevertheless with senior co-captains Joan Baltazar and Elizabeth Walsh as well as fellow senior Eryn Brewer, Liz Wester, and Ashley Dress hope to help lead by example and nurture a young group with lots of potential. The women have been very successful in recent years and hope to finish in the top three of the Atlantic 10 Conference this season.

Captain Elizabeth Walsh is very encouraged by what she has seen from the freshman class.

"The team looks very good. The freshman class gives us a lot of depth. I just think that it's going to be a really good season," Walsh said.

Another group of athletes looking to have a great season are the divers on both the men's and women's side. Nine-year head coach Mandy Dixon believes that both her men's and women's teams can be successful this season.

The women's side will be led by sophomore Hannah Swift who had a very strong freshman season, and looks to receive significant contributions from Molly Elkins. Dixon believes that her male divers are as strong as any in the northeast, as they are a very experienced group with much potential.

Both teams have four home meets on the schedule, as they have some of the strongest teams in the nation will visit Joseph Rogers Pool this swimming season. The teams will take part in the Terrier Invitational, which starts Nov. 20. The A-10 Championships will take place in New York from Feb. 17-20.

Nevertheless, this weekend race will be significant for many reasons.

All the coaches seemed too eager to see how their team looks and what their team has to offer. They are very aware of Boston University's speed and potential, and are looking forward to compete in front of their home crowd. Although they would like to start the season off with a victory, they know that their main obstacles lie further ahead in some of the bigger races of the season.

"The biggest thing is it as an opportunity to see how the freshmen do it," Newcomb said. "I've watched them train for five weeks and I want to see them on the blocks in competition. BU is an incredible team so it's a good way to open up against some stiff competition."

The season officially kicks off at 11 a.m.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen handed first loss of season by Bears

BY DAN GIGLIOTTI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The oddly-shaped rugby ball is known to take some strange hops and the Massachusetts club rugby team felt the misfortune of that last Saturday at Coast Guard Academy. The Minutemen look to bounce back this weekend against Rhode Island.

On a blustery day in New London, Conn., the wind played a considerable role pushing the Bears out to an early lead that they would not concede. Thanks to a few miscues by the Minutemen down the stretch, Coast Guard handed UMass (4-1) its first loss of the season 26-11.

Though the loss disappointed UMass coach Al Baker's team, the Bears' 2-3 strong effort did not surprise him.

"I know the coach and I knew they would play a hard game," Baker said. "They were a little more ready. They played a tighter game."

The two squads battled for possession at the onset of the match. Six minutes into play, with the wind at their backs, the Bears caught a break when they booted the ball past a line of forwards to the Minutemen's back players.

A strong gust caused the ball to carom off the pitch in an unexpected way sending fullback Clark Hoopes awry and creating an opening for an ambitious Coast Guard player to make the recovery and run forth for the game's first try, followed by a successful point after.

Ten minutes later, the Bears launched another punt that would escape Hoope's clutches, similarly resulting in a try. The ensuing two-point attempt stayed true putting UMass in an early 14-0 hole after 16 minutes. Baker acknowledged the two plays as being tough breaks for his team.

"[They] could have gone either way. The ball bounced their way," Baker said.

UMass managed to overcome the air current and get some points on the board before halftime. With the two frontlines clashing at around midfield and the Minutemen in control of the orb, senior Nick Petmezis found a crease in the defense and slashed up tackle, outrunning an opposing wing on his way to a diving score. The wind pushed a Josh Reid kick wide of the posts leaving the tally at 14-5 midway through the game.

The teams switched fields after the break and UMass did its best to capitalize on this as an opportunity to let the wind carry them to back into the game. The Minutemen controlled the ball for much of the second half and found themselves slowly, but surely drawing closer to the Bears on the scoreboard.

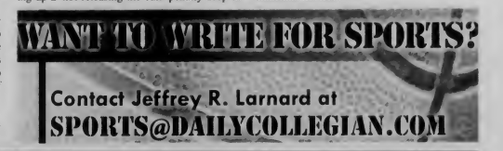
Attempting to withstand pressure from the Minutemen, the Bears misplayed a ruck, giving up a 'not releasing the ball' penalty deep in their own territory. Reid chipped a penalty kick through the uprights for three points. A second Coast Guard fault six minutes later allowed UMass to close the gap even further to three points after another Reid conversion. But with the score 14-11 and the final whistle looming, the Bears came back alive, spelling the end of the Minutemen scoring.

As time ran down in the final ten minutes of the game, the Bears imposed their will, gaining two more tries and dashing any chances for a UMass comeback. Aided by a missed tackle, Coast Guard touched the goal-line for a try, giving them an eight-point lead. They followed that up by bullying their way downfield during a series of rucks and mauls, scoring just left of the goal post as a consequence of another broken Minuteman tackle.

UMass did well to possess the ball, keeping it from the Bears' offense, so the final minutes were discouraging as the team felt the fickle force of momentum.

"The first score was a surprise. The next one really took the wind out of our sails," Baker said. "It was a good battle through the first 70 minutes. [The score] is not a total reflection. [We] only got 80 minutes, got to get it done in 80 minutes."

Baker reiterated the adverse weather issues that both teams faced during the contest. Kickers went 1-for-3 battling up-wind and a perfect 4-for-4 booting with it. Neither squad could push its opposition out of their third of the field while they played into the wind and it was surprising to see each team score a try in that direction.



The Minutemen were without the services of two of their starting forwards including Brendan Daly who scored four tries against Amherst in their previous game. The two players are slated to be back in the lineup this weekend.

Despite the loss, UMass is still atop the Men's Division II standings in the New England Rugby Football Union. The Minutemen will continue their preparation for a playoff run in the same way they have all season. The loss was a tough one to swallow for UMass and something they would hope not to repeat.

"We would rather those [to Coast Guard] than in the last game of the season. They don't want to feel like that again," Baker said.

The Minutemen take the pitch again on Saturday, entering their final match of the short regular season. They welcome the University of Rhode Island to town this homecoming weekend that comes off a win last Saturday, edging Amherst 21-14. The Rams look to avenge a 17-7 loss at the hands of the UMass on Sept. 26.

Dan Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

UM looks to stop losing ways at home

Minutewomen change defense against Rams

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

At this point in the season, wins are at a premium for the Massachusetts women's soccer team.

After a 2-0 start in the Atlantic 10 schedule, UMass promptly turned the other way, losing its last three conference games. Now five games remain before the start of the A-10 Championships, a four-day tournament that the Minutewomen aspired to make at the start of the season.

Improvement on its 2-4 conference record is a must if UMass (3-8-2 overall, 2-4 A-10) wants to secure a spot in the tournament. It all starts on Saturday, when the Minutewomen face Rhode Island at home on Rudd Field.

UMass coach Angela Napoli realizes the gravity of both this game and the games to come.

"This game is very important. We're still in position to make a run for the tournament," Napoli said. "We need every point we can get in order to meet our goals. I think we're prepared for Rhode Island; it should be a good, challenging game."

Like UMass, Rhode Island (4-8-1 overall, 2-4 A-10) struggled finding consistent offense throughout the season. Opponents outscore the Rams, 30-16, and average 2.14 goals per game to the Rams' 1.14.

Similar statistical categories tell a familiar story for UMass, as opponents outscore and outshoot the Minutewomen, 23-9 and 255-141, respectively.

Rhode Island is known for its aggressive style of play, and Napoli understands that her team needs to execute a mildly-altered defensive approach to stop the Rams.

"The Rams are very good at taking people on off the dribble. They like to go right at you and not pass as much," Napoli said. "We have to keep our feet moving and play good team defense to contain them. Countering on their turnovers will be very important."

Although much of UMass' woes can be attributed to a floundering offense, there is still room to force that trend in the other direction. The Minutewomen are fairly consistent at creating scoring opportunities throughout this season, but finishing is their downfall.

UMass took its recent frustrations to the field and work-out rooms.

"They look good. Tuesday was a fitness day and the last two days they've been playing their guts out," Napoli said. "They know we're still in it and we have a legitimate shot. They have not been getting the results they expect, so this game will be a good opportunity to win and gain some momentum."

Offensively, UMass currently relies on just two players to consistently show up on the stat sheet after games. Junior Sydney Stoll has nine points this year on four goals and one assist. Therese Smith, also a junior, has eight points on three goals and two assists. No one else on the roster has more than two points.

"It would just be nice to have an overall team effort," Napoli said. "Our flanks need to get more involved in the scoring; they've been working hard but haven't seen results."

This season doesn't boast immense offensive numbers from the Rams either, but unlike UMass, their scoring comes from multiple players. Eight people on their roster have at least three points, headlined by Alexis Veith and Ashley Evangelista, who both have seven points.

Rhode Island's offense will have to deal with a dependent UMass defense and even more dependent goalkeepers. A hot topic this season has been the goalie situation for the Minutewomen, who initially split time between senior Lauren Luckey and freshman Emily Cota in net, but since have chosen to stick with Cota for entire games.

After being outscored 11-1 in its previous three matches, Napoli is now undecided about the resolution.

"Right now we're looking at Emily to start the game," Napoli said. "Whether or not she plays all 90 minutes we still have to decide."

Nonetheless, this game symbolizes a start to the second half of the A-10 schedule for the Minutewomen; a half crucial in deciding who will make the tournament.

"Our goal of this game is to put in a full 90-minute effort," Napoli said. "We've been starting a little flat so I want our players to come out and battle all the way through."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen need to close games better in A-10

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

After dropping a 3-2 decision to Fordham on Sunday, the Massachusetts women's soccer team is now winless in four overtime contests this season.

The Minutewomen (3-8-2, 2-4-0 Atlantic 10) came back from a 2-0 score to tie the game at the 75:37-mark on a goal by redshirt junior Sydney Stoll, but could not cap off the comeback in the extra period. This is the second time this season that UMass tied a contest in the second half, but fell short when the game went past regulation.

On Sept. 17, senior Katie Ruggles tied the game against Hartford (4-8-2) with the team's first goal of the season at the 51:28 mark. However, the come-from-behind victory eluded the Minutewomen when they could not build momentum the rest of the second half or in either overtime period. Hartford also failed to score and the game ended in a 1-1 tie.

The Minutewomen tied New Hampshire (3-11-1) four days later in their second of three consecutive double-overtime matches. They could not capitalize on the Wildcats' offensive struggles and the game ended with no score.

Three of the team's overtime games came in nonconference play. That is good news for the Minutewomen. Had these matches come in conference play, they could be in a completely different spot in the A-10 pecking order.

The team's poor play in extra periods is of no concern to UMass Coach Angela Napoli.

"Our regular season (overtime losses) won't affect us, but our conference (losses) might," Napoli said. "I hope we take our destiny into our own hands. I hope we don't put ourselves in that position (where the losses could cost us)."

However, the team's inability to thrive in overtime situations could be detrimental heading in the final three weeks of the season. With a heated race of 14 teams vying for six A-10 tournament slots, every game counts. Another heartbreaking overtime loss could result in the loss of a playoff berth.

Stoll, Smith continue strong play

Despite the team's offensive struggles this season, Stoll and junior Therese Smith are on pace to have career-best seasons.

Stoll scored in both of the team's losses over the weekend to raise her team-leading goal total to four. She also has tallied an assist on this season. Those numbers leave her two shy of tying her career highs, set as a sophomore, in both categories.

Before missing a third of the 2007 season and all of 2008 due to injury, Stoll tallied six goals, three assists, and fifteen point in her sophomore campaign. She has already doubled her shot total from that season with 34 in 13 games this season.

Smith is UMass' other top offensive contributor this season. She tallied one goal and two assists over the weekend, with both assists going toward Stoll goals. She has already tied her statistics from last season with three goals, two assists, and eight points.

With five regular-season games and a possible A-10 tournament berth remaining for the Minutewomen, Smith will set new career highs sooner rather than later.

"They have played their strengths," Napoli said of Stoll and Smith. "They are both offensive-minded players. They are two of our better players and have experience. They will be looked upon as scorers continuing on."

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu

JOSH KELLOGG/COLLEGIAN

Junior midfielder/forward Ashley Hamel and the Minutewomen broke a three-game scoreless streak in a 3-1 loss to La Salle last Friday. UMass hosts URI tomorrow at 1 p.m.

Philly marks first A-10 stop for UM

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Junior Makaela Potts drives through midfield against Temple last seeson. Potts leads the Minutewomen with six assists to go along with five goals this season.

Minutewomen face Hawks, Owls

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team heads to Philadelphia, Penn. this weekend to take on two Atlantic 10 opponents in Saint Joseph's and Temple to open up conference play.

Being the only team yet to play an A-10 game, UMass coach Justine Sowry is eager to dive into the conference which she feels is up for grabs.

"Some teams are doing better than usual, and some teams are not doing as well as they have the last couple years," she said. "As soon as conference games start, teams step up [to] a whole other level and I think it's wide open this year."

In their previous game, the No. 10 Minutewomen (9-4) suffered a 3-0 loss to Connecticut last Friday, marking the first occasion this season that UMass failed to score in a contest.

Sowry wasn't impressed with the team's performance and feels they must get back to playing their type of game in order to rebound this weekend.

"It's just getting back to our game plan," Sowry said. "The last couple opponents have controlled the tempo and we've been doing a lot of the chasing. We're going to get back to our style of play, from outletting from the backfield and trying to get back to a nice passing game."

The last game concluded a difficult stint of four games in seven days, with three of those games coming on the road. Two of the seven games also placed the Minutewomen against top 10 opponents, No. 7 UConn (13-1) and No. 6 Syracuse (13-1).

Temple and Saint Joseph's are teams the Minutewomen have had success against in the past., UMass has a stranglehold on the series against the Hawks dating back to 1989, holding a 24-3 record. The Owls have fared better in their history, but still trail the all time series 10-29 against UMass, dating back to 1978.

Saint Joseph's (4-7) heads into Friday's game with momentum, winning four out of its last six games after beginning the season with five consecutive losses. Hawks' goalkeeper Kelly Swanick has a 3.29 GAA and a .595 save percentage this year and was named the A-10 Co-Player of the Week after recording two shutouts last weekend.

In 2008, the Minutewomen recorded shutouts against Saint Joseph's in both their meetings. The regular season matchup went 4-0 in favor of UMass, with four different Minutewomen scoring. The two teams squared off again in the A-10 Championship semifinals, with UMass once again winning decisively, 3-0, receiving three goals from Katie Kelly.

While the Hawks enter the weekend playing well Temple, comes into Sunday's game dropping seven of its last eight games, including its conference opener.

The Owls (4-10) are 3-3 at home and are well rested, not having played a game since last Friday. Junior co-captain, Sarah Dalrymple, has two shutouts this season along with a 2.79 GAA and 0.678 save percentage while playing every minute in goal.

In their last matchup, 70 minutes were not enough to decide a closely-contested game. The Minutewomen eventually won a stroke-off, 3-1, to take the regular season conference title after the teams were deadlocked in a 1-1 tie through two overtime periods.

Even though UMass dealt with injuries and fatigue the last few weeks, Sowry isn't too concerned. To have a good chance of winning the conference, the Minutewomen need to get off to a strong start this weekend.

"If we play our style on the day, I'm confident we can get the job done."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

UMass must stop corners and battle fatigue to win

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Familiarity plays a big role when breaking down opponents. It's common sense that knowing an opponent's tendencies makes them an easier team to beat.

The No. 10 Massachusetts field hockey team is 16-1 against Atlantic 10 Conference opponents since UMass coach Justine Sowry became head coach and 7-7 in the conference in the two years prior.

Against Temple and Saint Joseph's in particular, the Minutewomen (9-4) are 1-1 and 4-0, respectively, in the past two seasons.

When UMass faces the Owls (4-10, 0-1 A-10) and the Hawks (4-7, 1-0 A-10) this weekend in Philadelphia, Penn., Sowry knows one thing; a win won't come easy against either team.

"Philadelphia teams, they're fighters," Sowry said. "We're expecting a tough contest in both games. It's going to be physical and both teams pounce on mistakes."

One of the most glaring areas of concern for the Minutewomen is allowing penalty corners. So far this season, opponents have 125 penalty corners against UMass while Temple allowed 92 and SJU 104.

Gaining penalty corners against either team is another story.

In the Philly series last season, the Minutewomen held the penalty corner advantage 31-14. UMass outscored the Hawks 7-0 in two games combined last season, including a hat trick by junior captain Katie Kelly, who leads UMass with six goals and one assist this season.

The Minutewomen have a strong penalty corner unit this season, led by defender Makaela Potts. Potts frequently takes the shot off the push and has five goals, six assists this season.

However, UMass can only hope to win this weekend if it can field a team to play. The Minutewomen allowed four goals in the first half this season as opposed to 12 in the second half and lost both overtime games they played in so far this season. Opponents forced 72 corners in the second half of games this season, four fewer than UMass's season total so far.

"I think in general, our small squad-size and not having depth off the bench is definitely contributing to us fading in games," said Sowry. "We are definitely young so I think our youth or inexperience has something to do with it but also just our fatigue levels. We have a tendency to make more mistakes late in games so that's something we want to focus on as we move forward into A-10 games."

Sowry said that the team is struggling right now in terms of keeping healthy and that this is the worst stretch of injuries that she's experienced as UMass head coach. Keeping possession of the ball is critical for the Minutewomen because they can't afford to chase with the level of fatigue that plagues them right now.

In terms of keeping team spirits up and maintain focus, Sowry pointed to Kelly and Potts as major role players as the team struggles with injury.

"Certainly our junior class is performing well, they have a great work ethic and great pride," said Sowry. "People like Jaime Bourazeris, Katie Kelly and Makaela Potts have done a really good job at keeping the team together. They're trying to lead by example and bring the freshmen and sophomores up to their level as well but it's a tough pass and we're hanging in there."

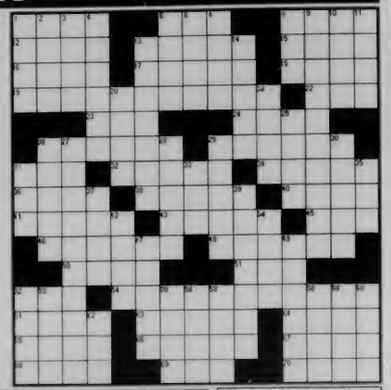
Team health becomes that much more critical as post-season play approaches and Sowry noted that every game matters from this weekend until the rest of the season.

She'll rest players whenever possible but come game time, she knows that every player needs to be at the top of their game. A loss down the stretch could mean the difference between competing for the conference championship and watching on the sidelines as another team earns the title on their home field when UMass hosts the tournament in November.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Forward Katie Kelly powers past an Owl defender in a game last season. She led the Minutewomen with four shots in the 2-1 overtime win.



comics

JORNALISM AT IT'S FINEST

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Blend
5. Blame
8. Creative work
12. Found in skin lotion
13. Tag
15. Nonflowering plant
16. Mob
17. Become accustomed
18. Threesome
19. Ungratefulness
22. Cat hand
23. Relative of an ostrich
24. Monopoly or Trivial Pursuit, for example
26. Not ours
29. Truth
31. 52 in Roman numerals
32. A type of small lizard
34. A leather strip
36. Formerly (archaic)
38. Code
40. Tropical root
41. Outfit
43. Donated
45. Explosive letters
46. A musical composition of 3 or 4 movements
48. Gives expression to
50. Charge per unit
51. The night before
52. Muhammad ___
54. Baseless
61. Moral weakness
63. A peninsula in northeastern Egypt
64. Woodworking groove
65. Elliptical
66. Construct
67. Departure
68. Join metal
69. Female sheep
70. Ritual

DOWN
1. Wise men
2. Distinctive flair
3. Not short
4. A baccalaureate
5. Hindu princess
6. Adjoin
7. South American country
8. Frequently
9. Commit
10. Murres
11. Frozen precipitation
13. Religious rite
14. Shelf
20. Dogfish
21. Cobs of corn
25. Glove
26. Grows weary
27. Belonging to the past
28. Goat-like antelope
29. A flow control device
30. Stones
31. Chair part
33. Japanese apricot
35. A cooking vessel
37. Albacore or bluefin
39. Mark for misconduct
42. Maori club
44. Exploded star
47. Anxious
49. Displaying warmth or affection
52. Acknowledge
53. Not pre-recorded
55. Telegram
56. Once again
57. Competition involving speed
58. Cab
59. Modify written material
60. Lavish affection (on)
62. Old age

UMASS AMHERST

New Schedule for Winter Session

Earn credits during break!

Online classes begin: December 21, 2009

On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010

Sneak peek of class offerings listed at www.UMassULearn.net

"Have you ever gotten the feeling that you aren't completely embarrassed yet, but you glimpse tomorrow's embarrassment?"
-Tom Cruise, "Jerry Maguire"

JOIN THIS MONTH

no money down only $10 per month

offer expires: NOVEMBER 11

call for more information: 413.582.9900

the judgement free zone

planet fitness

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303.

LOST

Lost-silver bracelet with heart charm, engraved with initials DLP and date on back. Sentimental value, will offer reward. Please call 978-273-7298. Thank you.

WANTED

Part-time Personal Care Attendant, about 10-12 hours/week. Flexible hours, Please call Patrick. (413) 275-7928

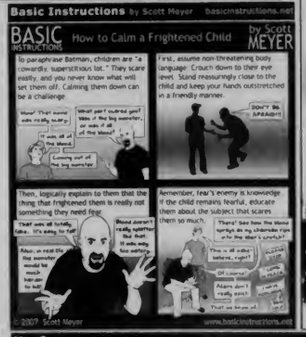
Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paseleton@nursing.umass.edu

SPRING BREAK 2010

Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

"Today, people can say anything they want. Suddenly it gets in the rumor mill and then it evolves and then somehow it becomes fact and you say, What is this? You know, why don't you ask me?"
-Tom Cruise

ANNOUNCEMENTS



Due to circumstances beyond our control, an ad was incorrectly published on 9/23/09 for Lazard. The advertisement was meant for recruiting at Amherst College. We apologize for the inconvenience this may have caused UMass Amherst students.

Montreal Party Weekends. From $89 Includes Hotel, Bus, and Clubs montrealexpress.net (781)979-9001

FOR RENT

Nice 5 bedroom house, music room, washer/dryer, on bus line, ample parking near UMass. $1,875+ per month. Skibiski Realtors (413) 586-1827

Basic Instructions by Scott Meyer — basicinstructions.net

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro — travisdandro.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Hits Now 94.3 FM
The Valley's Hit Music Now in HD on 99.3 HD2
www.hits943.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
You need brain exercise. Memorize every Schwarzenegger ice pun in "Batman and Robin."

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Is your paper overdue? Submit it late with a note that simply says, "a wrinkle in time."

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Lil Jon's sunglasses hold a power greater than that of the Holy Grail. You have your quest.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
A real baseball fan wouldn't commit crimes of arson just because it's the World Series.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
If you made a movie out of your life, would it be an original, or a remake?

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Got some time on your hands? Save Hollywood some time, and write "Saw XXII."

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Everybody who's anybody does a little crossdressing once in a while.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
It's raining too much lately because the sky is sad that NASA tried to kill the moon.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Good things will happen if you spontaneously yell, "1.21 Jigawatts!"

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Please remember to save your game often.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
You better stay away from the Natty Ice, you know what I'm say-ing.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Wash your face more thoroughly. No one wants to look at a sewage cap.

FOOD, FUN, SPUDZOOKAS!
Weekends & Holidays 10am-5pm thru Nov 1
S. Main Street Rt. 47 Sunderland
www.mikesmaze.com
413-665-8331

SODOKU

		7				6	2
	8				2			9
		2		3
			1			7	3
	5							1
	6					2		8
	2			7	8		4	6
		5	9		1			3
8						9

Rolling Green

All Rents Include: heat, hot water, and electricity*

Move-in Special:
$99 security deposit.
NO application fees.
NO non-refundable move-in fee.

1 bedroom: $980*
2 bedroom: $1135*
2 bedroom townhouse: $1275*
3 bedroom townhouse: $1500*
4 bedroom townhouse: $1995*

Call for our Fall Specials!
Contact us:
(413) 253-3000
rollinggreenamherst@eqr.com

*Pricing fluctuates. All pricing listed is based on a 12 month lease. Shorter term leases are available. Please contact us for availability.

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!

sunraise printing

Custom Printed Tees

Student Discounts

586-7133

sunraiseprinting.com

Hadley, MA 01035

Leold by Roger & Salem Saloom

Leold www.leold.com by Roger and Salem Saloom© 1997

Boy, it takes a while to forget your old girlfriend.

The other night I was waiting in the ticket line at a movie theater with another girl and a nearby public phone was ringing and I really thought it was my old girlfriend calling me to ask if I wanted to meet her for an ice cream later on that night.

Really, after a while my old girlfriend and I weren't any good anymore, anyway.

I'd better start a hobby.

Maybe I'll paint very tiny figurines of the combatants of the Zulu war of 1879.

Yeah, that'll do it.

I'll paint lots of little things I can barely see.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 54 LOW: 35 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, 2009

Towns debate school makeup

By Michael Phillis
Collegian Staff

Fundamental change in public education is being debated throughout Massachusetts.

According to the Department of Elementary and Secondary Education's Website, there are 390 public school districts within the Bay State. Governor Deval Patrick's administration believes that this situation needs to be assessed and analyzed so as to make drastic changes.

"[The] population has stagnated and in many districts is dropping. The result is a larger and larger share of the budget is spent on brick and mortar, and administrations [are] leaving not enough money for books, teachers and computers," said Massachusetts State Senator Stan Rosenberg. Rosenberg is a Mass. senator from Hampshire and Franklin County.

What has been proposed is called regionalization. In its simplest form, regionalization is the consolidation of small districts into larger ones in the hope of cutting administrative costs, taking advantages of economies of scale and offering better educational opportunities for students. The improvements could result from the enhanced ability of larger systems to offer support services.

There are others in the state in opposition of this plan. They argue that Patrick's administrations' assumption of cost savings and better opportunities of regionalization is flawed and have contested the administration's initiative to change the basic structure of Massachusetts' public education.

In Amherst, the issue is being debated because of the budget deficit facing the school system. Currently, the most optimistic estimate for budget deficits within the Amherst school system is a gap of approximately $1.4 million, according to the Amherst-Pelham regional school district budget development timeline. According to this report, the district's budget would be $28.6 million to fund public education.

According to the same timeline report, if state funding is not supplied as hoped, the budget gap could widen to $2.2 million.

Currently, the local area K-12 public education system maintains a structure it has held for years. For grades seven through 12, there is a regional middle school and high school that serves four towns — Amherst, Pelham, Leverett and Shutesbury. The middle school serves grades seven and eight, and the high school holds grades nine through 12.

According to the U.S. Census Bureau in 2008, Amherst has a population of approximately 32,000. Pelham, Leverett and Shutesbury are all home to less than 2,000 people and together only supply about 20 percent of students.

Area elementary school dynamics look different from that of the middle and high schools' structures. Amherst has four elementary schools — Wildwood, Crocker Farm, Fort River and Mark's Meadow. But, because of the financial tightening Mark's Meadow will be closed at the end of this school year.

According to an Amherst Public Schools restructuring report, the savings achieved by the closing of Mark's Meadow will be $406,000 in the first year and $671,000 in the second. Pelham, Leverett and Shutesbury have their own town elementary schools.

The district situation is more complicated. There are two different ways schools are connected. In a district, there is one school committee that sets policy, allocates the budget and hires the district's superintendent. In a union, each school has its own school committee but shares a superintendent.

Pelham and Amherst are joined under Union 26 for their elementary schools under Superintendent Alberto Rodriguez, who is also the superintendent for the regional middle school and high school. Shutesbury and Pelham are part of Union 28 and each have their own school committee. The towns of Erving, New Salem and Wendell are also a part of Union 28 but those towns send their students to a different middle school and high school.

"I personally would much rather see us regionalized K-12," said Alisa Brewer, an Amherst Select Board member. "From the standpoint of the administration, right now we talked about the

See EDUCATION on page 2

Pictured, the Regional High School that serves Amherst, Pelham, Leverett and Shutesbury is off of Mattoon Street in Amherst.

Homecoming excites UM spirit

Emil Igwenagu catches a pass from Kyle Havens against No. 4 New Hampshire in UMass' 23-17 win on Homecoming weekend at McGuirk Stadium. The sophomore tight end had two receptions in the game for 50 yards.

Hikers learn of nature's uses

Naturalists hike into the woods atop Mount Toby to learn about biomimicry or how nature can lead to new technology

By Bobby Hett
Collegian Staff

On the morning of Oct. 17, this reporter went on an adventure of discovery through the woods of Mt. Toby with naturalist Ted Watt and Biomimicry Guild biologist Tim McGee.

This hike was planned by the Hitchcock Center for the Environment and was open to the public.

The hike was named the "Biomimicry Walk." According to the Biomimicry Guild, biomimicry is, "a new discipline that studies nature's best ideas and then imitates these designs and processes to solve human problems."

The sky was clear Saturday morning and it was slightly chilly, but overall the weather accommodated the hike well.

The forest floor was covered with autumn's red, brown and yellow leaves.

As the hike began, McGee spoke of an insect with a unique ability.

"Most animal's cells freeze at negative 20 degrees Fahrenheit," said McGee. "This insect excretes a protein that prevents the ice crystals from forming allowing the insect to survive at that low a temperature."

"Well, how could this help mankind?" asked McGee leading the group to think like a specialist in biomimcry. "Well antifreeze for a car."

Watt said in response to McGee's question, "Wow, that is amazing to think about."

As a member of the Biomimicry Guild, McGee is trained is what is called "systems thinking," which allows him the mental acrobatics to see ways systems in nature translate into something man can "mimic.""A lot of biomimicry is just about observation," said McGee.

According to a worksheet McGee brought from the Biomimicry Guild, one must observe their surroundings with a "child-like" mind. McGee and his co-workers believe that things that one might normally overlook give great insight.

One example McGee gave the group was during his demonstration of the findings that one can discover simply by picking up a pinecone.

"The way the scales on the pinecone are placed in a spiral," said McGee, "creates a vortex when the wind blows. This vortex brings the charged pollen into the cone pollinating the egg cells inside of the cone."

McGee taught the group that the spiral design of the pine cone could be used to distribute moisture in a building. Additionally, McGee said that it could also be used for another yet to be discovered application.

Watt picked out various species of plants during the hike. Towards the end of the hike, Watt pointed out a blighted chestnut tree.

"This whole area used to be filled with chestnut trees that

See BIOMIMICRY on page 2

Above, the fire tower that sits on top of Mount Toby. Hikers explored the biological functions of many specimens at Mount Toby.

ARTS & LIVING

Lateef and Rudolph stun

UMass faculty member Yusef Lateef performed what he calls autophysiopsychic music, music that comes from the soul this weekend.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutemen upset Wildcats

On Homecoming weekend, No. 18 UMass came out on top over No. 4 UNH, 23-12 behind a strong performances from Jon Hernandez and Victor Cruz

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Michael Fox draws on firsthand experiences seeing Argentine pianist a

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Check out Chris Shovers' videos on the Homecoming football game

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2009

URI next foe for UMass at home

TENNIS

The Minutewomen continued their dominance by extending their unbeaten streak to three. UMass downed Rhode Island, 7-0. Magdalena Ploch led the singles matches with a straight-set win against Kirsten Leikem, 6-2, 6-1.

SEE PAGE 9

SWIMMING

Junior John Clark leads the UMass divers into their first meet tomorrow at home as the Minutemen host Boston University. Clark ranks sixth and 10th all-time in the 3-meter and 1 meter dives as a Minuteman.

SEE PAGE 11

Stoll & Co. host Rams at Rudd

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 28
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGoniesa
Managing Editor Sid Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jeter
Production Manager Michael Sarkisi
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Lettieri
Advertising Production Max Dettmer
Arts & Living Editor Shauna Murphy
Comic Editor Aaron Kesselheim
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Leonard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacik
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tanello
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elise Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comic Andrew Winn
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alissa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Hedwen
Assistant Sports David Bruich
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cash
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick O'Malley

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

Biomimicry benefits discussed along hike atop of Mount Toby would provide bushels of edible nuts," said Watt. "However, there is a fungus that grows inside of the tree that does not allow it to grow. It it wasn't for this fungus the chestnut tree would be abundant in this area."

BIOMIMICRY from page 1

Though low in attendance, all of the hikers agreed they had gained knowledge from McGee.

Even Watt, an experienced naturalist agreed that McGee's talks about biomimicry gave new insights.

"I've known Ted for years," said Marianne Jakus an attendee of the hike. "And it's fun to see him learning learning new things from him. He wouldn't be happy if he wasn't always learning something new."

McGee worked with the Biomimicry Guild in India and became extensively aware of the ecosystem there.

"The forest canopy in India acts as the engine for the monsoons," said McGee. He described how cutting down the forests for development would "cause the monsoon not to go far enough inland."

This would spell drought for the parts of India not hit by the monsoon.

The goal of the Biomimicry Guild would be to help the architects in India design buildings that perform the same function of the forest canopy.

"We would want to build a building that evaporates enough water so the monsoon will continue inland," said McGee.

The Biomimicry Guild wants to help architects design buildings that are "creating condition conducive to life."

The Guild also looks at ways to gather resources more effectively by looking at nature.

"Leaves hold a great deal of nutrients," said McGee. "All those nutrients would be lost if not for the spring ephemerals."

Spring ephemerals are plants that grow low to the ground and hold the leaves in place after the snow from winter melts.

According to McGee all these nutrients would be lost if not for these seemingly insignificant plants and the other species in the ecosystem would suffer.

This type of information would be valuable for landscaping company," said McGee. "To help the growth of the rest of the company, company officials may consider adding types of spring ephemerals."

These organisms have had millions of years to develop these adaptations."

McGee stated that comparatively humans have not been around long at all.

"All our technology has basically sprung up in the last 150 years," said McGee. "With these new technologies, such as the electron microscope we can gain even greater insight [on how these organisms function]."

During the hike, McGee had the hikers look at the rose and he revealed the complexity of how a rose attracts pollinators.

McGee took this reporter's notebook and quickly sketched out the cell in a rose petal.

"Looking straight on the cell is a hexagon," said McGee. "[While] looking at the cell from the side, the cell is dome-shaped. This concentrates the light to one point heating the flower, which attracts pollinators."

According to Science Junkie.org, a Web site dedicated to generation an encyclopedia of science related materials describing plants and animals and other biological beings, the chief pollinator of roses are bees.

McGee explained that these insects and others that commonly pollinate roses are attracted to heat, and therefore seek comfort within the flower's heat.

Other flowers have small bumps that line the surface area of their petals.

According to McGee, the purpose of this is to keep beads of water from falling off the flower.

McGee is unsure why this happens, but he and Watt speculated that the function of this was to act as a "drinking fountain for pollinators."

Discovering and speculating about the unknown is what makes this science fun for scientists studying biomimicry.

While walking uphill, Watt picked up a lime piece of bark. "Maybe this bark glows in the dark," said Watt.

The group gathered around to take a closer look. Watt began to talk about different species that glow in the dark such as the "Jack-O-Lantern" fungus" and algaes that glow in the dark around the surface of the ocean.

McGee said that these algaes glow in the dark to confuse predators as the predators touch the algaes.

McGee said that in order to apply it for human use, people could think of this function as "a company that ships boxes and wants to be able to tell whether or not someone has handled a box. They could find out how the algae's glow in the dark capabilities work and try to apply this function to the boxes so that when touched, the boxes glow in the dark."

On hearing this Watt commented how it is hard for him translate his extensive knowledge of organisms to how it could help industry.

In response to this, McGee said, "It takes an understanding of industrial needs."

The Hitchcock Center will be holding more events similar to this hike in the future. These events are open to the public for a fee.

Watt hopes that students interested in nature participate in these events so they can learn how to transfer theories derived from biology and other science classes into real world situations.

Bobby Jitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

The view of the University of Massachusetts from the top of Mount Toby. According to Mountainzone.com, Mount Toby's recorded height is 1,266 ft.

Brass bands 'Honk' at Hampshire

The Yellow Hat Band from Seattle, Washington marches into Dakin Quad at Hampshire College on Oct. 14. Hampshire hosted a series brass bands to entertain students. The Yellow Hat Band played during The Honk! Festival of activist street bands this October.

Regionalizing public schools

EDUCATION from page 1

silly situation where we have people who work for us that get three separate pay checks." The superintendent and other administrators for example, get a paycheck from the Amherst schools, the Pelham School and the region. This is because each school committee – and in this case there are three – allocates a budget, and therefore apportion a piece of money for those in some administrative roles.

Many from the smaller towns believe that the local control they exert over their local elementary school is vital to its success.

Within the small towns, it is believed by many that the ability to set a budget and make policy for their small school that often teaches just over 100 students, allows them to control a treasure for the community and create an excellent source of education for the kids.

To weigh the issue, a regionalization sub-committee formed. It combined school committee members from all four area towns to study the idea of regionalization.

"People have said they want to show a good faith effort in studying this issue of regionalization," said Catherine Sanderson, vice chair of the regional school committee. "The hope was that the schools and the towns would investigate what were the pros and cons of [regionalization]... fiscally and educationally "[We want to] be in a position to say either yes it's a good idea or no it's not a good idea if the State board came in and said to [regionalize, we] could say here are the reasons why it [does or] doesn't make sense," she said.

At the beginning of the process, state pressure to regionalize was high. Rosenberg wants to keep the decision to regionalize in the hands of local towns.

"We are not pushing any particular plan as legislators. What we want is local people making local decisions rather than Boston," said Rosenberg.

Rosenberg explained the bottom line. "The major arguments that are presented against doing this are that local control is better and that we will lose local control if we join larger districts. The second major dynamic is that people, especially at the elementary school level see their elementary school as a treasure and they don't want to give it up and they don't want to lose control. Change is difficult for people under all circumstances but this becomes extremely emotional for many people."

This has been especially true regarding Amherst's decision to close an elementary school at the University of Massachusetts of 170 kids.

Michael Phillis can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu.

Editor's Note*: An article about the four suspended University of Massachusetts football players that ran on Friday, Oct. 16 included quotes from Jeff Smith, associate athletic director for sports medicine for UMass Athletics. Due to editorial oversight, it was not disclosed that these quotes were obtained by the reporter through a third party who conducted an interview with Smith for a journalism course. Additionally, Smith has said he was not told that the material could end up in The Collegian. Although the information used was accurate, The Daily Collegian would like to apologize to Smith for the error, and to our readers for not being more upfront about how we obtained and made use of it. – S.P. Sullivan, managing editor.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Thin not always in

Lauren Strohmeier

Body dysmorphic disorder and eating disorders seem to be a pervasive ill within American society; in fact, they both have permeated American society so entirely that I bet each and every one of you is aware of at least one person who has an unhealthy relationship with food.

What do I mean by "unhealthy?" Well, any relationship that causes anxiety and emotional duress. The person who grapples with an eating disorder and/or body dysmorphic disorder deals with an inner monologue, a lamenting voice that intones: "Why did I eat that? I hate myself." This voice speaks at every guilt-laden meal and it wields the weapon of some unaccountable shame. The question is: How can this voice be silenced?

Think about all of the classified eating disorders: anorexia, bulimia, binge-eating disorder, orthorexia nervosa, among others. Now, the purpose of this column isn't to describe each and every one of those disorders. Rather, it aims to raise the question of why incidences of eating disorders and body dysmorphic disorder are still multiplying, even after the efforts of psychologists, researchers and eating disorder activists, as evidenced by the Alliance for Eating Disorders Awareness. What is it about these illnesses that make them so completely tethered to the American consciousness?

Life is unpredictable and one hell of an emotional ride. To retain some semblance of composure and stability, people find various ways to cope with stress and ambiguities. Needless to say, there are both healthy and unhealthy ways of coping. People with eating disorders use food, or the lack thereof, to give themselves a false sense of control over their emotions. When used in this way, food can turn from friend to foe. Food is meant to feed the body, not the emotions.

It is no coincidence that eating disorders are running wild within this weight-hysterical society of ours. Regrettably, within the United States, there is an undercurrent of anxiety and intense preoccupation over physical appearances. Watch some television and you'll most likely be subject to the torment of yet another fad diet commercial, replete with ridiculous testimonials of success stories and "before" and "after" photos.

People with eating disorders use food, or the lack thereof, to give themselves a false sense of control over their emotions.

Or, briefly glance (emphasis on "briefly") because a prolonged look might waste brain cells) at the covers of the tabloids and note the bold declarations: "So and so gained weight!" "Did so and so lose too much weight? Get the inside scoop!" Forgive me when I say that I'm saddened whenever I notice evidence of this weight hysteria and its steadfast grip on our society. Unfortunately, this frenzy to look a certain way propagates the birth of eating disorders and body dysmorphic disorder.

There are some people who actually embrace their unhealthy relationship with food. For example, some anorexics call themselves "pro-ana," meaning that they wholeheartedly embrace their disorder and they want to lead a hungry lifestyle.

These people aspire to be "barely-there," and they gloat whenever they manage in whittling their frames down. These people are disrespectful towards those with anorexia who long to have a healthier relationship with food. Anorexia is a serious eating disorder has and is nothing to be desired. The fact that some people place anorexia on a pedestal is a perfect example of the United States' tribute to thinness.

Eating is meant to be a pleasurable activity, without the anxiety and worry about weight that too many people bring to the table. The process of eating is both instinctual and primal, and is meant to answer to the call of our body's need for nourishment. However, too many people have removed themselves from the need of their bodies, choosing instead to answer the call of societal expectations of the ideal appearance.

These people are not in tune with their bodies and this lack of sync causes a friction between body and mind. Perhaps the cavemen had the right mentality when it came to eating. Whatever happened to eating for the purpose of satisfying the palate and physical health, nothing less, nothing more?

Weight-hysteria is deeply entrenched in American society. So, how do we tackle this problem? Well, it will take a lot of time and conscious effort before we can reverse the upward trend in eating disorders and body dysmorphic disorder. After all, Rome wasn't built in a day. The most important goal is to redefine the reasons why we eat. Rather than eat to appease our emotions or to meet some societal standards, we should eat for our health. Only then will our minds become more unified with our bodies.

Lauren Strohmeier is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lstrohme@student.umass.edu.

Days since the new Recreation Center was scheduled to open:

21

...Really?

The affluent and the desperate

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Mike Fox

Like most foreign exchange students, I've walked down foreign streets after a long night in a state of mind often described as less aware. One night, as I worked my way through the winding cobblestone streets, I slowed my pace and noticed a disturbing trend.

People were huddled in doorways with cardboard for walls and blankets for heating. They were huddled in parks, against newsstands, anywhere that promised some support for their cardboard hovels. Suddenly, reflecting on the amount of money I had spent on drinks that night, looking down at the value of my clothes, and combining it all with my sketchy transfer from dollars to pesos, I felt something hollow inside of me.

I remembered a conversation over dinner I had with my host-mother's 35-year-old son. I kept holding back from labeling Argentina as Third World, developing or anything that seemed "inferior" to the North, but he stopped me. Comparing the amount of people living on the streets to the amount in sprawling villas and high-rise condos, he told me this country was far from First World.

The city is divided in two. The north's wide boulevards are reminiscent of old Europe but hinted with a touch of New World excitement. The south is another story.

It is a collection of slums ranging from sprawling government tenements to shanty towns stacked high on each other, supported by the ingenuity of those who construct with nothing. This harsh life has mirror images throughout the world and here it's half the city.

The city is divided in two. The north's wide boulevards are reminiscent of old Europe but hinted with a touch of New World excitement. The south is another story.

Riding the train the next day was eye-opening. Most striking was the demographic shift. The Argentine middle and upper classes are mostly comprised of people of recent European descent. Italian, Spanish, British, German and a stew of others. In the south, the population was largely Bolivian, Colombian and other South Americans.

Trash was strewn on the streets. The houses to my right were three to four stories of brick, plywood, metal and, in some cases, more permanent materials all put together. Narrow streets that looked unpaved twisted between them.

To my left, massive government-financed housing projects, built in almost abstract designs, as if to give them a whimsical air despite the desperation of the people.

The train did pass a lot of people enjoying time in the parks, playing soccer and soaking in the weather. It also passed an amusement park which seemed to feature characters knocked off from Monsters Inc.

The train ended in a valley dwarfed by two massive tenements, cities unto themselves, with their own convenience stores and pizza places lining their bases. Not once during the trip did I feel threatened by the people around me. They were just living their lives like everyone, making them with what they could.

I've heard of worse slums then the places I was taken through. Here, I saw people able to form a basic life, but squeezed into the margins of the city where daily life is more than a struggle. But yet, I was able to witness something far away from the overpriced clubs where my pesos seem to just fly away.

At the end of the day, around 9 p.m., my friend and I were walking down a busy thoroughfare near my neighborhood. Several people, maybe in their teens, approached us asking for money. We refused and they started to grab us. When this happens, one should keep walking. I broke out of the hold that someone tried to put me in and started to continue walking, until I saw my friend pushed up against the wall.

I got ready to start throwing punches, but an old man near us started shouting at the kids. He reached into his jacket as if to draw a weapon, and the kids scattered.

Walking away, my friend told me they were holding a knife to her throat. She confessed it was dull, but we both walked a little more wary.

I knew they would never do anything on a crowded street, but there was desperation in the fact that they would even hint at using one where we were.

Michael Fox is a Collegian columnist. He can reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

SHOOTING STAR

Health care reformers have it backwards

Alex Perry

Just when you thought government couldn't apply less common sense to anything they do, they go out and shock the world again with the Baucus bill. This bill is tough for liberals to defend as the problems it will create will outweigh the benefits it's supposed to bring.

The first point that needs to be noted about health care in this country is that, although there is massive waste and inefficiency, I believe that the health care as provided in this country is amongst the best in the world. The problem with health care is not the quality but the high costs that are constantly rising. The top goal of reformers should be to make health care more accessible and affordable for working Americans. Unfortunately, the Baucus bill will do anything but make health care affordable.

The problem I want to examine is that it mandates that everyone must purchase health care coverage starting in 2013. But what about those who cannot or do not want to pay for the insurance? Under the current proposal, they will be fined between $750 per person and up to $1,500 per family, for those below the poverty line and $950 per person to $3,800 per family for those with incomes three times the poverty level on an annual basis, according to a Heritage Foundation report.

Why does this matter? Well, the consequences should be obvious. If insurance is going to be compulsory, companies are going to have to provide coverage to all Americans, regardless of pre-existing conditions. Everyone who is sick and does not have coverage will jump into the system. However, insurance companies only profit when clients don't require more money from the company then they are paying in premiums. In the best case for insurers, they collect premiums and don't actually need to provide anything for clients. Insurers will not be making money off of the people who will immediately require care when this plan is implemented. So what do you think the insurers will do when they start losing money? Raise premiums, making expensive health care even more so.

If people who are young and healthy can avoid getting health care coverage by paying a fine, they will.

Scott Serota, CEO of Blue Cross Blue Shield, said in an interview with Neil Cavuto on Friday that his company projects that health care premiums could, "go up over a five-year period as much as 50 percent." His issue with the system is a simple one.

If people who are young and healthy can avoid getting health care coverage by paying a fine, they will. When they actually become sick and need care they will get it at the same price as everyone else because insurers will be unable to deny coverage based on pre-existing conditions. If nobody is forced to pay into the system, the only people who will pay in are those who need care. Those who need care will be hurting the balance sheets of insurers because they will be requiring insurers to pay for their care. All insurers will be doing in this system is losing money unless they massively raise their premiums, which is inevitable.

The primary change to the system under this bill will be to make health care even more unaffordable.

This should be obvious to any smart and fair-minded individual. I am willing to speculate that it is also obvious to President Barack Obama that insurers will have to raise their premiums by ridiculous amounts if this bill is passed, making health care provided by private insurers unaffordable. I think it is possible that Obama, Pelosi and Reid are trying to drive these companies out of business to justify government-controlled health care. There is no other explanation for such an ill-advised bill being considered by our government despite the warnings of anyone who is applying common sense and reason.

The goal of the bill should be to make health insurance more affordable to all Americans. Those who argue that the goal of reform should be to make sure every American is covered needs to re-examine their position. They have to understand that if health care is made more affordable, then more of the uninsured will be able to acquire coverage, thereby killing two birds with one stone: more people insured and more affordable coverage for everyone.

There are market-based solutions that can help solve the problems of health care affordability without overhauling the whole system, which, under the current proposal will lead us down a path to socialized health care. Everyone agrees there are massive inefficiencies in the current system and everyone knows the U.S. already spends the most money per capita in the world on health care. The system we have needs to be made more efficient, not overhauled. A race to socialized health care is the last change this country needs right now.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu

Jazz greats Lateef and Rudolph stun

Esteemed musicians Yusef Lateef and Adam Rudolph play improvisations rooted in the spiritual self at last Thursday's unique and tantalizing Bowker Auditorium show Percussionist Adam Rudolph played alongside Yusef Lateef last week. Together the two produced a unique sound that deviated from the constraints of conventional playing styles.

By Christiana McDougal
Collegian Correspondent

Exotic instruments littered the stage of Bowker Auditorium this past Thursday as crowds of people flooded in through the entranceway to see jazz great Yusef Lateef and percussionist Adam Rudolph. Gongs, bells, drums, a saxophone and an assortment of woodwinds sat on stage waiting to be played. As anticipation grew from the audience, it became evident that this wouldn't be just any jazz concert.

The duo performed as part of this fall's Solos and Duos Series presented by the Fine Arts Center in conjunction with WMUA. Lateef, who is also a professor emeritus at the University of Massachusetts, has been playing music for well over 60 years and has been collaborating with Rudolph since 1988.

With a background rooted in jazz and world music, the duo has combined Asian and Middle Eastern string, reed and percussion instruments into a genre of music that breaks down normative barriers.

Lights dimmed as the duo walked out together, graciously bowing to the audience. The show began quietly, with Rudolph tapping on a drum while Lateef sat back in his chair, center stage, and prepared his instruments. Rudolph smoothly walked back and forth playing different drums. There was no need to rush the expected tremendous performance.

The songs they performed were filled with traditional Asian, African and Middle Eastern instruments, soulful moans and chanting. Beginning at a slow, melodic rhythm, the pace increased to a point where you expected it to burst into a full synchronization of beats between the two, but it never happened. Their playing kept the audience on their toes. The two musicians were entirely entranced by what they played. Wearing sunglasses and a yellow scarf draped around his neck, Rudolph constantly had a smile on his face as he swayed to the rhythm of his drumming. They allowed the music to build up as it may and did not fight to make it go somewhere it didn't seek to go.

Stationing himself at a piano, Lateef sat listening to Rudolph drum for a bit before he began playing a rendition of the early 20th century blues standard song, "Trouble in Mind." His soulful singing was a sudden change from the experimental jazz he had been playing only moments before. His moving, mournful voice soon faded out as he went back to his chair to take out his tenor saxophone.

Rudolph's drumming quickened, and Lateef suddenly blared out a few low notes that hit the audience like a ton of bricks. So sudden and unexpected, the notes faded in and out from low, bellowing tones to high, raspy ones leaving you questioning what would be played next. Demonstrating his adherence to nonconventional forms of musicianship, Lateef deviated from the constraints of expected musical playing techniques and began using the saxophone mouthpiece to create powerful birdlike sounds and squeaks.

Watching Lateef play, you can see that he truly adheres to his personal teaching style of autophysiopsychic music, a practice of deriving music through one's spiritual, emotional and physical being. It is evident in his eyes, and listeners can feel it in the music itself. It emanated from the duo and radiated throughout the room as they continued to play in improvisational ways.

Both musicians had already confounded the audience; it was impossible to expect what would happen next. Interweaving very fast playing with slow, quick notes, Lateef suddenly came to life as he hadn't before. Notes roaring out of his saxophone, he jerked in his chair, expressing the zeal of his emotion not previously shown. But as suddenly as it had begun, it ended, and he nodded in acknowledgement as Rudolph sat drumming next to him, his hypnotizing hands moving all about the drum.

There was no stopping between songs. A new song had already begun before you knew the one before it had ended. Lateef's face lit up as he played various woodwinds and sang as Rudolph extracted melodic sounds from the gongs, bringing the music back to the eerie roots from which it first began. The increasing intensity of the song faded as Lateef took out his flute and Rudolph headed to the piano, where they played a melodic and dreamlike melody, which washed away the abstract music that had been played with such fervor just moments ago.

The duo combined a fabulous blend of jazz, blues and experimental world music into one incredible concert that demonstrated of the ability that such musicians have to create new modes and forms of music. It is surely the most refreshing of all musical genres.

The show ended just as it had begun, which was unanticipated and difficult to foresee, thus perfect to conclude the duo's performance. Sitting next to each other, their playing became quieter until it was almost inaudible. Unsure if it was the end of just the beginning of another song, the audience anxiously awaited, as Lateef and Rudolph looked upon them and smiled, indicating that the performance had come to an end as fashionably unpredictably as it had begun.

Christiana McDougal can be reached at cmcdouga@student.umass.edu

UMass faculty member, Yusef Lateef performed autophysiopsychic music, music that comes from one's soul.

Minutewomen back on track

Adams scores 2 in victory over URI

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

Last weekend's highly anticipated Homecoming games did not disappoint the student masses and alumni here to see UMass victories.

The Massachusetts women's soccer team, more concerned with getting their season back on track than extending the weekend successes, achieved both as they defeated Rhode Island, 3-2, at home on Saturday.

UMass	3
URI	2

The Minutewomen's (4-8-2, 3-4-0 Atlantic 10) goals came from one likely player and one not so likely. Junior Therese Smith's high frequency in contributing to goals this year continued, as she netted the game-winner with under three minutes left to play in regulation. However, if not for senior forward Christina Adams' two goals, UMass may not have been in position for any late-game heroics. Contributions from players other than Smith and redshirt junior Sydney Stoll have been few and far between, and UMass coach Angela Napoli understands the importance of having a balanced attack.

"At this point in the season, (having other players) score goals is huge," Napoli said. "It gives us more diversity on the attack and it causes other teams to focus on more than just two players."

Adams' first goal came soon after the first 20 minutes of play, which were controlled mostly by Rhode Island (4-10-1, 2-5-0 A-10). Adams received a cross-pass from junior Ashley Hamel on the left flank and redirected the ball over Rams goalkeeper Brooke Messier. The Rams tied the game at one apiece in the 53rd minute on a shot initially saved by freshman goalkeeper Emily Cota. The shot ricocheted off the crossbar and Cota brought it down, but a scramble in front jarred the ball loose and forced it into the net.

Cota kept the game tied by saving several shots in the next few minutes, which allowed Adams to put UMass ahead with another goal. With just over 10 minutes left to play, sophomore midfielder Lauren Yelinik fed the ball up for Adams who chipped it over Messier to take the lead once again.

Rhode Island answered with just under five minutes left to play to tie the game at two.

"It was such a battle. Everytime we scored they found a way to get back in the game," Napoli said. "Our players played their hearts out and found a way to win the game."

Less than a minute after relinquishing the lead, UMass put the final exclamation point on the back-and-forth game on a goal from Smith. Smith weaved her way through several defenders and placed her shot into the top right corner of the net.

The Rams were far from discouraged, however, and continued their aggressive play in the few remaining seconds. A key blocked shot from UMass' defense and a big save from Cota paved the way for a Minutewomen victory.

"Our defense played well especially at the end when Rhode Island would not stop coming at us," Napoli said. "The Rams are a good team who hit hard and use their bodies well. Emily came up with a few great saves, one in the first half off a cross and a couple in the second half."

Redshirt junior midfielder Meghan Ghould had her hands full throughout the game, defending the aggressive, one-on-one styled Rams.

"Defensively, Ghould had a great game," Napoli said. "As far as dealing with the physicality of the other team, this has been the best I've seen her all year."

Despite being outshot 20-8 in the match, the Minutewomen made the most of their scoring chances, something the team practiced all week.

"Statistically, yes it would be nice to get more shots, but we'll take the win any day," Napoli said. "It's always nice to get the shots but it's really what you do with them that counts."

The win this weekend was just what the Minutewomen were looking for and are still confident that they can secure one of the six spots the A-10 tournament has to offer.

UMass will next travel to Xavier on Friday, where it will look to add to its three conference wins. The Musketeers (2-13-1, 1-6-1 A-10) are a team that UMass can't afford to take a loss from at this stage of the season.

"Our kids are excited now. Rhode Island was an intense game that took a lot out of us, but we're ready to move on," Napoli said. "A win against Xavier would boost us from having an outside chance to a good chance to make the tournament."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Emily Cota stands in net for the Minutewomen in a game earlier this season against Providence. Cota made eight saves in Saturday's win against URI.

Henshaw fills in for DeSantis

UMass ends scoring drought in 2-0 win against St. Joe's

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Even without their leading scorer, the Massachusetts soccer team generated two scores in a win Sunday over Saint Joseph's and a double overtime loss to Temple on Friday.

Senior forward Mark DeSantis, who has been out with an illness, did not see action in this weekend's matchups. DeSantis also sat out last weekend in a 1-0 victory over Xavier on Oct. 9 and a 1-0 double overtime loss against Dayton two days later.

After falling to the Owls on Friday, the Minutemen (5-4-3, 2-2-0 Atlantic 10) knew that they had to generate offense, even without DeSantis.

"Not having Mark is a huge loss, and today, guys did what we're supposed to do in the second half, and they got the rewards," UMass coach Sam Koch said after Sunday's win.

Junior midfielder Stuart Amick and sophomore defender Andrew Henshaw each scored in the second half for UMass, as the Minutemen outshot the Hawks (1-1 and earned five corner kicks in the second frame.

"[Henshaw's] got a good knack for the goal when he gets in front of it, and we've been able to get some situations, and he's capitalized when he's had to," Koch said.

Henshaw also scored the game winner against the Musketeers, as the defense spearheaded the Minutemen's fifth shutout of the season last Friday.

In all 12 games so far in 2009, Henshaw is third on the team behind DeSantis and junior Ben Arikian in points, with two scores and one assist on four shots on goal. DeSantis leads the team with three goals, while Arikian has two goals and three assists.

Henshaw started 15 games as a freshman last season, and had one goal and one assist in 2008.

If Henshaw can keep producing on the offensive end and leading the defense and DeSantis returns, the Minutemen could finish their A-10 schedule in strong fashion against Rhode Island, Saint Bonaventure and Duquesne coming up later this month.

Amick helped fill DeSantis's void with two solid games this weekend. On Friday, he helped on the defensive side of the ball by keeping the Minutemen in the game against a potent Owls attack led by J.T. Noone, another candidate besides UMass' Arikian on the Hermann Trophy Preseason Watch List. On Sunday, Amick was more of a presence offensively, registering three shots, including two on goal, with the most important one coming in the form of a score to put the Minutemen up 1-0 against the Hawks.

Koch also made adjustments to his roster knowing that UMass had a low-scoring opponent scheduled. Arikian, Amick and redshirt sophomore defender Sam DeNormandie came off the bench against the Hawks.

Amick and Arikian, who normally start, came in around the 27 minute mark after Koch saw the Minutemen go scoreless.

Freshman Brodie Steigerwald and sophomore defender Michael Doherty started their first collegiate games on Sunday, helping to fill in for DeSantis. While he did not register a shot on goal in the game, Steigerwald was a presence on the field Sunday with his 6-foot-3 frame. Along with Steigerwald, junior Chris Vaccaro started at midfield for the first time since the Minutemen played Northeastern back on Sept. 19.

After back-to-back losses, UMass has six shutouts on the season, which is tops in the conference.

With the defense already shutting down opponents, the offense showed Sunday what it is capable of when the Minutemen execute correctly.

"They created a lot of chances, and when you do that, you're going to score goals, and they did," Koch said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Ben Arikian makes a move on a Colgate defender in a game earlier this season. Arikian assisted on a goal to Andrew Henshaw in Sunday's win.

Andrew Henshaw goes for a header in a game earlier this season against Colgate. Henshaw scored the game-winner against St. Joe's on Sunday.

UM bounces back after loss to Temple

SOCCER from page 8

Sunday's game after junior Chris Pickos gave up a goal in his last two starts, including Friday's game against Temple.

Curran-Hays' shut-out marked his second in five games, which lowered his goals against average to 0.77.

On Friday, Koch and Co. lost another frustrating game in double overtime after Max Kinderwater found Tyler Witmer, who tapped in a goal in the lower left part of the net 4:20 into the second overtime period.

After an unsatisfactory effort by Koch's standards, the Minutemen were more aggressive in the later part of the second half and the first overtime period with six corner kicks.

Despite the increased pressure by UMass, Temple maintained a 14-12 shot advantage over the course of the contest. The Minutemen still had several close attempts late in the game, but none of the shots found their way into the goal.

The only shot that came close from UMass in the overtime period came from Arikian, who connected on a header close to the goal, but the ball went just over the crossbar.

With under two minutes left, Craft had another opportunity inside the 18-yard box in the middle of the field saved by Temple goalkeeper Bret Mollon (five saves).

In the first half, the Maroon and White struggled to find chances in what escalated into an emotionally charged period.

After a number of physical plays from both teams, the referee stopped play in the middle of the first half and cautioned coaches from both benches on their decorum after they took issue over the lack of foul calls.

UMass has a week off before it hosts Rhode Island next Saturday.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

Mark Dangleis runs past the Colgate defense earlier this year. Dangleis set up Ben Arikian who assisted Andrew Henshaw's goal on Sunday.

Regina Spektor plays the Calvin Theater with Jupiter One last week to the delight of fans

Brooklyn native, Regina Spektor held audiences in reverential silence throughout Monday's show.

By Daniel Herberholz
Collegian Correspondent

Black and white didn't only sit on the piano keyboard. The lights were white swirls, her dress was black, her voice was pearly white and the audience was black silent.

Regina Spektor owned the room Monday, Oct. 12 at Northampton's Calvin Theater with her delicate piano taps and enraptured fans.

A Soviet-born, American-raised pianist and songwriter, Regina Spektor is best known for her single "Fidelity." The song appeared on her fourth full length album, "Begin To Hope," in 2006, as well as the popular TV shows, "Grey's Anatomy," "Las Vegas" and "Veronica Mars." The track, which she reportedly wrote while watching the film adaptation of Nick Hornby's "High Fidelity," reached U.S. Billboard's Hot 100.

Following her 2009 release "Far," Spektor is touring for the first time with accompaniment. She played alongside drummer MacKenzie Smith, cellist Dan Chandler and violinist, and opening act Jupiter One's lead singer, Kay Ishibashi.

Jupiter One, led by Ishibashi, opened the night with unexpected energy. The band, which is named after the ship in "Lost in Space," used violin, flute and moving baselines to paint a vibrant musical picture. And while the seats had not yet filled, those there to listen to Jupiter One got an opening act worthy of Spektor.

The band's first hit, "Countdown" appeared on EA Sports' Madden '08. Their most recent single, "Flaming Arrow," is playing on MTVU.

When Spektor at long last took to the stage, the theater fell silent as she delicately padded across the stage and took a seat at the grand piano. She opened her set with rigor playing an upbeat series of songs spanning different years and albums.

In between songs, Spektor did not need to speak loudly because the room remained almost entirely silent. Except for the few shouted offers of marriage, the audience has obviously only come to hear Regina Spektor flex her voice.

Sometimes an artist's live performance sounds exactly and blandly like the recorded release they are playing. Usually, that sort of show isn't unique. Regina Spektor, however, sounded just about the same as she did on "Far," all the while managing to bring another dimension to her live performance. While she was quiet in transit from song to song, she played and sang with swing and verve.

After a handful of songs at the full piano, Spektor journeyed to the electric piano across the stage, only to find it noiseless. There was a pregnant pause as the speakers were as silent as the audience, before a sound technician walked on stage to fix the problem. He merely plugged a cord in and the room exploded with applause — hands clapping because they were about to hear Spektor's hands clap the electric piano.

During the show, Spektor also slung a teal-green electric guitar over her shoulder. Her time spent at the electric piano and guitar was sans accompaniment, but the richness of her voice left nothing lacking.

Spektor's hit "Fidelity" opened her encore, a five-song response to the audience's cheers for more.

While the show was only two sets of musicians performing, they packed rock and roll, classical and jazz expertise in to create a moving three hours.

Daniel Herberholz can be reached at dherberh@student.umass.edu.

Regina Spektor played a short but powerful set at the Calivin Theater in Northampton, both with accompaniment and on her own.

Owls, Hawks get upset wins

F. HOCKEY from page 8

In the other half of the role-reversal weekend for UMass, SJU's Anne Schreuders registered a hat trick in a game on Friday that saw the Minutewomen outshoot the Hawks 11-2 in the first half. Schreuder helped SJU avenge its loss to UMass last season in the conference championship game by the same score.

In last season's contest, the Hawks surrendered a hat trick as well to junior captain Katie Kelly.

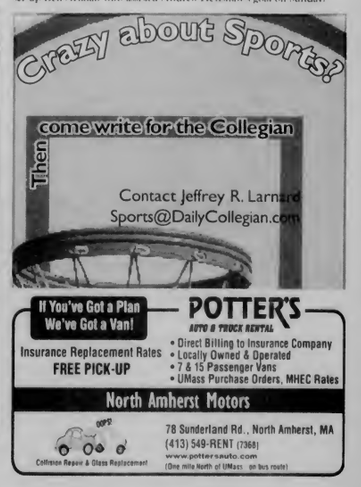
Potts and Powers shared a team-high four shots for the Minutewomen, half of SJU's team shot total. UMass finished the game with a 15-8 shot advantage while both teams tallied seven penalty corners.

Schreuder needed little time to figure out the Minutewomen defense, scoring two goals in the first 10 minutes of the game.

UMass held off Schreuder and the rest of the Hawks for the rest of the half, denying SJU a shot for the next 30 minutes of play.

Only Shreuder and Theresa Testa had more than one shot for SJU, compared to the Minutewomen who had four players with multi-shot games — all of whom had opportunities inside the circle but failed to convert.

Widdall had four saves in net, while her counterpart Kelly Swanick notched eight for the Hawks. Only two of Swanick's saves came in the second half.



UMass couldn't force any mistakes on the part of SJU after halftime and failed to gain a penalty corner opportunity as a result.

The Minutewomen, whose strength was once their road play, are now 5-4 as the away team after starting the season with a 4-1 record away from home.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Cher King goes after the ball against Kent State last season. King took a shot on goal in a 2-1 double overtime loss against Temple on Sunday.

Jon Hernandez finds a hole in UNH's line in UMass' 23-17 win Saturday. Hernandez won the Bill Knight trophy for MVP of the game.

Hernandez steps up in win

Sophomore runs for 166 yards, rushes for game-winning score

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

When Jon Hernandez rattled off a game winning 42-yard touchdown run against New Hampshire on Saturday, it proved a number of things.

It showed that the Massachusetts football team's loss last week at Delaware was a lapse, it showed that the No. 18 Minutemen (4-2, 2-1 Colonial Athletic Association) can play with the best in the country and, more importantly, it showed they have depth all over the field.

Hernandez, the winner of the Bill Knight trophy, an annual award given out to the Most Valuable Player in the game between UMass and UNH (5-1, 2-1 CAA), was given the nod over tailback Tony Nelson who is dealing with a contusion on his thigh. Despite not having the CAA's leading rusher, the No. 18 Minutemen's offense didn't miss a beat as Hernandez rushed for 166 yards on 29 carries (5.7 yards per rush) and a touchdown.

"Another great job by Jon, and that is where Jon is at, he's a quality football guy and we're fortunate to have guys like these guys step up and make plays," UMass coach Kevin Morris said after the Minutemen's 23-17 upset over No. 4 UNH.

For Hernandez, he has just made the most of every opportunity he's been given. Against Albany in Week 2, Hernandez came in late to rush for 88 yards on nine carries including a 58-yard touchdown run and another from one-yard out. The redshirt sophomore got his first career start two weeks later and ran for 146 yards and three scores. Hernandez now leads the team with 408 yards rushing and six touchdowns.

"We expect Jon to play the way he's playing because he has that kind of capability," Morris said after the game. "We didn't know he would have this many touches at this point. With Tony not being able to get a good run in today, we went back to Jon again and Jon responded."

Hernandez was not the only Minuteman to step up against the Wildcats though. With Jeromy Miles lost in the second quarter for the rest of the game after getting hit on the head while making a tackle, and with Shane Viveiros not dressing after being reinstated from his suspension, redshirt freshman Kumar Davis saw plenty of snaps and made the most of the last one.

After an Armando Cuko field goal put UMass up by six with just over two minutes left, UNH's R.J. Toman drove the Wildcats down the field, needing a touchdown. After reaching UMass' 13-yard line with three seconds left on the clock, Toman was intercepted by Davis in the endzone, who quickly went down to the ground to end the game.

"A little too exciting right down there to the very end with the three seconds left and we call timeout to settle down and Kumar here made a great interception to finish the game off," Morris said.

"When you go back to Kansas State and through each game we have had guys step up, we talked earlier about Perry McIntyre and D.J. Adeoba getting Rookie of the Week honors in brand new roles," Morris said. "Kumar has played now, this isn't his first rookie game but he is a rookie guy and playing tremendous."

It has been a common thing all year for UMass; one player will go down and someone new will step up. More importantly, when these players do step up, they don't surprise Morris. Whenever Morris is asked if he expected somcone new to play the way they did, he says that it was expected. Whether it is Nelson or Hernandez rushing, Morris expects them to get their job done, and they do as well as the other players who have had to step up.

Without such key players like Nelson and Miles, each a leader on their respective sides of the ball, many wouldn't think UMass would have a chance against a UNH team that led the CAA in points per game and points allowed per game entering Saturday. But because of the ability for UMass to have players step up and the confidence that Morris has in his players to do what is asked of them, the Minutemen were able to pull out the victory that now has them tied in first place in the CAA North.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Dainton saves career high 39

Minutemen get off to fast start, hold off late surge by Terriers

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

Tying his career-high in saves, Paul Dainton put on a spectacular performance in net for the Massachusetts Hockey team, laying the foundation for the team's upset of No. 2 Boston University. The junior goalkeeper saved 39 shots as the Minutemen shocked the Terriers.

After coming out to an early lead, UMass (2-0-0, 1-0-0 Hockey East) were able to withstand a tough Terriers attack behind a solid defensive performance by the Minutemen and Dainton's play in goal.

After outshooting BU (0-1-0, 0-1-0 Hockey East) 12-10 in the first period, the Minutemen struggled in terms of the shot battle. The Terriers held a 31-14 edge in shots through the final two periods. However, the Minutemen only let up one goal in that timeframe and none in the third period.

Dainton, who has seen consistent time since coming to UMass as a freshman, has shown tremendous growth between the pipes now in his third year, something that was not lost on UMass coach Don Cahoon.

"He's stronger physically. And I think he's more confident with his game, in terms of how to play situations and how he might handle a specific situation that either develops behind the net, off the side of the net, how to play through screens," Cahoon said.

Dainton's performance against the Terriers was another step in the intricate position of goalkeeper. With senior Dan Meyers in the midst of his three-game suspension, there was no better time for Dainton to truly show how much he has grown in his time with the Minutemen.

"That game is an art in itself, the goaltending game," Cahoon said. "And so I think, with experience, you get growth and the, in his case, strength is a big factor and he's really gained a lot of that in the past few years."

Out of the gates

After stumbling out of the gate in its first two performances this season, the Minutemen finally showed up early in the first period. UMass' early lead was enough to withstand a second period comeback bid by BU.

Freshman Rocco Carzo and sophomore Matt Irwin both scored within the first nine minutes of the game to give the Minutemen the early lead they lacked in their prior outings.

UMass fell into a 3-0 hole against New Brunswick in the team's exhibition match, eventually falling 3-2 and had a 1-0 deficit against Rensselaer going into the second period. The slow starts were a concern for Cahoon, but against BU, UMass got the fast start it was looking for.

"It was great. I don't know we were thinking we were going to get a two-goal jump," Cahoon said. "We wanted to come and play hard from the get go, and that's something we haven't done in the two previous games. It was important not to come out and give up those two or three goals and get that team rolling [we] and could've been a long ways back."

32 seconds

The closing seconds of Friday night's game had all the tension of a March game in October.

That tension was never higher than in the closing seconds of the game when tied 2-2, the Terriers' goalie was pulled and a crowd of 8,123 was on its feet, the Minutemen faced three straight key faceoffs in their own end.

"We had some good faceoffs in the second half of the third period. And obviously those last three were very crucial," Cahoon said. "I thought Rocco Carzo won a big faceoff just a minute or two before that. I think our guys just understand the value of winning these zone faceoffs and when you're killing a five-on-six, if you will, you need to come up with the puck."

In the waning seconds of the game, after UMass called a timeout with 32 seconds, sophomore Casey Wellman won two faceoffs while senior Brett Watson won another as the Terriers failed to get a shot on goal with the man advantage.

BU had the edge in faceoffs on the night, 34-28. However, the Terriers couldn't get the puck when they needed it the most as BU's Nick Bonino (a game high 11-7 on faceoffs) and Corey Trivino (5-5) failed to win any of the key final faceoffs.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

James Marcou skates past the BU defense to take one of his four shots in UMass' upset win over the No. 2 Terriers.

Freshman Rocco Carzo prepares to attack BU in Saturday's win for the second goal of his career in as many games.

Ortiz scores deciding goal for upset victory

HOCKEY from page 8

puck up the go-ahead goal on a power play but had shot after shot deflected by Millan.

The Minutemen tallied a goal by Ortiz off a pass from Danny Hobbs in the first two minutes of the third period to take a 3-2 lead. Unwilling to give up, the Terriers outshot UMass 16-4 for the frame, but were unable to send the game to overtime. Dainton recorded 39 saves in goal, tying a career-high from a win over Boston College in November of last season.

Along with Dainton, Ortiz had one of his better games for his career. Equipped with a great deal of skill, Ortiz hasn't reached the high expectations that were placed on him as a freshman. However, as a senior, Ortiz has received more playing time in key situations from Cahoon and has shed the assumed role of being a one dimensional player.

"We've been coaching him for three years so he knows exactly what to do, when to do it. It's just a question of executing it and he's really determined to do that," Cahoon said. "He's earned the right to get that type of ice time."

As far as defeating the defending national champions, Cahoon was adamant in saying that it's a new season and the team is focused on winning games, not who they're beating.

"It's a nice start, but the game was all about the two points. It's not about the defending national champs and it's not about where we finished last year," he said. "It's October 2009, and we need to start our season and those points are valuable. We're going to have to cross swords with that team again in Boston in their rink and I'm sure that will change how that game will be played a little bit."

The Minutemen return to action on Friday when they host Maine in search of their second Hockey East win of the season.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Defense holds off Wildcat attack with late interception

FOOTBALL from page 8

Scott Sicko, making it 17-10 with 12 minutes, 48 seconds remaining in the game. The completion marked the second connection in the endzone between Toman and Sicko.

UMass responded with a strong drive of its own. Havens bounced back from his prior errors and engineered a 13-play, 57-yard drive that ended in an Armando Cuko 36-yard field goal to make it 17-13.

The Minutemen still needed the ball back, though, and that's exactly what they got on the ensuing drive as UNH went three-and-out with a chance to put away the game. Pressure from the UMass front four kept Toman off-balance on the drive, preventing the UNH passer from breaking out of the pocket.

It didn't take long for UMass to respond. On the third play of the drive, Hernandez busted through the left side of the line and down the sideline for what would turn out to be the winning score.

"The hole was huge. I could've fit a car through that hole," Hernandez said of the decisive play.

UMass added another 41-yard field goal to make it 23-17, but with 1:26 on the clock, the Wildcats still had a chance.

The UNH offense drove down the field, converting on a fourth-and-nine in the process to get into the UMass red-zone. Aided by a roughing the passer call on defensive end Anthony Monette, Toman took the Wildcats down to the UMass 13-yard line before spiking the ball to stop the clock with three seconds remaining in the game.

On the game's final play, Toman dropped back and fired into the endzone. The only receiver he found, though, was UMass defensive back Kumar Davis, who intercepted the pass, kneeled down and ended the game.

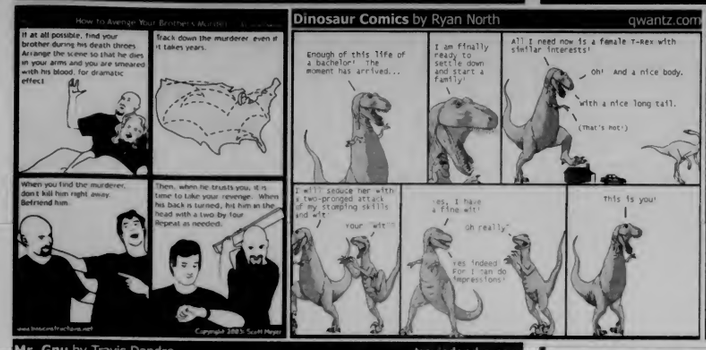
"Honestly, I was just thinking about my fundamentals. All week, they had just been telling us, 'fundamentals, fundamentals will get you through.'" Davis said of the thoughts running through his mind on the play. "So, I just went up and tried to play the ball, tried to make a play on it. It happened to come right into my hands."

The Wildcats drew first blood in the game when Toman hit tight end Scott Sicko over the middle and, with a defensive breakdown by the Minutemen, scampered 58 yards for the score. The UMass defense went for the pick on the play and paid the price as Sicko went almost untouched as he knifed through the center of the defense.

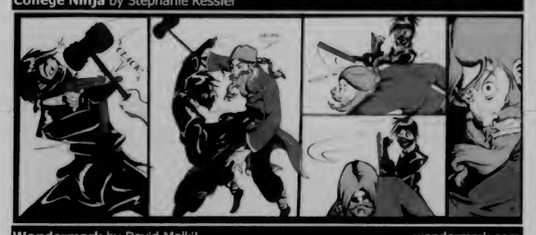
The early touchdown was the only score of the first quarter as both offenses failed to advance much further than midfield. The Minutemen had success in the battle for field position early on in the game, especially with the help of punter Caleb Violette, whose first three punts pinned UNH within its own 10-yard line.

Field position would play a big factor in UMass' first score. Kicking from the UNH 9-yard line, Wildcats punter Ryan Glasgow shanked a 26-yard punt. The Minutemen took advantage of the excellent field position as Armando Cuko kicked a 31-yard field goal to bring it to 7-3 with 11:42 left in the second quarter.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.



Victor Cruz grabs one of his six catches in Saturday's win for a team-high 83 yards.



COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

Part-time Personal Care Attendant, about 10-12 hours/week. Flexible hours, Please call Patrick. (413)-275-7928

WIN $500 with www.tradeyacity.com contest!! Please search www.youtube.com (TM) for www.tradeyacity.com contest for all the details!

SPRING BREAK 2010

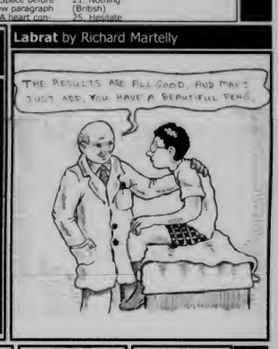
Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guaranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends, From $89. Includes Hotel, Bus, and clubs. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

"Partake of some of life's sweet pleasures. And yes, get comfortable with yourself." -Oprah

UMASS AMHERST
New Schedule for Winter Session
Earn credits during break!
Online classes begin: December 21, 2009
On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010
Sneak peek of class offerings listed at www.UMassULearn.net



CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Resigns
6. Feed bag contents
10. Skillful
14. Not rural
15. A Central American sloth
16. Inspiration
17. Nimble
18. A unit of pressure
19. Collections
20. Child
22. Bypass
23. A facility for wild animals
24. Wear away
26. Examine again
30. Sextuplet
32. False god
33. Honk
35. Licit
39. Garments that cover the head and face
41. The 19th letter of the Greek alphabet
42. Monetary unit of Denmark
43. Endow
44. Colored part of an eye
46. Greek god of love
47. Clemency
49. Space before a new paragraph
51. A heart condition marked by chest pain
54. Half of two
55. Gosh!
56. Kick off
63. Largest continent
64. Airhead
65. Covered with thin linoleum squares
66. General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade
67. Border
68. After
69. Consequence
70. Backside
71. Wheezy

DOWN
1. Campus area
2. Encourage
3. Nile bird
4. After-bath powder
5. A symptom of a cold
6. Exceed
7. Dwarf buffalo
8. Mountain pool
9. Levy an extra tax on
10. Disarrayed
11. Swelling under the skin
12. Malodorous
13. Flavor
21. Nothing (British)
25. Hesitate
26. Rend
27. Biblical garden
28. Empty
29. Shed light on
30. Ancient
31. Decorative case
34. Auditory
36. Former vice-president Al
37. Any minute
38. In order that not
40. Spotted
45. Make melodious sounds
48. Plunderer
50. Asexual
51. Maxim
52. Kind of spray
53. Southern breakfast dish
54. Not inner
57. Connecting point
58. Seaweed
59. Frost
60. Out of the wind
61. Be inclined
62. Swirl

SUDOKU

7	2
3			8		6
		9	2	4
		8						7
9	1				4	3
5								8
4		2	3				6	5
	9		5			1
6					9

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Giant homemade balloon + your firstborn child = instant media exposure!

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
A time will come when even you will be penalized for "roughing the passer."

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Your attention on Brady's stats are justified. Only Chuck Norris has a book large enough for them.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
The guitar may have six strings, but the heart has only one. Sniffle

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
You'll never be cool until you play "Uncharted 2: Among Thieves."

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Don't be stingy. No one likes a cheap-a-potamous.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
A rumpus obsession certainly makes you a Wild Thing.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Is "Couples Retreat" a title or a command? Think about it.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Take things to the next level, Big Willie Style.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Life can be stressful when you're always scared that the fire department is on its way.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Steroids are okay in the case of Ricky Williams.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Calm down. What's Fonzy like?

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 19, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Upsetting cats and dogs

Hernandez lifts UMass past rival No. 4 UNH

By Nick O'Malley

UMass	23
UNH	17

Jonny Talley celebrates after putting UMass ahead in the second quarter on a 10-yard touchdown catch.

See FOOTBALL on page 6

Dainton, Ortiz strong in upset over No. 2 BU

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

On Friday night at the Mullins Center, 8,123 fans witnessed a down to the wire thriller which ultimately resulted in the home team coming out on top.

Paul Dainton provided strong play in goal while Will Ortiz put in the deciding score in a 3-2 upset by the Massachusetts hockey team over defending national champions and No. 2 Boston University.

UMass	3
BU	2

"It was pretty entertaining hockey for a game played in the middle of October," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "Everyone walked away thinking they just saw two teams going to battle."

Despite being outshot 41-26 and failing to capitalize on any of their four power play opportunities, the Minutemen (2-0-0, 1-0-0 Hockey East) were able to keep the Terriers (0-1-0, 0-1-0 HEA) from leading throughout the game.

UMass came out of the gate firing on all cylinders, taking a quick 1-0 lead five minutes, 21 seconds into the first period. The goal was by freshman Rocco Carzo, his second in as many games, off a dish from Ortiz.

Only three minutes later, sophomore Matt Irwin zipped a shot past BU goalkeeper Kieran Millan to give the Minutemen a two-score advantage.

The fast start by UMass in the first 10 minutes of the game proved to be monumental in the end, with the Terriers outscoring the Minutemen the rest of the way.

"We wanted to play hard from the get go, that's something we hadn't done in the two previous games," Cahoon said. "It was important not to come out and give up those two or three goals and let that team get rolling. You don't want to be rolling the dice like that every time out."

The Minutemen celebrate Friday night at the Mullins Center after upsetting No. 2 Boston University.

BU's attack came to life towards the end of the first period when freshman Alex Chiasson stuck back a rebound past Dainton on a power play for one of his two goals on the game.

In the second period, Chiasson received a pass from Corey Trivino and poured it in goal to tie the game at two. With less than two minutes left until intermission, UMass had ample opportunities to

See HOCKEY on page 6

Minutewomen fall in two conference games

Lose to St. Joe's, Temple after sweeping conference in 2008

By Mike Gillmeister

Temple	2
UMass	1
St. Joe's	3
UMass	0

PJ Stanley/Collegian

Jill Powers swings for a loose ball against Kent State last season. Powers had seven shots, three on goal in UMass' 2-1 loss Sunday night against Temple.

See F. HOCKEY on page 5

Sophomore Chris Rowsess brings down Colgate's Paul Hall during a game this year. Rowsess assisted on Stuart Amick's goal to put the Minutemen ahead by a score of [illegible] on Sunday afternoon.

UM splits weekend conference matches

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

When a team has one goal in five weeks, it doesn't take much to earn a victory. The Massachusetts men's soccer team didn't take any chances when it struck twice in its 2-0 win over Saint Joseph's on Sunday.

UMass	2
St. Joe's	0
Temple	1
UMass	0

The Minutemen (5-4-3, 2-2-0 Atlantic 10) penetrated the Hawks' (0-11-0, 0-3-0 A-10) defense with plenty of ease throughout the game, but the offense didn't develop until the second half. UMass held a 14-6 advantage in shots over SJU with 11 coming in the second half.

Nearly eight minutes into the second period, the Minutemen had their first goal of the game. Midfielder Bryant Craft played the ball to forward Chris Rowsess, who fired a cross over to junior Stuart Amick as he tucked the ball at the bottom of the net for his first goal of the season.

"We played much better in the second half so I'm very pleased with how we came out and played the whole 45 minutes," UMass coach Sam Koch said after Sunday's game.

Koch stressed getting to the end line throughout the game and, in the second half, it paid off. The Minutemen had five of their six corner kicks in the second half with one of the corners contributing to UMass' second goal of the game.

The second goal came from sophomore Andrew Henshaw, who also scored in last week's win over Xavier. Henshaw passed to back Mark Dangleis on a corner who found midfielder Ben Arikian.

The junior did what he does best in creating plays and connected with Henshaw for the goal.

The Minutemen had several looks at the goal in the first half, but none found their way past SJU goalkeeper Andrew D'Ottavi.

The two goals in the second half snapped UMass' streak of five straight halves without scoring.

The offense for the Hawks came almost exclusively from forward Colin Baker, who had six shots for his team (two of them on goal), in the first half. However, none made their way past goalkeeper Shane Curran-Hays (three saves).

The redshirt sophomore started

See SOCCER on page 5

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 62 LOW: 43 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2009

Budget cuts will close Amherst grade school

Mark's Meadow elementary will close its doors for cost savings in the public school system

By Michael Phillis
Collegian Staff

Just to the north of the University of Massachusetts campus sits Mark's Meadow elementary school.

In the 1990s, UMass used Mark's Meadow as a laboratory school for their graduate education students.

Since then, UMass gave use of the school to the Amherst school system for free.

At the conclusion of the school year, Mark's Meadow will be closing its doors for good, having fallen victim to shrinking budgets.

"What I like about Mark's Meadow," is written in large handwriting on a manila envelope taped to a desk located near the front entrance.

On top of that desk, there are markers and colored pencils available for anyone who might want to put down their thoughts.

The idea is to have students, parents, teachers and staff record the ways that this school has affected their lives.

Mark's Meadow is the smallest school out of the four schools in the Amherst elementary system.

Mark's Meadow is less than half the size of the two biggest schools, Wildwood and Fort River, each of which have a capacity of 460.

Class sizes here vary, and are smaller – between 15 and 17 – for grades that have two classes and larger – about 25 students – for the fifth grade, which only has one classroom.

What is distinct about Mark's Meadow, however, is the diversity of the students – racially, the student body is less than half white.

Mark's Meadow principal Nick Yaffe, who on the day of his interview wore a No. 2 pencil tie, said, "All the schools in Amherst are diverse, our diversity, there is a kind of breadth to that."

"If you looked at our families' homes, typically there would be between 30 and 40 home countries."

Directly outside of the main office, there is a wall-sized map of the world with pictures of students below the names of the countries from which their parents originate.

There are two students from Vietnam, three from Mexico, one from Zimbabwe and another from Barbados.

Yaffe himself is from Latvia and there are two other students from Armenia.

See EDUCATION on page 3

The Justice for Jason organization seen here protesting for Vassell last winter in Northampton, has advocated support for the accused claiming the case against Vassell was racially motivated.

Vassell defense claims 'racial selection' in case

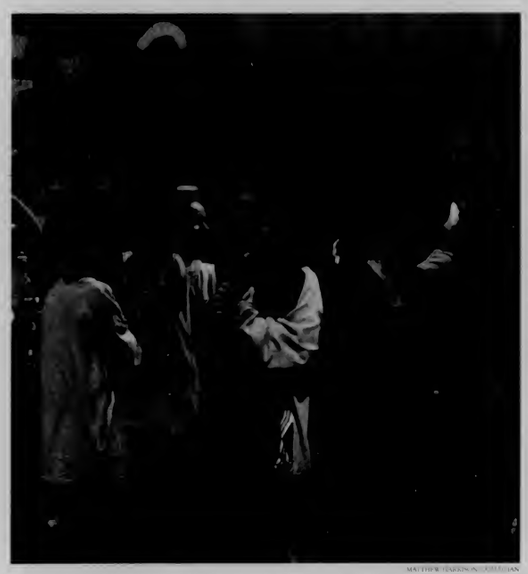
By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

As the weeks drag on, nothing seems to be getting much clearer in the nearly two year-old case of former University of Massachusetts student Jason Vassell.

Hampshire Superior Court Judge Judd Carhart ruled Oct. 7 that Vassell's defense team had met the legal standards necessary to pursue a so-called racially selective prosecution defense.

Such a defense entails the accused and his attorneys alleging that the defendant is being targeted for prosecution based on a pattern of racial injustice in law enforcement and a personal bias against the accused.

While Vassell's defense attorney Luke Ryan declined to discuss specifics of the case, he stated that selective prosecution is provable by illustrating to a jury that a history of disparity along racial or socioeconomic lines exists in law enforcement of a given crime in a particular place.



He used the example of traffic stops, stating that defendants have used a selective prosecution defense in arguing that their population group was targeted disproportionately along a given stretch of road relative to percentage of population.

Last Friday's ruling comes as a follow-up to an order which dates to last February, when Judge Carhart ordered that the Northwestern District Attorney's office give five years' worth of data about racially charged incidents to Vassell's defense team to help them build a claim of selective prosecution.

That ruling was appealed by First Assistant Northwestern District Attorney Elizabeth Dunphy Harris to the state Supreme Judicial Court, which requested in a July order that Carhart refine the specifics of what cases would be turned over to Vassell's team of defense attorneys.

The Oct. 7 ruling is Carhart's response, both stipulating what cases Vassell's team will have access to and granting the defense permission to pursue a selective

See JASON on page 3

A proposal by the Amherst school committee predicts that nearly all of the students of Mark's Meadow elementary school will be redirected to Wildwood elementary school also in Amherst.

UM researchers receive grant for exercise and weight study

By Matthew Robare
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts researchers have been awarded a grant by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) to study physical activity.

The two-year, $985,000 grant was awarded to a team led by Professor Patty Freedson of the Kinesiology Department and John Staudenmeyer, an associate professor with the mathematics and statistics department.

The group is developing new techniques to study why sometimes people on the same exercise regimen lose weight at different rates.

Having previously developed a wearable sensor called an accelerometer to measure activity levels, Freedson said that they are going to use this sensor to predict the amount of energy a person uses during an activity.

"When a person walks or runs, the accelerometer is going to measure the acceleration of the center of mass," she said.

She added, "It's going to look different depending on the type of activity."

"The data collection is just starting," Staudenmeyer said in an e-mail, "and all the data collection won't be in for two years. We won't have results or conclusions for a while."

The information from the sensor is analyzed by a neural network – a kind of software that can learn.

"We train the neural network on a set of known data and apply it on a set of unknown data," Freedson said.

"Taking the accelerometer signal, we extract features to develop a pattern, and based on that, it predicts the amount of energy expenditure and identifies activity type."

According to Freedson, the purpose of the grant is to see how well the neural network can differentiate between activity levels using data

See EXERCISE on page 2

Amherst Survival Center clinic director honored for leadership

By Niina Heikkinen
Collegian Staff

As the nation grapples with issues concerning health care reform, Dr. Susan Lowery is taking the lead in a local grassroots effort through the Amherst Survival Center on North Pleasant Street to address the health care needs of the town's homeless and uninsured population.

Last week, Lowery, as volunteer clinical director of the Free Clinic at the Amherst Survival Center, received recognition for her work when the Massachusetts Department of Public Health (DPH) presented her with Community Leadership Award for "Outstanding Contribution to Local Community Health."

Cathy O'Connor, director of DPH's Office of Healthy Communities at the DPH's Ounce of Prevention conference in Marlborough presented the award.

Though Lowery was unable to attend the ceremony, O'Connor praised Lowery's "unstoppable energy and devotion," in her work as both founder and director of the clinic.

"I was really humbled and honored to get the award, I didn't realize I had been nominated," said Lowery.

"What we're doing is really fun and really exciting, its nice that people are willing to recognize that."

The clinic, which is run entirely by volunteers, consists of an office within the Survival Center, where Lowery and Dr. Daniel Clapp hold hours twice a week for walk-in patients.

Since its establishment in January 2008, the clinic has expanded to serve about 325 patients, many of whom are homeless and do not have access to other forms of medical care, said Cheryl Zoll, executive director of the center.

Based on their own data, 75 percent of the clients who utilize their services are underinsured or uninsured, she said.

"We thought it would be good for people who did not have insurance, or people who for mental health reasons might be distrustful of going to a hospital to receive medical care in a place where they were already comfortable," said Zoll, of the creation of the clinic.

Lowery offered additional reasons for why patients utilize the free clinic.

"Many people have insurance, but their lives are so chaotic that they can't make an appointment 10 days in advance and keep it," she said.

"People can't afford co-pays or they are already here for other services like the food pantry."

Lowery had said that overall the clinic had been very well received. Recently, the clinic has seen a surge in interest in its services as a result of increasing unemployment and subsequent loss of employee health insurance, said Zoll.

She said that some patients were coming into the clinic because they needed to have a physical exam prior to being interviewed for a new position.

Without health insurance, paying for a physical exam becomes too great of an economic hardship, so uninsured job seekers are increasingly relying on the free health care services the clinic provides.

Zoll said the clinic most commonly sees cases of cardiovascular disease, high blood pressure and diabetes, but also treat a wide range of conditions.

Patient confidentiality is highly valued according to Zoll.

"We are very much no questions asked," she said.

Because the clinic provides free services, it must rely on a combination of funding from Cooley Dickinson Hospital, private donors and lots of volunteer work Zoll said.

See CENTER on page 2

ARTS & LIVING

Jonze, Eggers create 'Wild' hit

The film adaption of Maurice Sendak's "Where the Wild Things Are" combines a loyal adaption with some vivid imagination.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen place fourth

The Massachusetts women's swim team took fourth place at the Terrier Invite this weekend.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Eric Magazu explores the deeper questions behind the national debate over higher education funding.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

More photos and video from The Minutemen's Saturday Homecoming victory over New Hampshire

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 2

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sirkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Deixner
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Barnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Ebve Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cods
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life; became the College Signal in 1901; the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The Free Clinic, located in the Amherst Survival Center, is run exclusively by volunteers and serves approximately 325 patients, many of whom have no medical care.

Free Clinic founder receives grant for community work

CENTER from page 1

"The success of the clinic is overwhelmingly due to the fact that the doctors volunteer their time," she said.

In order to provide a wider range of services, the clinic also collaborates with Health Care for the Homeless at Mercy Hospital, the Salvation Army, Eliot Homeless Services and Cooley Dickinson Hospital in the Comprehensive Health Care Initiative.

The combined services allows the clinic to offer on-site registration for state health insurance, financial support for prescriptions and weekly counseling for the mentally ill homeless.

Additionally the grant will work to increasing health education classes, screening, immunizations and public health resources, according to a press release.

This year, the Office of the Attorney General provided the clinic with a $50,000 grant for prescription payment assistance.

"The grant is a huge help, co-pays are going up and if you can't pay for medicine you are really in a bind," said Lowery, adding that the grant has allowed the clinic to greatly expand the aid it can give to the community.

This fall, the Survival Center is also working to expand its training of future community health care providers through collaboration with the University of Massachusetts Commonwealth College.

The honors college is offering a two semester course this fall that is training students how to become patient advocates, Zoll said.

"Medical advocates accompany people to doctor's appointments and help them participate fully in their care," said Lowery.

The clini'"s next big goal, according to Lowery, is finding a way to provide free dental care.

"I have people coming in with chronically abscessed teeth and I can't give them care," Lowery said.

"It is a travesty they are being ignored. Dental care, vision care and hearing, those are basic rights, they should not be privileges."

"We're working toward finding a dentist or two or three to volunteer time," Zoll said, though she acknowledged that the search had been difficult.

"This is very much our dream for the clinic," she said.

Nina Heikkinen can be reached at nheikkin@student.umass.edu

Researchers seek to analyze differences in weight loss, gain

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

With funding, professors Freedson and Staudenmeyer will conduct studies for differences in physical activity and weight.

EXERCISE from page 1

collected by two studies.

In the first, 15 volunteers will wear both an accelerometer and a pedometer for three weeks.

Each person will be assigned different levels of activity for each week, with one week of limited activity and two weeks of more strenuous activity.

"The biggest surprise is that it got funded," Staudenmeyer said in an e-mail.

She added that, "We thought it was a strong proposal, but we knew that NIH was only going to fund about 200 out of twenty-one thousand proposals."

In the second study, 45 volunteers in three groups of 15 will also have different daily activity levels assigned.

The groups will also maintain a weekly exercise regimen.

One group will be assigned a moderate activity level, another a higher level, while the third will be the control group and be assigned a sedentary level.

The study will last 12 weeks.

The conventional explanation for the different weight loss patterns is that they are caused by genetics.

However the research group believes that there could be an alternate explanation.

"We predict that a person who sat around a lot will respond more poorly to training than a person who moves around a lot," said Freedson.

The NIH grant money is part of the stimulus package provided by the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act

Along with Freedson and Staudenmayer, the group contains Associate Professor Barry Braun and two Kinesiology graduate students, Kate Lyden and Sarah Kozey.

"We're also hiring some people to work on this project," Freedson said. "We're creating jobs."

Matthew M. Robare can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu

Songs about Obama ignite protests in NJ

By Matthew Spolar
The Philadelphia Inquirer

BURLINGTON, N.J. — The Burlington Township N.J. schools superintendent stands behind the student performance of songs about President Obama that created a national stir last month.

The video that captured the children is another matter.

Superintendent Christopher Manno yesterday discussed the results of an internal investigation concerning the controversial songs. He and Denise King, principal of B. Bernice Young Elementary School, were "deeply disturbed" by the YouTube posting of a video that featured second graders at the school, he said.

He added he had apologized to the students' parents at a recent meeting.

The video was taken on March 23 during an "impromptu" performance of two tunes the youngsters had learned in honor of Black History Month for a school assembly in February, Manno said.

The lyrics, which describe Obama's accomplishments and his views on equality, are punctuated with the recitation of the president's full name.

The school sent the songs' lyrics to parents in advance and received no complaints before or after the assembly, which family members attended, Manno said.

Charisse Carney-Nunes, author of "I Am Barack Obama," a biography for young readers, was visiting the school, and the video was taken by her sister in violation of district policy, Manno said.

The district forbids a student from being photographed or videotaped without parental permission, he said.

Manno said yesterday he had sent a reminder to staff members that visitors were not to record students' images on school property. He said teachers and administrators did not realize at the time the video was being made.

Manno said he was "not exactly sure" if the district would take action against the videographer.

The administration has been in talks with its attorney, he said.

A memo also has been sent to teachers reminding them to be "extra vigilant ... so as not to give the impression of promoting" a political ideology in their lessons, he said.

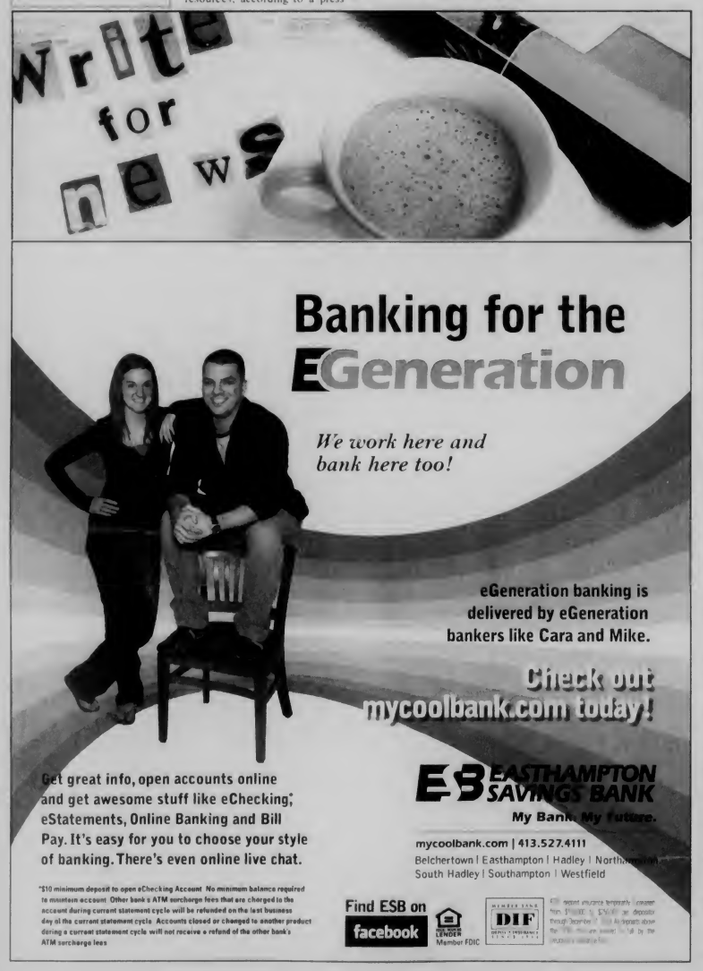
Manno said teacher Elvira James, whose students are seen in the video, had "no intent whatsoever" to take a political stand with the songs. James' recent retirement, after a 33-year career, was not related to the controversy, he said.

About 70 people gathered outside the school yesterday morning to protest the children's performance, which conservative political commentators have said were an attempt to encourage idolatry of the president.

The rally was organized by Ocean County, N.J., resident Fredy Lowe, a supporter of the Tea Party political protest group, at the behest of Gina Pronchick, whose son was a member of the class that was videotaped.

The group defied a request by Manno not to demonstrate while school was in session, which the superintendent said could intimidate the children.

Lowe carried a sign that read "We're Here for the Children" and "Reassign Principal King" as fellow protesters sang "America the Beautiful" and "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and chanted "Education not indoctrination" and "Free children, free minds."



There were also about 10 couter-protesters, including Andrea Ciemnolonski, whose daughter Kaitlin was in the class. Ciemnolonski said she was fine with the song and that her daughter doesn't even remember the words.

"They sang it twice, it's over," she said.

At the February assembly where Manno said the song was first performed, other classes sang songs honoring George Washington and Abraham Lincoln in honor of President's Day.

Protester Jim Isaia, a member of the 9-12 Project founded by Fox News commentator Glenn Beck, said the fact Obama is the current president politicized the song.

"It shouldn't have been about a standing president," said Isaia, of Vincentown. "If it had been about Clinton, it wouldn't have been objectionable."

Elementary school is victim of budget crisis

EDUCATION from page 1

Celebrations of diversity are everywhere.

After entering the building, you can go right toward the younger grades or left to visit the fifth and sixth graders.

Down the hall to the right, there are paper cut outs of multi-ethnic hands that students have made prominently displayed along large lengths of the hallway walls.

A light brown hand reads, "Isabela helped me pick up my crayons."

Another hand – white this time – says, "Marco's desk tipped over accidentally and Declan was the first to hop up from his desk and assist Marco."

Until someone walks though the halls and talks to some of the staff of the school which will be shutting its doors, the personality of a school like Mark's Meadow is missed.

I attended the Amherst school system and went to elementary school at Wildwood.

It struck me how much smaller Mark's Meadow was and how different the school community felt in diversity, culture, and most acutely, in its size and the level of intimacy.

Amherst Public Schools estimate that, in the first year after closing Mark's Meadow, there will be $406,000 in savings.

The following year, the town believes that number will increase to $671,000.

School performance was not a problem and did not figure into the decision to close the school.

The decision was purely budgetary.

The closing of Mark's Meadow is an example of a larger debate surrounding ways in which to achieve cost savings in the school system

Area school committee members – who are in charge of making budget and policy decisions for their perspective area – will see in Mark's Meadow, what closing a school that has a very local flavor will be like.

"So many of our families are from UMass graduate family housing," Yaffe said.

"Also, the apartment complexes along North Pleasant neighborhoods across the street can walk here. We have set up a special culture of welcoming families who come for a year or three years to study and then leave That has been an important part of Mark's Meadow, welcoming kids and also saying goodbye to them."

According toYaffe, more than half of the students who attend Mark's Meadow live less than a mile away.

The children of UMass faculty attend the school alongside those in the community that live in Pulfiton Village and other nearby apartment complexes.

Having a diverse student body attending the school together is what, according to Yaffe, Mark's Meadow is all about.

Diane Travis, the art teacher at Mark's Meadow, received a grant to do a three-year tile project, decorating the pillars outside the school.

Every student makes a tile for the project.

Out of the five pillars, three are covered with tiles and two more are still waiting to be completed.

The project is scheduled to be completed at the end of this school year – the same time that the school will be closing for good.

"[The tile project] has become this kind of memorial project," Travis said.

In an interview, Travis echoed a lot of Yaffe's sentiments, namely that the school was a special community and its closing would be a huge loss.

Travis talked about how after UMass stopped using the school as a laboratory for their education majors, the Amherst school system did not have to pay anything to use it as an Amherst school.

To this day, maintenance and utilities are not paid by the Amherst school system, whereas in all the other elementary schools they have to be paid.

"We want to make this school year a celebration year," said Travis.

Yaffe echoed her sentiment that celebrating the closing of the school would be hard but remembering the community in a happy and helpful way was important.

The hallway that leads to the classrooms for the older two grades is home to pictures of families.

Four by six photos of all kinds of families are on display.

If anything, these photographs show passersby how many different backgrounds are represented in a school that has to deal with 25 different languages being spoken in the students' homes.

According to Yaffe, the closing is not easy for anyone.

He said that students have come up to him asking how to raise money themselves so that the school does not close.

Parents are confused, younger teachers might be laid off and nobody really knows what to expect next year.

There is not yet a determination about who exactly those teachers will be but it will be done according to seniority across all four elementary school so that Mark's Meadow's staff does not suffer disproportionately.

At the end of October, the Amherst school committee will vote on the redistricting plans for the town's elementary schools.

The proposal currently available shows that almost all of the students will be going to Wildwood.

Class sizes there are probably going to be in the range of 22 students per room.

According to Budget Planning Information for Fiscal Year 2010, the region is trying to keep class sizes under 23 for Kindergarten through third grade, 25 for third and fourth grade and 27 for fifth and sixth.

Mark's Meadow's closing means the following cuts: removal of four classrooms for a savings of $216,000.

There will be no more need for a principal and an assistant, saving $135,000 and another $336,000 in savings from such actions as firing 1.5 custodians, a librarian and other staff.

The loss of Mark's Meadow will make it harder to deal with an unexpected population increase in the future and will mean longer bus rides by about 10-12 minutes for some of the children.

Yaffe, who will no longer be a principal after this year, ending his six years as head of Mark's Meadow, will be offered a teaching job because of his seniority.

The real loss, according to him, is the kind of place Mark's Meadow provided for its students.

On the wall near the entrance to the school are the responses to the previously mentioned question as to why they like Mark's Meadow.

One read, "I like Mark's Meadow because there is at least one person from the country you are from, so you don't feel left out."

Speaking about the culture of Mark's Meadow, Yaffe said, "To me, Mark's Meadow represents our hopes and dreams of what a community is. For our children, I think it does represent what we would hope for in the world in our society – a mini United Nations."

Yaffe added, 'In terms of people, children and families to get along, to understand each other, to have their differences but also to celebrate those differences, it's like this vision of what we want in the world."

Next year, that vision of a small Mark's Meadow community will have to shift focus.

This neighborhood is losing its school.

It will be much harder next year for a UMass graduate student to pick up their child from school.

No longer will the school be located on campus and children will not be able to quickly walk home after the school day ends.

Losing a school has had a profound effect on those involved not only inside the school itself, but also its influence is felt by those who are set to plan what is next for the region.

The proposed map for the remaining three Amherst elementary schools splits students in two main ways.

The first way of which being based on the geographic closeness of students to a particular school and the proportion of need for free or reduced lunch among students to be equal in all three remaining elementary schools.

This was done in order to make sure that some schools would not have a higher number of students who are struggling, as there are often higher percentages of struggling individuals who receive free or reduced lunch than those who do not.

In the end, the impact of a school closing its doors for good will be felt by those who will now have to send their child to an unfamiliar place.

School age populations are declining and the students of the Pelham, Leverett and Shutesbury elementary schools will be able to see a local example of what occurs in a community when they lose their local elementary school.

Michael Phillis can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu

Vassell's lawyers to use a racially selective prosecution defense prosecution defense.

JASON from page 1

Legal experts had mixed feelings about the potential benefits or drawbacks of attempting such a defense, though most felt it was a difficult strategy to attempt.

Northeastern University School of Law Matthews Distinguished Professor of Law Michael Meltsner said that while such selective defenses have been sought, their precedent is limited and the burden of proof lies with the defendant, making such claims arduous.

"Such claims have been raised before but are rarely successful," he said.

"The courts, de facto, defer to the prosecution unless there is overwhelming proof of the state proceeding in a prohibited way," he added.

Essentially, Meltsner continued, it is not the court's obligation to decide whether a prosecutor has personally targeted a defendant based on demography.

The court is generally neutral on such issues, and can only throw out a case if there is clear evidence, a so-called "smoking gun", that a defendant is being unfairly selected.

To accomplish this, Meltsner added, "there must be a clear showing of failure to prosecute similarly situated individuals of a different race, ethnicity (or other population group)."

Meltsner said, however, that defense teams can sometimes utilize such strategies as a means for increasing sway in seeking a plea agreement.

"Sometimes a victory on a pre-trial motion will increase plea bargaining leverage," he said.

Fellow Northeastern School of Law Professor Dan Williams contended that such a claim is not even a legal defense, but rather a strategy to have a case dismissed before trial

"While such a selective-prosecution motion is permitted, the chances of success are highly remote," he said.

"It is not, technically speaking, a 'defense,' it is a claim that would be raised pre-trial to knock out the indictment," he added.

Hampshire Superior Court Judge ruled Oct. 7 that Vassell's defense team had met the legal standards to pursue race claims against prosecution.

Williams echoed Meltsner's statement that the prosecutor has great leeway in bringing charges and determining whom to prosecute, meaning courts are generally reluctant to outright refute a prosecutor's judgment.

"Because prosecutors have great discretion on whom to prosecute and courts are reluctant to second-guess the exercise of that discretion, such motions rarely succeed," he stated.

"The defense would have to show actual racial motivation in pursuing this case, which amounts to having a smoking gun."

Boston University School of Law professor Tracey Maclin said that such defenses are feasible and winnable, but maintained that the defense must prove actual racial motivation to succeed.

"It's certainly feasible if he [Vassell] can prove that the prosecution had race in mind in filing charges," he said.

The landmark case which has set the standard for selective prosecution cases is United States v. Armstrong, where Christopher Lee Armstrong, a black man accused of dealing crack cocaine, alleged that he was being targeted for prosecution based on his race.

Similar to the Vassell case, the District Court involved ruled that the prosecution must turn over three years of files on similar cases.

The prosecution refused to comply, and the court threw out the case, ruling that a defendant need not prove that similarly situated persons would be treated differently.

The state appealed all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, which voted 8-1 in May, 1996 that in order to file racially selective claims, defendants must prove that the state failed to prosecute similarly situated individuals of other races.

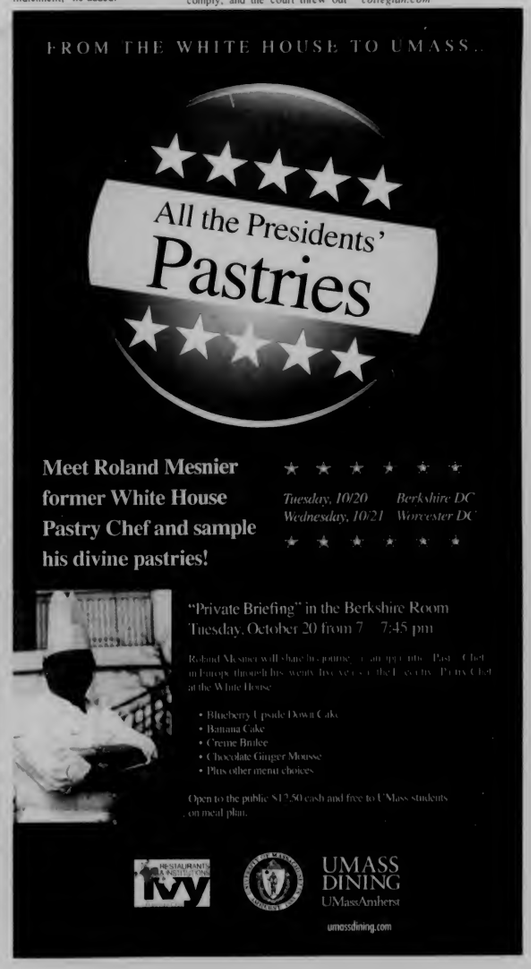
Chief Justice William Rehnquist wrote that if the claim was substantive, "it should not have been an insuperable task to prove that persons of a different race were not prosecuted."

Northwestern Massachusetts District Attorney Elizabeth Scheibel's office did not respond to requests for comment.

Director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts Carol Rose's office initially referred comment to Western Massachusetts Director Bill Newman, however, Newman declined to comment on the case, citing the organization's ongoing involvement in Vassell's defense.

Multiple attempts to follow up with Rose's office were unsuccessful.

The Committee for Justice for Jason was asked for comment, but did not return requests by press time.



Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

Alumni rejoice homecoming

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The band alumni joined the University of Massachusetts marching band on the field of McGuirk stadium for the singing of the Alma Mater after the homecoming game Oct. 17.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Do not be afraid to quit

Lauren Rockoff

"I don't know how to quit you." Jake Gyllenhaal said to Heath Ledger, and many college students say it to the countless useless projects, cigarette addictions and bad habits of all kinds that they repeatedly rehearse in any given day.

We know that our over-the-top Facebook obsessions or less-than-ideal strategies for choosing romantic partners only result in long periods of time to which we can attribute nothing, and messy emotional roller coasters that test the bonds of our friendships. And yet, we continue these obsessions still.

What is at the root of our shared inability to take the addiction or stressful activity by the horns and whip it out the window?

What is at the root of our shared inability to take the addiction or stressful activity by the horns and whip it out the window?

There's no doubt that individuals quit things for different reasons. We each have our specific values and belief systems that govern how we act and feel, and thus how we weigh the different things in our lives. So, from the most basic point of view, the things we don't quit must be the things we value most. Pretty obvious, but stay with me here.

Should I stay (with it) or should I go (do something else with my time)? When it comes to staying or going, if we can all agree that our values influence the key motivational factors we consider when deciding, then it may be useful to outline what those factors might be.

From here I take you to the results of a conversation I had with University of Massachusetts junior Nora Drapalski. These guidelines were developed in terms of the following quit-able things: dropping or swapping a class, membership in a club or other time-consuming activity and relationships with other people. How each person decides to handle these situations varies a good deal. But it seems that, in general, there are several aspects which take precedence in the choice.

Once it's clear that you don't like a class, we all know that the first consideration for dropping it must be whether or not we are required to take it, and whether we are able to put it off for a better time or more favorable situation. If it's required, let us assume that the easiest and best solution to the problem of a hated class is dropping or swapping it.

A favorable situation might mean a number of things. It could be taking the class with another professor who we feel we can learn from more effectively or with less stress. It could be taking it when our other classes are less time-consuming, demanding or challenging. It could also mean filling the class requirement later, when more class options are available and a better fit can be found.

Across the board, it seems that most people share the sentiment that it's best to quit something "because it doesn't have as much value to you anymore," as put by senior, Jacqueline Berman. In such cases, one might ask, what is meant by the term "rewarding?" Value diminishes past a critical point.

Naturally, this definition of rewarding needs its own definition, and it is presented in terms of the following: In order to be rewarding, a pursuit must not take up too much time. It must not take away considerably from your studies. It must be fun; rather, it must be something you look forward to in some capacity, or, at the very least, do not dread.

It also has to have some worthwhile benefits for you in the long-run, such as adding to your résumé, helping to build a foundation for a future career or just the fact that it's a paid activity. Finally, it must not compromise your mental or physical health. Additional rewarding aspects may also include an environment for meeting new people, exercising, relaxing or feeling good about yourself.

Finally, don't underestimate the power of a feeling. For many people, a negative or positive feeling can be one of the first factors to signify a need to quit, either temporarily or for good.

And if it seems that a commitment is exorbitantly time-consuming, distracting you from your education, filling you with dread, wearing you out and benefitting you only in that it is so terrible that it's helping you to "build character" as they say, it's probably time to quit.

Once again, I refer to two authorities on the ways of managing time and mental health efficiently. Drapalski says: "If there is some kind of benefit, I'll stick with it," but "if it stops being of use, I'll drop it." For Berman it's much more cut and dry: "If it doesn't make you happy, quit."

There are times when quitting is the best option. And figuring out when that is, is critical to living a satisfying and healthy life. So, if you're crazed all the time and you can't put your finger on exactly why that is, it might be worth mulling over this list, to see if you can't knock something off your packed schedule. Chances are you'll probably be happier.

Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu

Who will bear the burden?

Eric Magazu

The cost of college is a huge portion of the budget of most University of Massachusetts students, whether this cost is borne by parents or students themselves. Several student advocacy groups working at UMass have been making the case for a change in the way we fund higher education, and some have their sights international in scope. In the United States, the cost of higher education is roughly split between taxpayers and individual students.

Massachusetts taxpayers currently contribute a portion of the UMass budget, and in almost all colleges, there are extensive provisions of federal financial aid. The vast majority of students receive some form of financial aid. But, how should this division be apportioned? How much of the cost of higher education should be borne by taxpayers and how much by individual students?

Campus student groups have been advocating for a higher proportion of the cost to be borne by taxpayers. There are strong arguments in their favor. College students have been taking on larger and larger proportions of debt. This makes it more difficult for students to repay these loans once they enter the job market. If college students have to take on a large percentage of their college debt, this will result in decreased access to lower income students.

Does the additional portion of college costs borne by individual students result in decreased access to higher education by lower income individuals and families? Student advocacy organizations say that this is indeed the case. According to the Project on Student Debt (Projectonstudentdebt.org), over 900,000 students are blocked from federal loans due to the fact that their education institutions are not even participating in the federal loan program.

Society loses overall because we have less educated people in our workforce. We can even be putting our whole nation at a disadvantage by not bearing the cost of education as a whole society.

Without access to loans or grants, lower income students lose access to higher education.

A free market-based system may indicate that this is all right, but student groups have been advocating that this results in a loss of productive labor. Society loses overall because we have less educated people in our workforce. We can even be putting our whole nation at a disadvantage by not bearing the cost of education as a whole society. We already do this for the early stages of education; why not complete this through the college level?

This is what was indeed done through the 1970s in many state schools. Massachusetts Students United (MSU) has been advocating for a return to such a model in Massachusetts. This would open educational opportunities to all students.

Still, other student groups are eager to expand this model to work in developing countries.

Jean Arnaud, a chemistry and math major, wants to expand higher education opportunities in Haiti by opening a university that is combined with cooperative farming. In developing nations, such a model may be necessary. The availability of higher education in developing nations is even more severely restricted than in the United States.

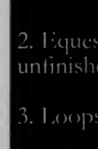
Since the governments have little funds, they rely almost exclusively on tuition to raise funds for their universities. This results in a further stratification of access to higher education beyond the already deep division of wealth that already exists.

The PEACH Project, the initiative started by Arnaud here at UMass, seeks to redress this situation by tackling the costs of higher education from all angles simultaneously. Arnaud mentions that there are additional concerns in developing nations beyond the monetary cost. These include problems related to transportation, culture and brain drain.

Transportation can be a serious factor in developing nations in that students are unable to even get to the location of the university, due to poor road and public transit networks. Cultural factors also play a role. Parents tend to be afraid that if their children become educated, they will become disconnected from the family. At first glance, this would appear to be an ironic situation, but this is a genuine concern that needs to be addressed.

The reason for parental concerns is related to the brain drain factor. Those in developing nations that manage to attain higher education find themselves needing to leave their native land simply to practice their new skill set and profession. The result is that, while richer nations like the United States gain from this fresh talent, the poorest nations will continue to remain poor.

The other way to look at funding higher education is to assert that it is an individual initiative. It is brought down that those who seek education will find it. Many times, even taking the initiative to go to the local library is enough to begin the process of attain the skills necessary to have a good job, and the internet readily democratizes access to information. Those who want a higher education should be expected to take loans and fund the cost of their own learning. However, many people will assert that this is a hateful and mean-spirited point of view.



Therefore, addressing the costs of higher education needs to be an issue for politicians and student leaders to examine. To what degree do we assert that education, and in particular college education, is a societal need that ought to be funded by taxpayers and international organizations, and to what degree is this responsibility placed on the individual students and families?

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at magazu@student.umass.edu.

Five reasons why the Rec Center hasn't opened:

1. Need to bury the treasure.
2. Equestrian statue of Holub unfinished.
3. Loops, Wormholes and time
4. Waiting on the exorcism.
5. They put in fountains instead of exercise equipment.

Chill out, Humans vs Zombies players

Dan Rahrig

We've all seen it – the hordes of red bandana-clad students scurrying around campus with their toy guns, yelling and signaling to each other and coordinating attacks. Humans vs. Zombies, the popular college game has returned to the University of Massachusetts Amherst yet again this semester, and it is still just as annoying as ever.

I understand that people have a lot of fun playing the game and I realize that it has come to be known as a staple of college life at many universities across the United States. But, despite its widespread popularity, I can't say I look at it all that favorably.

I don't see the appeal in running around campus all day looking like a fool with a piece of cloth tied around my head. I don't understand how the people who play this game tirelessly don't have better things to do.

We're in college now – we have classes and homework and should be in the slow process of transitioning to adulthood.

One with strangely-dressed teenagers scrambling after other strangely dressed teenagers with plastic guns? I think not. On Sunday, I was walking by the Student Union and a mob of "humans" were gathered around a person with a megaphone shouting "What do we want? Brains! What do we want? Brains!" While interesting and comical, such displays would not have attracted me to UMass as a high school student, and I think it really has the potential to turn a lot of other people off, too.

I'm not trying to levy a personal attack against the people who have chosen to play this game – I'm just saying that it wouldn't hurt to tone down the intensity a little bit. I get that you're just having a good time and that some people get really into it – but not everyone on campus shares your enthusiasm. My problem is not with the people playing the game; it is with the way the game itself is conducted.

The other night I was walking to Central when a person lunged out at me from a tree. I had my iPod on at the time and this sudden assault scared me half to death. That kind of thing is not okay, someone could think you were legitimately attacking them. Maybe it's unwise to play this kind of game so late at night – if you can't see whether or not someone is wearing an armband or a headband, you should probably call it a day (and maybe do some homework?). By running amuck and throwing yourself at the first person you see, you're asking for trouble.

If you're having a good time, then by all means keep playing. But I think it's time you stopped taking yourself and this game so seriously – you don't need to run around in packs and push and shove and make a ruckus. That kind of behavior isn't very becoming of you, and it certainly isn't appreciated by the general population. If you can't take it down a notch and play in an unobtrusive manner, maybe this isn't the kind of game you should be playing. Be respectful of your fellow students – you may be obsessed with Humans vs. Zombies, but I can assure you that most people aren't.

Dan Rahrig is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at drahrig@student.umass.edu.

I don't see the appeal in running around campus all day looking like a fool with a piece of cloth tied around my head.

Blood is thicker than water

Matt Kushi

Siblings

Many of us have them – younger or older brothers and sisters of the same family blood as we are.

Along with the territory of having siblings come the relationships that you form with them. Throughout your life, the relations you carry on with your siblings may be one dimensional or multi-layered.

At one time or another, you probably despised your sibling in a way only siblings can understand. Your younger sibling was too whiny. Your older sibling was too bossy.

Other times, there is nothing more that you want than to just sit and talk with your sibling, especially after a bad day. You want someone who understands in a different way than your friends.

That is the outline of sibling relationships at the most basic level. However, we live in a world where most things are not basic. The world that we live in is a complex one. The answers may not always be clear cut. The same goes for sibling relationships.

What if your brother or sister gets sent to jail? What if they have something like depression? What if they have cancer? Does the relationship change? It can, but it doesn't have to.

There is no right or wrong answer to this question. It is a complex question with many complex answers that differs from each person.

It is this question that is the driving force behind the movie "My Sister's Keeper" starring Abigail Breslin, Sofia Vassilieva and Cameron Diaz. I will not go into the finer points of the plot, but one of the main themes of the movie, based on the novel by Jodi Picoult, is how each person is individually effected by teenager Kate Fitzgerald's cancer.

A lesson Joe has taught me is to accept people for who they are, not who you want them to be.

While the story focuses on how Kate's sister, Anna, tries to win the right to her own body instead of being used to save her sister through operations, it is really a story about different perspectives.

From what I know, sibling relationships do not have to be different just because there is an obstacle that others may not have to encounter. This certainly is not true for everyone, but these obstacles can draw you and your sibling closer together.

Though my older brother, Joe, may have physical and intellectual disabilities, I do not consider him to be different. Joe is one of my best friends as well as being my older brother.

Even though we have different circumstances that we must encounter and work around, our sibling relationship is the same as any pair of brothers.

We get mad at each other. We both have habits that make the other cringe. We even have brotherly fights occasionally. We are also very close.

We enjoy each other's company. We know how to make each other laugh and how to have a good time together.

Not a day goes by in my life where I don't wonder what conversations I would have with Joe if he could speak. However, we do speak to each other, in a way, through our emotions. Despite the fact that we have never had a true back and forth verbal conversation, I feel that Joe is the one who understands me like no one else in the world.

A lesson Joe has taught me is to accept people for who they are, not who you want them to be. This is not a lesson that is limited to sibling situations, but situations in everyday life all over the world. If you think about it, it is the basis of relationships and friendships.

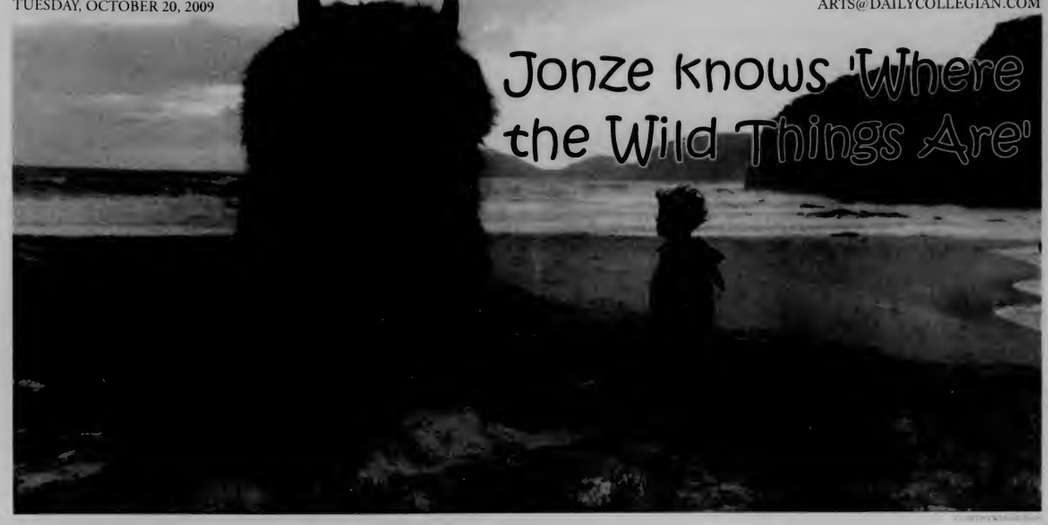
In the course of day to day life, there may be differences. But in the nature of how you view a person, there does not need to be a change. We all share the same common love of life. We are all one as inhabitants of this earth.

On the day to day basis, there may be things that have to be done differently. You may have to take the responsibility of being a personal care attendant. You may have to sit by that hospital bed to comfort your loved one or visit a nursing home to be with your loved one. There are obstacles in life, yes. No one said that life was going to be easy. There are simply forces in this world that we cannot control.

However, what we can control is how we treat people. Whether it be a sibling or a stranger, treating a person with respect is the greatest honor you can do for an individual.

The reason why the sibling relationship is so complex and personal is that it is personal. Your brother or sister is not just another person on the street. They are of your family blood and family name.

When something happens to a sibling, it affects your life as well as theirs. While something may be different, that does not mean that they are different. We are all humans. In the end, our similarities vastly outweigh the differences.



Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Based on the beloved tale by Maurice Sendak, "Where the Wild Things Are" stars newcomer Max Records as the lonely and petulant Max, a young boy driven by frustration over family problems to seek out the monstrous Wild Things. Director Spike Jonze brings mirth and whimsy to the familiar tale, infusing it with his own unique brand of surrealism.

Indie rock triple shot stakes claim on NoHo

By Danny Marsfield
Collegian Correspondent

Packing a percussive sound that separates them from their indie rock colleagues, White Rabbits will be stopping by the Pearl Street Clubroom in Northampton on Tuesday, Oct. 20. On the heels of their sophomore release, "It's Frightening," the talented six-member group has launched a fall tour and will be joined on this date by fellow Brooklyn based indie rockers Suckers and Glass Ghost.

The core of White Rabbits formed at the University of Missouri in 2004. Frontman and pianist Stephen Patterson and guitarist Gregory Roberts had known each other throughout college. The last member to join, Jamie Levinson, played in a ska band with Roberts during high school.

After their 2007 full length debut "Fort Nightly" met with favorable reviews, White Rabbits decided to switch gears a bit, switching to TBD Records from Say Hey Records and enlisting the help of Spoon frontman Brit Daniel for production of their new release.

White Rabbits and Spoon have become quite chummy over the years, and Daniel's influence can really be felt on this album. The low register piano stylings of frontman Stephen Patterson may seem akin to the track "The Beast and Dragon Adored" off of Spoon's lp, Gimme Fiction.

"It's Frightening" leads off with the single "Percussion Gun," which really sets the tone for the entire album as percussion laden and groove oriented. The song, which they have played on David Letterman and produced a music video for, features the band's two percussionists, Matthew Clark and Jamie Levinson, pounding away at tenor drums in an energizing rhythm that is almost militaristic in quality. The group makes full use of their two drummers throughout the album, and their emphasis on percussion and rhythm is what makes them so unique.

The fabric of White Rabbits music usually begins with Patterson's left hand piano, which serves as the backbone to many of their repetitive and catchy themes. Patterson's vocals are quite diverse, as he is able to pull of an eerie and harrowing sound on "Lioness," then sound soothing on mellow on tracks like "The Company I Keep." Patterson is complemented well by the rest of the ensemble, as bassist Brian Betancourt and guitarists Gregory Roberts and Alexander Even all sing back up vocals and display a pretty acute sense of harmony.

The album ends on a murmur, punctuating an otherwise loud and energetic work; the final track, "Leave it at the Door," presents some particularly sensitive and sustained vocal harmonies.

White Rabbits have been noted for putting on quite a live performance. At South by Southwest 2008, a new media conference that features a music festival for upcoming artists, they were named one of the top three live performances by the famous British musical tabloid NME.

The show, which is being advertised as a "Brooklyn indie rock triple shot," will kick off at 8:30 p.m. in the clubroom. Tickets are $13 at the door. For more information, visit www.ibeg.com.

Danny Marsfield can be reached at dmarsfie@student.umass.edu.

Inert remake of horror classic makes 'Stepfather' one to miss

By Danny Marchant
Collegian Correspondent

The credited director of "The Stepfather" is Nelson McCormick. The credited writer is J.S. Cardone. Those are incredibly creative names for what are clearly two monkeys who turned to Post-It notes with ideas written on them to devise the script for "The Stepfather." The result of their effort is a completely unnecessary remake of a horror movie that has little originality or logic and features - probably to the chagrin of most would-be fans - no horror whatsoever.

"The Stepfather" is a remake of the 1987 movie of the same name. The original starred Terry O'Quinn, who has since moved on to greener pastures, playing John Locke on the television show "Lost." This version stars Dylan Walsh, who is best known for his part on the show "Nip/Tuck." He should hope that is all he is known for, as this movie isn't going to do him any favors.

"The Stepfather" is about a man (Walsh) who marries into families, but when they don't measure up to his high ideals, he murders them. When this movie begins he has just murdered one family and is in search of another. He finds one in a grocery store, wooing Susan (Sela Ward) by asking her where the peanut butter is. How romantic. Thanks to the magic that shoddy scriptwriting provides, six months later the two are engaged and living in domestic bliss, until the sound of bad rock music signals the arrival Michael (Penn Badgley), who does not take kindly to his mother's new prospective husband. He tries to warn everyone, but they don't listen.

If only they had heard the foreboding music.

"The Stepfather" is meant to be a horror movie. It's obvious that what happens on screen is supposed to be scary. But it's all tired, old clichés that have already been seen. Within a few scenes, you'll be able to figure out the entire movie. This is a shame because there are no scares or thrills to occupy you until the end. A four-year old with a crippling anxiety disorder wouldn't be frightened by this movie.

It doesn't help that the main character, the dread "Stepfather," isn't menacing in the faintest. Movies like these depend upon the villain being an unstoppable force of nature. But here, he's just an idiot. When the local cat lady sees his face on "America's Most Wanted," she tries to warn the rest of the neighborhood. So what does our villain do? He drives by her house not once, but twice, whilst giving her a threatening look. That'll shut her up.

While having dinner with Michael he talks about his last family, who died in a car accident (but not really). He mentions his daughter Michelle and a few minutes later calls her Lisa. Michael confronts him and his explanation is that Michael heard him wrong. Oh, of course, his mistake.

"The Stepfather" is filled with these sorts of slip-ups. He remembers the wrong lies, or says the wrong things and the poor, innocent victims turn out to be smarter than him. It's really a movie about a hapless serial killer and all the stupid things he does. The fact that he's murdered nearly 10 people and doesn't seem to think that warrants a spot on "America's Most Wanted" shows how clever and cunning he is. Hannibal Lecter eats men like this for breakfast.

I doubt the world was clamoring for a remake of the original "Stepfather," except for that one guy, and who cares about him? He'll see this movie and weep at how it's besmirched the original's good name. This is a boring, mindless film that will put you to sleep before scaring you. Mercifully though, it is under two hours. At least the monkeys did something right.

Danny Marchant can be reached at dmmarcha@student.umass.edu.

"Nip/Tuck" star Dylan Walsh stars in "The Stepfather," a remake of the 1987 slasher of the same name about a serial killer – and serial monogamist– who has a habit of slaying his family when they disappoint.

Minutemen roll with dual weekend wins in Amherst

Goolsby, Dragunas and defense all light the lamp for UMass

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

After seven battles on the ice, the UMass club hockey team stands tall with an undefeated record, including two victories this past weekend over Millersville and Central Connecticut.

"We had some fun, we got some wins under our belts," said head coach Robert Talloni.

Following the UMass varsity team's defeat over No. 3 Boston University, the club team took the ice to try and continue the winning ways of the Minutemen.

"Any time you can watch hockey at a high level, you get inspired," Talloni said.

The first match of the weekend was against the Marauders (0-6-0), with the Minutemen returning to their home turf. Millersville did little to stop UMass' offense, as it allowed six goals to find their way to the back of the net.

"We were certainly in control the whole game. It was hard work, we didn't quit," Talloni said.

The Marauders had to settle for two goals, scored by forwards Dave Rothrock and Josh Schultz. For Rothrock, this was his second goal of the season, the first being scored in Millersville's season opening 8-5 loss to Rider.

For the Minutemen offense, which has 40 goals-scored thus far in the season, things did not slow down. Captain Alec Goolsby put in his sixth goal of the season (25th of his career) during the game. Goolsby also had two assists in the contest (seventh of the season, 56th of his collegiate career).

While forward Brian Dragunas continued his on-going offensive attack with a goal for UMass, four Minutemen defenders lit up the scoreboard. The three goals by the defense came from Richard Gallagher, Michael Noce, Dan Cusano, and Craig Charest. For Gallagher, Cusano, and Charest, these were their first goals of the season. Noce scored one other goal on Oct. 9 against local rival Westfield State.

"The forwards blocked the goalies vision and had the defenders shoot. We encourage the defenders to score more," said Talloni.

With the defensive scoring, it can be seen that the entire team is contributing the effort. "Our players are unselfish and pass to the open man. It takes a lot of pressure off the forwards," Talloni said.

The Minutemen's second match of the weekend was three years in the making. Taking on the Blue Devils (2-2-0), UMass was well prepared for the game. Both teams had continuous offensive outputs in a match that featured 14 goals, with the Minutemen getting the 8-6 victory.

Seven minutes into the match, UMass found itself down 2-0 to Central Connecticut. Despite falling into a hole, the Minutemen continued to press on. "It was amazing. We willed ourselves to win that game. The bench was all positive, there was no cheering, no shouting. We just simply said, 'we're going to win this game'," Talloni said.

UMass remained behind for a majority of the game, with the Blue Devils outscoring the Minutemen 5-2. With the will to win still within the team, UMass rallied and scored five-straight goals to lead by one.

"The next five games we got. We took command of the game, it was just unbelievable," Talloni said.

Behind by one goal, Central Connecticut pulled its goalie in order to provide more offense. Goolsby received the puck at the top of the red line, and shot it into the empty net, scoring his third goal of the match.

"They left their whole game on the ice, we died too. We were exhausted," Talloni said.

Talloni cited the usage of the clock as the key to the mental strain the game puts on the team. "It's clock management. You're watching the clock, looking for the time to put in the right players," he said.

"Games like that, they don't make character, they show character. They never got down. We were down two, three goals, but we never got down. It was very reminiscent of the old Boston Bruins. We made it happen," he said.

The upcoming games for the Minutemen are against New Haven and Vermont. The match against the Chargers (2-0-0) is on Oct. 23, with the match against the Catamounts (1-4-0) falling on the following night.

The Oct. 24 match against Vermont is the second meeting of the season for UMass and the Catamounts. In both teams season opener this year, the Minutemen trumped Vermont, 8-1.

With the match against the Catamounts being a regional match, Talloni acknowledged that the pressure is on. "We need to make a statement again, and go out and win that game."

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

Richter only college participant in singles

Her international experience gave her the necessary edge

RICHTER from page 8

going against."

"Overall, you're working towards the spring. And it's a very young lineup. So I came away feeling very good about the regatta and so did the girls," Dietz said.

Richter, from Woltersdorf, Germany, was one of only two collegiate rowers to participate in the championship singles race.

She finished the race in 12th place despite having difficulty rowing at a fast pace and steering at the same time, especially with the amount of curves in the course.

"It was a little intimidating but it was a good experience," Richter said.

"She was very nervous having never been in Boston she didn't know the course at all," Dietz said, "I was really pleased with her race on Saturday. I thought she really rode well."

Richter felt the support of her coaches and teammates during the race as Dietz followed her on his bike the entire time and a few of her teammates looked over from the bridges cheering her along.

UMass also received plenty of encouragement from its alumni who set up tents and held events at night to cheer on the school.

"We have a very strong fan base there," Dietz said. "Every year it gets bigger and bigger. The alumni really pull together. It's nice to see."

"You have to be in an event like this to appreciate it. Even with the terrible conditions there were probably 100,000 people on the shore watching these races."

The experience gathered in this race will build the team's confidence for its participation in the Head of the Charles next year.

At that time the team hopes to have two or three representatives in the under-23 U.S. national team for the lightweight eight as well as one or two more in the openweight eight. Richter is a returnee of the under-23 German national team.

"There's a lot of upside potential there with such a young crew," Dietz said. "So you keep moving up."

Pete Vasquez can be reached at pvasquez@student.umass.edu

Baldwin again is top finisher

JOHNSON from page 8

Minutemen was junior Kevin Johnson, who finished 74th overall in the race with a time of 24:49.4. His brother David recorded the second best time for the Minutemen, finishing with a time of 25:03.17, earning him 97th overall. Senior Andrew McCann finished the race about fifteen seconds behind Johnson with a time of 25:17.08. UMass coach Ken O'Brien knows that his team did not necessarily have its best race of the season, and believes there is a certain level that it could reach before season's end.

"I think as a group we haven't seen our best performances yet," said O'Brien. We got plenty left in terms of what our potential is."

Senior Jonathan Pierce, finished fourth on the team with a time of 25:20.03 and sophomore Zachary Gordon rounded out the team's top five by running a time of 26:30.08. With two weeks before the team's next race, O'Brien understands that it is a crucial time of preparation balanced with rest.

"You try to tie up a lot of loose ends with the last weeks of the season," O'Brien said. "We have to be more cognizant of the proper amount of work and the proper amount of rest."

The Minutemen can rest up this week, but looming on the schedule is the A-10 Championships on Oct. 31.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

Co-captains Shivi Zan (center) and Lauren Stocker (left) finished second and third on the team and 19th and 22nd overall, respectively, at the Albany Invite on Saturday. Freshman Courtney Baldwin paced the Minutewomen with an 11th place finish that earned UMass 4th place in the race.

The Wildcats recorded their first shutout since 2002 in the win over the Dukes on Saturday. The Wildcats forced three turnovers and recorded 67 tackles as a team.

Whitney matches career-high in passing scores for Wildcats

WILDCATS from page 8

(6-1, 3-1 CAA) rebounded from their first loss of the season last week with a 27-0 win over James Madison on Saturday. James Madison (2-4, 0-3 CAA) won five of the previous six meetings between the two teams, but Villanova had the upper hand in their latest meeting.

Wildcat quarterback Chris Whitney matched a career-high in passing touchdowns with three and finished the day 11-of-16 passing for 93 yards. Whitney also ran the ball 18 times for 97 yards. As a team, Villanova had a productive running game on Saturday, as they ran for a total of 225 yards.

Junior Matt Szczur had a career day as he recorded his first multi-touchdown game. Szczur caught four passes for 53 yards and also ran the ball eight times for 76 yards.

James Madison quarterback Justin Thorpe was 13-of-32 passing for 144 yards. Thorpe ran the ball 18 times for 65 yards.

His running game however needed work, as evident by his two fumbles, both of which resulted in turnovers. Defensive back Fred Maldonado and sophomore James Pitts both recovered one of the fumbles for the Wildcats to highlight a very successful day on defense for the team.

No. 23 Delaware cruises

Townson's three touchdowns in the fourth quarter came too late, as Delaware rode a 35-0 halftime lead to a 49-21 victory on Saturday. The Blue Hens' current three-game winning streak is the team's longest since the 2007 season.

Running back Jerry Butler stepped in for injured starter David Hayes and led the Delaware (5-2, 3-2 CAA) ground attack with 82 yards on 13 carries. The team total was a season-high 204 yards rushing on the day.

Butler also opened the second half with an 89 yard kickoff return for a touchdown to extent the lead to 42-0. This is his third career kickoff return for a score set a new Delaware program-record that was previously held by Bill Hopkins (1962-64).

Delaware quarterback Pat Delvin went 9-of-15 passing for 127 yards and added 49 more yards on four carries. Delvin threw two touchdown passes to wide receiver Mark Duncan, who caught six passes for 99 yards on the afternoon.

Quarterback Tommy Chroniger led the Tigers (2-4, 1-2 CAA) on the ground, rushing for 97 yards and a touchdown. Chroniger, who replaced quarterback Brian Potts (4 of 11 passing for 46 yards and 2 interceptions) went only 2-of-7 passing for 25 yards.

Drew Morrison can be reached at ajmorris@student.umass.edu.

Senior Jerry Butler led the way for Delaware with 82 yards on the ground and returning an 89-yard kickoff for a touchdown in Saturday's 49-21 win over the Tigers. Butler finished the game with 221 all-purpose yards.

UConn player fatally stabbed

MIAMI — It's the type of early morning phone call no football coach ever wants to receive—news that one of their guys is gone.

Corey Bell, the director of football operations at the University of Miami, got one of those calls early Sunday morning as news of the stabbing death of University of Connecticut cornerback Jasper Howard began to spread.

Bell, who coached Howard at Miami Edison High, was stunned and saddened to learn of the tragedy.

"I'm real close to all my guys, but Jazz and I were real close," said Bell, who awoke at 6 a.m. to phone calls and text messages from Edison alumni. "We spoke at least once every week. He's a great kid, coachable, dependable, real tough mentally and talented. He's like most of the kids from that area in Little Haiti. He had dreams of getting to the next level and making it and taking care of his mom and his sister."

Howard, a 20-year old, former defensive back at Edison, died Sunday following an on-campus stabbing at UConn, hours after the team's victory Saturday night against Louisville.

The Hartford Courant reported the stabbing happened following the end of a school-sponsored dance at the university student union. It reported that an altercation occurred outside building after someone pulled a fire alarm.

Howard was reportedly one of two people stabbed at the center of campus. He was airlifted to a nearby hospital, where he died. The second victim, who was not named, survived, and was treated and released from the hospital. The newspaper reported that the suspect in the stabbings was still at large early Sunday, according to a statement posted on the university's website.

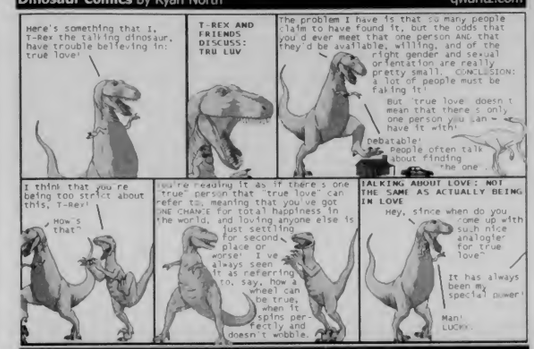
UConn president Michael Hogan told The Associated Press that the stabbing is a tragedy for the entire university community. He says state police are working with campus police.

"Jasper was never a kid in any kind of trouble," said Miami Norland High coach Daryle Heidelburg, Howard's coach his senior year at Edison. "Whenever there were any problems on the team, he was the peacemaker. He's try to squash things before they got worse. He was never confrontational."

Howard was an accomplished athlete in Miami-Dade County during his high school career.

Howard earned first-team All-Dade football honors at Edison in 2007, as well as a first team All-Dade track and field long jumper. Howard, who also played wide receiver in high school, had 27 catches for 604 yards and seven touchdowns and intercepted two passes to go along with 42 tackles his senior season. He also earned Most Valuable Player honors in the Nike Dade-Broward All-Star game that season.

COMICS



Wondermark by David Malki! wondermark.com

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro travisdandro.com

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North qwantz.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees mnftiu.cc

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

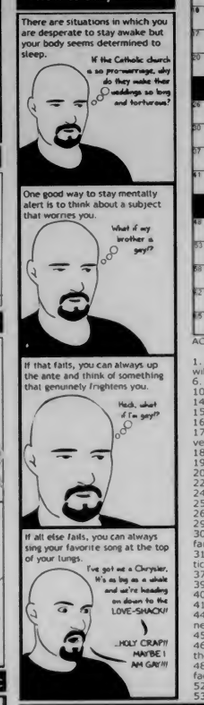
Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

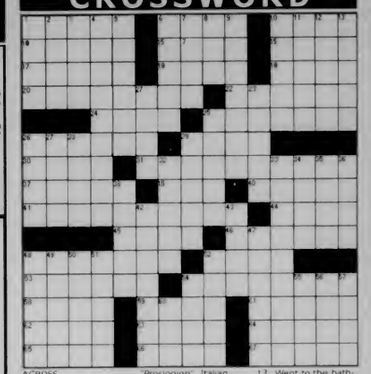
Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

LOST



Lost silver Bracelet with Heart charm engraved with intials DLP and date on back. Sentimental value will offer reward. Please call me at 978-273-7298. Thank You!

ANNOUNCEMENTS



Montreal Party Weekends, From $89. Includes Hotel, Bus, and clubs. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

Basic Instructions by Scot Meyer
"How to Stay Awake"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Large American wild cats
6. Seconds (abbrev.)
10. Vend
14. Seize
15. Process (abbrev.)
16. Threesome
17. 2 masted sailing vessel
18. Opera set in Egypt
19. Car
20. Sense of beauty
22. Soul or spirit
24. Ferrous
25. Searched
26. Teeter-_____
29. Whine
30. Member of the lily family
31. Performance practices
37. Tree
39. Untruth
40. Remove
41. Monotheists
44. Electrical engineering group
45. Computer game
46. Higher parts of the country
48. French car manufacturer
52. Small mountain
53. Writer of "Prosiogion", Italian theologian Saint
54. Sometimes called a Swedish turnip
58. Percussion instrument
59. Modern day Persia
61. Australian outback painter Sidney
62. Wander
63. Where the sun rises
64. Handiwork
65. Singer Fitzgerald
66. Observes
67. Cutting instrument

DOWN
1. Vomit
2. Puts into service
3. Mongrel
4. Frank Lloyd Wright was one
5. Orb
6. Iberian country
7. Norse for "Ruler of all"
8. Fish
9. Shoulder blade
10. Remains
11. Belch
12. Supple or limber
13. Went to the bathroom (slang)
21. Unit of pressure
23. Fortune tellers
25. Female ruler
26. Forbidden
27. Actor Ken
28. Actress Spelling
29. Small bottle
32. Poet T.S. _____
33. Born dead
34. Region
35. Security on a debt
36. Hurried away
38. Shade of green
42. Co-habitants
43. Matching jacket and trousers
47. Quantum theory discoverer Max _____
48. Spanish for "Father"
49. Sign up
50. Common
51. An asexual reproductive structure
52. Pursues
54. Destroy
55. Jai _____, sport
56. Iron hook on a pole
57. Initial wager
60. Actress Charlotte _____

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
You will know the pain of not getting a hot piece of pie.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Dante Wesley now maliciously haunts dreams. Maybe yours.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
"Becoming a woman" rituals often attribute some success.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Everyone is meant for something. For seniors, it's Wii Bowling.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Stop spilling the salt. It's very bad luck!

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Your list of accomplishments does sound a bit better when you read it like Sean Connery.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Sadly, nothing truly important will have authentic battle damage!

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Bow before the cyborg with the bifocals!

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Airborne is simply false advertising. You don't get that high.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Those noises aren't called "internal voices." It's just the thought process.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Don't be shy! Flash everyone your high beams.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Sadly, how "indie" you are does not correlate with the degree to which you are Indiana Jones.

SUDOKU

	1					6
					7			1
	8	7		9
					5
3	9							6
			7				3	2
	7			1		2
		8		6		9	7
6			4					5

ORPAZ AUTO REPAIR
RELIABLE & AFFORDABLE FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC AUTO SERVICE
CRAIG EYAL BLOCK TORNOVISH
ASE MASTER TECHNICIAN
48 BELCHERTOWN RD
AMHERST, MA 01002
orpazautorepair@verizon.net
413 256 3600
413 835 1135

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM sneaks by BU for first season win

DANIEL HERBERHOLZ
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Sometimes all it takes is twelve-hundredths of a second.

Facing Boston University, the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving teams pulled out a 153-147 victory this weekend, finishing on a 200-yard freestyle relay time of 1:24.01 – just .12 seconds ahead of the Terriers.

Senior Juan Moliere anchored the Minutemen relay squad that also included juniors Chris Howard and Trevor Ziegler and freshman Pete Sacco. Arik Seiler, Matthew Ricket, Daniel Kempf and Jackson Hill swam for the Terriers.

Down by three points going into the race, Howard, Ziegler and Sacco kept the Minutemen slightly behind BU until Moliere hit the water for the final leg.

Moliere, winner of the day's 50- and 100- yard freestyle (21.32 and 47.27, respectively), pulled ahead in the final stretch to out-touch Hill, winning the dual meet for UMass.

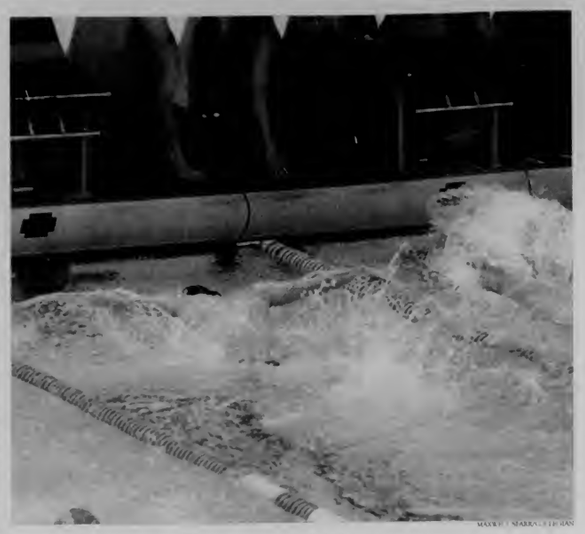
In order to get in position for the last-race victory, several Minutemen made solid point contributions. Sophomore Joey Sbordon won the 200-yard freestyle over BU's Seiler by coming from behind in the final 5 yards to notch a 1:42.94 victory. Sbordon also placed first in 1000-yard freestyle (9:49.41, just one second ahead of Terrier Tyson Siesnick) and 500-yard freestyle (4:47.90).

The Minutewomen, led by freshman Amina Meho's first place 100-yard freestyle finish, lost 175-118.

Meho edged BU's Maria McIntyre for a 53.31 victory in her first collegiate meet. She also swam to a second place finish in the 200-yard freestyle relay with senior Elizabeth Walsh, junior Jennifer Corriveau and Sarah Kanellas.

Both Walsh and Corriveau also earned points in individual events. With a time of 1:00.57, Corriveau finished second in the 100-yard backstroke. Walsh placed third in the 200-yard backstroke (2:13.04) and second in 200-yard freestyle (1:56.72).

The second and third place finishers in the women's one-meter dive were Minutewomen – sophomore Hannah Swift and freshman Molly Elkins, with scores of 213.52 and 213.37 respectively. Swift also took second in three-meter diving.



The men's diving team contributed to their victory with four of the top five finishers in both events.

Sophomore Jason Cook beat BU's Tanner Knorr by almost 30 points in the one-meter event, finishing with 295.12 points. Juniors John Clark and Adam Duffield notched third and fourth, while sophomore Conor Dunn took fifth. Knorr edged Cook in the three-meter event, however, followed by Duffield, Clark, and Dunn.

The Atlantic 10 preseason coach's poll picked the men's team to win its 12th conference championship this year.

The teams next travel to West Point, N.Y. to face Army this Saturday.

Daniel Herberholz can be reached at danielherberholz@gmail.com.

MAX H. SIARRACHMAN

The Massachusetts men's swimming team used first-place finishes from senior Juan Moliere and sophomore Joey Sbordon to beat Boston University, 153-147. Amena Meho earned the only win for the Minutewomen.

Minutewomen take fourth in Albany, Men take 25th at ISU

Johnson brothers pace men while Baldwin leads women

JEFFREY ENGMANN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In few words, Massachusetts women's cross country coach Julie Lafreniere, said that her team "put it together" in the Albany Invitational.

On Saturday, in a field of 24 teams, the Minutewomen finished 4th overall, with a productive total of 141 points, two points behind third place finisher Sacred Heart. It was the team's strongest performance of the season, one that included sound contributions from several runners.

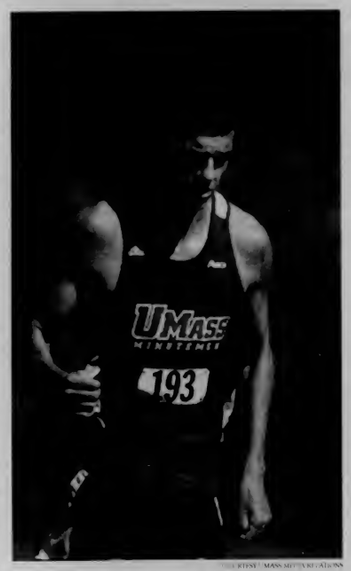
"I'm happy with the times, and I feel like the team is starting to race well," said Lafreniere.

Once again, freshman Courtney Baldwin made her presence felt, as she led the Minutewomen for the second straight week. In her second race of the season, Baldwin finished with a time of 18 minutes, 10 seconds, which secured her an 11th place overall finish in a field of 193 runners. Coach Lafrienere expressed pride in seeing her young athlete's ability to improve upon such a strong performance last week.

"Baldwin did a very nice job. She's a very good athlete. We told her to try to stay loose, and she did do that."

Lafreniere was also pleased with the way her two team captains competed this weekend as well. Red-shirt junior Shiyi Zan had her best run of the season, finishing with a time of 18:22, earning her 19th place overall. Fellow junior Lauren Stocker was the next UMass runner to cross the finish line, finishing in 23rd overall with a time of 18:23.

As impressive it was, Coach Lafreniere was not exactly surprised by her team's performance. Two of the Minutewomen's top five runners are finally out competing in the stretch run of the season. Zan has had to battled sickness this season, and Baldwin, a freshman, a new participant to the sport has begun make an immediate impact on the team.



The Minutewomen have a week off, and then they travel to Saint Louis, Mo on Halloween, to compete for conference supremacy in the Atlantic 10 Championships.

The Minutemen race this weekend featured many teams that look to compete for the national championship this season.

UMass placed 25th out of 35th in the ISU Pre Nationals held in Terre Haute, Ind. Saturday. The race featured many of the top cross country programs in the nation, including No. 1-ranked Stanford, who emerged as victorious in the race on Saturday.

Leading the way for the

See JOHNSON on page 6

STEVE J. SHERMAN / MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Kevin Johnson finished first for the Minutemen and 74th overall at the 2009 Indiana State Pre-Nationals this past Saturday.

UMass rowers see results on Charles

Dietz and Richter reach finals at Head of the Charles Regatta

BY PETE VASQUEZ
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The weather may not have been the most welcoming but the Massachusetts rowing team gained plenty of experience this past weekend in their most acclaimed race of the year, the prestigious Head of the Charles Regatta. Rather than facing the wind as their usual obstacle, the Minutewomen rowed through a mixture of rain and snow on Saturday and Sunday.

"Rowers are hearty people," coach Jim Dietz said. "We're like ducks. When it rains you don't go inside, you keep floating around."

"By Sunday afternoon, it was coming down snowflakes as big as my fists. I've never seen snowflakes that would come down in clumps," Dietz said.

UMass was well represented in a race that annually features Olympic national teams as well as the top collegiate rowing teams in the country. The women participated in the lightweight eights event and the championship eights.Sophomore Julia Richter represented UMass in the championship singles. Even the coaches participated, with Dietz competing in the championship singles and assistant coach Laura Simon coxing the UMass alumni team in the alumni eights.

The UMass team, coxed by junior Carly Payne, finished in eighth place in the lightweight eights, ahead of teams such as Stanford, Radcliffe Crew of Harvard University, MIT, and Holy Cross College, despite not being accustomed to the Lightweight race.

"I think they did really well," Dietz said. "Lightweights aren't something that we normally do here. Boating a strict lightweight eight just to get the entry and finishing eighth was really respectable."

"The reason is that we have this small boat influence here at UMass. That's why we can throw together a lightweight eight that quickly and it can do that well. They're all really highly trained and skilled in moving from one boat to the other."

In the openweight race, UMass, coxed by Samantha Schnoerr, placed 25th overall behind Atlantic 10-rival Rhode Island, however finishing in front of other rival schools such as Boston College, Northeastern, and Boston University.

The women rowed at a pace of 28 strokes per minute while most of the other crews rowed in the 30s. As a result, the rowing team lost eight seconds per minute in their overall time.

"When the Dutch national team went flying by our gals I don't think it bothered them too much," Dietz said. "They just realized that these are the best crews in the world that you're

See RICHTER on page 6

No. 1 Richmond earns big win in CAA play, Towson falls late

Spiders score 28 after halftime to extend to six while Blue Hens run all over Tigers

BY DREW MORRISON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Top-ranked Richmond got past Maine by a score of 38-21 with four unanswered touchdowns in the second half on Saturday, highlighted by a 90-yard punt return for a score by senior Derek Hatcher.

CAA football

The running game for the Spiders (6-0, 4-0 Colonial Athletic Association) was the strongest point on the day as they out-gained the Black Bears (3-4, 2-2 CAA) 252 yards to -2 on the ground. Senior Justin Forte and running back Garrett Wilkins led the running game for Richmond. Forte lead the team with 91 yards on 16 carries while Wilkins compiled 78 yards on five runs, including a 57-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter to give the Spiders a 31-14 lead.

Spider quarterback Eric Ward went 12-of-21 in passing on the day for 108 yards, a touchdown and also a rushing score. Ward often targeted sophomore Ire Gray, who caught six passes for 67 yards.

Maine had a 14-10 lead going into the half, but following the break, Ward threw a 3-yard touchdown to redshirt sophomore Donte Boston to give the lead to the Spiders. Hatcher's long punt return for a score on the next Richmond possession making the score 24-14 for the Spiders., after the Black Bears were forced to punt. Maine quarterback Warren Smith went 35-of-58 passing for 327 yards and two passing touchdowns and one rushing touchdown in the losing effort.

NOVA DOMINATES JMU

The sixth-ranked Wildcats

See WILDCATS on page 6

STEVE J. SHERMAN / MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Richmond's Kendall Gaskins marches into the end-zone to score the first of five touchdowns by the Spiders in their 38-21 rout of Maine on Saturday. Richmond blew the game open with 28 points in the second half.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 66 LOW: 46 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2009

Study discloses options for regionalizing local schools

BY MICHAEL PHILLIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Thursday, Oct. 8, the regionalization committee of Amherst, Pelham, Shutesbury and Leverett met to discuss several scenarios that emerged from a study conducted over the summer on the economic consequences of regionalization of area public K-6 schools.

The first option would be to expand Union 26, which currently includes Amherst and Pelham, Mass., elementary schools, to include Leverett, Mass., and Shutesbury, Mass. The second scenario is to expand all four towns into one region from K-12. The most economically drastic choice would be to expand the region to encompass all four towns' K-12 students and close Pelham elementary school. In doing this, sixth graders would be moved from their local elementary schools to the Amherst Regional Middle School.

A potential cost savings of $9,000 was found for the first scenario, which can be seen as a negligible amount in an education budget of $53.5 million for all four towns.

Don Gibavic of Leverett, a member of the regionalization committee, said during the meeting, "The only reason we are here is money." After analyzing the first scenario, the committee decided there was nothing to be saved.

According to the committee's research, the second situation would potentially save around $232,000. These savings would mainly be attributed to possible reimbursement of transportation costs. Because of issues with dissolving school unions and the loss of the school committees in the smaller towns, the regionalization committee questioned the potential cost savings of the second scenario as well.

The final possibility raised the most attention amongst the committee.

"If you don't get rid of people or buildings, you don't really save money," said Tom Powers, a member of the regionalization committee that presented the study to the group. All told, the final plan could save about 1.2 percent of the school budget or approximately $638,000, according to the report.

At first glance, this solution could offer real savings. More than $600,000 in savings could mean much of the difference between a worst-case scenario in the Amherst town budget circumstances or its best case.

However, the more someone looks into this debate, the more the old cliche applies: "The devil is in the details." Here is how the $638,000 savings breaks down with the following conclusions from the committee.

The closing of Pelham Elementary would mean the building would be completely unused, and this would potentially save the region $220,000. Additionally, staff reductions would save about $186,000 in salaries and benefits.

However, despite its vacancy, the school building would still require maintenance. The debt procured as a result of the building's recent renovations and past expenses would still have to be paid, and this raises the question of what the region's true level of savings would be. Powers concluded the report by saying, "[It] will be hard to realize [savings] due to the difficulty of removing a building from service. Closing a school offers little or no benefit over union or region expansion. No need to consider further." Later, Powers would call the Pelham school a 'complex asset,' as it would be difficult to sell a school because it was built for a specific purpose.

The committee determined that cost savings would not be enough to warrant the third scenario to be considered for financial reasons alone.

"[Let's] write [a] letter to Stan Rosenberg that we aren't going to save any money," said Gibavic.

The study assumed a number of variables that could be debated. Shutesbury and Leverett combined would increase the number of students in the potential four-town region by about 240.

The other schools would absorb the Pelham students, and this would be made possible due to the declining number of school-age children in the area.

The committee felt that in this scenario, one administrator would be added to the regional offices, along with two clerical assistants. They assumed no teachers would

See REGIONALIZATION on page 4

KATHRYN FINNEGAN / COLLEGIAN

Betsy Garson Neisner, Lindsay E. Rockwell, Deborah Shields and Wilmore C. Webley [L-R] discuss preventative methods against cancer.

Conference explains statistics and causes of cancer in females

BY JENNIFER HISHON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If, as statistics state, one in three women will develop cancer at some point in their lives, then how do we take preventative measures?

Addressed to the audience of students and faculty in the campus center of the University of Massachusetts, this question was asked by the team of panelists who gathered on Oct. 20 for the open-panel discussion on women and their rates of developing a form of cancer.

The discussion, titled "Women and Cancer in Our Communities: How to Save Your Own Life," was co-sponsored by the Women's Health Project of the Center for Health Promotion, the Women of Color Leadership Network and the Everywoman's Center for the purpose of educating women on their health and well-being while also raising awareness.

Opening the discussion, Wilmore Webley, assistant professor of microbiology at UMass, began by stating that approximately 12 million people in the U.S. have some prevalent form of cancer, and of those 12 million, 5.9 million are women.

The high rate for developing cancer, which according to Webley is just an umbrella term for about 250 diseases, derives mainly from the fact that people have longer life spans today than 100 years ago, when approximately 3 percent of deaths were cancer related.

"The greatest risk factor of developing cancer is age,"

See CANCER on page 2

Black Student Union hosts its Third Annual Poetry Jam

Prominent spoken word artists headline the event on Oct. 16

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Black Student Union (BSU) continued to channel poetic verses through the University of Massachusetts as its Third Annual Poetry Jam last Friday, Oct.16.

Attempting to bring artists that are currently circulating in the realm of poetry, BSU invited spoken word artists Alysia Harris and Carvens Lissaint as headliners for the event.

Before the headliner artists were introduced, students and community members had their time to shine during the event.

UMass senior Stephanie Jacobo, who participated twice in this event, performed three original pieces.

Moses Steele Lynn, a U.S. Army National Guard member, expressed how participating in the poetry jam was unique in that the poets and the audience were in tune with each other. "I thought participating in the event was an amazing opportunity for me. It isn't often that I get to recite my poetry in a place where people actually want to sit and listen," said Lynn.

"Make noises UMass like you pay no tuition," Lissaint said, attempting to raise energy in the crowd of 100 students that attended the event. He explained to the audience that both of the headlining artists are driven by energy, and so if they are touched by the words, they are advised to react any way they choose. Lissaint was the 2007 winner of the New York Knicks Poetry Slam.

Lissaint's inspiration is characterized by his ability to express and thread what he knows into his creative narrative. "At the end of the day the only thing you have with writing, 'spiting,' or even living ... is your story. If we have nothing to say, have nothing to feel, there is nothing to write," Lissaint said.

"Haiti" is Lissaint's signature poem and the one closest to his heart. He explained that it is an extension of his heritage and experiences in the country. He

See POETRY JAM on page 3

KATHRYN FINNEGAN / COLLEGIAN

Executive board members of the University of Massachusetts Black Student Union pose after hosting the group's Third Annual Poetry Jam on Friday, Oct. 18. Many members participated by performing their own poetry during the event.

Pool incident injures student

BY MICHELLE WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Friday, Oct. 16, a University of Massachusetts graduate student was admitted to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield, Mass., after sustaining injuries at UMass' Totman Gymnasium's aquatics facilities.

Currently in critical condition as of press time, Xiao Ye, 20, originally from China, was taken to Baystate Medical Center after sinking to the bottom of the pool while swimming laps.

The lifeguard on duty pulled Ye out of the pool and called emergency services. Amherst Fire Department Chief Lindsay Stromgren confirmed that fire department medical services responded to the incident around 1 p.m. and took Ye to Baystate Medical Center.

More information included in a follow-up story soon.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu.

STEVE J. SHERMAN / COLLEGIAN

The Totman Gymnasium's swimming pool, where UMass student Xiao Ye was injured in a swimming incident on Oct. 18.

ARTS & LIVING

"Bright Star" brings the love

The latest film from director Jane Campion chronicles the lives of English wordsmith John Keats and his beloved, Miss Fanny Brawne.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS

Richmond defeats Maine

The Richmond football team came from behind to defeat Maine in the second half last weekend, and will face the Minutemen on Saturday.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian advice columnist H.C. Wang gives tips on how to confront a disruptive roommate.

SEE PAGE 5

DailyCollegian.com

More photos and video from the Minutemen's Saturday Homecoming victory over New Hampshire.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 30

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shawna Murphy
COPY EDITOR Annie Keithline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COPIES Andrew Witts
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Hannah Nelson
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alyssa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brunch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Spurr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Elizabeth Tran

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Panel teaches cancer prevention tips

CANCER from page 1

Webley said.

"Cancer cells are cells that are growing out of control, and that is why they are different from normal cells," Webley added. "Probably 80 percent of cancers we have are metastasized. They have spread to other places from where they started. Most cancers would be treatable if they stayed where they started."

"Women are burdened with a huge share of cancer," Webley said. "Breast cancer is not the most fatal case. Lung cancer kills more women than any other."

Webley stated the statistics form the National Cancer Institute, which reported that of the 219,000 estimated cases of lung cancer among men and women, 103,000 of those are women. Webley also stated that 12.7 percent of women who are born today will develop breast cancer, with only 5 to 10 percent of those cases hereditary.

Following Webley's introduction, panelist Deborah Shields, executive director of the Massachusetts Breast Cancer Coalition, continued the discussion with a breakdown of the possible causes for cancer development, which included, among others, smoking, obesity, alcohol consumption and exposure to dangerous chemicals.

According to Shields, of the dangerous chemicals, 200 are found in everyday products such as children's sip cups, nail polish, soap and in food products.

"There is never going to be one 'smoking gun' chemical that we can point to as the cause of breast cancer," Shields said.

Shields emphasized the increasing developmental rates for breast cancer among women, with one in seven women being diagnosed in 2004 as opposed to the ratio of one in 20 in 1940. Massachusetts was the number one state in recorded incidents of breast cancer, but was ranked low in mortality rates. Although the rates of male breast cancer are increasing, they are not comparable to female rates.

When it came time in the discussion to talk treatment, Dr. Lindsey Rockwell, a medical oncologist and hematologist at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, stressed what she deemed to be the two most important qualities one can have when dealing with cancer – awareness and fearlessness.

Rockwell, who stated that she regularly talks of cancer treatment everyday with 20 to 25 people with malignant forms of the disease, said that the only real form of cancer prevention is taking care of oneself by having the knowledge to face the issues head-on.

Rockwell said part of prevention is knowing what not to do – for example, women should be aware that consuming two to five alcoholic drinks per day can increase risk of cancer, as well as having a body mass index greater than 30 or lower than 22.

Fat, she said, contributes to estrogen levels, which in turn stimulates the growth of breast cancer. Though modest exercise four to five days per week can decrease the risk, she said over exercising can have the opposite effect because of the strain put on the body.

Aside from the various forms of cancer screenings and tests, another recommended source of prevention, Rockwell said, is vitamin D, which has shown to decrease the risk of breast, colon and aggressive prostate cancers.

The fourth panelist, Betsy Garson Neisner, executive director of the Cancer Connection center in Florence, Mass., offered a more personal account of her knowledge of the effects of cancer on women.

On coping with her diagnosis of ovarian cancer, Neisner said, "It's a lesson on how to live with uncertainty. You don't know how to control anything in life."

From her account, Neisner added, "You develop something called 'scanxiety,' in that you're about to have a scan and that is all that you can think about."

Neisner said, "30 years ago, a woman would have been ushered into a doctor's office. She would have been told she had cancer and the doctor would have told her what to do for treatment. She would have done it, and she would not have talked about it. It was frowned upon. Nowadays, doctors cannot dictate the treatment for patients. They can only explain the treatment. It is called informed consent, so the patient has to agree to everything."

For Neisner, speaking as the daughter of a cancer survivor, who had suffered in relative silence, and as one herself, becoming involved with the Cancer Connection center had been a big part of what she described as coping mechanisms for the diseases by sharing her experiences with a community of others who could relate their own understanding.

"Most towns and cities don't have something like this," Neisner said. "Most towns and cities aspire to have something like this."

Concluding the discussion, the panelists stressed the importance of moderation in decreasing the risks for developing cancer, and bewaring of the excesses which can cause cancer cells to accumulate over time.

"I always say to people that my job is to keep you out of the hospital, out of my office and in your life," Rockwell said. "The less you see of me the better. Then I have done my job."

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Chilly night ends in spirited fight for UM win

CHELLY LEMERAND/COLLEGIAN

Students bundle up for the Homecoming game this past weekend. University of Massachusetts students, parents and alumni show their school spirit as they cheer on the UMass football team, who won the match, 23-17.

Ready to focus on advancing your career? Pursuing a graduate program can make a real difference — in attaining the job you really want, in getting the promotion you deserve, or in making the career change you dream about.

Saint Joseph College offers graduate programs, including evening, weekend, and online classes, in a wide range of professional fields. Contact us today and see why so many men and women like you turn to SJC to help them get focused on changing their future.

Graduate and Professional Studies

Master's Degree Programs
(partial listing)
- Education
- Early Childhood /Special Education
- Human Development/ Gerontology
- Management
- Nursing
- Marriage and Family Therapy
- School Counseling
- Special Education

Online Master's Degree Programs
- Biochemistry (online and on campus)
- Biology (online and on campus)
- Nutrition (online)

New program!
School of Pharmacy
Doctorate of Pharmacy Program
Under development with plans for a fall 2010 opening*
Pending appropriate approvals*

Graduate Certificate Programs
(partial listing)
- Action Research for the Urban Educator
- Autism Spectrum Disorders
- Educational Applications of Educational Research
- Emerging Diseases
- Health Care Systems Management
- Homeland Security Management
- Latino Community Practice

For more information, visit us at the UMass Graduate Information Day on October 28

Or call 860.231.5261 and visit www.sjc.edu/infoday

Come to our campus -
Graduate Open House
Tuesday, December 1
4:30-6:30 p.m.
Saint Joseph College,
The Bruyette Athenaeum
Register at www.sjc.edu/1028

West Hartford, Connecticut
860.231.5261 • www.sjc.edu

Midterms move students to study

MARY C. SARKOZI/COLLEGIAN

Freshmen John Grochowski and Robert Bender sit together with senior David Cox to eat food and prepare for examinations in the campus center's Blue Wall Cafe.

The Bryant Master of Professional Accountancy Technical Excellence. Market Advantage.

"Bryant's accounting programs are developed with and for the marketplace. I continue to be impressed by the quality of employees we recruit from Bryant."
ROBERT CALABRO '88
TAX PARTNER, PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Start your career with a competitive advantage. Earn your Master of Professional Accountancy (MPAc) degree at Bryant University.
- The two semester MPAc program meets the 150-hour requirement for CPA licensure.
- Complete in Summer/Fall, Summer/Summer, Fall/Spring or Spring/Summer.
- More than 40 firms recruit at Bryant each year.
- Build your accounting knowledge, and learn the leadership, client relations, and project management skills that will set you apart from the crowd.

To learn more about this program and upcoming information sessions:

Contact us at (401) 232-6230 or e-mail mpac@bryant.edu

GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
Smithfield, Rhode Island
www.bryant.edu/mpac
(401) 232-6230

Bryant UNIVERSITY

Students appreciate poetry performances

POETRY JAM from page 1

mentioned how he wrote this poem after as visit in which he witnessed the extremities of beautiful and horrible conditions.

"The 'Haiti' poem to my happiness went over really well at the show," said Lissaint. "Many people were touched by the raw passion and reality of the concept brought forth during the performance. Many came to me after the show in tears, many in joy and many with the overwhelming feeling of respect ... It made me happy knowing the work that came from my heart took place in others," said Lissaint.

Alysia Harris, who is an undergraduate at the University of Pennsylvania, was a member of the winning 2007 Philadelphia team in the "Brave New Voices" slam poetry competition, which was featured in a HBO documentary. Nostalgia and experiences with her ex-boyfriend are sources of inspiration for Harris.

To recite poems that range from her upbringing in Alabama to reflections about a family member who has post-traumatic stress disorder, Harris follows a simple routine.

"I pray, and I memorize and perform in the mirror. That's really about it. No voodoo or anything; no conjuring of ancestors. Yes, there is one rule on how one should express themselves in poetry. That rule is honesty," said Harris.

Gisel Suillant can be reached at gsuillant@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY DONALD LEONARD

Award-winning poet Alysia Harris performs at the Poetry Jam.

Fast-track your success with accelerated master's programs

"I studied biology as an undergraduate. What I learned in this program will help me in my medical career."
—Liberty Elliott '06
MD Candidate
U. of Toledo, College of Medicine

"The program gave me the analytical and quantitative skills that I needed to become an energy analyst right after graduation."
—Wil Chuame, MA '00
Director of Investment Promotion
Tanzania Investment Centre

"The small class setting really encourages class preparation and participation. The professors guided me through the material and acted as mentors and resources for all of us."
—Abby Paul '06, '07G
Assurance Associate
PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP

Visit us at the Graduate School Fair.

UNIVERSITY of NEW HAMPSHIRE
THE WHITTEMORE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS AND ECONOMICS
www.wsbe.unh.edu/grad
(603) 862-1367

FROM THE WHITE HOUSE TO UMASS.

All the Presidents' Pastries

Meet Roland Mesnier former White House Pastry Chef and sample his divine pastries!

Tuesday, 10/20 Berkshire DC
Wednesday, 10/21 Worcester DC

"Private Briefing" in the Berkshire Room
Tuesday, October 20 from 7 – 7:45 pm

Roland Mesnier will chat his pastries as an appetite-whetting preview to his presentation at the Executive Pastry Chef at the White House.
- Blueberry Upside Down Cake
- Banana Cake
- Crème Brûlée
- Chocolate Ginger Mousse
- Plus other menu choices

Open to the public. $12.50 cash and free to UMass students on meal plan.

UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

The regionalization committee is considering ridding Pelham of its elementary school and moving students into regional schools.

Town rethinks school structure

REGIONALIZATION from page 1

be laid off from shutting down Pelham – the teachers of Pelham would be redistributed to work at the other regional schools.

The situation also assumes that in the best-case scenario, the Pelham School would act as a net zero and not a real-estate asset that could be sold at a profit.

Another study of area schools came to a drastically different conclusion. "Franklin County Schools: A 2020 Vision," released in late April of this year, studies the possible cost savings that could be achieved by regionalizing either some or all of Franklin County, among other things. Franklin County includes towns Greenfield, Mass., Deerfield, Mass., and Montague, Mass., as examples, as well as Shutesbury and Leverett.

The study concluded that if you were to combine Franklin County into one school district, you would save an estimated $2.8 million. According to the study, Franklin County currently employs 50.4 people in nine different offices. They envision a region with 26 employees in one office as a possibility.

Joseph Cronin Ed.D., the team leader of the study, put the situation this way. "Franklin County has one percent of the students in the state, three percent of the administrators and six percent of the school committees." Unlike the Amherst regionalization study which envisioned an additional three people to handle various tasks in the central office, the Franklin County study was much more aggressive in the kind of cuts to administrative services.

When asked why this kind of consolidation and regionalization has not happened yet, Cronin spoke about the nature of small-town schools. "[Leverett and Shutesbury] love their small school. They love their arrangement…A lot of UMass faculty members live in Leverett."

One of those UMass faculty members is mathematics professor Farshid Hajir, the chair of the regional school committee. "For each of the towns' [regionalization] would mean giving up some of their autonomy over their elementary schools because right now, Leverett has a school committee, Amherst has a school committee … and those school committees have budgetary control over those schools."

This was a pressing point in the debate surrounding this idea of regionalization; local control, local control, local control! "Unequivocally, I think [local control] is a good thing," said Fajir who also questioned the reliability of the Franklin County study. "There is absolutely no evidence for regionalization being a source for cost savings. What's missing is the increase in administrative complexity … Complex systems (like bigger districts) require more administrators." During the regionalization committee's meeting, commenting on what would be done after the study had been presented, Fajir said, "We are trying to achieve preservation of what we have."

These two viewpoints outline the kinds of differences that come from the various perspectives concerning how to achieve real cost savings in public education. From the various meetings, small towns maintaining control over their own schools, was a paramount concern.

At the Oct. 8 meeting of the regionalization committee, a decision was reached to convene a subcommittee to look at "what is best for the children as the schools get smaller." They wanted to know if there was an educational benefit to regionalization beyond just the cost savings.

What was not debated was the drastically different political climate that the regionalization committee was operating under.

"The idea now is to have another discussion about [how] we can do this better, and [to discuss if] it makes sense to come up with new forms of collaboration or even re-regionalizing moving to some larger configurations in order to maximize the number of dollars that are going into education as opposed to ancillary services and other expenses," said Massachusetts Sen. Stan Rosenberg.

The big word that should not be missed in Rosenberg's quote is "discussion." Rosenberg said that, "At the beginning, [the Deval Patrick administration] talked about statewide imposed solutions."

This pressure is no longer on the regionalization committee.

"The reason we started this whole thing is because of state pressure," said Fajir. "Now that state pressure is not there."

"We are not pushing any particular plan as legislators," said Rosenberg. "What we want is local people making local decisions, rather than Boston making the decision."

Rosenberg said that in the future, he sees "the possibility of mandated action."

On top of everything else, the decline in the school-age population levels puts a twist in the debate.

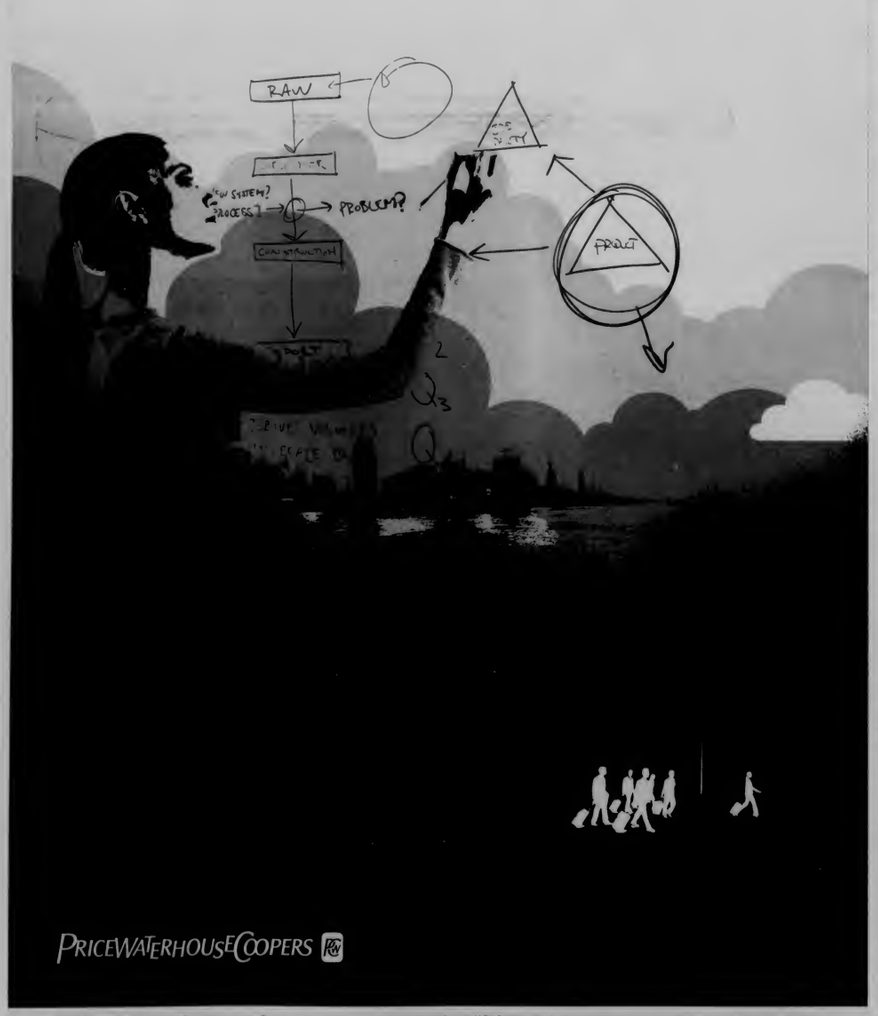
"At some point, the population is going to become acute," said Powers.

If, as is being talked about as a possibility in four or five years, the sixth grades of all four towns moves to the middle school, Pelham would have just 76 students, 28 of which are school-choice kids – kids that don't live in the district of the Pelham School but enter a lottery to attend the school because of its high quality. If school choice opportunities were cancelled, Pelham would only teach an estimated 48 kids, according to the study done by the regionalization committee. These kinds of declining numbers raise questions as to whether or not these schools can be practically sustained as population levels stagnate.

Fajir believes that one key to helping the system is collaboration between the schools. "There have been ideas that have emerged such as the adoption of the same textbook for mathematics in the sixth grades in all four towns," he said. "Economies of scale cost savings are thoroughly possible through participation in collaboratives."

"Collaboratives … allow school districts to increase their capacity to offer a full range of services to kids and also give you the ability to achieve economies of scale to achieve greater borrowing and purchasing power," said Fajir. "But not by increasing the complexities of our systems and decreasing the amount of local control that we have in our schools."

"The major arguments that are presented against doing this are that local control is better, and we will lose local control if we join larger districts. The second major dynamic is that people especially at the elementary school level see their elementary school as a treasure, and they don't want to give it up and they don't want to lose control," said Rosenberg.



This is where area public education stands. Local control and individual school committees controlling the budgets of small elementary school "treasures" is immensely popular here – especially in the smaller towns. The debate in the regionalization committee suggests that financially, there is no benefit. Educational benefits will be looked into in the future, and with declining populations, some of the small elementary schools are worried about remaining viable in their own right, making their control over it even tighter. Money savings is hotly debated, but with budgetary uncertainty, the picture is not clear as to how – should large future cuts be needed – the schools will adjust.

Michael Phillis can be reached at mphillis.student.umass.edu.

Feed your future

Learn how we can help jump-start your professional career.

Begin at www.pwc.tv

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2009 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Reporting on crime

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian staff gets no joy from publicizing the mistakes of their fellow students. We're college students too, and some of us have done some dumb things during the weekend. So we don't enjoy publishing the names of four Minutemen football players who were arrested and charged with possession of a Class B substance (cocaine) several weeks ago.

Yet it's something we have an obligation to do.

Although your friend getting arrested for possession downtown on a Friday night wouldn't likely appear as more than a blurb on our police blotter, student athletes warrant more scrutiny. There is a never-ending discussion in collegiate sports – and professional sports, for that matter – about whether or not this scrutiny is fair. We're not arguing that it is.

What is clear is that student athletes are often brought to this University on large scholarships, after being courted through an expensive recruitment process, and take part in an athletic program that deals with millions of dollars annually. Thus, it's far more significant when a student athlete slips up than when the woman in the dorm down the hall, who is here on student loans, makes the same mistake.

But it's important not to blow their alleged crimes out of proportion. All four men are presumed innocent until proven guilty. James Carven, Bob McLaughlin, Mike Melo and Shane Viveiros were all charged with possession of a Class B substance (cocaine). Viveiros and Melo allegedly had fake IDs.

Right or wrong, this sounds like a pretty typical night on the town for a chunk of the UMass population, which has been ranked nationally in the past for its party habits.

The UMass Athletic Department finds itself in a difficult position in dealing with student athletes accused of crimes. The four players have a pretrial hearing scheduled for Nov. 16, yet a verdict won't likely be reached until the end of the season. As of last week, they were participating in practices and facing a partial suspension.

The four players were suspended under the athletic department's policy on failure of a drug test, though The Collegian has not been able to confirm that any of the students failed a drug test.

Ten percent of the season is 1.2 weeks, roughly one game, which seems like a slap on the wrist for felony crimes. Yet the University would be even more in the wrong if they were to throw the book at students later found innocent.

Coach Kevin Morris and his staff did the right thing this weekend by not allowing the four men to dress for the game. Although the four men should certainly be presumed innocent, their arrest warrants an internal investigation on part of the athletic department into whether they had been abusing Class B substances. Until they are cleared or punished, they present a liability to the University's image.

In an interview on Tuesday, Oct. 20, Morris told The Collegian that the department had made no final decision on how to handle the process of integrating the players back onto the playing field.

The Collegian hopes that Morris and his staff continue to treat the issue as seriously as Morris has said they have, while continuing to respect the rights of the four men who are accused of having made a terrible, but forgivable mistake.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

Roommates, privacy and health

H.C. Wang

A tired friend recently came to me, bleary-eyed and grumpy, to vent. She slept through her 11:15 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. class because her roommate and her roommate's friends were loud and obnoxious and kept her up until 4 a.m. the previous night. These people had been over almost every night of the week so far, even once when my friend had an 8 a.m. exam the following morning. She looked so painfully exhausted that I had to ask how her roommate could be so inconsiderate as to have people over at ungodly hours during the night. Her response: "Well, I didn't want to seem mean and antisocial by telling them to get out."

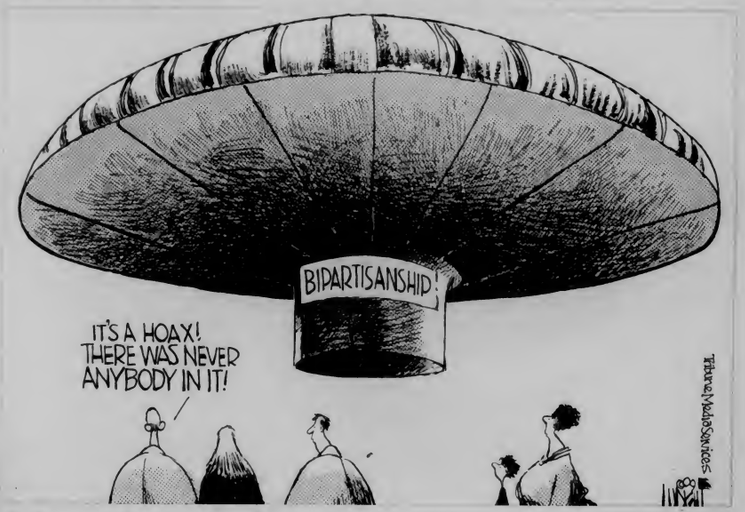
This is a common college problem. One roommate needs to rest while the other is carefree and boisterous. I am all too familiar with such situations. My freshman year, I entered the roommate pool with no particular person in mind in order to be a part of the college experience. I ended up with an international student from Korea who often talked on the phone at odd hours because of the time difference, effectively keeping me from getting the rest I needed. My roommate would keep the lights on while typing long into the night for non-academic purposes, the click-clacking of the keyboard – a rapid-fire staccato against my cerebrum – rang out as I tried to drift off to sleep. How does one go about telling the person he or she is living with to change, especially without coming off sounding rude and bossy?

The approach really depends first and foremost on how long and how well you know the other person. If you just met, like my Korean roommate and I did, naturally it feels harder to assert yourself in instances like this. However, it is imperative that you talk about it.

You don't have to be the best of friends with your roommate, but since you are sharing the same space for a year, you should get along decently well. You may tell yourself that it is your roommate's right to have friends over, but you also have the right to a good night's sleep. It is your room too. Your roommate's friends, on the other hand, do not live there. It is always best to speak up as early as possible before the problem has a chance to grow. Roommate agreements exist for a reason. Mutually decide on what is and is not okay for visiting hours, numbers of visitors, and anything else that could pose a problem for the two of you.

When discussing visitation guidelines (i.e. hours, frequency), it is best to discuss them directly with your roommate when their significant other is not around.

If you don't say anything, your roommate may assume you are totally fine with everything that has been going on. If that is not the case, you must say so.



No one can be expected to know what you're thinking if you don't give voice to your thoughts. If you don't talk to your roommate about what bothers you, things may escalate and then, sleep deprived and annoyed beyond all imagination, you might blow up at your roommate and the friends in question, resulting in a very sticky situation.

The same goes for significant others, although that deserves a smidgen more of tact. In my experience, it seems that guys are more relaxed about roommate situations. It either doesn't strike them as a huge deal or they just don't confront each other about such things. Even so, it can get awkward really fast if one person's significant other is around all the time and the roommate isn't entirely comfortable with it. There is such a thing as too much together time if it is intruding on the privacy of the other person who actually lives there.

When discussing visitation guidelines (i.e. hours, frequency), it is best to discuss them directly with your roommate when their significant other is not around. That way, no one feels unwanted and gets huffy. Unless you have already talked to your roommate and nothing has changed, never involve the significant other in expressing your discomfort. It is nearly impossible to bring up this sort of thing without sounding like you don't want them around, which is basically the case, but at least be respectful about it. Again, don't wait for the annoyances to build up. One guy I know blew up at his roommate's girlfriend when the roommate stepped out. Even though he prefaced his statement with "I don't mean to sound rude…" it still came out poorly.

If you have exhausted everything humanly possible to maintain civility and still can't get along with your roommate, that is when you should utilize the room change option. Like any relationship, sticking it out and trying to work out your differences is worth the trouble compared to the messy alternative. Try to last until the end of the semester if possible so it isn't too jarring for all parties involved. Then, if you don't want to admit that it's your roommate that's driving you crazy, you can always use the excuse that you want to live in a different location.

Got a problem? Contact H.C. Wang at collegianadvice@gmail.com.

Days since the new Recreation Center was scheduled to open...

23

Massachusetts hate crime laws not effective

Alana Goodman

Around midnight on Feb. 1, 2006, a chubby 18-year-old named Jacob Robida walked into Puzzles Lounge, a gay bar in New Bedford, Mass., and ordered a Captain Morgan on the rocks. Sipping his drink, he chatted briefly with the bartender before making his way to the crowded pool table in the back of the room. Unknown to the patrons he was walking toward, the baby-faced Robida was actually a violent neo-Nazi whose baggy black sweatshirt concealed a hatchet, a machete and a 9mm German Army Luger.

By the end of the night, the lively gay bar would be a bloodbath and Robida would be a fugitive from the law, barreling toward the Mexican border in a green Pontiac Grand Am. A subsequent police search of Robida's New Bedford home would turn up additional Nazi paraphernalia, a MySpace page praising Hitler and racist invective scrawled across the bedroom walls – more than enough evidence for the state to argue that the troubled teen was at least partially driven by homophobic hatred when he shot up Puzzles Lounge that night.

Under Massachusetts law, which mandates harsher sentences for perpetrators of anti-gay violence, Robida's brutal rampage was a hate-crime, cut and dry. If he hadn't committed suicide when the police cornered him in northern Arkansas three days later, there is no doubt that he would now be facing a hefty prison sentence. But does that knowledge really comfort Robida's victims or the rest of the gay community? After all, a piece of legislation doesn't offer much protection when you're face-to-barrel with a Nazi-era pistol.

The incident raises a fundamental question – how well do hate crime laws actually work at preventing these crimes?

"Despite supporters' contention that they will make vulnerable communities safer, there is little proof that the tougher sentencing that comes with hate crime legislation prevent violent crimes against minority groups," argued Liliana Segura in an Aug. 10 article in the Socialist Worker.

And while hate crime legislation often succeeds at making the politicians who support it feel warm and benevolent inside, it is mournfully ineffective at doing what it's supposed to. "Since the federal government started keeping statistics in 1990, the number of hate crimes reported annually has consistently ranged around 7,500," noted Attorney General Eric Holder during an Oct. 18 address to the Anti-Defamation League. This is despite the fact that 45 states have enacted some form of hate crime law since the early 1990s.

Hate crime activists continue to push pointless legislation, perhaps because having these laws on the books is a sure-fire way to rake in additional government funds.

Massachusetts is no exception. In 1991, the governor's office created a special task force in an attempt to combat hate crimes in the state. Despite this, the number of offenses has remained relatively stagnant. In 1991, there were 304 reported hate crimes in Massachusetts according to Mass.gov – compare this with 344 reported in 2005, 364 in 2006, 350 in 2007 and 332 in 2008.

But even with no evidence of improvement, advocates continue to lobby for additional laws. Currently, Massachusetts legislators are considering a bill called "An Act Relative to Gender-Based Discrimination and Hate Crimes" (HB 1728), which mandates harsher punishments for prejudicial crimes against transgendered people. And while this bill may help supporters like Massachusetts Attorney General Martha Coakley and Northampton Mayor Clare Higgins sleep better at night, it's unlikely that it will actually give any additional protection to the transgendered community.

One reason is because these types of bills presume that the current laws are not harsh enough to deter people from committing hate crimes. But this belief is unsubstantiated. In fact, the case studies presented by activists as "proof" of the necessity of hate crime laws almost always show just the opposite. The killers of Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. – two victims who prompted the current federal hate crime legislation – were sentenced to life in prison and the death penalty, respectively. And that was without any hate crime laws in place.

"In more than a decade of lobbying for [federal hate crime] law, its supporters have never shown that state officials are letting people get away with murder, or lesser crimes of violence, when the victims belong to historically oppressed groups," wrote Reason Magazine Editor Jacob Sullum in the New York Post on Oct. 14.

But hate crime activists continue to push pointless legislation, perhaps because having these laws on the books is a sure-fire way to rake in additional government funds. Hate crime laws have resulted in cash flows to state agencies like the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD) and the Massachusetts Commission on Gay and Lesbian Youth.

But despite the money being pumped into these groups, there has been no conclusive evidence showing that their programming has worked to decrease hate crimes.

So why do Massachusetts taxpayers throw money away on programs that don't work and waste time on legislation that is ineffective? If hate crimes constituted a critical epidemic in Massachusetts, the haphazard way they are being addressed might make sense. But this clearly is not the case. According to Mass.gov, in 2008, the most serious type of hate crime in Massachusetts was aggravated assault – of which there were 35 committed. Compare that number to the 20,167 non-hate-crime-related aggravated assaults committed in-state during the same year, according to reports by Disastercenter.com.

If hate crime law advocates can't figure out a way to spend taxpayer funds effectively, then maybe it's time the state started looking for better uses of the money.

Alana Goodman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at angoodma@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2009 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Film of eternal love, fleeting life

By Nora Drapalski
Collegian Correspondent

Named after one of his well-known poems, the film "Bright Star" is based on the true story of John Keats, an English poet of the Romantic movement, as seen through the eyes of his love, Miss Fanny Brawne.

The story follows Fanny through the relationship she had with Keats, beginning with their first meeting in London in 1818. Fanny is a young fashionista who meets Keats at the home of a family friend. Although focused on her sewing and an eager participant at local dances, Fanny finds herself drawn to the quiet Keats.

Keats and Fanny engage in a relationship deemed both scandalous and forbidden, due to the difference in class between the two. As Fanny's mother says, "Mr. Keats knows he cannot like you; he has no living and no income."

The film is essentially a romantic drama, as expected when depicting the life of a famous romantic poet. While the story is neither original (lovers separated by class), nor particularly exciting (all Keats does is recite his poems), the movie is a charming film with a tragic end.

What the story lacks in originality, but the stunning portrayals by the actors and the excellent visual composition of the piece surely make up for it.

Abbie Cornish (Fanny Brawne) and Ben Whishaw (John Keats) capture the essence of the two lovers. There is little dialogue in the film apart from Keats' verses woven indistinguishably into the story. Instead, Cornish, through her youthful exuberance, and Whishaw, with his thoughtful contemplation, rely on the power of nonverbal communication. The emotions that the actors emit are so believable that one can literally feel the heartbreak of Fanny and the dooming mortality of Keats.

Cornish explores the idea of Fanny as an artist in her own right. While Keats expresses himself with his quill, Fanny uses her needle to produce marvelous dresses that speak of her feelings. Her ever-changing wardrobe, consisting of frills, buttons and vibrant reds, describes Fanny in a way that is never expressed through dialogue. The transition to a more subdued palate and a reduction in accessories emphasizes the evolution of her character as she falls in love with Keats.

Meanwhile, Whishaw is given the daunting task of portraying John Keats, one of the best English writers ever known. Keats is a tragic character, who, after facing the death of his mother and brother from tuberculosis, is an unsuccessful, penniless poet who is facing difficulty selling his books. Thus, when he discovers the enchanting Fanny Brawne, he has nothing but his beautiful words to woo her with. Whishaw, a thin slip of a man, delivers his words with an endearing beauty that makes them seem perfectly suited to that situation.

Casting Director Nina Gold, whose previous work includes the HBO series "Rome" as well as "The Illusionist," once again worked her magic when selecting the cast for "Bright Star." In addition to Cornish and Whishaw, Paul Schneider, from "Parks and Recreation" and "Lars and the Real Girl," and young Thomas Sangster, of "Nanny McPhee" and "Phineas and Ferb," round out the cast in admirable dramatic roles. Each actor carries the look of the time period well, lending a realistic feel to the film as a whole.

The visual imagery within the film can only be described as a work of incomparable magnificence. Director Jane Campion, who also directed "The Piano," instead of emphasizing the works Keats composed himself, chose to use the visual elements from the film as the main way of depicting beauty. The composition within the frame is carefully arranged in order to create a powerful pull that drags the eye over the entirety of the screen. Campion plays with the relationship between color and emotions, as Fanny's outfits often reflect her current feelings, the vibrant foliage in the outdoor scenes mimic the color palate of the character's costumes.

Campion frequently features the characters interacting with nature, specifically trees. This repetition serves to indicate the seasonal setting of the film, as well as hint at the emotional elements within the scene. During particular scenes where Keats and Fanny are at odds, the trees appear barren and even fallen – a physical manifestation of the emotional disturbance within. Conversely, when the two share a private meeting in the woods, the blooming trees envelope them in a fantastic embrace. The eternal presence of trees dwarfs the fleeting lives of the humans, and their emotions, below.

"Bright Star" is a visually masterful film with a pleasant, if tragic, storyline that, without sounding too presumptuous, is deserving of more than a few awards. Its honest portrayal of life in the 1800s and lack of typical Hollywood features (the lovers never engage in anything more than a kiss beneath the trees) carry a realistic quality that makes it memorable. "Bright Star" is well worth the price of admission to see the work of Keats come to life in this romantic drama.

Nora Drapalski can be reached at ndrapals@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OF BRIGHT STAR

Actors Abbie Cornish and Ben Whishaw give a magnificent portrayal as Miss Fanny Brawne and English romantic poet John Keats, respectively, in the film "Bright Star."

Seasonal delectables for the college budget

With our simple recipes and special ingredients, you can take a break from the books to whip up some tasty treats for the upcoming holiday season, such as tiramisu, shown above.

By Kaitlyn Bigica
Collegian Correspondent

Baby Tiramisu

If you love sweets raise your hand! As the cold crisp air creeps through the University of Massachusetts campus and midterms roll around, everyone could use a healthy indulgence alongside a cup of coffee or hot chocolate. Not only is this treat only 100 calories, it's also college-budget friendly and can be made in less than an hour.

Another benefit of this delectable dessert is there is no need for an oven, which is convenient for students who live in dorms. It also has a shot of espresso mixed inside, which creates a perfect midnight midterm treat to boost your energy and satisfy your stressed-out sweet tooth. Grab a few friends and take a trip to any local supermarket to buy the following ingredients:

1/2 cup nonfat ricotta cheese
2 tablespoons confectioner's sugar
1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract,
1/8 teaspoon ground cinnamon,
12 ladyfingers (about 1 3/4 ounces soft or crunchy)
4 tablespoons brewed espresso or strong coffee divided,
2 tablespoons bittersweet chocolate chips (melted).

To make the cooking process easier, measure each ingredient into a separate bowl so each component is ready for you throw in as you read the following directions.

Combine ricotta, sugar, vanilla and cinnamon in a medium bowl. Place six ladyfingers in a 9-by-5-inch (or similar size) loaf pan. Drizzle with two tablespoons of espresso (or coffee). Spread the ricotta mixture over the ladyfingers. Place another layer of ladyfingers over the ricotta and drizzle with the remaining 2 tablespoons of espresso (or coffee). Finally, drizzle with melted chocolate.

To give this treat a professional facade, drape the chocolate over the dessert in a zigzag shape either diagonally or horizontally. Refrigerate until the chocolate is set, which should take about 30 minutes.

To melt the chocolate, microwave on medium for 1 minute. Stir, and then continue microwaving on medium in 20-second intervals, stirring after each interval until the chocolate is melted. Once you have finished your baby tiramisu, wrap up in your warmest blanket, put on a scary movie, and grab a cup of hot chocolate and a few friends to enjoy this delicious treat. By the time the movie is over, you'll be ready to hit the books again.

Feeling guilty about indulging in this treat? Don't! A baby tiramisu has only 107 calories, two grams of fat, three milligrams of cholesterol, three grams of protein, 125 milligrams of sodium and 29 milligrams of potassium. Other desserts, like muffins or cakes, consist of 300 calories or more, but baby tiramisu tastes great and is a healthy choice.

No Bake Cookie

If you're not a coffee lover, don't feel left out – there's a healthy dessert out there for you, too. Ever hear of a cookie you don't need to bake? Well, here is an irresistible and incredibly inexpensive cookie recipe that requires no oven.

When the combination of chocolate and peanut butter come together in any recipe, it is guaranteed to tantalize your taste buds and satisfy your strongest chocolate craving. With chucks of graham crackers laced in gooey peanut butter rolled through a bed of coconut, there is no way you'll be able to turn down a second helping.

What do you need to make the salivating snack? Grab:

8 whole-wheat cracker squares
1/4 cup chocolate chips
1/4 cup smooth natural peanut butter
2 tablespoons plus 2 teaspoons honey
4 teaspoons shredded unsweetened coconut

The best part of this dessert is the time it takes to make—only 10 minutes! First, finely chop the graham crackers and throw them in a bowl with the rest of the ingredients (excluding the coconut). Mix all of the contents together and divide, molding each tablespoon-sized heap into a circular ball.

Roll each sphere in the unsweetened coconut, and press down gently on each ball to give a fully cooked cookie shape effect.

For two of these cookies, the nutritional facts are as follows: 301 calories, 14 grams of fat, 41 grams of carbohydrates, two grams of protein, four grams of fiber, 284 milligrams of sodium and 82 milligrams of potassium.

Feel like indulging? Replace the whole-wheat cracker with honey graham crackers, the milk chocolate chips with dark chocolate, the natural peanut butter with chunky peanut butter and the unsweetened coconut with sweetened coconut. Simply substitute each ingredient and follow the same directions for a sweeter and more indulgent treat. Although the sugar content may be through the roof, you won't regret indulging in this easy, quick and delectable dessert.

Kaitlyn Bigica can be reached at kbigica@student.umass.edu.

Correction

On Tuesday, Oct. 20, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Arts and Living Staff published an article previewing the White Rabbits concert, which took place on Wednesday night. The article was attributed to Danny Marsfield; however, the true author of the article is David Mansfield. He can be reached at dmansfie@student.umass.edu

–The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Arts and Living Staff

Poetic talents play at Amherst Cinema

By Chelsea Whitton
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst Cinema was center stage for three recognized poets last Thursday night. The event was presented by the University of Massachusetts Juniper Initiative for Arts and Action, the UMass Fine Arts Center and the Going Public Contemporary Literature series. The cinema was full of over 150 poetry enthusiasts, made up of students, graduate students and area locals, to hear the work of James Haug, Ellen Doré Watson and James Tate.

"When you hold events in Amherst Cinema, academics feel welcome, locals feel welcome, it's a great meeting place, it makes events more accessible to more people," said Executive Director of Amherst Cinema, Carol M. Johnson.

First to read was James Haug, who jokingly carried his own bottle of water, adjusting the microphone and saying, "I brought my own," initiating the laughter that would later ensue. Haug, who is a resident of Northampton, is the author of three collections of poems; his most recent is titled, "Legends of the Recent Past." He is the winner of the Samuel French Morse Poetry Prize, and has been published in the Gettysburg Review.

Haug was introduced by Ben Kopel, who said, "James is a character, and his poems are full of characters." Haug's poems are short, and reminiscent of concise memories, small-town talk and nostalgia of a simple life. His words recreate the image and articulate prose in effective lines with intertwined comedy such as, "boarded a bus to a place known to many as Albany."

Poems read last week included "Rootbeer," "Legend of the Recent Past," "Gardner Exchange" and "How it Came to be Connecticut," which Haug joked about, hinting that it wasn't a history lesson. Between pieces, the poet would look up to make a charming or funny comment before looking back down at his work and say, "Honestly, I knew I'd be fumbling through the pages."

The poem "Nostalgia for the Finite" alluded to mundane human feelings in a way which is both tangible and unthinkable. Haug wrote, "there is a song I'm dying to hear, except I forgot how it goes." Haug concluded his reading with "There's No Now," a piece reflective on a car ride down the Jersey Pike.

Second on stage was Ellen Doré Watson, director of the Poetry Center at Smith College and a graduate of the MFA program. She is the author of three poetry collections, and serves as an editor of The Massachusetts Review. Her work has appeared in publications such as The New Yorker.

Paralleling Haug's poems, Watson introduced the audience to carefully crafted prose. Introduced by Deb Gorlin, Watson was described by the statement, "If Meryl Streep was writing poetry, she would be Ellen Watson." Watson read excerpts from her most recent book, "This Sharpening" and others including, "Broken Railings" and "We Live in Bodies."

She has been described as reinventing poems, and assumes different personalities, allowing the reader or audience to never become washed in continuing themes. Her poems offer perspectives on life from a variety of character's viewpoints. Watson's piece "Yes from No" offered many laughs, and contemplative agreements about a man moving out of one woman's life and into another's, as the first women pictures driving her car through the front of the house. Her poem "As We Speak" offered insight such as, "Sound only travels so far, how does it stop?"

Concluding the festival event was James Tate, introduced by Alex Phillips as "One of the most acclaimed poets of our times."

Rachael Kador, a UMass senior, described Tate's poems as effective because of the way "the poems make fun of themselves."

Sharon Alvandai, a fellow senior and English major, said that lines like, "the hail was as big as hail," "is a jab at poetry itself," and that she was "impressed with his humor – wry humor."

The students mentioned that they "occasionally see James Tate" around campus, and appreciate the sense of community he creates, including that he is a very famous poet of our time.

"It is rewarding to go out and see living literature. He is amazing, and witty, and I appreciate someone who is stoically hilarious," Alvandai said.

Tate's tone stayed level, no matter the subject of the poem, which effectively made comical pieces, such as "Ice Cream Man," hilarious. Other poems, such as "Land of the Vapors," had an effective stoic tone.

Tate read through his selected poems as if he was just a character that lives as a witness, not as the poet who constructed lonely, charming and witty characters. Tate was the 2008 recipient of the Massachusetts Book Award for "The Ghost Soldiers." He is a professor in the MFA program for poets and writers at UMass.

Chelsea Whitton can be reached at cwhitton@student.umass.edu.

UMass begins regular season

Minutewomen look towards building off 2008-09 season

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

As tryouts and preseason practices come to a close for the Massachusetts women's club hockey team, "doing work" is the main theme in mind for this team.

Do work is the motto they live by, practice by, play by and win by. The 16-7-2-1 team ranked second in the Eastern Collegiate Women's Hockey League and sixth in the American Collegiate Hockey Association.

Women's Club Hockey

The Minutewomen came close to advancing to the championship after making it to the quarterfinals of the National Tournament and the year before when they advanced to the Final Four. This year, UMass is set on winning it all.

Losing five seniors and gaining 13 first-year players does not seem to have a negative effect on the team's positive mindset. UMass coach Chris Cobb feels that this young group is good enough to win the championship.

"This is the best team I've been able to coach," Cobb said.

Cobb also believes the key to winning this season is "to play as a team with no star players and everyone must take ownership."

The defense will be much stronger this year, despite some young goal-tending. Goalie Christen Eulian, an Honorable Mention All-American, graduated after the 2009 season and left a spot filled by two freshmen and a sophomore.

Cobb also believes that the offense had a lot of depth. However, he believes that alone does not get the job done, but that "great balance and hard-working girls is what will transform this team into winners".

One of the offense's biggest losses is forward Maura Grainger. In the ECWHL league she was named as a First-Team forward, and was named to the Nationals All-Tournament Team. Her biggest achievement last year was when she received the ACHA Zoe M. Harris National Player of the Year Award.

However, the Minutewomen have three new leaders who will be expected to step up and help the team. Captain Hayley Kuhn, a senior and member for four years, remains positive about the young group of girls and feels that a mixture of new recruits will add even more talent. Kuhn is accompanied by two assistant captains, senior Sam Mack and junior Catherine O'Brien.

The women will play 30 regular season games, which will involve a lot more traveling than last year. Virginia and Michigan are two states the Minutewomen will visit this season, with hopes of making it to Colorado, Illinois and Michigan the following year. There will be an additional two games for the ECWHL playoffs, and five more for the National Tournament to give a total of 37 potential games this season.

UMass will have its chance for revenge when two-time defending National Champion's Lindenwood visits the Mullins Center in early January. Lindenwood was the team responsible for knocking UMass out of the tournament in a triple-overtime win last year.

The first home games will be at the Mullins Center on Friday Oct. 30 and Saturday Oct. 31. Rival Penn State, a NCAA Division III powerhouse, will visit and is sure to pose a challenge to the Minutewomen. Cobb prides the fact that his team is one of the only ones that succeeds against NCAA opponents.

He hopes to start off his third season as head coach on a positive note this Saturday, Oct. 24 in Worcester, Mass.

UMass will find out how well its work ethic will fare as it faces off against Holy Cross, who won 24 games and lost two last season. This match will serve as one of the many challenges the Minutewomen must face in order to reach the National Tournament this year.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu

COURTESY UMASS WOMEN'S CLUB HOCKEY

The Massachusetts women's club hockey team rejoices after a win last season. The Minutewomen finished 16-7-2-1 and advanced to the quarterfinals of last year's National Tournament.

COURTESY UMASS WOMEN'S CLUB HOCKEY

Senior Angela Rufo goes after the puck in a game last season. The Minutewomen open their season on Oct. 24 against Holy Cross in Worchester, Mass.

THE BRYANT GRADUATE PROGRAMS

The Bryant University Graduate School of Business prepares students for success in their chosen professions. As a graduate, you will join an impressive alumni community that includes industry leaders across the country and around the world.

THE BRYANT MBA ONE-YEAR PROGRAM
Full-time, day program for all majors
- No professional experience necessary
- Distinguish yourself in a competitive job market
- Gain hands-on experience with the Business Practicum

THE BRYANT MBA TWO-YEAR PROGRAM
Part-time, evening program for professionals from any field
- Develop high-level business skills for long-term career success
- Enter and progress through the program with a supportive team
- Build your network while enhancing your resume

THE BRYANT MASTER OF PROFESSIONAL ACCOUNTANCY (MPAc)
Full-time, day program for accounting majors
- Meets the 150 hour requirement for CPA licensure
- Complete in Summer/Fall, Summer/Summer, Fall/Spring, or Spring/Summer
- More than 40 top global, national and regional accounting firms recruit at Bryant

THE BRYANT MASTER OF SCIENCE IN TAXATION (MST)
Part-time, evening program for tax professionals
- Build an expertise in all areas of taxation
- Network with tax executives and industry professionals
- Flexible scheduling options

LEARN MORE ABOUT WHAT BRYANT UNIVERSITY GRADUATE SCHOOL HAS TO OFFER

www.bryant.edu/gradschool • 401-232-6230

Bryant UNIVERSITY
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
1150 Douglas Pike
Smithfield, Rhode Island

AACSB ACCREDITED

Wanted: Change Agents

- MBA in Social Change
  Business for Social Change–Social Entrepreneurship–Environmental Policy–Community Development–International Development
- MBA/MA in Community Development and Planning
- MBA/MA in Environmental Science and Policy

As the sectors of our global society become increasingly intertwined, demand is surging for professionals who understand the social, political, and environmental forces that shape communities and businesses.

Merit-based scholarships and graduate assistantships are available. Visit us at the Graduate Schools Information Day on October 28th to learn more.

CLARK UNIVERSITY
CHALLENGE CONVENTION CHANGE OUR WORLD™
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT
Worcester, Massachusetts

EARNED EXCELLENCE
THE BEST BUSINESS SCHOOLS IN THE WORLD
THE PRINCETON REVIEW 301 BEST BUSINESS SCHOOLS

www.clarku.edu/gsom
508.793.7406

Hawks looking for first win following loss to Minutemen

M SOCCER from page 10

Flyers (8-3-1, 3-0-0 A-10) took on Duquesne Dayton scored both of its two goals before the 20th minute of the match.

Forward Peter Chilemena, who has five goals on the season, scored the Flyers' first goal. He is now tied for sixth in the A-10 for goals scored. Senior Isaac Kissi struck two minutes later with a tally of his own.

Kissi, who was named Co-Player of the Week last week, leads Dayton with seven goals scored. With seven goals, Kissi sits at third place in the entire A-10 conference.

Defensively, the Flyers have proven to be quite successful as well. The match against the Dukes (6-5-2, 1-2-1 A-10) was the sixth shutout of the season. Five came in the last six games.

WOES CONTINUES FOR HAWKS

Unless Saint Joseph's has a drastic turnaround this season, it will have a hard time getting out of the A-10 cellar. The latest loss came from a 2-0 shutout to Massachusetts.

The Hawks (0-11-0, 0-3-0 A-10) have been shutout seven times all season (four away, three home), and have allowed 34 goals to bypass their keeper into the back of the net.

Saint Joseph's has scored four goals all season, the last of which coming in its Oct. 10 loss to Temple (2-1) in front of a record crowd of 609 people.

The schedule for Saint Joseph's doesn't show a bright side either, as it faces off with A-10 leader Fordham on Oct. 30, and No. 13 Charlotte a week later. Two days following the match against the nationally ranked 49ers, the Hawks will take on second-place Saint Louis.

Luckily for Saint Joseph's, the matches against Charlotte and the Billikens will take place on its home pitch. The Hawks will look to elevate their game to try and come away with a victory this season.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribner@student.umass.edu

COURTESY DAYTON MEDIA RELATIONS

Dayton junior Allison Giner dribbles down the field away from her defender. The Flyers have yet to lose in their Atlantic 10 schedule after last week's win over Duquesne.

COURTESY DAYTON MEDIA RELATIONS

Dayton players celebrate after a win this season. The Flyers scored both goals they needed to win against Duquesne, making them undefeated in the Atlantic 10.

Charlotte midfielder given accolade with 4 assists, goal

BY GEENA LOMBARDI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On top of two victories from this past weekend, Charlotte senior midfielder Hailey Beam was also named to the Women's College Soccer Team of the Week by TopDrawerSports.com. In the 49ers' (13-2-1, 7-0-1 A-10) win over Richmond and George Washington, Beam helped out with one goal and four assists.

Friday's game against the Spiders (8-6-2, 4-2-1 A-10) opened up with a pair of goals from junior Whitney Weinraub. Beam set up Weinraub's first goal and her first assist of the weekend with a pass from midfield. Less than a minute later, Weinraub scored again to increase her goals this season to 11. Charlotte's star senior contributed again with a goal in the second half, the 37th of her career. Sophomore Jenna McKeon wrapped up the scoring in the 76th minute to set the final score of 4-0.

A-10 Women's Soccer

Richmond didn't get any goals pass the 49ers' defense, who allowed only four shots total. Goalkeeper Lauren Brown tallied her sixth shutout of the season for the win.

Sunday's Senior Day game did not leave any seniors disappointed as Charlotte inched past George Washington (4-7-4, 1-4-2 A-10) to remain unbeaten in A-10 conference standings. The 49ers' offense struggled in the first half and trailed behind the Colonials until late in the second half. Lacey McGowan scored her first goal of the game on a header in the 65th minute, and scored again to tie the game seven minutes later. The 49ers avoided overtime with the game-winner from sophomore Macky Wingo.

Beam assisted all three goals, which raised her career points to 99. Along with being named to the Women's College Soccer Team, she also earned A-10 Player of the Week honors.

PERFECT SEASON CONTINUES

Dayton's perfect season survived conference play and some bad weather last weekend with a win over Duquesne.

The Flyers (10-0-5, 6-0-1 A-10) were scheduled to face St. Bonaventure (6-7-0, 5-1-0 A-10) on Friday in Olean, N.Y. The game was rescheduled due to inclement weather.

However, it took 12 minutes in Sunday's game against Duquesne (4-10-0, 0-6-1 A-10) for Dayton to continue its dominance. Freshman Colleen Williams was the first to strike for the Flyers, followed by Tori Oelschlager 47 seconds later. Senior Lauren McCormick also scored in the first half, to give Dayton a comfortable lead. The final goal came from junior Allison Giner in the 68th minute for the 4-1 win.

Dayton's defense contributed to the win by allowing five shots the entire game. The one goal given up was just the fifth of the season for goalkeeper Lisa Rodgers.

This win keeps Dayton unbeaten in both conference play and overall standings. Stanford is the only other team in NCAA Division I yet to be defeated, tying the Flyers for the top spot.

FORDHAM BOASTS FRESHMEN

For the second time this season, Fordham boasts the honor of an A-10 Rookie of the Week. Freshman Sarah Zieman posted two shutouts against Saint Joseph's and Temple this weekend.

Friday's victory over Saint Joseph's started off slow for the Ram's offense, with a scoreless first half. In the 67th minute, Annie Worden took an assist from Katie McDermott to score the one and only goal of the game. The Hawks could not answer, leaving the score at 1-0.

The game served as Zieman's first career start and shutout. She joins Rachel Suther as the only two freshman goalkeepers of Fordham history to shut-out an opponent in their first start.

Zieman continued her dominance in the net during Sunday's game versus Temple. The Rams took an early lead in the first 15 minutes of play with a goal from Leah Loguidice. The Owls tied the game seven minutes later at 1-1. Brittany Hogan scored the second and final goal for Fordham, giving the Rams a 2-1 victory.

Zieman made three saves during the game to give her team the win and a second shutout of the weekend.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

Saint Louis winless in A-10 play after loss to Explorers

FIELD HOCKEY from page 10

ed eight games and recorded 12 points in her rookie stint following mid-season rehab, but tallied seven points in 12 games after a torn ACL her sophomore season. She also overcame a concussion to record 14 points in eight games last year.

This is Schreuders' second career A-10 Player of the Week award. She received the accolade last Sept. 15 after scoring two goals and an assist in two Hawk wins.

Schreuders is the second St. Joe's player in the last two weeks to earn the honor. Teammate Kelly Swanick gloved the award last week, recording back-to-back shutouts in the crease.

BILLIKENS IN SCORING DROUGHT

Saint Louis scored its second goal in six games on Sunday which is about the only positive that has come out of those games. The Billikens have not won in over six weeks and aren't catching any breaks in the next three games.

St. Louis (1-13, 0-3 A-10) has played poorly all season and that play continued this past week with two losses. The Billikens lost on Friday as West Chester scored a goal in the first two minutes of a 3-0 game. On Sunday, they also gave up five first half goals to La Salle in a 5-1 loss.

St. Louis has now dropped 11 straight games on the season. It has been on the scoreboard three times in their 14 games with five goals.

The Billikens have been outscored by seven or more points in seven of their 13 losses. While the average A-10 team gives up 2.3 goals per game, the Billikens are giving up 6.64 goals per game.

SLU can find encouragement with playing its final three games at home, although it has yet to win there and will play solid conference opponents. After five straight road losses, St. Louis will welcome No.10 UMass into Missouri next Sunday.

The Billikens follow that up with home tilts against Temple and St. Joe's, two teams that beat the Minutewomen this past week.

Daniel Giglioti can be reached at dgiglio@student.umass.edu

SAINT JOSEPH'S MEDIA RELATIONS

Midfielder Anne Schreuders earned Atlantic 10 honors after she scored all three goals in the Hawks' upset win over Massachusetts. Saint Joseph's plays La Salle on Oct. 23.

The next step of your higher education can be a degree more personal at Western New England College School of Law.

In our close-knit collegial environment you may:

- discuss constitutional law with faculty over coffee in the Court Café
- learn to be a team player in our Small Business Law Clinic
- handle real cases for real clients as an intern

With a law degree from our School of Law, you'll have the freedom to pursue career paths that extend in many directions. Our graduates are attorneys, judges, business executives, counter-terrorism experts, filmmakers, and even the Lt. Governor of Massachusetts.

Let your next step take you to

WESTERN NEW ENGLAND COLLEGE
SCHOOL of LAW
SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

law.wnec.edu
800-782-6665 or 413-782-1406

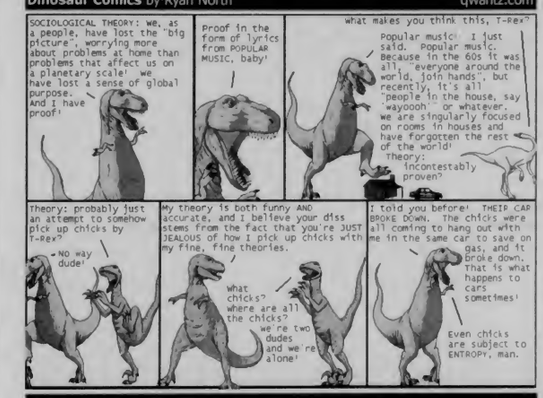
Envisioning tomorrow—educating today.

COMICS

SUDOKU



2	9		1
	1			6			5
							6	9
4		8				3	1
					2
						9	4	6
		1		3		8		4
		9	7					1
			9			5

EVERY WEDNESDAY: Poker Night
EVERY THURSDAY: Promo & Trivia Night
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22ND: Triva Night Sponsered by 3 Olives
EVERDAY: $1.00 Drafts!
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

MR. GNU BY TRAVIS DANDRO TRAVISDANDRO.COM

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North qwantz.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees mnftiu.cc

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

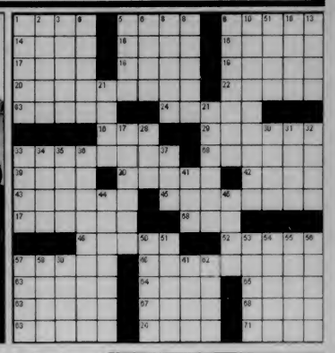
WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends, From $89. Includes Hotel, Bus, and clubs. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

SPRING BREAK 2010



Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

"The secret of life is honesty and fair dealing. If you can fake that, you have got it made."

-Groucho Marx

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
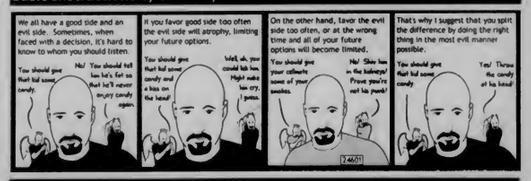
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

ACROSS
1. Mountain pool
5. Exchange
9. Showers
14. Chocolate cookie
15. Sheet of glass
16. Endow
17. Tidy
18. Chief Norse god
19. Robbed
20. Accumulation
22. Blabs
23. Not now
24. A synthetic fabric
26. Muzzle
29. Soothsayer
33. Write music
38. Take into confinement
39. Great Salt Lake state
40. Hang loosely
42. Matured
43. A figure of speech
45. Unnecessary
47. Relating to a directionless magnitude
48. Earned Run Average
49. Shenanigan
52. Breakfast bread
57. Incline
60. Longing for something past
63. Diacritical mark
64. Den
65. Musty
66. Ire
67. Beige
68. Sword
69. Desire strongly
70. You (archaic)
71. Current event information

DOWN
1. Diatonic
2. Betel palm
3. Respond
4. French for "Our"
5. Blemish
6. Dry riverbed
7. Negatively charged particle
8. 1 cent coin
9. Fix up
10. Existing before birth
11. False god
12. Void
13. Views
21. Therefore
25. Boarder
27. Declare with confidence
28. Colloid
30. Hamster's home
31. Untruths
32. Concludes
33. Swear
34. Auditory
35. Not Papa
36. Womanize
37. Horse of a dull brownish grey color
41. Born
44. Lamp
46. Information
50. Part of a body of water
51. Sports instructor
53. Bygone
54. Open-mouthed
55. Muscle
56. Carries off
57. Remain
58. Connects two points
59. Seaweed
61. Give rise to
62. Not false



UMASS AMHERST
New Schedule for Winter Session
Earn credits during break!
Online classes begin: December 21, 2009
On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010
Sneak peek of class offerings listed at www.UMassULearn.net

Labrat by Richard Martelly

EXPLORE YOUR FUTURE
MAJORS FAIR!
Wednesday, October 28th, 2009
5:30 - 7:30 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium & First-Floor Concourse
➪ Investigate the range of majors & resources at UMass Amherst!
➪ Meet representatives from more than 100 departments & programs in one location!
For more information, please visit http://tiny.cc/MajorsFair

Basic Instructions by Scott Meyer basicinstructions.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
"Cold" feet do not cause clothes to shrink that much...

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
If you wake up at 6 a.m., you'll see Halley drop heaven nuggets all over Earth.

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
Petition for a new National Treasurer film entitled, "The Origin of Monopoly."

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
If your professor asks why you missed class yesterday, break out with some "Oops! ...I Did It Again."

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
Soon enough, executions will be carried out with Paula Dean's recipes.

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
Your college education may be expensive, but don't worry! There's an iPhone app for that.

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
No matter what happens on "Nip/Tuck," silicon should not be tax deductibile.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Sketchy banks only take your money and run. Criminal ones take your money and buy something ridiculous.

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
Pepperoni are the little nipples of obesity.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
There are some things that should remain behind the scenes and on the other side of the dorm room.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
You have one life-changing question to answer: Should Mexico manipulate the genes of corn?

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
The best motivation for getting a flu shot? It gives you wiings!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Richmond tops Maine, prepares for UMass

Spiders come from behind victory vs. Maine, QB Smith throws for 327 yards, 2 touchdowns

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The No. 1 Richmond football team was losing 17-10 at halftime on the road against Maine, but pulled off a 38-21 victory after the Spiders held the Black Bears scoreless until the last two minutes of the second half.

Richmond's defense completely shut down Maine's running game in the second half as the Black Bears (3-4, 2-2 Colonial Athletic Association) offense totaled -2 yards rushing.

Maine's quarterback Warren Smith was the lone bright spot for the offense, finishing the game 35-of-58 for 327 yards with two touchdowns and two interceptions. Smith also rushed for a 1-yard touchdown with five minutes, 43 seconds left in the first quarter that tied the game at 7.

CAA Football

Richmond's Derek Hatcher had a 90-yard punt return for a touchdown that stretched the Spiders' lead to 10 points in the third quarter.

Justin Forte led the Richmond offense with 16 carries for 91 yards. Although Forte did not score in the game, the Spiders had rushing touchdowns come from running backs Kendall Gaskins and Garret Wilkins, and quarterback Eric Ward.

Ward played efficiently behind center, throwing for 108 yards on 12-of-21 passing attempts with one touchdown and one interception.

Maine will have a bye week this weekend following the loss.

With the come-from-behind win, Richmond (6-0, 4-0 CAA) will next face Massachusetts at home on Saturday.

Villanova shuts out JMU

One week after being upset by New Hampshire and bumped from the No. 2 spot in the Football Championship Subdivision Top 25 rankings, Villanova (6-1, 3-1 CAA) rebounded this week by pulling off a 27-0 shutout over James Madison (2-4, 0-3 CAA) on Saturday.

Villanova quarterback Chris Whitney rushed 18 times for 121 yards and also completed 11-of-16 passes for 93 yards and three touchdowns. Wide receiver Matt Szczur ran eight times for 76 yards, and caught four passes for 53 yards with two touchdowns on the way to the Wildcats' sixth win of the season.

JMU struggled on offense throughout the day. The Dukes' put together two drives of 50 yards or more, and had to punt on 7-of-12 drives.

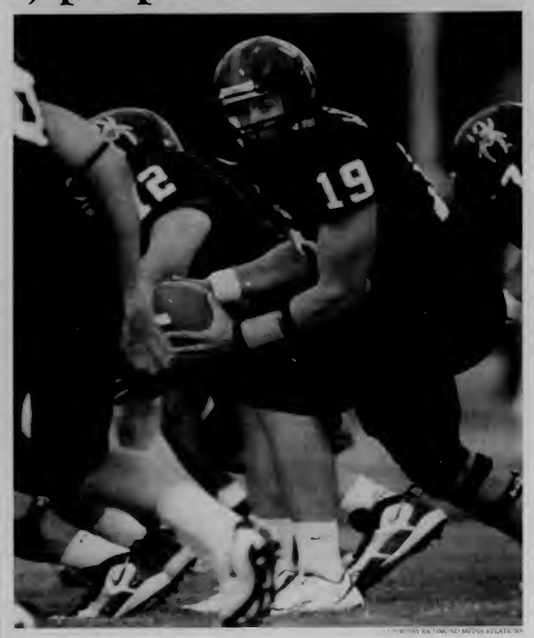
James Madison quarterback Justin Thorpe completed 13-of-32 passes for 144 yards, and had 18 rushes for 80 yards with two fumbles.

Villanova's defense played a key part in the victory, keeping the JMU offense out of the red zone for the entire game. The Duke's closest chance at scoring came by way of a missed 37-yard field goal attempt by kicker Matt Goff.

James Madison will next travel on the road to face William and Mary this Saturday.

This weekend the No. 4-ranked Wildcats will also have their homecoming weekend, as they will play Rhode Island.

Delaware routs Towson



Delaware served up a 49-21 rout of Towson this past Saturday in Towson, Md., to improve to 5-2, and 3-2 in the CAA.

The Blue Hens defense shut out Towson (2-4, 1-2 CAA) for the first three quarters of the game. The Tigers leading passer was Brian Potts, who completed 4-of-11 passes for 46 yards with two interceptions.

On offense, Leon Jackson led the Blue Hens. Jackson carried the ball 17 times for 53 yards with three touchdowns. Quarterback Pat Devlin also chipped in by completing 9-of-15 passes for 127 yards with two touchdowns.

Towson running back Tommy Chroniger was the lone bright spot for the Tigers. Chroniger finished the game with 11 rushes for 107 yards and one touchdown.

Neil Carroll can be reached at ncarroll@student.umass.edu

Richmond quarterback Warren Smith hikes the ball in a game earlier this season. Against Colonial Athletic Association rival Maine, he finished 35-of-58 for 327 yards.

Jess Weidner slips past a defender in a game this season. The Richmond field hockey team is undefeated in Atlantic 10 play after struggling early this year.

Spiders holding A-10 opponents scoreless

By Daniel Giglotti
Collegian Staff

The Richmond field hockey team has yet to let up a goal in conference play, as it stands atop the Atlantic 10 leader board, breaking the .500 mark for the first time all season.

The Spiders (8-7, 3-0 A-10) dealt shutout losses to La Salle and West Chester last weekend and have now outscored conference opponents, 18-0.

A-10 Field Hockey

Last weekend, Richmond took care of La Salle (four shots), 2-0, and West Chester (one shot), 4-0. The two teams had few shot opportunities against the Spider's defense. Richmond now has outshot its last four opponents by 58.

Richmond, winners of four out of their last five games, is stymieing opponents in wins this season. Their defense boasts six shutouts and has allowed two goals during eight victories. Overall, the Spiders give up 1.73 goals per game which is second to Massachusetts in the A-10.

After starting the year off 2-2, Richmond dropped two games and has been floating around .500 ever since. It struggled in non-conference play, largely against top-tier opponents. Its five losses against ranked teams include the game against No. 11 James Madison on Oct. 9.

Triumph in conference is nothing new for the Spiders, who captured five of the last seven A-10 titles and won 27-of-30 games in the past five years, including undefeated campaigns in 2005 and 2006.

Richmond leads the conference, a half game in front of Saint Joseph's.

Midfielder earns honors

Saint Joe's midfielder Anne Schreuders continued her stellar play on Friday. Her steadfast pace has moved her up the stat sheet and landed her conference Player of the Week honors.

Schreuders has been on an offensive tear as of late, with 16 points in her last seven games and leading the Hawks to five wins in that span.

With 11 goals on the season, the senior tallied as many goals this season as she had in her previous three years. She has five goals in as many games including a pair on Oct. 11 against Rutgers in Saint Joe's final non-conference game.

The foreign-born player from the Netherlands has been plagued by injuries during her collegiate career, but that hasn't stopped her from being productive. She start-

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 8

Mathers honored, helping Charlotte against conference

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

The No. 13 Charlotte men's soccer team in the Atlantic 10 conference continued its success this past weekend, when defender Nathan Mathers earned the nod from College Soccer News as part of the National Team of the Week.

Mathers and the 49ers (8-1-3, 2-0-1 A-10) competed this weekend against Saint Louis, which is right behind them in the A-10 conference standings. With this in mind, both teams looked to capitalize and move up the table. Charlotte outlasted the Billikens (7-5-0, 2-1-0 A-10) by a score of 2-1.

A-10 Men's Soccer

The 49ers showed their dominance early in the match, putting two goals into the back of the goal in the first half. Midfielder Luke Exley (sixth in the A-10 for goals and assists) scored his team's first goal of the game. The second goal came from midfielder Adam Gross, who scored two goals in last weeks 6-0 beating over George Washington. Gross was on the College Soccer News' National Team of the Week earlier this season.

Mathers is a part of Charlotte's strong defense, which has allowed one goal in 410 minutes of play. The one goal was scored in the match against Saint Louis, put in by freshman Benny Estes.

Dayton on eight game winning streak.

After this past weekend, Dayton remains undefeated through A-10 conference play in the midst of its eight-game winning streak which includes five shutouts.

The latest match in this streak came on Oct. 18 when the

See M. SOCCER on page 8

Dayton redshirt sophomore Tyler Picard gets rid of the ball during a game this season after making a save. The goalkeeper has a 1.55 goals-against average and a .765 save percentage in the five games he's started this season.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 72 LOW: 38 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 2009

Deval Patrick hosts community panel

Governor addresses student union on statewide initiatives, future of the Commonwealth

By Nick Bush and Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Gov. Deval Patrick spoke Wednesday afternoon in a panel discussion as part of a young adult community meeting in the Student Union Ballroom.

Joining the governor on the panel were Ruby Maddox-Fisher, Program Coordinator at the Center for the Environment at Holyoke Community College, Tony Maroulis, Executive Director of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce, Aron Goldman, Executive Director of the Springfield Institute, and Brianna Johnson, a student at UMass and founder of the Brianna Fund for children with physical disabilities.

Over the ten weeks between September and November, the Office of Civic Engagement and senior officials from the Patrick-Murray Administration will be hosting several community meetings with young adults across the Commonwealth. The administration has stated interest in getting young people to provide their input on state issues during this 'listening tour,' particularly as Patrick debates how to resolve Massachusetts' $600 million budget shortfall for fiscal year 2010.

After recently announcing that tax revenues for the first quarter of the year fell $212 million short of expectations, Gov. Patrick unveiled plans to explore unpaid executive furloughs, consolidation of state agencies, farming out public programs to private companies and the sale of surplus state property and expressed hopes that he could get further concessions from unions.

Chancellor Robert Holub introduced Patrick Wednesday slightly after 12:15 p.m., telling the mostly filled ballroom that he and Gov. Patrick share a common agenda in hoping to improve the state's flagship university.

"Governor Patrick and I share a common belief that public higher education is a pathway to opportunity for those deserving students in the Commonwealth," he said.

From there, Holub announced that members of the panel would receive a University of Massachusetts bobblehead doll.

"I hope to see this bobblehead on desks in Beacon Hill, and on desks across the Commonwealth," said Holub, before giving the floor to the governor.

In his opening remarks, Patrick noted the sweeping changes Massachusetts has seen in the 40-odd years he has lived here, setting up the primary point of his opening statements that Massachusetts is in the midst of a challenging period, but still an innovator in technology and education.

"You are here at a very different time, one of the most profoundly challenging times in American history," the governor said, "but innovation, IT, clean energy, health care, education, are all coming on strong and leading us out of the recession," he said.

"Young people are fueling that innovation," continued Patrick. "Every new innovation is led in Massachusetts by an influx of highly talented young people."

From there, Patrick made what amounted to his sales pitch for Massachusetts.

"The reason I'm here today is to emphasize that we want you here," he said, "we need you here, we need you to think about your future here. I hope there are ways we can talk seriously about making Massachusetts a part of your future."

Patrick then turned the floor over to his civic engagement director, Elizabeth Clay, who introduced the panelists who would field questions along with the governor.

The question and answer session of the panel's discussion featured a number of tough queries sent in Patrick's direction.

"It's getting more difficult to get loans. I can afford [going to UMass], but I know many people who can't afford to come here," said senior Marco Cross in his question to the governor. "What are you doing to make it cheaper to come here, and so everyone who wants to come here has a chance?" Patrick responded by stating his commitment to higher public education; despite the state's budget deficit. In a moment of spontaneity, Gov. Patrick also said that his daughter once "came home from backpacking abroad with a Marco," to which Cross deadpanned, "Not me, sir."

The Governor did not seem to shy away from the harsh real-

See PATRICK on page 2

Governor Deval Patrick answers audience questions on issues affecting students Wednesday afternoon at a panel discussion in the student union ballroom. Seated next to the governor is panel member Ruby Maddox-Fisher.

Bye, Bye, buildings:

University Apartments will soon be razed

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

The condemned University Apartments complex, located off Butterfield Terrace, is scheduled to be demolished next month.

Built in 1949, the University Apartments were designed for housing, specifically family housing. In 1994, the 37,000-square-foot building was deemed unsuitable for living, though it was still used for office space by the Minutemen Marching Band until this school year.

Along with the University Apartments, this project will tear down a 4,400-square-foot garage and 1,000 feet of steam line that had connected the buildings to the campus distribution center. The garage had previously been used by housing and residence life operations.

North Pleasant Street sidewalks from Thatcher Road to Butterfield Terrace are expected to be construction zones while the demolition occurs. During the project, sidewalks will be made available at different locations. Demolition is expected to be completed in January.

In a university press release, Jim Cahill, the director of facilities and campus planning at the University of Massachusetts said the project will create parking space for faculty and staff. This project is slated to cost $1.2 million. The cost entails the recycling of possible building materials and the safe disposal of hazardous materials, such as asbestos and lead.

A 90-space parking lot is expected to be completed by May 2010. "This is really going to help out the parking situation on the east side of campus, where we're being squeezed," Cahill said.

For the present, the housing and residence life operations have been relocated to the Physical Plant building. This allows them to share resources and work space with Physical Plant operations.

The Minuteman Marching Band has been temporarily relocated to the Arnold House until the completion of the Minuteman Marching Band Building, projected to be finished by March 2011. The Minuteman Marching Band has not had a permanent home since 1997, when they had used the Old Chapel, which has also been deemed unsafe, according to director of Marching and Athletic Bands George Parks. The university decided not to renovate the building after determining repairs would cost $15 million.

The Marching Band building project is expected to be a $5.7 million project, funded both by donations and university funds, and will finally give the 300-member band a permanent home. Construction on the new building will commence next spring.

The building will be attached to Grinnell Arena by a walkway and is located next to Dickinson Hall. The facility will provide an indoor practice and performance space that will be able to fit the entire band, as well storage for uniforms and instruments, small practice rooms for instrument sec-

See APARTMENTS on page 2

The condemned University Apartments complex will be demolished next month to create space for a parking lot and a new marching band building.

Amherst Police host 911 awareness program

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

On Sunday, the Amherst Police Department announced that it would continue its Public Safety 911 Education Program, now in its third year.

Emergency dispatchers from the Amherst Public Safety Emergency Communications Center will be participating in the Amherst Fire Department's Student Awareness of Fire Education (SAFE) program, which helps teach young Amherst residents the dos and dont's of calling 911.

Since it began in 1996, the SAFE program has attempted to teach fire safety lessons and fire prevention to fourth graders in the Amherst, Shutesbury, Leverett and Pelham elementary schools.

The month-long program will end with the 911 awareness activities, planned for the end of October. The 911 instruction hopes to provide students with pertinent information on how to responsibly and correctly make use of 911 emergency resources, including teaching them what to say if they ever do need to make an emergency call.

Additionally, the students will get the chance to practice dialing 911 using a phone prop allowing the dispatchers and students to simulate an emergency call to review the situations the students had learned.

Though the SAFE program began in 1996 and was designed to teach citizens of all ages, it was not implemented in Amherst until 2007, when dispatchers Jason Rushford and Carly Kinnas brought it here.

The two dispatchers have presented the program at various local community centers, including the Amherst Fire Department's open house, the Bangs Community Center flu clinic, and at the Amherst Seniors and Law Enforcement Together (SALT) program.

More information on the program is available by calling the Emergency Communications Center at (413) 259-3000. The program is funded by a community policing grant from the Executive Office of Public Safety and Security.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

The Amherst Police and their emergency communications dispatchers will be conducting 911 awareness training exercises for various community groups and children throughout the rest of October.

ARTS & LIVING

'West Side Story' comes to Amherst

Amherst Cinema will screen the film remake of the Broadway classic as part of a series of events titled, "The 1950s: Cold War Culture and the Birth of the Cool."

SEE PAGE 4

SPORTS

Football looks to squish Spiders

The UMass football team will look to build on the momentum it drew from a big victory over New Hampshire when it squares off at defending national champion Richmond Saturday.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Nick Milano explores the staying power of the social communication tool Twitter.

SEE PAGE 3

DailyCollegian.com

Log onto DailyCollegian.com for full video coverage of Governor Deval Patrick's appearance at UMass and the young adult community panel he participated in Wednesday.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 31

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR in CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Su Yin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shayna Murphy
COPIES EDITOR Annie Keithline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COPIES Andrew Witts
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSTANT EDITORIAL Hannah Nelson
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alyssa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts editorial semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1904 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Bush
COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

Plan to add building for marching band

APARTMENTS from page 1

tions and offices for band staff. The project will also fund renovations for Grinnell, a building used for storing equipment and meeting space before game days.

Parks said the apartments were simply not a good space for the band.

"It was not a very suitable space for the band," said Parks. "Though the university tried to make the building more comfortable by painting the walls and other small renovations, the space just wasn't big enough."

Parks also explained that due to space constraints, the Minuteman Marching Band has been forced to store equipment five miles off-campus and that students were often required to store their own instruments.

Currently the Minuteman Marching Band staff is using the Arnold House, a building once used by the School of Nursing. This building also suffers from similar space constraints to the University Apartments.

Without an indoor location large enough for the 300-person band, the weather can take a toll.

Matt Hill, a freshman from Needham, Mass, said, "it will be nice to practice inside somewhere when it's really cold out."

"Last week, it was freezing out, yet we had to do our drill outside because we currently don't have a large enough space to contain the entire band indoors," said Hill. "It was pretty miserable."

Private donations for the building came from a program the department developed called A Thousand For a Thousand.

Parks said the department had no one major donor, but instead had many individuals give moderately. "We didn't have anybody that had major bucks. We had over 700 people give a thousand dollars or more, about 1400 total donated to the project." He added, "We had several students themselves that put a thousand dollars on their own credit cards".

The 15,000-square-foot design was created by Kuhn Riddle Architects of Amherst. Working with the needs of the band, Parks expects the space to fulfill the needs of the group for years to come. Parks said "They've been very, very responsive to all of our needs, trying to create a building that will work extremely well with us. We're thrilled with the designs."

The design also serves as an example of the university's plans to become more energy-efficient. The layouts include need based energy recovery ventilation, which recycles energy used for heating and cooling into the outside air. Recycled materials plan to be used in construction and it is expected that approximately 75 percent of waste from construction will be recycled. University officials plan to register the new building with the US Green Building Council's Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) program.

The Minuteman Marching Band is one of only 27 collegiate marching bands to have received the Sudler trophy, an annual award given by the John Philip Sousa Foundation.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwillia@student.umass.edu

COURTESY IMAGE

Development plans call for tearing down the old University Apartments complex and building a new home for the Minutemen Marching Band.

Gov. Patrick visits UM, discusses future of state

MATTHEW R. HARRISON/ST. COLLEGIAN

Governor Deval Patrick mingles with crowd members Wednesday inside the Student Union Ballroom. The governor answered questions from the audience on issues such as taxes, jobs and higher education funding.

PATRICK from page 1

ity of the steep cut in public higher education funding, including the $30 million cut to UMass.

"The answer is to get the economy moving again," said Patrick. "Trust me, I know what to do once the revenue returns, and we will continue to fund public education."

"The fact that we value smarts in Massachusetts is a comparative strength," said Gov. Patrick, later on in the panel.

Other students asked about potential ways of bringing in revenue.

One student asked Governor Patrick if he would consider raising income taxes to the pre-1992 level of 9.9 percent.

"I'm not a 'no new taxes' guy," he said, modifying that by stating that "it's a crummy time to raise taxes."

The governor continued to say he favors targeted tax increases until the state's economy has stabilized and would ultimately be a proponent of a graduated income tax, or one that taxes proportionally based on income. That change, he noted, would require a constitutional amendment.

"One has to be very sensitive to ask people to contribute more when they are watching every penny they have," he said.

When a student wondered whether he would be able to afford to continue to live in Massachusetts after graduating from UMass, suggesting that Governor Patrick consider cutting taxes, Patrick praised the idea of creating more affordable housing and keeping taxes low, but cautioned that "we aren't 'Taxachusetts' anymore."

After the question and answer session, Patrick stepped outside to a gray Wednesday afternoon near the steps leading to Campus Center to field questions from reporters.

He said he is always impressed by the engagement and motivation of students in Western Massachusetts and stated that his administration wants to work with young people in Massachusetts to help advance the state's future.

"We care about the young people," he said. "We want them to stay here."

Patrick also announced what he called "a transformative initiative," to build a high-tech computing system in Holyoke which he hopes will create an information technology hub in Western Massachusetts and, specifically, the economically disadvantaged Springfield-Holyoke area.

Before he was ushered off in a caravan of state vehicles, Patrick was asked to explain the seeming disconnect between his repeated commitments to public higher education and the substantial cut in public higher education funding passed in his tenure.

"The bottom is falling out of the state's fist," he said, "there are some miserable, sad choices the state is having to make, and we are all having to share that burden."

"We will get through it," he continued. "We were able to close what could have been a very calamitous situation with a modest surplus this year, and as we turn around we need to invest in our state's resources, and UMass Amherst is one of those resources."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at shutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

MATTHEW R. HARRISON/ST. COLLEGIAN

Governor Deval Patrick fields questions yesterday at a community panel held at the Student Union.

MATTHEW R. HARRISON/ST. COLLEGIAN

UMass student Marco Cross asks Governor Deval Patrick his thoughts on keeping public higher education affordable for deserving Massachusetts students in front of a Student Union Ballroom crowd.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

wants your R.S.O. to advertise with us!

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

R.S.O. ads for $6.70 per column inch

Great ads. Great deals.

CONTACT NICOLE:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413.545.3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

UMass is a BIG campus, and we need your help covering it.

Know of something that's happening? Want to see an event get news coverage? Let us know!

Go online and head to DailyCollegian.com and click "Submit a Tip."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Removing the ranters

Matthew M. Robare

Rants. I can't stand them at all. Some blowhard has some uninformed opinion about some topic that nobody knows about – much less cares about – and just mouths off about it without even thinking things through. I just don't understand what could possess someone to come up with one. Maybe a lifetime of armchair quarterbacking or yelling at the TV whenever the news is on.

I mean, come on, nobody wants to hear or read some uninformed person going on and on about one thing. People like stories and conflict and drama. Rants are fine for the Internet when nobody is listening. But some people like to rant about their pet peeves or unthinking political opinions or whatever idiotic shtick they have that week at parties. That's just plain annoying, some dolt just emitting hot air without a single original thought. Run for office, buddy.

You know the type. Probably drink too much, smells like he hasn't showered that week, works someplace that has no bearing on your life, but thinks he's a big shot. Sad, really. Almost pitiful, but their ability to annoy you far outweighs their circumstances. If you are really unlucky, it can feel like only a very tenuous bond called "society" is preventing you from strangling them right then and there. If they sound like Chris Matthews, your lawyer can use the "doing a service to humanity" defense at your trial.

Thankfully, it's autumn and that means football and basketball. Instead of harping on about everything, they'll focus exclusively on those sports and we'll enjoy some peace and quiet while they obsess over ESPN and Fox Sports most of the day. These two sports attract the most stupid, drunken, most annoying and smelliest sort of ranter. Simple games for simple minds, I guess. Not that everyone who enjoys football and basketball is a ranter. In fact, probably only about 10 percent of stupid, drunk, annoying and smelly football and basketball fans are ranters.

The absolute worst thing about ranters is that when they blog they cannot spell, a trait they share with another annoying group, bad fan fiction writers.

But the absolute worst thing about ranters is that when they blog, they cannot spell – a trait they share with another annoying group, bad fan fiction writers. No decent spelling at all. I suppose that's one of the problems with the Internet, not having editors, but it is also indicative of the ranter's laziness. Most Internet browsers have some kind of spell check and it isn't as if it's too hard to make the effort to type "The Patriots were awesome Sunday! They dominated Tennessee!" instead of "teh Patz wuz good sinday!!!11!! tenisee sux11!1!"

By the way, how many of you just went, "OMG LOL!" No reason, just asking.

Anyways, what can be done about this terrible social disease? Short of radical and immoral actions like internment or genocide, I mean. Well, in my view, the best thing we can do is ignore them. While many of them might not rant for any real reason, they do enjoy the attention. While it might be a while, ignoring a ranter will almost certainly result in them no longer ranting to you. The worst thing you can do to an annoying person is ignore them. I swear, if 100 million people ignored the most annoying government agencies (the Internal Revenue Service or the Department of Homeland Security, take your pick) eventually they'd have to give in. We could probably call it a revolution too, since the government would be doing something people actually want. Ignoring rants is bliss. Sorry.

Now, another way to stop ranters would be to subject them to the opposite of ranting: the boring story with no point. You know the type: a person with a monotone voice lists every single insignificant thing that has happened to them in the past 24 hours. "I got up at 6:28 a.m. because I had to use the bathroom, which was really a good thing because not only would I have slept in if I hadn't gotten up I would have had stomach problems because the night before I ate corn because I forgot that corn gave me an upset stomach..."

I can barely type it, though I have unconsciously told stories like that before. But I have never ranted. Ever. Not in billions and billions of words spoken or written have I ever engaged in as sickening and self-important activity as ranting.

Once the boring people drive the ranters to silence through shear long-windedness, we will have the problem of a lot of boring people. The way to deal with them will be to cultivate our singing voices or any instrument and abandon prose for song. But the death of prose will be a topic for another column.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Got an issue?

Don't complain to your friends...

SEND A LETTER TO THE EDITOR!

Editorial@Dailycollegian.com

College life and body

Rachel Dougherty

"I'm fat."

There should really be a drinking game for those words. If you had to drink every time you heard someone call themselves fat, you'd be drunk before you read my article this morning. Or for the number of times you catch someone checking themselves out in the reflective surface of a mirror, door or window as you walk across campus.

Body image is important to college students. But what begins as a little harmless vanity begets a community of college students who are deeply insecure in their own bodies. And this insecurity can have potentially fatal consequences if it leads to body image disorders and eating disorders.

On a campus where every reflective surface is a mirror, we have to ask ourselves: Is our obsession with our bodies hurting us?

College campuses contain all the right triggers for eating disorders: stress, social pressure and, most of all, freedom. You're away from your parents, no one is checking up on you; and, unless you're an upper-classman, your meal plan probably consists of a twice-a-day buffet and vending machine food.

It's the first time in your life when your diet is completely under your control. There are a lot of freedoms that come with being in college. But the freedom of college life is what makes it a breeding ground for eating disorders.

"Anna" is an undergraduate at the University of Massachusetts who prefers to remain anonymous. She has struggled with anorexia and bulimia since she was 12-years-old. She's been through numerous treatment programs ranging from outpatient programs to in-patient residential treatment at a hospital in Boston.

"It started when I was 12," Anna said. "Like, around seventh grade. It wasn't triggered by anything specific, nothing traumatic anyway. I went on a diet and it just sort of went out of control."

The pressure to be thin starts young, and comes from all kinds of sources. A lot of that pressure has been attributed to the kinds of images seen in the media: airbrushed faces, abnormally thin models and actresses, diet ads on every channel and billboard. All of these media images affect how we see ourselves, and what we define as beautiful. But the strongest pressure, according to Anna, often comes from within the eating-disordered person's own community.

"The biggest influence was probably my sisters, and my peers," she says. "And an internal pressure. I don't remember idolizing people on TV and being like, I want to look like that person."

If you think eating disorders are funny, consider this stat: Anorexia nervosa has the highest premature fatality rate of any mental illness, including depression.

While it makes sense to think that advertising companies and unhealthy media images are responsible for the rise in eating disorders in the last 20 years, the media is only a part of a much bigger picture. Often, the person hurting you the most is not the half-naked size zero draped across the cover of a cigarette ad. Often, the person hurting you the most is the one sitting next to you in the cafeteria.

"You hear girls talking about their bodies all the time. About themselves, but about other girls too," Anna said. "I heard these girls talking the other day about their friend as if she were a science project. It was like they were dissecting her, just picking apart everything that was wrong with her body."

While the super-thin ideal of beauty may originate in the media, it is enforced by the community of girls who watch each other.

Girls who comment on how much you eat, girls who call themselves fat to hear it contradicted, girls who mock each other because they are so desperately afraid of being undesirable themselves.

Boys are not excluded from this, either. There are one million men in the U.S. affected by an eating disorder such as anorexia or bulimia, according to statistics provided by the National Eating Disorder Association (NEDA). But eating disorders and body image disorders are a much larger problem within the female population.

According to NEDA, more than 10 million women in the U.S. have been diagnosed with an eating disorder, and more than half of teenage girls engage in unhealthy weight control behaviors. NEDA's definition of unhealthy eating control behaviors includes fasting, smoking, vomiting and use of laxatives.

These statistics only represent reported cases of eating disorders. Many more go undiagnosed and untreated. NEDA estimates that only 30 percent of people with anorexia nervosa and six percent of people with bulimia nervosa receive mental health care.

Many anorexics and bulimics are in denial that they have an eating disorder and will not seek treatment. Many more are afraid to "come out" about their eating disorders because of the stigma surrounding the disease and the lack of acceptance within the community.

"People will be sensitive to the issue when they know it's an issue," Anna said. "Like, if you tell them you have an eating disorder, most people will try to be sensitive about it. They won't understand it, but they'll try to respect it. But people will also make these off-hand comments and jokes that can be offensive."

If you think eating disorders are funny, consider this stat: Anorexia nervosa has the highest premature fatality rate of any mental illness, including depression.

"The long-term consequences are definitely a concern," Anna said. "I don't think there's a cure for it, exactly. I don't think there's a cure for a lot of things. But you can definitely get better. It takes a long time, and a lot of work, but I think you can live free of the obsession."

If you or someone you know has an eating disorder, there is an eating disorders clinic available on campus through UMass Mental Health Services. Mental Health Services can be reached at (413) 545-2337 or at 127 Hills North in the Central Residential Area between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. on Monday through Friday.

Rachel Dougherty is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

NOT LOOKING TO IMPRESS

RE: "Chill out, HvZ players;" Dan Rahrig, October 20

In response to Dan Rahrig's piece about Humans vs. Zombies players looking childish, I must say that I am not trying to impress anyone, including Dan Rahrig. I stopped caring what others thought of me many years ago; there will always be people who dislike or disapprove of me for one reason or another.

As for its alleged annoyance to others, I must say that I have encountered quite the contrary reaction. There has not been a day that has passed during which I have not been approached by genuinely intrigued students and professors asking me to explain the game to them. Indeed, during the ambushes I have been subjected to, I have noticed many a bystander watching the epic battles with rapt attention. Even the prospective students who walked us passed at the Student Union with smiles on their faces were probably happy to find out that there were activities to break the monotony of studying.

I leave you readers with this last opinion. HvZ is a great week and a half of reckless abandonment, and is a fun way to relieve some of the stresses of college life. It also doubles as way to bring people together who otherwise probably would never have met due to the enormity of our school.

And by the way Dan, our chant goes: "What do we want? Brains! When do we want them? Brains!"

Nicholas Katz
UMass Student

WHERE'S THE PAPER?

Dear Editor,

I arrived early to campus on Friday, so I had some time to kill before my first class. After vigorously hitting the refresh button numerous time on every web forum I could think of, I decided to read "The Collegian." I walked into the Marcus Atrium to grab a copy, but there were none to be found. Luckily, my class was in Lederle, so, after perilously making my way through the death trap that is New Dirt, I made it to the lobby of LGRC. Much to my dismay, instead of copies of "The Collegian," the lobby was littered only with those advertisement inserts that nobody cares about. I then proceeded to the LGRC Addition, where, unsurprisingly, I could only find a couple week-old copies. I was now on a mission.

I made my way up to Worcester Dining Commons, where I finally found a copy of "The Collegian." It was at that point that I realized the DC also carries "The Boston Globe," so I decided to take a copy of that instead. My decision was in vain, though, seeing as by the time I made it back to LGRC I was late for my class.

So, I have to ask, why isn't "The Collegian" being distributed? I have my own suspicions, but they involve the worth of the paper stock decreasing after the Collegian's been printed on it. Why are there no copies of "The Collegian" in Marcus? Or LGRC? For that matter, why are there none in North? Last year, I was able to pick up a copy every morning when I left my apartment. I would suspect you're trying to reduce waste by reducing circulation, but that doesn't mean you should go from delivering palettes to North one year to delivering none the next.

Alan R Levin
UMass Student

WANT TO WRITE TO US?

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.

Twitter not just fluff

Nick Milano

When Twitter first hit the airwaves, I was aghast. How could such a website with such a silly little game actually expect to compete with other traditional social-networking sites? Either I underestimated the need for people to talk about themselves or it is a legitimate website.

One of my roommates is obsessed with the trend of New Media and the future of the Internet and was obviously a big fan of it before I had heard the term "tweet." So, I decided to give it a go and see what the entire craze was about.

While this column might sound like it is a few months old, since Twitter has not consistently held top spot in news headlines for its breadth and popularity, it actually is not. The true test of a website is whether it can withstand the initial burst of fame. After the Iranian election fiasco when the entire world was a-tweet, I felt that Twitter would soon fall off the face of the earth. It has yet to do so, and with the Meghan McCain recent controversy, it was back in the headlines.

I initially joined Twitter to "follow" Boston politicians in the mayoral and city council election as well as those vying for Ted Kennedy's Senate seat. But the true rewards were when I started to follow football reporters like the former "Boston Globe" and current ESPN Boston Patriots beat reporter Mike Reiss, ESPN's Adam Schefter and SI's Peter King.

At this point, who cares about politicians any more, especially when they are not actually using their own Twitter account? It's clearly some subordinate.

Now, when you follow a person, all of their Tweets are posted on your homepage. It is similar to going onto Facebook's homepage and seeing people's status updates and what they have written on other people's walls.

After the Iranian election fiasco when the entire world was a-tweet, I felt that Twitter would soon fall off the face of the earth. It has yet to do so.

With politicians, you would get spam about how you should vote for them or where they are going to be next and many other relatively useless pieces of information. Never do you get a feel for their personality or interesting tidbits about their days. The most entertaining politician, I think, is Lieutenant Governor Tim Murray who posts a trivia question every Tuesday and gives out awards to the quickest responder.

Reporters, I found, would continuously update their Twitter with breaking news or insights into games they were watching. Reading Mike Reiss's updates during Patriots games gives you real analysis in comparison to whatever nonsense the TV commentators often fill the airwaves with. Adam Schefter informs his followers of various player statuses – crucial for anyone playing fantasy football. Peter King randomly drops some analysis about games he is watching and offers a look into what his praised Monday Morning Quarterback column will have.

In regards to real football, the only way I was able to track the U.S.-Honduras match in Honduras (since it was only aired in English in two bars in Massachusetts and not on regular TV) was by reloading Twitter's homepage to see what Grant Wahl was saying – it was practically play by play.

Reporters are not the only ones who have something interesting to say. Meghan McCain, while on the opposite side of my political beliefs, is much smarter than too many people refuse to realize. Bill Maher is probably the funniest twitterer – who knows if that is the appropriate term – using the website. A couple of roommates use Twitter and both occasionally have funny tweets. On the other hand, there are many like myself who rarely Tweet and only use it to follow people.

So if you like football, soccer, any kind of sports and even just daily entertainment, Twitter is actually a great source.

I anticipated writing a column tearing it apart especially when an independent analytic group published a report classifying 40.55 percent of tweets as Pointless Babble, according to the group's blog.

After the first couple of weeks, Twitter was living up to its Pointless Babble hype until I added people other than politicians. Twitter's got staying power – don't get caught in shock like I did.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

WOOOAAH, WE'RE HALFWAY THERE...

...so write for Ed/Op

Starling on Sex: Old clichés coming true

Jessica Starling-Jones

Many people have asked me of late what happened to me that made me so cynical when it comes to relationships.

I'll admit it is a reasonable question. I've gone from being a die-hard romantic to having a visceral aversion to relationships in the course of a few short months.

In fact, the obvious answer here is the correct one. It was the men in my life who made me this way: nothing more unusual than a string of bad luck with guys. There were three of them, one right after another. Mind you, these were not the only boys with whom I had dalliances, merely the ones with whom I became emotionally entangled.

The worst part, the part that really irks me, is that I should have seen these train wrecks coming from a mile away, long before I ever got attached to any of them.

See, until I really examined my recent travails, I had not realized that guys like these actually existed outside of "Sex and the City" and Matthew McConaughey movies.

Those ludicrous stereotypes that are cliché pitfalls in the world of dating walk amongst us, and I've recently had run-ins with three of the worst.

I should clarify that I'm not saying these guys were utterly shallow, two-dimensional caricatures with no personalities. They're not bad people.

If that were the case, I would never have cared for them. It's just that my romantic relationships with these boys can be reduced to those meanest of terms.

The first of the bunch was the Emotionally Unavailable Guy. He literally just did not have the capacity to love. In the interest of giving credit where credit is due, I should concede that he was at least up-front about this issue.

For reasons unknown, I so naively thought that I could change him. It turns out that in this case, at least, our mothers were right: you can't change a man, no matter how much you hope, and no matter how frequently you encourage or nag him.

Then, there was Afraid-Of-Commitment Guy. Mind you, this guy was not a garden-variety slut. He wasn't an Errol Flynnian playboy with no desire to commit.

I know plenty of those guys; I've become one of those girls myself. This one was an entirely different breed.

This one only wanted me when I had a boyfriend. As soon as I was single, he didn't want to be in a relationship. He even managed to wriggle his way out of the relationship he was actually in, allegedly because it was "going too well." God forbid, right?

Unfortunately, I actually knew about this debacle before I got really involved with him, but I got involved anyway. Although it was me who blew this one (in my own particular outlandish idiom), I know his issues would have made our relationship crash and burn if my preposterous drunken antics hadn't beaten him to the punch.

Finally, I crossed paths with the third boy, the one of whom I'm least inclined to be judgmental. This third and final heartbreaker was the dreaded Guy Who Still Has Feelings For His Ex. This obviously wasn't his fault; I wasn't mad at him. The problem I had with this is that he didn't realize it, or maybe just didn't bother to tell me, until after I had gone and gotten myself severely smitten with him.

That was the last straw for me. I had had quite enough of men. The stereotype trifecta had claimed another innocent victim! Then I started to wonder, was I really so innocent in all of this?

I wasted more time than I care to admit with a man who was clearly incapable of loving me or anyone else. Then I persisted through more than one false start with the Fear of Commitment boy.

I'm sad to say that if I hadn't ruined what we had maybe been about to have, I would probably still be stuck on that busted roller coaster today.

As for the third guy – well, I'd like to say that was nobody's fault, but I probably should not have let myself get so attached to him so quickly, especially when I was so vulnerable after my last two emotional horror shows.

If I had been honest with myself about my own fragile emotional state, I might not have been so devastated when things didn't work out.

Like most unpleasant experiences, there is a lesson to be learned from all this, and here it is: the problem wasn't solely the boys after all. It was me, too. I was being reckless with my own emotions, blindly stumbling into these unfortunate situations, ignoring all the signs and even the candid confessions of emotional dysfunction.

I can't account for how another person is going to act or feel, but I finally realized that from now on, maybe I should be more careful if I don't want to get burned.

What I've lost in this is not my faith that men can be decent human beings worthy of love. Rather, it's my faith in my own ability to judge a man's character.

It turns out that I too can be reduced to a caricature: I'm That Girl Who Has Terrible Taste In Men.

Jessica Starling-Jones can be reached at jessstarling-jones@gmail.com

A post-Cold War take on a Broadway classic

Natalie Wood, played Maria in the 1961 Hollywood production of "West Side Story." Her character is modeled after Shakespeare's Juliet.

By Steven Baum
Collegian Correspondent

Throughout October, Amherst Cinema will be screening three classic films from the 1950s: "Rebel Without a Cause," "West Side Story," and "Jailhouse Rock." The films are being shown as part of an exhibition entitled, "The 1950s: Cold War Culture and the Birth of The Cool." The reason behind the exhibition of these films is an experimental course being offered at Hampshire College this semester, which bears the same title as the exhibition. The course uses film, music, art, and other expressive mediums to explore and understand American culture in the 1950s.

"The 1950s: Cold War Culture and the Birth of The Cool" is a course that offers a non-traditional look at mid-twentieth century America. The Amherst Cinema website explains how through lectures, film screenings, and small discussion groups, students enrolled in this class examine the social and cultural histories of the 1950s. The activities shed light on landmark developments of the era, including the atom bomb, McCarthyism, postwar Marxism, suburbanization, civil rights, immigration and ethnic assimilation, existentialism and other transformations of the post-war period.

The course is lead by a trio of professors who studied with concentrations in different areas: Michele Hardesty, an assistant professor of U.S. Literature, Karen Koehler, an assistant professor of Architectural History and Rebecca Miller, an associate professor of Music. The various academic disciplines, combined with the wide-array of mediums covered in the class, lead to an intricate and multi-angled look at the 1950s and how those years have come to shape and define modern life in America.

In conjunction with the course offerings, on October 22, Amherst Cinema will be showing "West Side Story," which will feature an introduction and a discussion session led by Rebecca Miller following the film. Miller's academic area of interest focuses on music as a culture and music in culture. In her introduction to the film, Miller will speak about the film score, written by Leonard Bernstein, as well as certain aspects of the film relating to the culture of the 1950s, including the representation of specific ethnic groups, the depictions of youths and authority figures, and how the music and choreography used in the film add to the dramatic story and amplify the plot-line.

The film is a musical adaptation of the classic story of Romeo and Juliette. The production was based on the book written by Ernest Lehman and directed by Robert Wise and Jerome Robbins. In the film, the feuding families from Shakespeare's story are replaced by two rival New York City gangs - the Sharks, a Puerto Rican gang led by Bernardo (George Chakiris), and the Jets, a white gang headed by Riff (Russ Tamblyn). While the war between the two gangs escalates, Tony, a former leader of the Jets, played by Richard Beymer and Maria, Bernardo's sister, played by Natalie Wood meet each other and fall in love. Following this classic plotline, the story is a masterpiece of wonderful songs, dancing and topnotch acting. The film swept the 1962 Academy Awards garnering 10 total Oscars including Best Picture and Best Musical Score among other awards for supporting acting, direction, cinematography, editing, sound, costume and art direction. All in all, it's a must-see classic that continues to delight film-goers today.

"West Side Story" will be showing at Amherst Cinema on October 22 at 7 p.m. "Jailhouse Rock," the third and final film of the series, will be shown on Thursday, October 29 at 7 p.m.

Steven Baum can be reached at sbaum@student.umass.edu

Bollywood enchants Amherst with 'Om Shanti Om' showing

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Staff

The theater at Amherst Cinema was packed almost to capacity this past Sunday at 1 p.m., a sign of an audience buzzing with anticipation for the special screening of Farah Khan's 2007 Bollywood box-office hit "Om Shanti Om," presented by the Asian Arts and Culture Program. Audience members both young and old were quickly introduced to the film by event curator Anne Ciecko, and as soon as the lights went down, all were spellbound for the film's full 162 minute runtime (plus intermission, of course).

Starring Hindi film megastar Shah Rukh Khan, this film acted as a glorious send-up of the very industry that spawned it. Those in the audience who were able to appreciate the many inside jokes this film contained were roaring with laughter, occasionally leaving people less familiar with Bollywood behind. However, not too much was lost in translation. With songs that stick in your head for days, jokes that are laugh-out-loud funny, and incredibly engaging dance sequences, "Om Shanti Om" was an audience favorite this past Sunday!

Bollywood has long been a point of division for followers of film. There are some who see the extended song-and-dance sequences, over-the-top humor, and elongated run times, and feel the need to call them self-indulgent. Meanwhile, followers and lovers of this long-running film industry know that these aspects of the films are in fact their rallying points and, for the most part, their reasons for existence. Meanwhile, for American audiences who know what to look for, Bollywood films are a throwback to the Hollywood musicals of old. "Om Shanti Om," with its clever homages to the tropes and clichés of Hindi films, manages to act as Bollywood's "Singing in the Rain"— its love letter to its parent industry. The list of cameos stretches far back into the industry's past, and contains some shockingly familiar faces (which will not be spoiled, for curious film goers).

"Om Shanti Om," through its setting alone, can be seen as a tribute to the Bollywood film industry. It begins in 1977, with junior artist Om Prakash Makija, played by Khan, who in the first half of the film pulls off the somewhat difficult task of being an internationally-known sex-symbol who has to play a schlub. He has dreams of stardom, but unfortunately has yet to be blessed with much in the way of talent or luck. In yet another throwback to Bollywood's past, we first meet him on the set of the 1980 film "Karz," of which "Om Shanti Om" has been called a partial remake. His familiars once again play off old Bollywood clichés, with a melodramatic mother (Kiron Kher, who spends much of her time holding her hands up to her weeping face while music swells) and a typical "buddy comedy" companion (Shreyas Talpade).

Om also is in love with the toast of the Bollywood scene at the time, Shantipriya, played by newcomer Deepika Padukone. Although she isn't given much in the way of acting challenges (due to being the "love interest," and little else), she manages to look pretty in medium close-up and effectively sings and dances her way through the songs.

The storyline develops in a pretty typical Bollywood manner. The lovers meet by chance, die by intermission, are reincarnated at the start of the second half, and kill off the villain by the end. Apologies must be made if this seems like a spoiler, but any fan of Bollywood will tell you that this storyline is nothing new. In fact, the very fact that "Om Shanti Om" has this story can be seen as a commentary in itself!

The Asian Arts and Culture Program will continue to screen films as part of its New Asia Cinema series until December 2, every Wednesday evening at 7 p.m. in the Flavin Family Auditorium at the SOM. Those with an interest in world cinema would be well advised to attend the next screening.

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu.

Shah Rukh Khan plays a role more in keeping with his real life character as an Indian sex icon during his second life.

Om Shanti Om, screened this past Sunday at Amherst Cinema tells a love story that spans multiple lifetimes. The lovers, pictured here die together and return in the next life to avenge their murderer.

Minutewomen look to rebound this weekend

UMass seeks first Atlantic 10 victory Friday, Face Spiders at 3 p.m. on Garber Field

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

After losing both games against non-ranked conference opponents this past weekend and dropping six spots in the NFHCA/Kookaburra Division I Poll, Massachusetts field hockey coach Justine Sowry strayed from her usual practice routine. The sixteenth-ranked Minutewomen instead played a care-free game of soccer at practice this week.

Sowry stressed the fact that the Minutewomen (9-6, 0-2 Atlantic 10) need to forget about the past and to remain calm in preparation for the future. UMass faces Richmond (9-7, 3-0 A-10) tomorrow at 3 p.m. in a rematch of last season's A-10 conference championship game, which the Minutewomen won, 2-0.

"As soon as we become frustrated and panic, then we cannot make good decisions on the field," Sowry said.

"It's really important this week to be sharp and intense at training, but also be in a relaxed state of mind and that's really important."

UMass swept the 2008 season series against the Spiders, outscoring Richmond, 5-1 in two games.

Senior Cher King and junior captain Katie Kelly scored three of the five goals against the Spiders, and they are two of the most capable Minutewomen to bring UMass out of its slump, especially in-conference. King had one goal, three assists in four conference games last season, and Kelly had four goals, one assist in six A-10 games.

Kelly and junior back Makaela Potts lead UMass with six goals this season. Potts also has six assists in a productive backfield that includes Jaime Bourazeris (three goals, one assist), Nikki Panciocco (one assist) and Christine Cutry (one goal, one assist).

Even though the Minutewomen swept the Spiders last season, Sowry is well-aware that Richmond is gunning for UMass and looking to extend its perfect start in conference play.

"Richmond is a great opponent. They're undefeated [in the conference] and coached well," she said. "They have a number of talented of players, and I'm sure they want to beat us. They have strength all over the field and we're going to have our best performance on Friday to have a chance, and that's what we are aiming to do."

Sophomore All-American Alesha Widdall leads the conference with a .733 save percentage this season, and holds the edge over Spider goalkeeper Jacki Raithel (1.83 GAA) with a 1.47 goals-against average.

While the Minutewomen have a strong defensive front that can also score goals, Richmond's leading goal-scorer Sarah Blythe-Wood (16 goals, seven assists), leads a Spider defense that is just as productive as their offense.

Senior Megan Thompson scored the only goal in the series for the Spiders, and returns this season to lead a forward line that has 29 goals among them.

In a conference stat-sheet dominated by both UMass and Richmond, the Spiders have allowed 1.73 goals per game this season, behind the Minutewomen's 1.53.

Richmond is largely a first-half team, scoring seven-fewer of its 51 goals before halftime, while giving up 49 of 89 penalty corners in the second half.

The Spiders, however, are marginally better on the road. In four away games this season, Richmond averages 4.25 goals per-game, and Raithel averages nearly seven saves per-game in road matches.

Notes

The 2009 NFHCA Division I Senior All-Star team includes A-10 representatives King, Blythe-Wood and Temple's Charise Young. The two-time All-Conference player has one goal, three assists this season. Wake Forest University hosts the game at 5:30 p.m. on Saturday, Nov. 21.

The North and South squads will consist of 20 teams and the game consists of two 25-minute periods. As an addition to the festivities, the All-Stars face the 2009 U.S. National team as well.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillme@student.umass.edu.

Offense lacking, need to improve for final stretch of '09 campaign

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team did something this weekend that it hadn't done since the middle of the 2007 season.

For the first time in two years, the Minutewomen (9-6, 0-2 Atlantic 10) dropped three straight contests. Uncharacteristically for UMass, two of the teams it fell against were Atlantic 10 opponents Saint Joseph's and Temple.

Last season, the Minutewomen cruised in conference play, going undefeated and claiming the A-10 title for the second consecutive year.

Even with the struggles Saint Joseph's and Temple have faced in the last couple of seasons, UMass coach Justine Sowry was not overly surprised by the outcomes.

"They're very good teams, and they always bring their best," she said. "When you're ranked as high as you are, you're always going to be hunted down."

With the success the Minutewomen have had in the past, Sowry also felt her team might have been looking past both opponents.

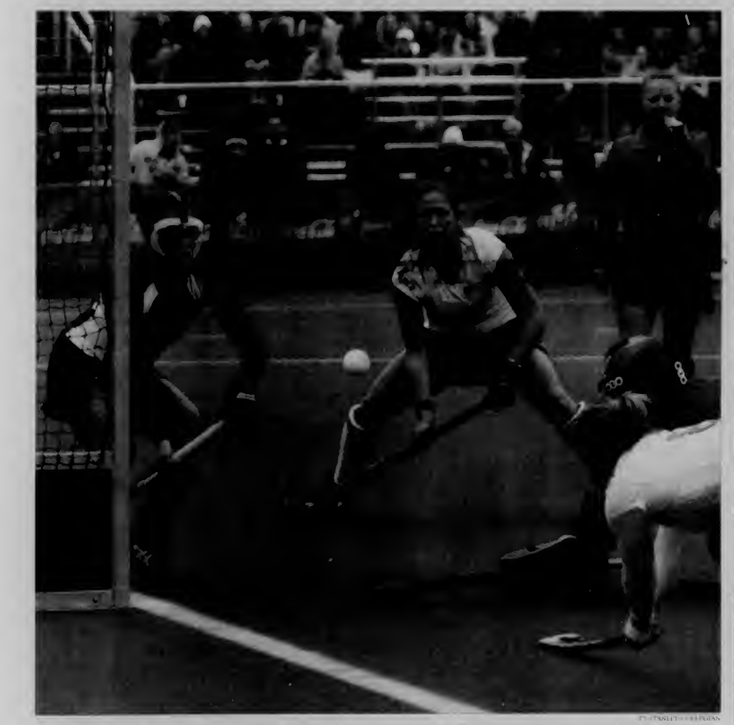
"I was not surprised, but on some levels, I think our team was surprised."

In the process of losing three straight games, UMass was shut-out in two of them against the Hawks and in a 3-0 Connecticut loss, and scored only one goal in the other game against the Owls. The Minutewomen haven't been a high-scoring team, and their identity lies in the strength of their defense. Their attack comes from the backfield, and is set up by the defense, which has had difficulties in its past few games.

"We certainly are still attacking, we're still getting into the circle, but we're probably putting ourselves in one-on-one situations rather than getting numbers in attack, so we can perhaps get our teammates in better situations to score," Sowry said of the offense.

This season, UMass is averaging just under two goals a contest, while giving up almost a goal and a half per game. In order to reach postseason play and make a run, Sowry realizes that her team must pick up the scoring and relieve pressure off of the defense.

"We're really looking at supporting each other off the ball, trying to get the confidence back, trying to get the repetition in this week so we can put the ball in the back of the net," she said.



Things don't look any easier heading forward, as the Minutewomen have a stretch of four games in the span of a week, starting Friday against conference foe Richmond. If UMass wants to play itself back into favor, it will get its chance with four remaining A-10 matchups the rest of the way.

"Our backs are up against the wall right now. We're coming from behind now and it's going to be really tough," Sowry said. "We have to keep the faith and keep believing that it's virtually one ball at a time, it's not even one day at a time, it's one ball at a time, one set play, [and] one penalty stroke at a time."

Despite the tough circumstances for UMass, the coaching staff believes this could be a blessing in disguise and give the team the kick that it needs.

"As my assistant coach, Kelly Dostal, said, 'this could be the best worst thing that's happened to us,'" Sowry said.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

Forward Katie Kelly takes a pass from a teammate and looks to score in front of the net. The Minutewomen have dropped their last three games, but look for a win this Friday when Richmond comes to Amherst.

UMass will need solid offensive production from Katie Kelly this weekend in order to snap its three game losing skid.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Crazy about Sports?
Then come write for the Collegian
Contact Jeffrey R. Larn
Sports@DailyCollegian.c

IN DECIDING WHICH LAW SCHOOL TO ATTEND,
CONSIDER THIS:
Quinnipiac University School of Law ranks among the top 100 law schools in such categories as bar passage rates for first time takers (95%); student LSAT scores; student/faculty ratio (9.5 to 1); and average expenditures per student. Not to mention, we offer merit scholarships ranging from $3,000 to full tuition. Before you decide which school to attend, make sure you review the facts. To learn more, visit law.quinnipiac.edu, email ladm@quinnipiac.edu or call 1-800-462-1944.
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW
LAW.QUINNIPIAC.EDU | HAMDEN, CONNECTICUT

Winning on the road

Suspended players uncertain

COLLIER from page 8

week of the season, a near upset over Football Bowl Subdivision Kansas State, while the other came after a three-week home stand followed by a bye week against a tough Delaware team. But for UMass coach Kevin Morris, it doesn't matter where his team plays.

"You better be ready to play. We have to make sure that we are really focused, that our preparation is good during the week and that any trip doesn't make us weary," Morris said before the team's practice on Tuesday. "Being on the road is no different than being at home."

UMass has had recent struggles on the road in the past two years, losing its last three and five of its last seven dating back to last year. But Collier feels the Minutemen could prove to be a strong road team this week against the Spiders.

"I feel like we could be a good road team, its just our first game of the year was on the road, [and] then we took basically a month off at home [and] kind of got settled into home," Collier said. "I feel like we're going to be a good road team, and [that] we're going to prove it this week."

To do that, Collier and the rest of the defense will have a tough task of keeping Richmond's dynamic quarterback, Eric Ward, under wraps. The senior is a danger in many ways, but mostly in how efficient he is with the ball and with the Spiders offense. Ward averages 203.7 yards per game through the air, and has also piled up 119 rushing yards and two rushing touchdowns on the year, while throwing three interceptions.

"He doesn't try to do things that he can't. If you give it to him he'll take it, he's one of those guys, not just a run-around guy making plays," Morris said. "He's a smart, sharp, efficient quarterback who can run and pass."

"We [have] got to play well, we've got to play assignment football, [and] make sure we're playing as 11 [on] every snap. We can't have anyone make any mistakes."

Morris is still uncertain whether or not the four previously suspended players – Mike Mele, Shane Viveiros, Bob McLaughlin and James Carven – will dress for Saturday's game, as the four players are going through an integration process.

"It's part of the integration process and the answer is no, its not up to me, its just how they play into the roles and if they earn a spot on the bus," Morris said.

The four players were reinstated before UMass' victory over New Hampshire last weekend, but did not dress for the game.

Jeffrey R Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Wideout Julian Talley runs after the catch against the Wildcats Saturday. After an upset victory, the Minutemen look to play spoiler again this weekend, when they travel to Richmond.

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Freshman linebacker Perry McIntyre makes a tackle against UNH. The Minutemen will need to make smart defensive plays in order to stop Spiders quarterback Eric Ward on Saturday.

Dangleis stepping up in role, Henshaw scoring in A-10 games

Skrajewski playing well on both ends of the field

DEFENSE from page 8

Being left-footed also puts him at an advantage when it comes to finding teammates.

One of Dangleis's favorite targets is fellow defender Henshaw, who stands at six feet tall.

"Mark seems to keep on finding me, and I don't mind," Henshaw said. "I like getting the goals in there, so hopefully he keeps finding me."

The sophomore has used A-10 play to become an offensive threat on his own, scoring in both of UMass' conference wins, as Dangleis helped Henshaw set up both goals in the last two weeks.

The first came against the Musketeers, where Henshaw scored the Minutemen's lone goal, and his second came as added insurance in the win over the Hawks.

"All I have to do is time myself, and put the ball in the back of the net," Henshaw said referring to connecting on Dangleis' passes.

However, the Dangleis-Henshaw connection is only the most recent example of how UMass' defense has become its offense.

Skrajewski, one of the Minutemen's incoming freshmen, had no expectations as far as playing time was concerned. But during training camp, he worked his way into the starting lineup and contributed immediately – on both sides of the ball.

The freshman earned Koch's trust, and has played a key role in the offense at times. Skrajewski has five shots on the season, and notched his first goal against Colgate on Sept. 29 as UMass rolled its way to a 3-0 victory.

As the Minutemen begin the final five games of their season, Koch will expect his defense to be as solid as it has been so far. But in order to be in the top tier of the A-10, some of the scoring will have to come from the back.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@daily-collegian.com

Minutemen coming off win, look to gain ground in conference

KOCH from page 8

Meanwhile, redshirt sophomore goalkeeper Shane Curran Hays started in the net against the Hawks, earning his second career shutout, making three saves.

URI (5-7-1, 2-2-0 A-10) is coming off two victories over both SJU and Temple last weekend, defeating the Hawks 3-0 last Friday and the Owls 4-1 on Sunday.

The win over Temple snapped the Owls six game winning streak, who had allowed just three goals in its last six outings, including their shutout of the Minutemen last weekend.

UMass and URI are tied for seventh place in the A-10 with two wins and two losses in the conference, while the Minutemen have a better overall record.

"It doesn't matter what your record is, because it's going to be a good game," Koch said. "All the games are end-to-end, no matter what and they had some unbelievable players back in 2007, so the rivalry has always been there."

The Rams are lead by a trio of scorers in midfielder Gary Crooks, forward Erkko Puranen and Greg Balicki.

Crooks leads URI with four goals with just 13 shots, including one assist, while Puranen and Balicki are tied for second with three goals and one assist. Besides these three, the Rams have seven players with one goal on their roster, which will pose another challenge for UMass.

Koch is familiar with Baliki's offensive talent, as he scored one of three goals, which proved to be the game winner against the Minutemen back in 2007 en route to a 3-1 win for URI on Oct. 27 of that year.

"It's a different group, but still, that rivalry is still there," Koch said. "The excitement of the conference and the winner of this game being in good shape will hopefully motivate us to play well."

While the Minutemen rely on their sturdy defensive play and consistent goalkeeping, UMass must keep URI at bay while generating offensive production, with or without DeSantis.

Notes

The last time the Rams visited Rudd Field was last season, in the UMass Invitational. The two teams did not face each other in the tournament.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Ducasse, Samuda provide crutch, Hernandez filling in for Nelson gotten hurt, and it's good to know that we have guys that are capable of stepping up and doing a good job."

OFFENSE from page 8

Providing stability to the line all season have been right tackle Brian Ostaszewski, left guard Josh Samuda and preseason All-American left tackle Vladimir Ducasse, all of whom have started all six games this season.

"The only thing to worry about is chemistry, [the] chemistry of the whole line," Ducasse said. "So whoever's in, whoever's out, we're just trying to keep that chemistry all around. We have no problems. Whoever gets in, they just play football."

Also expected to put hindrance on the UMass offense was the loss of last season's leading rusher, Tony Nelson. After rushing for 342 yards in the team's first three games, Nelson had only played in two of the last three games, gaining 35 yards while being mostly confined to the sideline with a thigh contusion.

In his absence, redshirt sophomore Jon Hernandez has handled the bulk of the carries, and the offense has hardly shown a difference. In his two starts this season, Hernandez has racked up 306 yards on 58 carries (5.3 yards per carry).

While Hernandez has earned the accolades over the team's recent success (UMass-New Hampshire game MVP and UMass/Dinn Bros. Athlete of the Week), the entire offensive unit has had a part in that success.

"Hernandez is a good running back, don't get me wrong," Chivers said. "A lot of it is just team effort running the ball, with the o-line, wide receivers, fullbacks, everybody has to do their part. It's not just the running backs, it's the whole team in the running game."

In addition to the success the team has had on the ground, UMass' passing game has hardly shown any weaknesses from the personnel changes up front. Through six games, quarterback Kyle Havens has been sacked just seven times and has passed for 1456 yards, nine touchdowns and nine interceptions.

Due to injuries, players like Brandon Flanagan (two starts at right guard) and Jfine (one start at right guard after starting at center) are making spot starts. The fact that the offense has not suffered a major blow is something that Morris says is something that his players have worked to accomplish.

"It's a great testament to the kids we have on the o-line. Doing a great job of being able to step up and put it all together in a one-game scenario," Morris said.

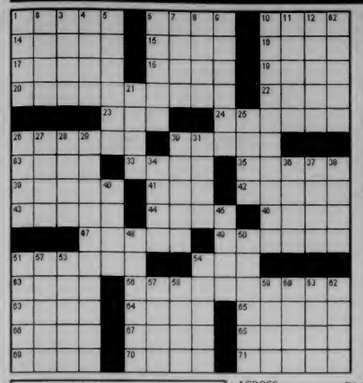
Focusing on the upcoming game and one's job has been one of the key factors for the entire offensive line unit.

"Everyone focuses on their assignments," Chivers said. "First, second and third team, they know they're important to this team and they have a responsibility to know their job and, when they're called on, we all have faith that they can get the job done."

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Junior midfielder Ben Arikian takes on a defender against Colgate this year. Arikian has helped his team generate more opportunities offensively, despite not having their main threat, Mark DeSantis.



The Daily Collegian asks, "Are you a SPORTS FAN?" THEN GO WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!

Contact Jeff Larnard at sports@dailycollegian.com

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Diminish
6. Shut a door forcefully
10. Hurt badly
14. What we're called
15. Possess
16. A type of hair style
17. Attempts
18. Not under
19. Objective
20. A type of cooking utensil
22. Bit
23. Religious sister
24. Sheen
26. Mortarboard attachment
30. Secret meeting
32. Elliptical
33. A Central American sloth
35. Wear away
39. Juliet's beau
41. President Lincoln
42. Challenged
43. A bird sound
44. But not quite all
46. Zingy taste
47. Someone who plays the bagpipe
49. Slender
51. Silicon dioxide
54. Sheep sound
55. Portent
56. Downplay
63. Walk through water
64. Impoverished
65. Temptress
66. They come from hens
67. Covet
68. Alter
69. Accomplishes
70. Anagram of "Leer"
71. Directs from the front

DOWN
1. Initial wager
2. Farm building
3. Dogfish
4. Move in large numbers
5. Ancient ascetic
6. Displayed
7. Magma
8. Affirm
9. And nothing more
10. Judge
11. In progress
12. Angered
13. Back tooth
21. Doozy
25. Utilized
26. Civil wrong
27. Affirm
28. Identical
29. Drowsiness
30. Small drum
31. Regrets
34. Anagram of "Mean"
36. Verbal
37. Depression
38. Border
40. Auditory
45. Russian emperor
48. A person who is very poor
50. Liegeman
51. Scattered seed
52. Insect stage
53. Shelf
54. Aquamarine
57. Not a single one
58. Bird of peace
59. An indefinite period
60. District
61. Be inclined
62. Concludes amherst cinema

Fri Oct 23 - Thu Oct 29
A SERIOUS MAN 2:30 4:45 7:30 10:00 +12:00pm Sat & Sun
Bright Star 2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30 +11:30am Sat & Sun
CAPITALISM: A LOVE STORY 1:45 4:15 7:15* 9:45 + 11:15am Sat & Sun *(NO 7:15 Thu)
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Oct 23 - Thu Oct 29
CAPITALISM: A LOVE STORY 4:30 7:00 9:30 +2:00 Sat & Sun
A NIGHT GET LOUD 5:00 9:15
AMREEKA 7:15 +3:00 Sat & Sun
ZERO HOUR FILM SERIES: Spider Labyrinth
Sat. Oct. 24 Midnight! Special Admission $3!
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

LA PIAZZA
Congratulations UMass student Nicole Webb, winner of one free medium pizza a week for the school year!
413.253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 10/22 DJs Yeah Guy & Hott Sizzle
Fri. 10/23 Special Guest DJ Hart-Beats has played in top-shelf venues such as Webster Hall and other various NY hot spot nightclubs. Spinning Top 40 Hip-Hop Electro Dance Mashups
Sat. 10/24 Johnnie McKnight's Party Past Midnight
Tues. 10/27 Techno Tuesday DJs Yeah Guy & Hott Sizzle
413-259-1600
63 North Pleasant Street Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

MIX TAPE THURSDAYS
HOSTED BY DJ VID KID
HIPHOP DANCE R&B MORE
EVERY WEEK DOWNSTAIRS AT AMHERST BREWING CO.
NO COVER - DRINK SPECIALS
BEST DANCE PARTY IN TOWN
21 PLUS

SUDOKU

	6	1			7
					9		8
				3	6		2
			5		2		3
8
	5	9		6				7
6	1	8		2			5
2	3		8					1

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
Sunraise printing
586-7133
YOUR 1 COLOR LOGO ON WHITE T-SHIRTS
$4.41 EACH 100 piece minimum SCREEN INCLUDED
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North qwantz.com

Wondermark by David Malki! wondermark.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends, From $89. Includes Hotel, Bus, and clubs. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

Words are cheap. The biggest thing you can say is 'elephant'.

-Charlie Chaplin

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro TRAVISDANDRO.COM

Hits Now 94.3 FM
The Valley's Hit Music Now in HD on 99.3 HD2
www.hits943.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Instant replay can't exist in baseball because it killed my mother.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Learn from George Clooney's mistakes. Even the sexiest man alive can catch an STD.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Like Manny Ramirez always says, personal hygiene is way more important than commitment.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
We think it's about time for someone to tell Disney that Apple owes them money for the "magic mouse."

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Maybe 2012 will be the year the fat lady finally sings.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Try out a new insult today: Calling your enemy a "suckling pig" will go a long way towards confusing him or her.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Thursday is Opposite Day. If you usually say, "this sucks," try saying that it blows, instead.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Have you ever truly taken a pot shot at someone? If not, this could be the day. HINT: Dick Cheney is still an easy target.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
No one likes you, and your life is completely worthless. In a good way!

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Today is a good day, and good days go well with good films. Check out "Man on Wire."

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
I wasn't originally a huge fan of the Southwest girls, but their North Faces are rubbing off on me.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Stop hitting yourself! Stop hitting yourself! Stop hitting yourself! Stop hitting yourself! Stop hitting yoursel-

MIKESMAZE DARWIN!

FOOD, FUN, SPUDZOOKAS!
Weekends & Holidays 10am-5pm thru Nov 1
S. Main Street Rt. 47 Sunderland
www.mikesmaze.com
413-665-8331

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTHURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen face National Champs

UMass seeks payback vs. No. 1 Spiders

JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Richmond traveled to Amherst last fall, they walked away with a 30-15 victory on its way to a Football Championship Subdivision National Title.

For the Massachusetts football team, it limped away with a snapped 16-game home winning streak, a spoiled homecoming and a torn MCL for defensive tackle Brandon Collier.

"I got hurt in that game last year, I tore my MCL and I've been waiting a year for this game, and they ruined our homecoming, so we owe them a lot," Collier said.

Despite it being a tall task to knock off the No. 1 team in the country and defending national champions, it's a challenge the No. 14 Minutemen are welcoming. It's also a challenge that gives UMass (4-2, 2-1 Colonial Athletic Association) a chance to return some favors when they face off in Richmond this Saturday at 3:30 p.m.

The Spiders (6-0, 4-0 CAA) are currently riding a 15-game winning streak that started with last years win over the Minutemen and has carried on through a run to a national title as well as a perfect start to their 2009 season.

UMass is also looking to find its first road win this year. In six games on the season, the Minutemen are a perfect 4-0 at home, yet are winless 0-2 away from Amherst. One of the losses came in the first

See COLLIER on page 6

MAXWELL SPARROW/COLLEGIAN

Quarterback Kyle Havens drops back for a pass against New Hampshire in last weekend's 23-17 homecoming victory. Havens and the rest of the Minutemen will look for another upset against No.1 and the defending national champions Richmond this weekend.

Offensive line key in success of run game

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite starting eight different players across the offensive line, including four at right guard, and losing its top running back to injury, the ground game for the No. 14 Massachusetts football team has not skipped a beat all season.

Through the team's first six games, the Minutemen have had four different combinations starting on the o-line. The team's offensive productivity, though, was unchanged by the shifts made up front, as the Minutemen (4-2, 2-1 Colonial Athletic Association) have averaged 149.7 yards rushing per game this season.

The line's continued success in the face of injury is a tribute to the team's depth, said UMass coach Kevin Morris, who has praised his team's ability to adapt to injuries all season.

"It's a matter of staying focused on the task at hand, even if you're not the starter and you're not getting the first team reps and you may not play on Saturday," Morris said of players stepping into bigger roles.

Coming into the season, the first team line was not established until late into fall practices. However, that parody at the top of the line has been a vital asset for the UMass offense, as a preseason injury to guard Stephane Milhim and an early season injury to center John Ihne

"That's one of the things we had this year was depth," said Jared Chivers, who has started at guard and center this season. "We didn't have too much last year. It's really helped out a lot this year. A couple guys have

See OFFENSE on page 6

MAXWELL SPARROW/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Mark Dangleis moves the ball upfield en route to a 3-0 Minutemen win earlier this season against Colgate. Dangleis has made a huge impact on both ends of the field, helping the offense score without Mark DeSantis while keeping other offenses at bay.

URI rolls into Rudd Saturday

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's soccer team and Rhode Island played the same opponents last weekend in the second week of Atlantic 10 play. While the Rams defeated both teams, the Minutemen came away with one win, and will look to keep their momentum rolling when they take on URI Saturday afternoon at Rudd Field.

"Teams play differently on different days," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "You have so many different elements in a team. Unfortunately, it's hard to make comparisons, because you never know."

The Minutemen (5-4-3, 2-2-0 A-10) are coming off a 2-0 victory over Saint Joseph's Sunday afternoon, as junior midfielder Stuart Amick and sophomore defender Andrew Henshaw scored two goals in the second half to give UMass the victory.

Before the win over the Hawks, UMass suffered two one goal double-overtime losses at the hands of Temple and Dayton.

Both Amick and Henshaw, along with junior midfielder Ben Arikian were affective in picking up the offensive load for the Minutemen against SJU, despite not having their strongest offensive threat. Senior forward Mark DeSantis sat out the past four games due to an undisclosed illness.

He returned to the team this week, and did light jogging with the team, but DeSantis is still out indefinitely. Koch expects to find more information on the forward's availability tomorrow.

See KOCH on page 6

Defense generating offensive opportunities for Koch and Co.

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's no secret that Massachusetts men's soccer coach Sam Koch spends most of his effort focusing on the defense.

His coaching style makes it possible for UMass (5-4-3, 2-2-0 Atlantic 10) to replace almost the entire backfield with new players or veterans who didn't see much time last season without compromising his area of emphasis. However, shutting out a team doesn't do a whole lot of good if the team isn't scoring.

The Minutemen run into a problem offensively without a go-to scorer who will lead the A-10 in goals. The closest UMass has to a primary scorer is senior Mark DeSantis, who has three goals on the season, but has been sick for the past two weeks

That leaves the defense with no choice but to take matters into its own hands, and recently, that's exactly what it has done

"Everybody has to do their part," Koch said. "Just because you play in the back doesn't mean you can't score goals. I'm happy the [defense scores] because we don't score a lot of goals. It doesn't matter who puts them in."

Out of seven players who have scored this season, four of them (Andrew Henshaw, Sam DeNormandie, Dominic Skrajewski and Stuart Amick) have experience in the backfield this season. One player who is nearly as valuable as junior Ben Arikian with his playmaking abilities is sophomore Mark Dangleis.

Dangleis is tied with Arikian with three assists on the season, all of which have come on timely goals. His first assist of the season came on Sept. 1 in a tie against then-No. 24 Boston University.

Dangleis, who at the time wasn't a starter, threw a flip throw-in to DeNormandie, who headed the ball in for his second career goal to put the Minutemen up early. He also contributed to the lone goal UMass scored in its win against Xavier.

More recently, in the 2-0 win over Saint Joseph's, he helped set up the Minutemen's second goal off a corner kick

The defense's contribution to the offense comes from set pieces. Dangleis takes a majority of the corner kicks and uses his flip throw-in to get the ball further down the field.

"It's just a different service into the box, and we have tall guys that can get [to] the other end of it," Dangleis said.

See DEFENSE on page 6

MAXWELL SPARROW/COLLEGIAN

Forward Chris Roswess goes up for a header against Colgate earlier this year. Roswess and the rest of the Minutemen host conference rival Rhode Island this weekend at Rudd Field.

the daily collegian

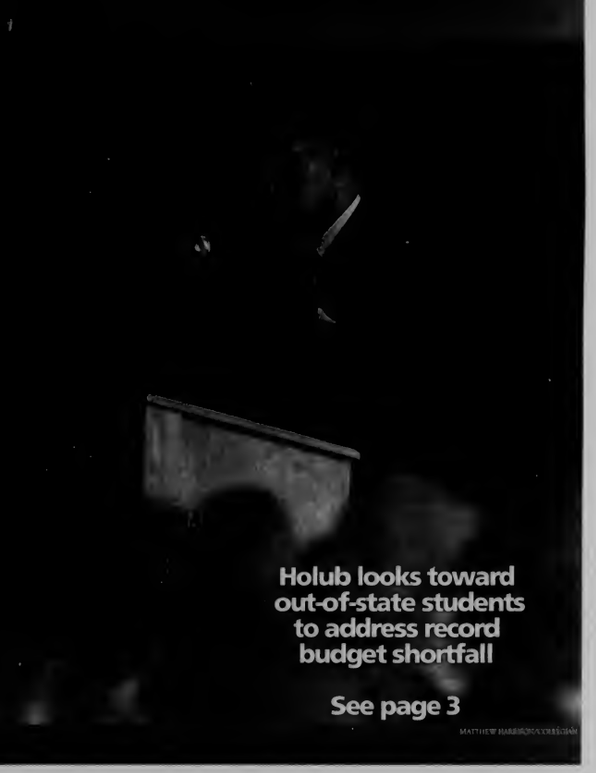
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM OCTOBER 23, 2009

inside this issue:

UM prepares for Maine

SEE PAGE 16

It's pumpkin time



SEE PAGE 6

Rabbits hop to Noho

SEE PAGE 7

Budget burden:

Holub looks toward out-of-state students to address record budget shortfall

See page 3

MATTHEW HARRIS/COLLEGIAN

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 32

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larhard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolneirz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Writs
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
KIRSTEN SWENSON / NICK BUSH

COPY EDITOR
HANNAH MCGOLDRICK

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

UM alumni give 'legal' advice

By Sam Hayes
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts College of Social and Behavioral Sciences held a networking session on Oct. 22 in Thompson Hall with five UMass Alumni now working in the field of law. Discussions with the lawyers sparked conversation about the prospect of UMass potentially acquiring the first public option law school in Mass.

"The five UMass graduates are diverse," said Director of External Affairs for Social and Behavioral Sciences Jackie Brousseau-Pereira. "They vary in age and field, the oldest graduating from UMass in 1968 and youngest in 2004, from criminal defense to environmental law."

All of the lawyers featured during the event graduated from the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences with majors ranging from economics to English.

Brousseau-Pereira was pleasantly under prepared for the level of attendance. Each lawyer spoke with a rotating group of about seven students each for approximately ten minutes.

Brousseau-Pereira compared the set up to speed dating. The lawyers gave their personal histories and then gave advice to the undergraduates.

1968 UMass graduate and Vietnam War veteran, Dwight Merriam attended the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Yale Law School before becoming a partner at Robinson and Cole in Hartford, Conn. as a land development and conservation lawyer.

Merriam told the students that when they enter law school they "will not be ready [to be lawyers]. [They] need to be ready to reengineer themselves."

Merriam also said that it is "never too early to network," but warned against "putting stupid things on Facebook and YouTube." He also joked that it was helpful to have a unique name.

Recent Cornell Law School graduate and 2004 UMass alumnus Carrie Payne said that being a junior partner in the Boston office of the enormous Greenburg Traurig law firm is "hard. Straight Hard. Just hard."

Fellow attorney and UMass graduate, Colin Keefe, class of 1990, echoed her sentiment saying, "[the law firm] is fiercely competitive."

Boston College School of Law and UMass class of 2001 graduate Michael Gove repeatedly said that the LSATs are important to get into law school and that the logic portion is "wicked hard." Next to Gove sat Senior Vice President and Assistant General Counsel of Sovereign Bank Denise Gaudet, UMass class of 1977. She discussed the difference between inhouse and outhouse law and how to best know a client.

All of these UMass graduates attended other schools for additional degrees because the UMass system does not have a law school. As recently mentioned in Peter Schworm's Oct. 19 article in "The Boston Globe," the "University of Massachusetts resumes plans for the state's first public law school at its Dartmouth campus." Under the proposed plan, the Southern New England School of Law would become the UMass law school.

"There is no circumstance under which UMass would acquire or purchase SNESL," said Robert Connolly of the office of UMass President Jack Wilson in an interview over e-mail. "President Wilson is now awaiting UMass Dartmouth's review of the situation and a potential proposal from UMass Dartmouth. If Chancellor MacCormack [the chancellor of UMass Dartmouth] does propose going forward, then the UMass President's Office would conduct a comprehensive review of the proposal, studying all of the relevant academic and financial questions."

Director of UMass' Pre-law Advising Diane Curtis was skeptical of the transaction. She explained it was complicated because there are already seven accredited colleges of law in Massachusetts, but no public option. She said the competition from the already established schools may be too much.

Curtis said it may take "a lot of investment to bring it to ABA [American Bar Association] standards." However, Connolly stated that "UMass Dartmouth would not divert funding from any other UMass campus, certainly UMass Amherst included."

A similar idea was proposed in 2004. The UMass Trustees voted to purchase SNESL, but the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education voted against the proposal under pressure from the private colleges in early 2005.

Sam Hayes can be reached at sdhayes@student.umass.edu.

Writers read in Amherst Books

By Tim Jones
Collegian Staff

A student and professor in the University of Massachusetts' Master of Fine Arts (M.F.A.) program presented readings from the literary magazine, "The New York Tyrant" at Amherst Books on Wednesday, Oct. 21 at 8 p.m.

The event took place as a celebration of the launch of Tyrant Books. Tyrant Books will be publishing works from authors such as Eugene Marten, Michael Kimball, Brian Evenson, Blake Butler, Jason Schwartz and Atticus Lish.

Rachel Glaser, who is a student in UMass' M.F.A. program, Noy Holland and Sam Michel presented a reading from "The New York Tyrant" at Amherst Books.

Rachel Glaser read a short story about the evolution of society and civilization since the first signs of life in time. Glaser has had works published in "The New York Tyrant," "Unsaid" and in other publications.

Additionally, other short stories by Glaser, such as ones entitled "The Totem's Are Grand," "Dream House," "The Sad Girlfriend," "Michael Jordan, in General" and "The Kid," can be found and read on Glaser's personal blog at http://rachelbglaser.blogspot.com/.

This summer, Glaser's first novel, titled "Pee on Water and Other Stones," will be published by Publishing Genius, a company that won the Best of Baltimore award in September 2009.

Noy Holland, a nominee for the National Book Award and 2003 National Endowment of the Arts fellowship award winner, read two literary works. One of the works was about a Spanish boy, who was blinded during pregnancy by the medication medical professionals used to save his mother's life. The other story chronicled a young boy's story about his desires to have mice and also, a woman's descent into depression and madness since that event.

Holland has written two collections of short fiction, "What Begins with Bird" and "The Spectacle of the Body." Holland is a professor in UMass' M.F.A. Program for writers and poets.

"It's really great to be part of a new literary magazine, one that is committed to emerging writers," said Holland. She is currently working on a couple of short stories and an upcoming novel.

Sam Michel, the husband of Noy Holland, read excerpts from a book of his, a story about a man who seldom leaves his beloved chair, and must do so to help a neighbor bury a dog. Michel has written two collections of short fiction, entitled "Under the Light" and "Big Dogs and Flyboys."

TIM JONES/COLLEGIAN

Literary artist Sam Michel reads exercpts from one of his books during Amherst Books event celebrating the launch of Tyrant Books.

"It feels welcoming to be part of 'The New York Tyrant.' It's difficult to find a place for your work," said Michel. He has won "The New York Tyrant's" annual Lidano Fiction Award. He is currently working on a new play.

The performance lasted around an hour, and the book store was at full capacity. Multiple readings took place at the same time."The New York Tyrant" is a literary magazine created in 2007 by Giancarlo DiTrapano, a former intern at FSG who sold his house in New Orleans to start a magazine. The magazine is based in Hell's Kitchen, Manhattan, N.Y., featuring a variety of short stories from many authors, both new and experienced, who share stories or offer insight into many topics.

The authors can be seen in "The New York Tyrant," and the seventh issue will be coming out soon.

Tim Jones can be reached at timothy@student.umass.edu.

Alyssa Creamer contributed to this article and can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

SAMANTHA WEBER/COLLEGIAN

Nature poet Wally Swist launches a screening of his biographical documentary "In Praise of the Earth: The Poetry of Wally Swist" about winters in Amherst.

Swist documents winter in Amherst

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

As part of a benefit for the Wistariahurst Museum of Holyoke, Mass., nature poet Wally Swist will screen his biographical documentary "In Praise of the Earth: The Poetry of Wally Swist" on Oct. 24, guiding viewers through the winters of Amherst.

Swist, who was born in New Haven, Conn., in 1953, has had his poetry appear in countless magazines and publications, has broadcasted his poetry on NPR and is considered a master of the haiku, according to Arabesques-editions.com, a website dedicated to culture and literature.

The film follows Swist's work as a nature poet. The University of Massachusetts' own Elizabeth Wilda directed and produced the film. Swist, who will be attending the event, will also be selling copies of his poetry, while Wilda will be selling copies of the film.

According to the film's promotion, written by Wilda, on Imdb.com, "The transcendent in nature and language are considered with poet, Wally Swist. Framing his work through the matrix of natural images, Swist leads viewers through the snowy woods of Amherst, Massachusetts. In our often frantic paced society, his poems invite listeners to slow down and think – a dangerous idea."

"I find the transcendent in nature; nature is healing," Swist said. "My work is informed by the nature world and mythology and spirituality, so nature is a huge key for me [in writing]."

Swist said that he has learned much from nature, claiming that it has informed the way he looks at life and therefore the way he writes.

"Most of my work has been written while outdoors, walking and hiking," Swist said.

When walking through the woods, Swist feels an almost religious experience.

"I feel a weight lifted off my shoulders when I hike in the woods," he said.

He added, "What that develops into is a loss of ego; we become one with what we see around us, whether it is running water or wind-blown leaves. We become open to the panorama around us and the depths of the natural world."

Swist had said that he has a few favorite local spots where he likes to hike.

"Mount Toby is one of my favorite spots," Swist said. "It provides a 360-degree panoramic view from the top near the fire tower. I have written a number of poems about the mountain."

While he said that another favorite place of his to walk is the area around the Hitchcock Center in Amherst, his all-time favorite place to hike is the White Mountains.

"I have really enjoyed the expanse and the ruggedness of the White Mountains," said Swist.

Being a nature poet, Swist said he is concerned about the disappearance of wild places.

"It's not just the polar ice caps," he said. "Nature is disappearing on us in rather salient and observable ways. Even in the towns we grew up in, we are losing green space."

Through his poetry, Swist said he hopes to make people realize the value of nature.

Hailing from New England, Swist said he enjoys what he calls "the richness of the four seasons."

Swist has a new book coming out on Nov. 28 about two famous New England poets.

The book is called "The Friendship of Two New England Poets: Robert Frost and Robert Francis."

"I refer to Robert Francis often as a secular saint," he said. "He befriended me the last two-and-a-half years of his life."

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

Holub debates cuts

By Cameron Ford
Collegian Staff

With the projected budget shortfall for the next fiscal year running into the tens of millions of dollars and little stimulus money left for buoyancy, University of Massachusetts Chancellor Robert C. Holub has set his sights on alternative sources of revenue.

During his address at the fifth annual Faculty Convocation on Oct. 2, Chancellor Holub outlined his plan for increasing revenue flow by reaching out to prospective students from outside the Massachusetts' state lines. Adding that he hoped to attract as many out-of-state students as possible because they pay more than double the tuition of Massachusetts state residents.

"Many state schools of lesser or equal quality are able to support themselves more fully on revenues received from out-of-state students," Holub said in the address.

He added, "There is no reason that we cannot do the same. We will not abandon our responsibility to students from Massachusetts; indeed, we will plan to keep the number of resident students at the same level. But if we are successful in attracting out-of-state undergraduates to Amherst, we will not only increase our geographical, cultural, and ethnic diversity, but also provide ourselves with a more secure funding base going forward."

In an interview this past week, Holub elaborated further on how the University will entice out-of-state students to campus.

"We are in the process of enlisting alums to help us recruit students from out-of-state, Holub said. "We are also offering small scholarships to entice them to enroll and are currently in the process of hiring someone to be our new enrollment manager."

In addition to the increased revenue that will stem from the increased enrollment of out-of-state students, Holub said that he hopes to achieve a more diverse community on the UMass campus.

"Compared to other public schools in the area, such as Connecticut, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island, UMass has one of the lowest percentages of out-of-state students," he said. "I think [the addition of out-of-state students] will present us with a more culturally and ethnically diverse campus. It's a win-win situation."

However, there is still a major challenge ahead in figuring out how to accommodate these students. With many students this year living in temporary housing in residence hall lounges and local hotel rooms due to lack of space, Holub said the University will have to rethink some of the previous housing restrictions in order to provide prospective students with housing.

"We already have a task force looking into additional housing for new students," he said. "In addition, starting next year, we will not compel second-year students to live on campus. Previously, we required them to live on campus, but now we will allow them to live elsewhere."

Cameron Ford can be reached at cjford@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

wants your R.S.O. to advertise with us!

Reach more than 18,000 readers every day!

IT'S CHEAPER THAN YOU THINK!

R.S.O. ads for $6.70 per column inch

Great ads. Great deals.

CONTACT NICOLE:
thecollegian@gmail.com
413-545-3500
or stop by our office in the Campus Center basement

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF." – SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Is health care really so different than education?

Chris Russell

Remember searching for colleges in high school? You probably weighed many options, likely a mix of public and private institutions, but settled on the University of Massachusetts because it provides a great value for a reasonable price.

You were undoubtedly appreciative that Massachusetts provided you with public options to choose from, as private colleges would bankrupt most lower and middle class families. You were never admonished as a "socialist" by family or friends for choosing this public option. Many probably lauded your decision as prudent and practical, especially in a time of financial uncertainty. Your friends who attend private colleges do not hate you for choosing UMass, as your publicly funded education is no threat to their private one.

Why should health care be so different from education? Why is the option of subsidized education applauded, while the option of subsidized health care is branded as "un-American?" Consider what the college search would be like if it resembled America's current health care system. The affluent would automatically attend elite institutions, no matter how much they needed or deserved the education, while low-income families and the elderly would be eligible for high-quality, government subsidized education.

The rest of the population would have it tougher. Middle class people without employer provided education would be limited to lower quality institutions, which would put severe restrictions on their education. For instance, these colleges would go to great lengths to drop students who developed serious physical or learning disabilities that made it costlier to provide them an education; making money would be the primary focus, not to educate the populace.

In the U.S., 46 million working poor and destitute individuals would be ineligible for higher education, as they could not afford private plans, and would for some reason be undeserving of the public option. Anyone with a pre-existing disability would also find it extremely hard to find quality education coverage in the first place.

Fortunately for college students, America's higher education system is slightly more enlightened than its health care system (in most of Europe, public colleges are free, but that's another story).

Unfortunately for the 46 million without health insurance, they live in America, one of the only modern countries that do not consider universal health care a moral imperative. The consequences of this embarrassingly low level of care? Every year, 45,000 people die from not having insurance. According to the American Journal of Public Health, this computes to about one death every 12 minutes.

The reasons Republicans give for opposing measures to save these lives is even more embarrassing. Meghan McCain, daughter of Republican Presidential candidate John McCain, said she didn't want America to "go bankrupt" over health care reform when she spoke at UMass recently. Republicans sure have strange priorities. Bush's tax cuts for the rich will cost $2.5 trillion from 2001 to 2010, according to the research advocacy group, Citizens for Tax Justice. Just 52.5 percent of the benefits will go to the richest five percent of taxpayers.

Apparently, McCain would rather enjoy a tax cut than save thousands of lives, considering the Congressional Budget Office projects it would cost $1 trillion to institute health care reform from 2010 to 2019. Give the girl a break. Growing up in eight homes makes one accustomed to a certain lifestyle, and if others are unable to emulate that lifestyle, then tough luck.

> Why should health care be so different from education?

"I don't know what's its like to be someone who has to go into the hospital and not have health care," she said during a recent talk at Bowker Auditorium. "I just am so concerned about the spending."

Yet, Republicans supported the necessary spending for two wars while simultaneously cutting taxes for the rich. Apparently, only Democratic presidents should be fiscally conservative, while Republicans are allowed to cut taxes for the wealthy and spend billions.

Republicans claim it would cost too much to save 45,000 lives a year. Yet, they spend more than twice that much making the rich richer and molding the world to fit America's will. Like I said, weird priorities.

Even with such hypocrisy, Republicans have high jacked the health care debate through fear mongering. Most Americans are happy with their health insurance, and thus are wary of any substantial reform, making it easy to attack the various proposals currently in Congress.

For example, on Oct. 8, Fox News' Sean Hannity criticized the proposed public option, which would cover almost all of the currently uninsured. "Everywhere socialized medicine has been tried, it's failed. It ends up in rationing … it ends up bankrupting the country," he claimed. Interesting analysis considering France, which has "socialized medicine," also has the world's best health care system, according to a 2000 report by the World Health Organization. America ranked 37th in quality of care, but still spent the most of any country.

Universal health care is not only morally obligatory, but a good investment. A public option would force private insurers to contain premium costs, which have increased 119 percent in the last decade.

Who should the government work for: businesses or the people? Public universities work for the people, as the government gives those unable to afford private colleges a chance to become entrepreneurs, doctors and teachers.

Education is not a commodity to be sold without regulation in the free market, but a right the government ensures a large part of. The government does not provide a similar assurance for health care – it would hurt "competition" – and thus works for the interest of insurance companies over the interests of the people. You live in a country where companies make money by dropping the health care coverage of sick people. Do you support that?

Chris Russell is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at crussell@student.umass.edu.

Ed/Op needs more opinion! Send us your letters.

editorial@ dailycollegian.com

UMass needs selectivity

Campus needs to pull in the best

Ben Moriarty

In past years – or maybe just because we live in Massachusetts – there has been a growing trend in the belief that many things in life are "rights."

These debated rights surpass the unalienable ones, which, according to our founding fathers and Declaration of Independence, are "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Most recently, the two "rights" that have come up in the public debate are health care and education. While it seems odd to say these are God-given "rights," both seem to be based on the track record of other developed countries and our country's great wealth.

Higher education is important, not just because it is crucial to attaining a job in this economy and generation, but because it improves society as a whole by having everyone more educated. Health care is important because I have a soft heart and I don't think many people truly believe someone shouldn't have some sort of coverage.

> If you have yet to notice, every single year here the competition is getting tougher and tougher, with each new class having higher GPAs and SAT scores than the last.

But I'm sick of the health care talks, and lately, there's been a lot of talk about UMass and fees and how this is going to limit people from being able to attend this University.

And then, most recently, Chancellor Holub announced that he wants to attract more out-of-staters to help with our budget.

The horror!

It's like Halloween mixed with April Fool's Day!

The problem and debate arising isn't that Massachusetts residents won't be able to attend here at all, but that we are a public university and not a private one. UMass has a responsibility to our state and our citizens to provide educational services for them.

This is a good thought, but it's still ignoring several very important points. One, we are not the only school, college or university in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts that is a "state school." There are, in fact, five different campuses in the UMass system, and in addition to those five, there are nine more state schools – Bridgewater State, Fitchburg State, Westfield State, Worcester State and so on. These are not bad schools.

The state has more than a dozen colleges. And we, here at UMass Amherst, attend the flagship. The responsibility we have – or really, I suppose Chancellor Holub has – is not some fartsy and glittered-up idealistic "Every resident can attend college, yippee!" goal. It is to improve the school and to bring it to a higher level. Recently, we made it onto U.S. News and World Report's Top National Universities, but that is no reason to not want to get to a level as say, University of Texas – Austin.

If you have yet to notice, every single year here the competition is getting tougher and tougher, with each new class having higher GPAs and SAT scores than the last.

Perhaps we are gaining more respect nationally and more people want to come. Perhaps it is because we offer a quality level of education at a cheaper price in these tough economic times to students here in Massachusetts.

Most presumably, it is a mixture of both, and it is the job of the University to continue this trend.

And what does that include?

It includes, for one, improving the campus (new recreational center, new integrated science building, new art building, re-doing the landscape), expanding (or retaining) a solid and distinguished faculty and attracting top students from around the country. Not just the exclusive Massachusetts club.

To keep gaining a more respected national reputation, it is imperative to attract out-of-staters as well as the best in-state students.

This isn't just about gaining more money from them, but seeing that students are willing to pay the extra tuition to come here and not attend their own state school.

The more out-of-staters, the more talk and the more people who will want to attend UMass Amherst. This will just improve entrance statistics.

Our campus is not a happy-go-lucky institution that should cater specifically and only to Massachusetts residents.

It is the flagship research campus of our state.

Our primary goal is to continually improve our educational institution for the future and to surpass other schools – both public and private – in stature, which, as we notice, is happening slowly and hopefully surely.

We should be getting stricter and stricter every year with who is accepted to the University, and this growth should never come behind some ideology about catering to ourselves.

It will only be through slow processes like attracting great out-of-state students that this can happen.

And, as the flagship school, we should be glad we have a chancellor who seems to realize this and wants to improve our national reputation.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

Parking: Hard on campus, but UMass has done it right

Matthew Robare

Driving on campus is horrible. For pedestrians, drivers are annoying, immature and seem like they're just waiting for the opportunity to run someone over. For drivers, pedestrians delay them up to five minutes at a time.

They walk out into the road without looking and seem to be trying to get run over so they can pay their fees with the insurance money.

The only thing they can agree on is a hatred of cyclists.

But even worse than driving on campus is the Lovecraftian nightmare of parking. Cthulhu himself couldn't have devised a better method of driving us mad, shattering our delusions about the nature of reality than parking services has.

> The main problem with the parking situation is that too many people have cars and want to bring them to campus.

Nevertheless, I believe that parking on campus is the best it can be.

There are three main factors at work with parking. The first is the scarcity of parking, the second is the cost of parking permits and the third is geography.

Scarcity, the principle of supply and demand, makes us realize that there is very little parking available on campus, but a very high demand for it. Unlike many goods, parking spaces cannot be mass produced.

Instead, if we want to increase the number of parking spaces, we need to build parking lots or parking garages, both of which can be costly. They also take up space, which is at a premium.The main problem is an economic one – we can flatten and pave over a large area for more parking spaces or we can build a new science lab or dormitory. In the long run, a useful building is more valuable than a parking lot.Not that parking lots are never expanded.

According to the parking services website, with the University Apartments finally being torn down, Lot 52 will be expanded for next semester.

This won't have much effect on demand, but hey, they're trying.

The cost of parking permits seems outrageous to many people. When my friend Thom went to get a permit for the first time, and was told they cost $300, he thought they were joking.

Undergraduate students bear the brunt of permit costs and parking scarcity.

The parking services fee chart shows that those freshmen, sophomores, juniors, seniors and even some graduate students are limited to green (commuter), purple (resident) and yellow lots for $310, $275 and $220, respectively. A lower-garage permit is $877. Members of the Graduate Employee Organization get much lower rates, as do resident staff. Permits are sold on a first-come-first-serve basis, with access to specific lots based on seniority and availability.

No one gets special treatment. Considering the demand for good parking and the fact that the permit prices are flat within their categories, parking services is very likely undercharging for permits.

This brings me to my next point: geography.

We have a big, hilly campus, much of which was used before the internal combustion engine was invented. In other words, this campus was originally designed for walking.

This is most apparent on North Pleasant Street.

If you were going to build it now, you'd want North Pleasant to be four lanes for cars and have skywalks for pedestrians. Central, Northeast, Orchard Hill and Sylvan Residential Areas are all built into the hillside, which limits the amount of space available for parking.

Hell, every time I'm on the Amity Shuttle bus and it makes that turn through Lot 49 to get to the Dickinson stop, I think the bus is going to overturn because it's so tight.

As a result of the cramped, hilly, tiny confines of campus, new parking lots have to be built far away.

The largest lots around are the ones across Massachusetts Avenue from the Haigis Mall, the ones across from Southwest and the ones on Commonwealth Avenue. Unsurprisingly, these lots are also the farthest from everything.

The main problem with the parking situation is that too many people have cars and want to bring them to campus.

Enough is enough.

Be honest with yourselves people. Most of you – especially those of you who live on campus – don't need cars right now. You can walk. You can carpool. You can even take the bus.

A car is a financial albatross. It just hangs around your neck losing value despite all the cash you pump into it. Not only that, between the extra gas you use dashing off to wherever and the gas that gets wasted in the inevitable traffic jam because everyone is driving at once, you contribute to global climate change.

Save your money, save the world and lose weight because of the extra walking you'll be doing. Leave the parking to the people who need it.

Oh, and get yourself a comfy pair of shoes.

Matt Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Sut's watching you...
He's studying you...
He knows your ways...

(MCT)

Pumpkins aren't just for decorations. The so-called "October Squash" can be also used as food, beer or a projectile weapon.

It's time for some pumkin' pickin'

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

Pumpkins are an odd phenomenon in our society. Although nearly every other squash and gourd in their family is considered ugly and relegated to seasonal side dishes, during the month of October, the lowly pumpkin becomes the star of the show.

As one of the iconic symbols of autumn in this country and especially in New England, where it fits in perfectly with the famous hues of our fall foliage, the pumpkin is quite beloved. But has anyone ever stopped to wonder why?

Many believe that the pumpkin's popularity lies in its best-known fall usage, the jack-o-lantern, which can trace its origins to an ancient Irish tradition of carving lanterns out of vegetables. When the tradition was imported to North America, it was associated with the harvest, not Halloween in particular, but as time went on, the ghoulish gourd carvings that we all know and love became a staple of All-Hallows Eve.

Pumpkin picking, although less popular than apple picking, has always been a rural tradition in the Northeastern part of the United States. While it is true that the practice has declined in popularity since the days of Charlie Brown and The Great Pumpkin, it has experienced a resurgence in recent years and is fairly easy to find orchards in Western Massachusetts. McCray's Farm in South Hadley, for example, offers hayrides to and from their pumpkin patches, and is open daily throughout the season.

Carving faces and planting candles in the big orange squash may be its most popular and iconic use, but it is far from being the only one. Throughout the U.S., a peculiar tradition has arisen which combines farming with engineering and has created an entirely new application for the classic gourd. Dubbed "Punkin' chunkin'" by its participants, the sport of pumpkin launching involves the construction of various mechanisms – ranging from simple slingshots to wooden trebuchets to massive pneumatic cannons – were designed to launch the orange veggies as far as humanly possible. Even the pumpkins themselves are specially designed, with many championship "chunkers" claiming to breed the most durable and aerodynamic squash on the market. The world record for chunkin' distance is recorded at nearly 1,500 yards.

Pumpkins, due to their thick flesh and unique autumnal flavor, have found their way into a variety of different culinary traditions, not just in North America but throughout the world. Soups, pies and cakes are the standard fall favorites, but new concoctions such as pumpkin ice cream, muffins, chips and even beer have hit the market in recent years to great success. Dogfish Head Brewers in particular has a spicy and delicious Pumpkin Ale which is sure to satisfy anyone with a craving for hops and squash.

Pumpkin seeds have a culinary tradition of their own, as they can be spiced and roasted as an autumn substitute for salty sunflower seeds. In addition, their oil is of a particularly potent variety, and is widely used in Central and Eastern European cooking as a flavoring additive.

For those who are interested in doing a little bit of baking themselves, pumpkin pie can be difficult to master but impressive for big events. For something a little bit simpler but every bit as good, try the following recipe for a delicious pastry with just the right amount of pumpkin:

Mrs. Sheridan's World-Famous Chocolate Chip Pumpkin Bread
(Makes two large loaves)

Mix:
4 eggs
2 cups pumpkin
1 cups oil
2/3 cups cold water

Combine the following:
3 1/4 cups flour
3 cups sugar
2 teaspoons baking soda
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon nutmeg

Add to pumpkin mixture and mix. Add one cup of chocolate chips and mix by hand.

Bake in an oven at 350 degrees for 1 hour in greased pans. Cool and wrap in waxed paper and foil.

So next time you see the giant orange gourd on a doorstep or in a store, remember that it is more than a jack-o-lantern waiting to happen. Pumpkins can be tasty treats, spicy ales or deadly projectiles. They are a symbol of the season, and they are everywhere.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asher1@student.umass.edu

SUNDAY

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

JAY-Z

HOVA WILL BRING HIS FALL TOUR TO THE MULLINS CENTER THIS SUNDAY NIGHT. N.E.R.D., WALE, AND J. COLE WILL BE THE OPENING ACTS.

VENUE: MULLINS CENTER
DOORS: 8:00 P.M.
PRICE: SOLD OUT

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

MUM

IF YOU WEREN'T ABLE TO GET JAY-Z TIX BUT WANT TO SEE A COOL SHOW, CHECK OUT ICELANDIC ROCK BAND MUM IN NOHO.

VENUE: IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
DOORS: 8:30 P.M.
PRICE: A: $22.50 – D: $25

White Rabbits hop into Northampton

By Dave Mansfield
Collegian Correspondent

White Rabbits shook The Basement to its core on Tuesday night, giving the fervent crowd an intensely energetic performance free of charge. After their planned show at Pearl Street in Northampton was cancelled, White Rabbits, along with opener SquillMerchants, headed over to the tiny venue a couple blocks over and played a set that justified their reputation as a great live act.

The Basement, which could not be more appropriately named, is a small, dimly lit, intimate bar on Center Street with red brick walls and only a handful of tables and chairs. At first, the crowd seemingly consisted solely of the band members and their friends.

The crowd eventually began to leak in, as opening act SquillMerchants completed their final tune ups and sound checks. The little-known five piece act turned out a bold, enthusiastic performance that served as a more-than-admirable warm-up to the headliner. With an edgy sound that bordered on experimental, SquillMerchants were able to set the tone and bring the crowd to their feet. Although he shouted more than he sang, their front man charmed onlookers with his vibrant enthusiasm, thanking them for showing up and telling everyone that, "There's no better way to spend a Tuesday night!"

White Rabbits took the stage and wasted no time in bringing out the big guns as they opened with "Rudie Fails," off of their latest release "It's Frightening." Front man Stephen Patterson pounded away on his small wooden piano, bellowing out, "I don't care at all!" in a performance that could be characterized as anything but careless. Percussionists Matthew Clark and Jamie Levinson pounded away at their drums with such ferocious force that it seemed as though they might break their instruments.

The crowd, arranged in a semi-circle, drew closer in, the closest among them only about a foot from Patterson and guitarist Greg Roberts. As if two drummers weren't enough, bassist Brian Betancourt moved over to the tenor drums for the next number, as Clark took the maracas.

As expected, the White Rabbit's percussive sound was the focal point of their set. When seen live, Clark and Levinson really add a shot of adrenaline into their performance that can't always be heard on the record. Although rhythmically it all sounded about the same, their persistent drumming always fit the song and kept the music and crowd moving alike.

Switching gears a bit, Patterson's virtuosity was featured more on "They've Done Wrong/ We've Done Wrong". Getting as much sound as possible out of his tiny piano, Patterson soloed over Betancourt's emphatic bass line in a captivating extended outro. Levinson and Clark took a bit of a backseat during this number, as they clicked away on the rims in rapid fashion.

The six-piece ensemble arrived at their darkest point of the performance with "Right Where They Left". Patterson spoke of "houses burning down" as he displayed an eerie, almost harrowing side to his vocals that showed just how well-rounded a vocalist he is. The rest of the band chimed in with tribal sounding yells and a deep, minor sounding chord progression that was hypnotic in quality.

White Rabbits brought things back into a state of cheery familiarity with their debut single "The Plot" from their first album, "Fort Knightly." A catchy, repetitive number, "The Plot" was slightly similar to "The Bloc Party."

After playing much of their set thus far without breaking, White Rabbits took a quick recess before the stretch run. In a true act of class, the band members all took shots and toasted the crowd for showing up to hear them play on such short notice.

After playing a couple more selections from "It's Frightening," they ended with their single "Percussion Gun," which proved to be the perfect closer to a truly percussion laden performance. The crowd displayed their gratitude, giving them a resounding ovation amid fervent shouts of "Thank you for playing!"

The fact that they turned in such a performance for free proves that they are genuine artists with a true love for their profession.

Dave Mansfield can be reached dmansfie@student.umass.edu

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

After canceling a show at Pearl Street, the White Rabbits moved to The Basement in Northampton, Mass. and played a free show for their fans.

New chapter of 'Mario & Luigi' more of the same

(MCT)

"Mario & Luigi: Bowser's Inside Story" brings nothing new to the table for fans of the classic video game adventure series.

By Billy O'Keefe
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

"Mario & Luigi: Bowser's Inside Story" is, in a few words, a whole lot more of the same stuff that comprised the first two "Mario & Luigi" games.

And that, frankly, is perfectly fine. AlphaDream's "Mario & Luigi" games are practically a genre unto themselves with the way they infuse traditional role-playing game conventions with an extensively satisfying element of action, and it's hard to object to another chapter of what has emerged as the funniest and smartest piece of storytelling ever to emerge from Nintendo's extensive library.

The basic crux of "Story" should ring familiar to "Mario & Luigi" vets. You control Mario and Luigi at the same time, and most of the action outside of battle consists of helping the brothers get from story point to story point through a mix of puzzle solving and traditional "Super Mario"-style platforming.

The game's battle system obeys the same rules as a traditional turn-based role-playing game, but most of the attacks, dodges and counterattacks play out in real time like a traditional action game. Every enemy has a tell, and every attack — be it the classic jump attack or a tag-team maneuver involving both brothers — has an extra measure of effectiveness if you time its execution perfectly. Figuring the ins and outs of all this stuff is, once again, a ton of fun.

"Story," for its part, raises the series bar in both the gameplay and storytelling departments by giving the brothers' arch nemesis a share of the starring role. Bowser exists in two forms — as a third playable character and, as the title implies and the blissfully absurd story explains, a living dungeon — and both roles inject the game with far more freshness than appearances would otherwise suggest.

For starters, Bowser has his own bull-in-china-shop style of getting around, which lends new dimensions to the action that plays out between battles. His brutish fighting style naturally gives way to a wholly unique set of combat tactics, including some brilliant touch screen tricks in which he can mobilize Goombas and other minions to do his bidding. The trajectory of the storyline has the brothers working in tandem with Bowser, and the game comes up with some pretty clever ways (no spoilers) to have them work together despite being at odds and in wholly different places and predicaments.

But Bowser's most memorable contribution to "Story" may be to its story, which ranks among the sharpest and most infectiously funny sagas to grace a game all year. "Mario & Luigi" games have never been hurting for great characters and fantastic dialogue, but Bowser's crabby, perennially confused but deliriously proud turn here is pure gold from start to finish. "Story" occasionally gets a little too wordy for its own good — especially when it comes to detailing the game's basics to players who already know what to do — but when there's so much good stuff to experience, a few dry bits are more than acceptable.

'New Moon' soundtrack fails to dazzle

New CD makes fans' ears bleed

KATE MACDONALD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

With the second installation of the Twilight Saga and "New Moon" coming to theaters in just under a month, teens and self-proclaimed "Twi-hards" alike need some sort of relief. They will find it with the new release of music director Alexandra Patsavas' compilation. Followers of this melancholy sequel will be able to place most of these angst-ridden tunes into their probable book scene settings easily. While the soundtrack is entertaining, monotony and predictability will prevent this anthology from being a lasting hit. Below I break down each track, one by one:

"Meet Me On The Equinox" – Death Cab for Cutie – "Meet Me" is a fairly decent track which is too similar to other Death Cab songs to be truly memorable. Anyone who has read the book will find the lyrics deep and fitting. For everyone else, the song educates on astronomy and provides an unexpectedly beautiful bridge.

"Friends" – Band of Skulls – "Friends" is a great follow up to this underappreciated band's debut underground hit "I Know What I Am," and provides similar repetitious guitar and baselines. It's mediocre musically but great lyrically. Catchy, but not in an annoying bubblegum-pop sort of way.

"Hearing Damage" – Thom Yorke – The musical genius of Radiohead frontman Yorke is a great addition, lending a track with the electronica of Radiohead's last album. It has the potential to be a hit.

"Possibility" – Lykke Li – This tune, which one could mistake easily for any other Bjork track, probably fits the movie well. That being said, it's probably not worth a second listen.

"A White Demon Love Song" – The Killers – This track sounds like it belongs in a different decade, reminiscent of Pink Floyd's "Dark Side of the Moon" in its verses, but bringing the listener crashing back to the 21st Century with the oomph of the drums and bass. It's a good song about lackadaisical love.

"Satellite Heart" – Anya Marina – The second acoustic song on this album features decent lyrics. It's not too remarkable, but it's probably the best acoustic track on the album.

"I Belong To You (New Moon Remix)" Muse – Without a doubt the most disappointing song on the album. Anyone who's heard Muse will know that this sounds nothing like them. After the use of mega-hit "Supermassive Black Hole" on the "Twilight" soundtrack, this can't compare. Muse's new single, "Uprising," would have been such a better addition. Considering that author Stephanie Meyer attributed much of her writing to this British band, this was a bad choice.

"Roslyn" – Bon Iver & St. Vincent – Unremarkable at best. It's a high-pitched folk ballad with a slightly haunting cello, but it is simply hard to follow.

"Done All Wrong" – Black Rebel Motorcycle Club – A surprising relief in the middle of the soundtrack. The lithe sounds of the female accompaniment adds an appropriate, ethereal tone to the tune.

"Monsters" – Hurricane Bells – "Monsters" is a catchy toe-tapper that is a cross between The Killers and Interpol. A virtually non-existent chorus takes away from the song, but it's salvaged by a powerful mid-track guitar solo.

"The Violent Hour" – Sea Bells – More fitting for an indie romantic comedy than a dark vampire flick, this song is way too happy-go-lucky to fit in with the depressing tone the film will adopt because of Bella's lost love.

"Shooting The Moon" – Ok Go – Anyone expecting the same happy Ok Go from their last album will be disappointed. They've clearly matured musically, and not in a bad way. The song is an unexpected soft-rock hit.

"Slow Life" – Grizzly Bear – Hands down the best, most appropriate song on the soundtrack. A seemingly acoustic song becomes robust thanks to a grating guitar riff and pounding beat. If this track is any indication, Grizzly Bear will be on to bigger and better things in the near future.

"No Sound But The Wind" – Editors – The last of the acoustic tracks, singer Tom Smith pleads and toys with the emotions of the listener, reminding us that Bella will face some emotional upheaval in the new movie. Great song.

"New Moon (The Meadow)" – Alexandre Desplat – This instrumental is no Debussy, but not bad as far as modern pieces go. It definitely leaves something to be desired. Carter Burwell's piece from the first of the saga's movies was much more fitting. A tangible sense of finality at the end of the song provides an appropriate end to the soundtrack.

Overall, "Twilight Saga: New Moon Soundtrack" was decent, but the last soundtrack was simply better. There was a polarization of songs; it's either boring, lilting acoustic or fierce indie-rock songs, which just gives one a sense that the music director is trying too hard to connect with a younger audience. Yes, there were a few gems, but it would be beneficial to rehire the original music director for the two remaining movies if they want to compete seriously with other legendary soundtracks.

Here's hoping the next Summit production, "New Moon" itself, is a little better than this decent compilation, or this reviewer predicts riots at malls and middle schools nationwide.

Kate MacDonald can be reached at kaitlynm@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY LOVEHRROWSER.COM

The soundtrack to the second installment of the "Twilight" series is directed more towards a younger audience, and therefore, is not very appealing to the majority.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)

◆ CLOUDY WITH A CHANCE OF MEATBALLS - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE)
[PG] 200 425 645 900
◆ AMELIA [PG] 100 410 720 1000
◆ ASTRO BOY [PG] 130 400 630 850
◆ CIRQUE DU FREAK: THE VAMPIRE'S ASSISTANT [PG13] 145 420 730 1015
◆ SAW VI [R] Ⓓ 120 230 340 450 600 710 820 930 1040
◆ LAW ABIDING CITIZEN [R] Ⓓ 135 415 725 1010
◆ THE STEPFATHER [PG13] 150 435 750 1020
◆ WHERE THE WILD THINGS ARE [PG] 105 430 705 935
COUPLES RETREAT [PG13] 140 420 700 940
PARANORMAL ACTIVITY [R] Ⓓ 155 440 745 1005
ZOMBIELAND [R] Ⓓ 205 445 740 1025
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

UM opens season against Holy Cross

BY GEENA LOMBARDI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the first time in Massachusetts history, the women's club hockey team will face off against Holy Cross on Oct. 24. The matchup will occur on the Crusader's home turf in Worcester, MA.

This Saturday's game will be the first time a majority of the Minutewomen will get their first minutes on the ice in a competitive hockey game.

Sophomore Ashley White, a transfer student, will be starting her first UMass game in the right wing position.

White described her feelings for the upcoming game as "nervous and excited," but she thinks the team is prepared for this challenge.

Holy Cross is a member of the Eastern College Athletic Conference, so this game, win or lose, will not affect the Minutewomen's overall standings since it is a non-conference game. UMass will face Penn State the following week who plays in the American Collegiate Hockey Association along with UMass. The game will give the Minutewomen their first mark on its record.

However, this does not mean the game will be taken lightly or serve less of a purpose. UMass coach Chris Cobb believes this is the perfect opportunity to see how his team, with its addition of 13 new players will work together when faced with such a high caliber opponent.

"This is a good chance to get out there before facing Penn State on Oct. 30," Cobb said. "My expectation for my team is to get out there and experience its first hockey game."

Kyle Mack, a senior and member for four years, is more than ready to see this team, which she believes has the ability to have a successful season, come together as a whole while on the ice.

"I'm pretty excited and I know the team is eager to play," Mack said. "We're going out there with a 100 percent positive outlook".

Cobb knows that Holy Cross (24-2-1, 2008) will be a tough opponent to keep up with, mainly because of its speed. In order to prepare for the game, practice consisted of a lot of system work, along with allowing his team to play five-on-five to simulate a real-time game.

He feels more than ready to face the Crusader's, due to his team's depth and four strong lines.

"Holy Cross has a short bench, they only have three lines," Cobb said. "We'll have to fine-tune our systems and they do have good goaltending".

Despite the loss of some key players, such as Maura Grainger, recipient of the ACHA Zoe M. Harris National Player of the Year Award at the end of the 2009 season, leadership is not lacking. Cobb recognizes Captain Hayley Kuhn for stepping up as one of the Minutewomens leaders in the past weeks.

"She has developed into a great leader and has helped the team come together as one," Cobb said.

Assistant captains Sam Mack and Catherine O'Brien also helped to welcome and bring together this young team.

The 2009-10 Minutewomen have a big role to play after last year's successful 16-7-2-1 season. Along with a solid record, UMass finished second in the ECWHL. Despite his success with UMass, Cobb's attitude towards the game remains level-headed and team-oriented.

"Success starts with leadership in the locker room, which we have achieved," he said. "I feel very prepared and take this as a good opportunity to see where we need to get better."

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu

COURTESY WOMEN'S CLUB HOCKEY TEAM

The Minutewomen celebrate after scoring a goal against Lindenwood in the quarterfinals. UMass plays its first game of the season on Saturday against Holy Cross.

UMass defeats Rhode Island after strong half

BY DANIEL GIGLIOTTI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A strong second half propelled the Massachusetts club rugby team to a win against Rhode Island and a top seed in the New England Rugby Football Union playoffs. The Minutemen have little time to celebrate, however, as they jump into playoff action this Saturday against Bentley.

UMass (5-1) was persistent in its attack, fending off a pesky URI team, 32-12, to secure the best record in the Men's Division II standings.

Overall, The Minutemen managed the game well, although URI (4-2) stayed right with them during the first half.

"It takes time to figure it out," Coach Al Baker said. "[We] needed to calm down after the first."

The Minutemen started off the scoring in the first half by taking a 7-0 lead and kept control of the ball. But about 25 minutes into the half, URI found an opening in the UMass attack and ran off to a breakaway that eventually led to a game-tying try.

UMass put the pressure right back on the Rams before halftime with another try of its own and after 40 minutes, the score showed UMass up, 12-7.

Coming out of the break, the Minutemen made noticeable adjustments. Understanding of the strategies URI took in the opening frame, they realigned and their game plan began to take its course. Baker alluded to a certain "feel" that comes with knowing how the other team is playing.

"It's like full contact chess," Baker said. "If any parts of your game don't work, they will get exposed to the other team; they will take advantage of it."

The Minutemen heeded the words of their coach coming out of the mid-game huddle and stormed the pitch with full force. A quick penalty kick by Clark Hoopes put three points on the board and a try shortly thereafter pushed the lead out to double digits at 22-7.

A Rams try about mid-way through the second half indicated that the game was still anybody's to win.

Holding a big lead, UMass began to get a bit anxious, throwing errant passes and mishandling the ball. From the sideline, Baker urged his players to settle down.

The Minutemen regained composure and pulled away with the ball. A second penalty kick conversion and a try gave UMass a 25-12 lead that it held for the remainder of the game. The play continued to be very physical as time wound down, but the Minutemen did not relent.

As the final whistle blew, the players in maroon and white stripes congratulated one another, experiencing a foreign feeling of success. No UMass player had been part of a winning season, and Baker encouraged his team to relish in the satisfaction of their accomplishment.

Baker credited powerful play by his forwards as well as the depth of his team for its success.

"We're able to change our strategies. There's a lot in our arsenal," Baker said.

UMass rugby had been in a state of turmoil for the past five years. Since 2004, it won three conference games including winless seasons from 2005-2007. Following the 2006 season, the Minutemen were relegated from Division I to Division II in the NERFU. At the start of the season, Baker said his goal was to bring the team back up to Division I.

UMass will have to continue its focus this Saturday if it wants to achieve its ultimate objective as it takes on a competitive Bentley College squad. Bentley is an experienced program that has a tradition of winning in recent years. Conversely to UMass, Bentley moved up in Divisions following consecutive National Championships in 2005 and 2006. Since the Falcons have played in Division II, they have gone 6-4.

Bentley moves into the playoffs with a 3-1-2 record, good for 4th on the overall division leader board after finishing second to Boston University in the Eastern Conference.

The Falcons will travel into Amherst this weekend, as the Minutemen enjoy home-field advantage throughout the playoffs. The Division II playoffs include eight teams, four of which will get a chance to play in the Northeast regional tournament. The winner of Saturday's match will face either Norwich Academy or Boston University in the semifinals next Saturday.

Daniel Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

HERBALIFE
Fun Part Time Work for College Students!
Be a Wellness Coach!
Host a Shake Party!
Full Training Included Call Zac 800-919-4922

Minutemen travel to West Point

UMass looking to continue success this weekend vs. Army

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts swimming and diving teams travel to West Point, New York this weekend to compete in a dual meet against Army.

The Minutemen are coming off a victory against a strong Boston University program last weekend, and hope to carry that momentum in their next matchup.

UMass edged the Terriers by a score of 153-147 in front of a spirited home crowd. It did so by winning the last event of the day, the 200 yard freestyle.

Before the season started, UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth felt confident of this weekend's race versus Army.

"We beat them last year so we know that they are going to be locked and loaded for us," Yarworth said.

The Minutemen played at home last year but will now meet BU at Crandall pool. Both teams put together strong performances and emerged victorious against a strong Army program.

It marked the first time that the Minutemen defeated Army, as they won 12-of-16 events to outscore them 174-126. The team received strong efforts from Jason Cooke who won all three diving events.

The Minutewomen also had a dominant performance in last year's meet in which they took 14-of-16 events won, 187-94.

Senior co-captain Elizabeth Walsh was one Minutewomen who turned in a strong performance in last year's meet, placing first in two events. With a time of 1:50.01 she finished first in the 100-yard backstroke. She followed up that win with a 2:10.03 in the 200-yard backstroke, which earned her first place.

The Minutewomen hope to rebound after opening the season with a loss against Boston University. Before the start of the season, UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb expressed his eagerness to see how his freshmen would perform in last week's opener.

Freshman Amina Meho from Burlington, Mass responded well as she placed first in the 100-yard freestyle. Freshman Molly Ekins opened up her collegiate diving career with third place performance behind teammate Hannah Swift, in the 1-yard diving competition.

This weekend, however will mark the team's first race of the season in unfamiliar territory. It has been training in John Rodgers Pool since the beginning of the year.

Army is coming off a strong showing in the Syracuse Invitational last Friday. Although the race was a non-scoring event, the team received many solid performances including one from Lindsey Adao that earned her the award of Patriot League Diver of the week.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached via email at jengmann@student.umass.edu

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

UMass looks to build on its early season success as it takes on Army. The Minutemen defeated Boston University last week, 153-147.

Hamels getting another chance

By Ray Parrillo
The Philadelphia Inquirer

PHILADELPHIA — A year ago, the Phillies followed Cole Hamels into the World Series and on to the championship.

So far this postseason, Hamels is mostly along for the ride, still searching for whatever it was that earned him the MVP awards in both the 2008 NL Championship series and World Series. It's a search that's been season-long.

"It's tough," Hamels said. "I made a few mistakes early and gave up those runs."

More than likely, Hamels will be the Game 2 starter against either the Yankees or Angels next Thursday. Manager Charlie Manuel doesn't give up easily on struggling players who have produced on the big stage in the past, and the concern over Hamels was pretty low on the to-do list Wednesday night as the Phillies showered one another with champagne after winning the NL Championship Series for the second straight year — a first in club history.

Yet as the postseason evolves, it's become clear there appears to be a big drop-off between the current ace, Cliff Lee, and the former ace, Hamels.

Hamels gave up three home runs in the Phillies' pennant-clinching 10-4 win over the Dodgers on Wednesday night at Citizens Bank Park, and the best that can be said about it all is there were no Dodgers on base during each of them.

Even though Jayson Werth eased the pressure on Hamels when he ripped a three-run homer in the first inning to give the Phillies a 3-1 lead, the 25-year-old lefthander never took control of the game.

He was pulled in the fifth inning after Rafael Furcal doubled following Orlando Hudson's pinch-hit homer.

Afterward, Manuel listed the reasons why he removed Hamels. He didn't have command of his pitches. He didn't have good stuff. His pitch count was high.

"Cole already had like 87, 90 pitches, and I was sitting there thinking he didn't have real good command. He didn't have real good stuff," Manuel said. "They were swinging good at him, and we got to a point in the game, especially when we had (J.A.) Happ ready, I was thinking where I wanted to use him. (pitching coach Rich) Dubee said he's ready. I felt like before (Andre) Ethier came up I wanted to put Happ on (Rafael) Belliard. That was my decision to go get him."

So in three postseason starts, Hamels is 1-1 with one no-decision. He has allowed 11 runs and 20 hits in 14 2/3 innings for a 6.75 ERA, numbers that should give Manuel and Dubee pause when they set up the rotation for the World Series.

It was Hamels' failure to keep both his fastball and change-up down that led to his short night. On the first of the three solo homers Hamels gave up, Ethier fouled off four consecutive fastballs after falling behind in the count at 1-2. Those four fastballs had more sizzle than the one Ethier put into the seats in right center to give the Dodgers their first run.

Jayson Werth and Ryan Howard congratulate each other during the American League Championship series. The Philadelphia Phillies are now in the World Series.

UM heads to Ohio for weekend tilt

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

Midfielder Meredith Fox tries to get away from a Providence defender during the season home-opener. The Minutewomen head to Ohio for games against Xavier and Dayton.

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team hits the road this weekend to Xavier play and undefeated Dayton aiming for one last late season surge.

The Minutewomen currently sit at ninth in the Atlantic 10 and improved their conference record to 3-4-0 after defeating Rhode Island, 3-2, last weekend. They trail Saint Joseph's, La Salle and Richmond in the hunt for the coveted sixth seed in the conference tournament.

"If we finish strong we have a good shot [at making the A-10 tournament]," Napoli said. "Of our last four games, we have a shot at winning three of them...but with the A-10, you never know what to expect."

UMass continued its strong second half play en route to defeating Rhode Island. The Minutewomen outscored the Rams 2-1 after halftime, with the definitive blow being dealt by junior Therese Smith in the 86th minute. However, senior Cristina Adams boosted them to victory with her first two goals of the season. She is now one goal shy of tying her career-high mark of three that she set as a sophomore.

In their match ups against Rhode Island and Fordham, the Minutewomen have scored more goals (five) than during any other two-game stretch this season. Adams' contributions are also a strong sign for UMass, as the team's offense had been made up mostly of Smith and redshirt junior Sydney Stoll.

"It takes stress off of Smith and Stoll," UMass coach Angela Napoli said. "It makes other teams focus on other players. Hopefully now we can stretch the defense."

Prior to Adams' score at the 26 minute, five second mark at Rhode Island, Smith and Stoll accounted for seven of the team's nine goals. She earned A-10 Co-Player of the Week for her effort.

Goalkeeper Emily Cota also had a solid showing against the Rams. The freshman bounced back from four consecutive shaky outings with two goals and eight saves. She should have confidence heading into tonight's match up against a weak Musketeer offense.

Xavier (2-13-1, 1-6-1) is riding a five game losing streak and is the only team in the A-10 to score fewer goals than UMass this season. The Musketeers have notched six goals on the season, half the total of the Minutewomen. Senior Brittany Green and redshirt freshman Leslie Boersma are tied for the team lead at two goals apiece, with Green also tallying an assist to lead the team in points (five).

Junior Carly Wenzel and freshman Susie Pauley combine for Xavier's other two goals. Wenzel also leads the team with two assists, with junior Justine Hartigan contributing the last of the team's four assists.

On Sunday, UMass will face arguably its toughest test of the season when it travels to Ohio to take on undefeated Dayton. The Flyers (10-0-5, 6-0-1) are one of two undefeated teams left in Division 1, with the other being top-ranked Stanford.

The Flyers' balanced offensive attack, which is second to Charlotte in the A-10 with 30 goals, is led by senior trio of Lauren MacCormick, Mandi Bäck and freshman Colleen Williams.

MacCormick leads the team in goals (six) and points (17). She is also tied for second on the Flyers with five assists. Bäck has five assists in addition to five goals.
Williams leads the team with six assists, and has also chipped in four goals.

Juniors Jerica DeWolfe and Kelly Blumenschein have also made strong contributions for Dayton. DeWolfe has four goals on the season, while Blumenschein has three goals and two assists.

Today's match up against Xavier is set for a 7 p.m. start time in Cincinnati. The Minutewomen then have Saturday off before traveling to Dayton to take on the Flyers at 1 p.m. on Sunday at Baujan Field.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

UMass goes 'Fishing'

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

A week after competing against the world's best rowers in steady snowfall, the Massachusetts rowing team feels ready to face the rain forecasted for this weekend as it travels to Saratoga, N.Y., for the Head of the Fish race.

This course may be shorter than last week's with fewer sharp turns, yet the Minutewomen are approaching this race the same way they always do.

"We're a really competitive team," co-captain Ana Tocco said. "We enjoy the races. We've been working hard and practicing, and we get the weekends to show the work that we've been putting forth. We know what to do to make things happen."

UMass raced two boats last week in Boston for the Head of the Charles; however, the entire team will be competing this weekend in the singles, doubles, quads, fours and eights races.

"This weekend we'll have our own armada going into the regatta," UMass coach Jim Dietz said.

During the same race last year, UMass placed third in the collegiate heavyweight eight and first in the lightweight eight. The team also finished fifth in the heavyweight four and second in the lightweight four.

"We're just as strong as we were last year if not even better," Tocco said. "We've just been putting so much work into everything."

The Minutewomen will send five rowers to compete in the singles race, three more than last year. This year's single rowers include Julia Richter, the lone representative in last week's singles, as well as Sam Smith, Tory Gordan, Emily Boucher and Liz Euler.

Carly Payne will cox both the lightweight four and the lightweight eight. Molly Bogle and Ern Chiu will cox the heavyweight four boats and Sam Schnoerr will cox the heavyweight eight.

"The great thing about rowing is that teamwork is a must," Tocco said. "Everyone needs to work together for it to actually work. A successful race in one boat isn't going to lead us to a championship. We need everyone."

The girls have extra motivation this weekend as the winner of each event gets a fish head trophy, that is, an actual mounted fish head. The regatta has grown, in large part, because of the popularity of these unmatched trophies.

"It's definitely something that you want to work for," Tocco said. "They're very different. This brings a whole new dimension to the race."

The Minutewomen hope to add to their collection of fish heads, resting on a wall in their office, rapidly approaching double-digits. They are counting on the experience from last week to produce multiple fish heads this weekend.

"With every race you get experience," Tocco said. "If we rowed in last weekend's conditions we can row in anything. It's the building off of experiences we had in the past that makes us even stronger."

Pete Vasquez can be reached pvasquez@student.umass.edu.

The Minutewomen row during a competition in 2008. UMass coach Jim Dietz and his team heads to New York for the Head of the Fish race.

Parity could help UMass schedule

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team heads into this weekend's matchup against Maine undefeated atop the Hockey East standings. Meanwhile, defending national champion Boston University is winless and dead last in the conference.

Such streaks, though, are not expected to run throughout the season in a conference that has provided some of the nation's best teams in recent years.

As part of the Hockey East conference, the Minutemen (2-0, 1-0 HEA) have a perennially difficult schedule with the conference lined up with numerous ranked teams every year. This year is no different as the stiff competition from across Hockey East boasted six ranked teams entering the season.

"I think it will be difficult for most teams to jump over each other and teams are going to go back and forth," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. We'd like to separate ourselves from the pack on that basis. That's a real challenge."

While the Minutemen were performing an upset of their own last week against then-No. 2 Boston University, other teams around college hockey were creating some parity. Providence, which won just seven games last season, upset then-No. 7 Notre Dame while New Hampshire worked its way to a 5-5 tie against top-ranked Miami University.

Such activity, especially early on in the season, isn't a surprise to Cahoon, who said college hockey has gotten extremely even in recent years.

"I think that there's been parity in college hockey for the last five years that's been unprecedented," he said.

After their huge win against the Terriers on Friday, the Minutemen play Maine (1-3) at home. While, at first glance, the Black Bears look like an easier matchup on paper for UMass, Cahoon said that, especially in Hockey East, there are no easy games.

"I think our team has learned to understand that every game's a big game, that the two points are just as big this weekend as they were last season," he said. "And so we're not talking about dropping off. We're talking about getting better as a team and that translates into being prepared for every team we play against."

UMass, which was left just out of the rankings this week as the leading non-ranked vote-getter, is looking to avoid the upset loss that they dealt to BU just a week before against a Maine team that has not gotten much buzz so far this season.

Though the Minutemen won both meetings last season, Maine remained in a position to win the game both times, sending the second into overtime.

Even with the Minutemen in the midst of a four-game stretch against Hockey East opponents, the Cahoon and his players are looking ahead to only their game with the Black Bears.

"I'm concerned about the one-game stretch [with] Maine Friday night," Cahoon said. "That's when you get into trouble, trying to predict where you are three or four games from now. We've got to get ready a real good game on Friday night and then we'll worry about the next one."

The overlying parity of the conference, though, could be what gives UMass success this year. Picked to finish seventh in the preseason standings, the Minutemen would love nothing more to play the spoiler to the top teams of the conference.

"We definitely have as good a chance as anyone," Cahoon said. "We have experience in the goal, we have experience on defense and we have some experience up front. We've had a good group of guys that seem to be willing to take care of their personal lives and love the game and if we can parlay all of that into performance, I like our chances as well as anybody."

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

Junior Sydney Stoll runs after the ball in the Minutewomen's 1-0 loss to Providence. UMass broke a four-game losing streak with a 3-2 win over Rhode Island.

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Casey Wellman tries to get past a Boston University defender in last weekend's win. The Minutemen beat BU, 3-2.

Adams stepping up for Minutewomen offense

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts' women's soccer team welcomed Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island to Rudd Field last Thursday, the aches of a four-game losing streak were not welcome.

Mired by inconsistent offense, the Minutewomen were desperate to break their losing streak to a Rams team low in the A-10 standings. There are many ways to win a soccer game, but so far, UMass only knows one little offense, big defense.

Coming into the game, redshirt junior Sydney Stoll and junior Therese Smith accounted for the large majority of goals scored for the Minutewomen, while the goalkeeping duo of senior Lauren Luckey and freshman Emily Cota accounted for the small goals-against average statistic.

If the Minutewomen want to make it to the A-10 tournament, they're going to have to find new ways to win games. The 3-2 victory over Rhode Island provided some insight as to what UMass could do if different players joined the scoring.

"We could definitely win more games," UMass coach Angela Napoli said. "It would take more pressure off of Smith and Syd and opponents would be forced to focus on other players."

The three goals were the most scored by the Minutewomen in 14 games this season, a fact that haunts their chances of making a run in the A-10 Tournament. An increase on the lowly 0.86 goals per game average statistic can come only if different players find ways to create goals.

Senior forward Cristina Adams entered the game with no goals or points, and finished the game with two goals and four points. Smith's game-winner with less than five minutes left in regulation could not have come if not for Adams' performance.

It was Adams' first multi-goal effort in her career as it also set her new career high in points. On Monday, Adams was named A-10 Co-Player of the Week.

"We're not sure if Adams will get the start our next game against Xavier," Napoli said. "If not, she will definitely be number one or two off the bench."

If other players can follow in Adams' footsteps, there's not telling what the Minutewomen are capable of. A balanced attack coupled with a strong defense is the generic formula for winning teams; now it's just a matter of execution.

Freshman is fixture in goal

The Minutewomen started the season splitting games down the middle between senior Lauren Luckey and freshman Emily Cota. A game against Duquesne in late September changed that, when Cota got her first collegiate start and delivered a shutout win. Since then, the freshman has started every game, recording over 915 minutes, a 1.87 goals-against average, a 0.776 save percentage and a 3-6-2 record. Some of those stats are skewed a bit due to back-to-back 4-0 losses the Minutewomen suffered at the hands of Saint Louis and Charlotte. In both games, Cota still recorded double-digit saves.

The young freshman has shown that she has the ability to make saves in critical moments. Napoli said earlier this season that her youth and lack of experience could be the reason for her calm demeanor, as her main concern is to just keep her team in the game.

"We have three very solid goalkeepers and that keeps us in games," Napoli said. "If we don't have a great offensive game our goalkeeping can sneak us wins. Without them we would not be in contention for a tournament spot."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen to host Black Bears

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

Defenseman Justin Braun sets up to take a shot during last week's win over Boston University. Braun has six goals on three shots this season as the Minutemen (2-0-0, 1-0-0 Hockey East) prepare for the Black Bears at home.

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Looking to continue its fast start to begin the season, the Massachusetts hockey team will take on Hockey East rival Maine on Friday night at the Mullins Center.

After defeating Rensselaer and No. 3 Boston University, the Minutemen (2-0-0, 1-0-0 HEA) are currently one of eight teams in the country to start the year unbeaten.

UMass coach Don Cahoon is pleased with the strong start, but knows that the team must stay within itself and take it one game at a time.

"There's no magic to it. Keep it simple and stay with the task day by day," he said.

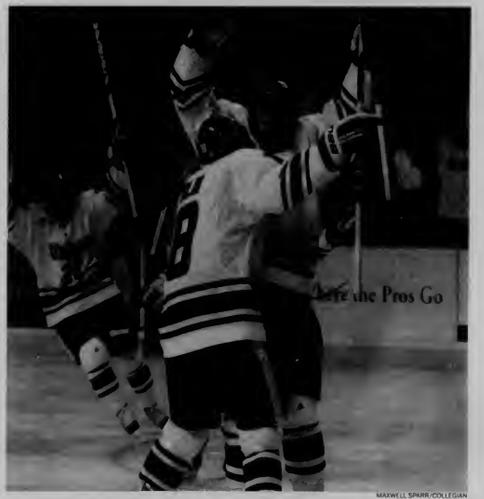
Despite upsetting defending national champion BU, 3-2, last Friday, the Minutemen did not move into the national rankings. Cahoon, however, realizes that rankings are insignificant at the moment and doesn't want the team to dwell on them.

"It just tells you what possibly people's perceptions are at this point in time, but they truly don't matter," he said. "At the end of the day, we want to be ranked, we want to be playing well enough to be ranked and ranked high."

Maine will mark the third straight contest for UMass at home. The Minutemen have a home-heavy schedule to begin the season, with seven of their first nine contests taking place at the Mullins Center.

The home ice advantage will be significant against the Black Bears (1-3-0) with the series between the two teams in the last four years hinging on location. Since 2005-06, UMass is 7-0-0 at home against Maine, while the Black Bears are 5-0-1 at Alfond Arena in Orono.

After dropping the first three games of its season, Maine picked up a 5-3 victory in its last meeting with Michigan State. While the Black Bears have had their struggles the past few seasons, Cahoon isn't taking them lightly and dismissed the notion of this being a trap game.



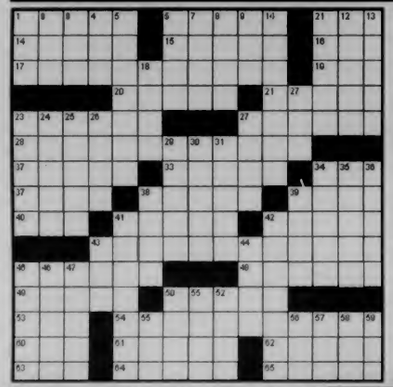
"They've got good goaltending and they have a couple of special players. I don't think they're any less or any more of a threat than most of the teams in our league," he said. "People suggest a letdown but there is no reason to letdown, every team in this league can beat us and it's a question of us taking care of our own business."

In the all-time series, Maine leads 39-13-5 over UMass dating back to 1978 when the Black Bears won 13 of the first 14 meetings. The Minutemen though, took two of three games from the Black Bears last season and since 2005-06, the series has been balanced at 7-7-1.

In their final contest last year, UMass won 4-3 after topping Maine in overtime, 4-3, the night before. The Minutemen were up 4-0 heading into the third period, but the lead quickly evaporated when the Black Bears scored three times in the final 20 minutes. Maine outshot UMass, 34-27, including an 18-7 advantage in the final period, and found opportunities with the Minutemen being issued 53 penalty minutes. UMass hung on for the victory, but all three games against the Black Bears were decided by one score.

"Maine presents problems and we're going to have to be efficient and thorough," Cahoon said. "It's not about Maine, it's not about Merrimack, it's not about BC, it's not about BU. It's about us and what we need to do to succeed."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.



MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts hockey team celebrates after its win over Boston University. The Minutemen play Maine tonight at 7 p.m.

comics

JOURNALISM AT ITS FINEST

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. H2O
6. Mediterranean herbs
11. A violation of God's law
14. Spry
15. Fails to win
16. Bustle
17. Supervisors
19. Garland
20. Regions
21. Collection of maps
23. Stonecutters
27. Strictly
28. By chance
32. They're found on rotary phones
33. Slang
34. S
37. Bloody
38. Personal journal
39. Anagram for "Pets"
40. N N N N
41. Film
42. A type of weekday
43. Renewing
45. A gender
48. Preoccupy
49. Sporting venue
50. Abuzz
53. Double-helix molecules
54. Making something conform to a standard
60. Even (poetic)
61. Become liable to
62. Hot chocolate
63. Super Sonic Transport
64. Where birds live
65. Noise

DOWN
1. Ancient Hindu temple
2. A commander in the Ottoman Empire
3. It is (poetic)
4. Member of the moose family
5. Incarcerates
6. Otherwise
7. A Catholic tribunal
8. Utilizes
9. Conditioned emotional response
10. Attack
11. French for "Room"
12. Model of excellence
13. Full of loud sounds
18. Backside
22. Attempt
23. Gnat
24. Negatively-charged atom
25. Marks left by injuries
26. Greasy
27. Stratagem
29. Innocent
30. It travels on rails
31. Consent
34. Strange or spooky
35. Rotates
36. Adult male deers
38. A Venician magistrate
39. Collections
41. Skin pigment
42. Materials
43. Hurried away on foot
44. Churn
45. Becoming less visible
46. Sea eagles
47. Intended
50. Circle fragments
51. Obscene pictures
52. Asphalts
55. Half of two
56. Animal home
57. Intensive Care Unit
58. French for "No"
59. Wander aimlessly for pleasure

UMASS AMHERST

New Schedule for Winter Session

Earn credits during break!

Online classes begin: December 21, 2009

On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010

View Classes and Register now on SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

SUDOKU

	6	2	7			9	5
8		7	5			3	1
			4
6	9	8			5	7
	5				8	1
					3
		1		7
3			9				2

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Wearing turtlenecks is the fashion equivalent of being choked by a weak man.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Be the first to literally examplify the phrase, "wicked pissah."

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Today you – yes, you – will know the feeling of discovering a "P" wing in Super Mario Bros. 3.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Magic is real. You see it all the time in Nicholas Cage's hair plugs.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Are you a big mystery from a small town? Dun Dun Dun.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
The best way to be a junkie? Flu-shot addictions, man.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Question: Will you be the first person to write "I was here" in the new Recreation Center?

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
There's a difference between a double O.G and a triple O.G. Which are you?

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Impersonating Lewis Carroll results in jail. Do not pass go, do not collect 200 dollars.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
What about those urges? It's not like the Cookie Monster wouldn't understand.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Raphael is the best Ninja Turtle. April totally thinks he's hot.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
You are to mechanical pencils like Tony Montana is to his Cuban accent.

COLLEGIAN CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext.162

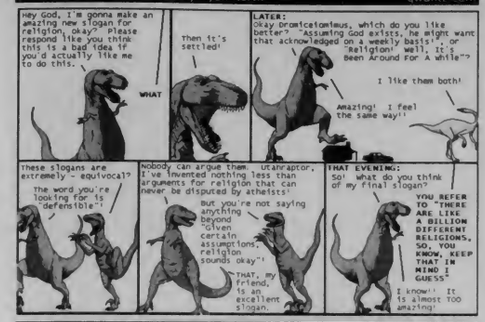
Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

EMPLOYMENT

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303.

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu



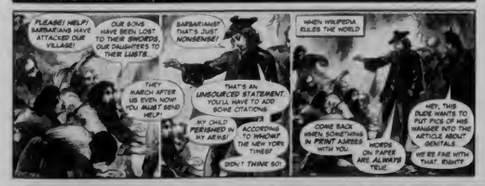
SPRING BREAK 2010

Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends. From $89 Includes Hotel, Bus, and Clubs montrealexpress.net (781)979-9001

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com



Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro — travisdandro.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

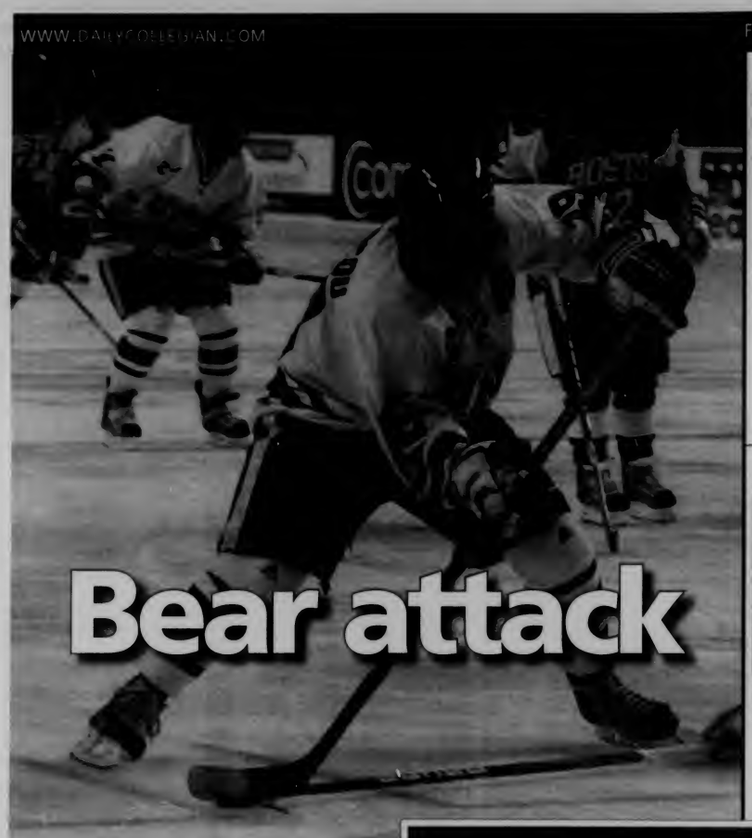
Wondermark by David Malki! — wondermark.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees — mnftiu.cc

Labrat by Richard Martelly

^Basic Instructions^ by Scott Meyer — basicinstructions.net

"How to Tell Which of You is the Evil Twin"



WE WANT YOUR COMICS

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers!

E-MAIL:

comics@dailycollegian.com

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 23, 2009

Bear attack

UMass faces Maine tonight

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The Massachusetts women's soccer team heads to Ohio for a weekend tilt against Xavier and Dayton.

SEE PAGE 12

SWIMMING AND DIVING

After its last meet with Boston University, the Massachusetts swimming and diving team travels to West Point, N.Y. to face Army.

SEE PAGE 10

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 60 LOW: 35 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2009

Jay-Z electrifies Mullins Center

Thousands of fans show up for sold-out performance

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

Where were you last night? If you weren't at the Mullins Center, you missed a show your friends will be talking about for years and years to come.

When tickets went on sale to the general public for last night's Jay-Z concert, uninformed UMass students found, to their dismay, that there were no student priced tickets available. Live Nation released an online password that allowed anyone who possessed it to go on their website and purchase tickets at the discounted "student" prices. Almost immediately after the student presale began, it ended and online ticket brokers had jumped all over the profit-guaranteeing price.

Tickets were selling for more than $500 a piece, and it seemed pretty clear that UMass students weren't going to be able to even afford to see their idol in their home arena. Regular seats were still available, but to get them, it cost top dollar. Tickets were actually available today on ticketmaster.com, even though there were none this past week. Junior Maddy Lasky, who was outwardly disappointed by the "secret student password" system, found tickets today on ticketmaster.com and paid $60 each after fees.

A few scattered scalpers meandered around the parking lots looking for drunk and desperate students to rip off, but regardless, the gathering turned out to be student-heavy. In filed guys donning polo shirts, jerseys, and/or sideways, flat-brimmed hats along with scantily clad young women in North Face jackets as well as a solid mix of plain tees and button-

See JAY-Z on page 6

For a Photo slideshow of Jay-Z's performance at the Mullins Center go to
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rapper Jay-Z instructs the crowd to put their hands into the air during his performance at the Mullins Center last night.

Town residents demand global warming action

The 'Raging Grannies' performed on Amherst Common this weekend to call attention to global warming. Around 200 showed up on Saturday to demand the United Nations adopt new carbon dioxide emissions standards.

By Christa Romano
Collegian Correspondent

On Saturday, Oct. 24, members of the Amherst community rallied on the Amherst common, as part of an international attempt to send a message to members of the United Nations, calling for serious efforts to reduce global warming.

The event was sponsored by the international organization called 350. Despite the rainy weather, about 200 locals and students showed support for 350. The organization was also sponsor to over 5,200 events in 181 countries on Saturday, which was named "International Day of Climate Action."

This December in Copenhagen, Denmark, the UN will meet to discuss a global treaty on cutting carbon dioxide emissions. At its current standing, carbon dioxide emissions are at a level of 390 parts per million, 40 parts above what NASA reports to be the safe limit for humanity. Carbon dioxide emissions need to be lowered to 350 ppm to stop the effects of global warming.

At 11:30 a.m. on Saturday, Amherst locals lined up to take their turn in ringing the church bells at the Grace Episcopal Church in Amherst center. The bells were rung 350 times, marking the beginning of the day's events and symbolizing the community's desire to lower greenhouse gases.

Many organizations including multiple student groups attended and showed their support of the event, including the University of Massachusetts Environmental Performance Advisory Committee, the Five College Environmental Action Committee and the Amherst High School Environmental Club.

"The whole idea of 350 and this event in particular is to get as much attention as possible from the area so we get support from our legislatures in Copenhagen," said Julia Herman, a freshman at Mount Holyoke College and a member of the Five College EAC who attended the event. "We need to make changes and lower the carbon dioxide emissions. It's really such an important issue, and it's not something that we can just let go of."

Herman said that she has been working with the Five College EAC all week, preparing for the International Day of Climate Action. "There have been lectures and film screenings all week. We've been brainstorming ideas for conservation and

See 350 on page 3

Majors Fair shows off what UM has to offer

By Michael Toomey
Collegian Staff

The annual University of Massachusetts Majors Fair will take place Wednesday, Oct. 28, from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. In the past, the fair has been an informal gathering for interested students to meet with professionals representing a comprehensive span of the many academic concentrations available to UMass students.

Representatives from all majors, except Theater and East European Studies, will be present to answer student questions about majors, minors and how to have an interesting and valuable experience at UMass.

Representatives from organizations including Career Services, Study Abroad/ International Program Office (IPO), Bilingual Collegiate Program and Residential Academic Programs will attend to advertise their services to students.

UMass' many academic departments will be grouped by similar concentrations to make navigating the fair easier. The configuration of the fair is intended to help students to investigate related concentrations that might work well as a minor or certificate with an already declared major.

Tamatha Gaumnitz, an undergraduate advisor and primary coordinator of the fair, said the layout of departments was designed to facilitate the process of exploring.

"If you think you're interested in something in, say, the social and behavioral sciences, it might be a good idea to check out the other departments in that grouping, to find out if there's something else you like," said Gumnitz. "If you already have a major in the sciences but you also have a creative side, you might want to walk over to the humanities and fine arts area and see if something works with what you have to make it more well-rounded experience."

Undergraduate advisor Tonya Blundon, a coordinator of the Majors Fair, said the Fair offers a chance to meet with advisors and program directors that are normally spread out across the large UMass campus.

"This is a large university and there are so many great resources and contacts available to students, but they're in all different places, all over campus," said Blundon. "They all have different hours and it can be a very intimidating experience to seek out these people."

While most of the attending programs are academic concentrations, there are valuable auxiliary programs to help students navigate their college experience, like Career Services, Continuing & Professional

See MAJORS on page 4

Here students can be seen conversing with advisors at last year's Majors Fair. This year's fair is scheduled for Wednesday in the Campus Center Auditorium.

ARTS & LIVING

Portugal. The Man

Sarah Palin has given Americans the wrong idea about Alaska. Not everyone that hails from Wasilla is a baby-popping hockey mom. In fact, some of them, such as Portugal. The Man, play awesome rock music.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS

UMass beats Black Bears

The UMass hockey team defeated Maine 5-3 on Friday night, but the two teams racked up 97 penalty minutes in the process.

SEE PAGE 12

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Nick O'Malley and Mike Phillis debate whether sports leagues should expand to other countries.

SEE PAGE 5

DailyCollegian.com

Log on to DailyCollegian.com to view the photo slideshow of Jay-Z's mind-blowing performance last night.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 33

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3999
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Kirshbline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffres R. Larnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Britch
Assistant Sports Jay Asser
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cods
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1965, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick O'Malley

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

What do think about Guantanamo detainees in town?

How do you feel about the Town of Amherst voting to welcome former Guantanamo detainees Ahmed Belbacha and Ravil Mingazov?

James Carroll, senior
English major

"I'm all about this occurring. If they are not detainees anymore, then there is probably a good reason why. They are just regular people and shouldn't be treated differently."

Lindsey Waid, junior
English major

"If people are falsely accused of something, I don't believe they should be ostracized... As far as it sounds, I hope the town will [pass the motion]."

Andrew Mulvaney
Communications major

"I know a lot of people aren't ready and willing to do as Amherst is doing by taking these detainees in, so I think [Amherst] is stepping up."

Azeen Khanmalek,
Political Science major

"At least some town is willing to accept them. I don't mind at all. It's ridiculous that people don't want detainees to come in the U.S., because they feel unsafe. If they are United States detainees, we should allow them here when they're released."

By Alyssa Creamer, [illegible]

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

on fulfilling your potential

Ready to focus on advancing your career? Pursuing a graduate program can make a real difference — in attaining the job you really want, in getting the promotion you deserve, or in making the career change you dream about.

Saint Joseph College offers graduate programs, including evening, weekend, and online classes, in a wide range of professional fields. Contact us today and see why so many men and women like you turn to SJC to help them get focused on changing their future.

Graduate and Professional Studies

Master's Degree Programs
(partial listing)
- Education
- Early Childhood /Special Education
- Human Development/ Gerontology
- Management
- Nursing
- Marriage and Family Therapy
- School Counseling
- Special Education

Online Master's Degree Programs
- Biochemistry (online and on campus)
- Biology (online and on campus)
- Nutrition (online)

New program!
School of Pharmacy
Doctorate of Pharmacy Program
[illegible] development with plans for a [illegible] opening.*
*Pending appropriate approvals

Graduate Certificate Programs
(partial listing)
- Action Research for the Urban Educator
- Autism Spectrum Disorders
- Educational Applications of Educational Research
- Emerging Diseases
- Health Care Systems Management
- Homeland Security Management
- Latino Community Practice

For more information, visit us at the UMass Graduate Information Day on October 28
Or [illegible] 860.231.5261
[illegible] www.sjc.edu/infoday

Come to our campus
Graduate Open House
Tuesday, December 1
4:30-6:30 p.m.
Saint Joseph College,
The Bruyette Athenaeum
Register at www.sjc.edu/1028

West Hartford, Connecticut
860.231.5261 • www.sjc.edu

Locals rally for stronger emissions standards making posters and really trying to promote 350," she said.

350 from page 1

Saturday's event consisted not only of the ringing of the bells and a gathering of climate action groups, but also featured performances by local musicians and singing groups, speeches from state politicians and the singing of the official 350 anthem. A large group photograph was also taken in which attendees of the event stood in the form of the numer "350."

The photograph will be submitted to the organizations' website and will collaborate with many other similar photographs taken all over the world.

Color and meaning was added to the Amherst photo by the vibrant, giant paper-cut-out maple leaves that participants held up during the event. The paper maple leaves were meant to symbolize the local trees that are suffering from global warming and were provided by the Episcopal Church's Green and Grace Group.

Member of the group, Sherry Wilson, handed out the handmade leaves during the ringing of the bells as she educated people on the efforts of the church to go green.

"In March, we participated in a similar event called Earth Hour, when people around the world switched off all of their electricity for an hour," Wilson said. "[The Episcopal Church] has also switched entirely to compact florescent light bulbs and have completed different weatherization projects."

The Episcopal Church is not the only organization in Amherst making moves to incorporate green energy into daily utility.

Representing the Pioneer Valley Relocalization Project was Larry Ely. Ely advocated for different ways in which the Valley could cut back on carbon dioxide emissions.

"We need to promote growing and buying locally to cut back on emissions from transportation," Ely said. "And we need to increase the effectiveness of public transportation, like using mini-busses at off-peak times and a more elaborate train system. Reconfiguring our towns to make denser populations will also save a lot of carbon."

Ely admits that there would probably be "mixed feelings" about urbanization in the valley, but he emphasizes that these are the major ways to make this local area less responsible for carbon dioxide emissions.

The 350 event in Amherst did not produce any carbon dioxide emissions, despite its use of electricity.

The PA system that was used throughout the day was completely green, running entirely off human energy. Students and locals alike took turns generating the electricity by a pedal-power machine, provided by Todd Holland, the Five College energy manager.

"It's great to see the students getting involved in energy conservation," Holland said, as he helped the next pair of students begin pedaling for power. "And it's great to really make that visible connection between energy and its functions."

While a pedal-powered generator is not something that many people have in their homes, there are other ways to reduce personal carbon footprints. Posters around the perimeter of the common were hung on the "clothes line" and offered advice on how to help with reduction.

Tips included using a hand-pushed lawn mower instead of an electric or to unplug any electrical device when not in use.

In addition to the early afternoon's events on Saturday, there was also an Ultimate Frisbee toss on Amherst common at 3:50 p.m., a "flash mob" at Mount Holyoke College, a bike parade at the UMass Haggis Mall and at Smith College, and a teach-in at Hampshire College called, "What We Need To Know About Climate Change: Local Perspectives on the Global Crisis."

Hampshire college alumnus Ben Grosscup said, "I think 350 is helping to raise awareness of the nature of the crisis," which is evident by the growing number of photos on the organizations' website sent by supporters of 350 from all over the world.

For more information on 350, visit 350.org

Christa Romano can be reached at cromano@student.umass.edu

Approximately 200 protestors turned out on Amherst Common Saturday to demand that the United Nations take a stronger stance on global warming.

Protestors carried signs calling on the United Nations to lower carbon dioxide emissions to 350 parts per million from the current 390.

Start Your Career in Accounting.

Northeastern's MS in Accounting/MBA for non-accounting majors:

- Earn two degrees in just 15 months.
- Complete a 3-month paid residency at a leading accounting firm.
- Proven track record of 100% job placement.

Take the first step.

Visit our booth at the U. Mass Amherst Graduate School Fair.
Date: October 28, 2009
Time: 11:00 am - 3:00 pm
Location: Student Union Ballroom

Learn more about the program and upcoming events at: www.msamba.neu.edu.

617-373-3244
gspa@neu.edu
www.msamba.neu.edu Northeastern University

ALL TREATS, NO TRICKS
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31 · ALL DCS: 5-9 PM
THE BIGGEST HALLOWEEN PARTY ON CAMPUS!

CONTESTS:
Pumpkin Painting Contest
- All entrants will receive a UMass Travel Hot Bottle
- Pumpkins will be displayed in all DCs

UMass Student Costume Contest
- Grand Prize: $100 gift card
- Gift cards (10 winners/DC)

MENU:
Maine Live Lobsters
New York Strip Steak
Chesterfield Chicken
NE Clam Chowder (local)
Ratatouille (local)
Butternut Squash (local)
Grilled Vegetables (local)
Mulled Cider (local)
Candied Apples (local)

ENTERTAINMENT:
Table Magic · Fortune Telling · DJs

UMass Students Wearing a Costume receives a UMass Travel Hot Bottle (1st 100)

SPONSORED BY UMASS DINING
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
facebook.com/umassdining

ALL ARE WELCOME
USE YOUR MEAL CARD OR $15 CASH

UMass is a BIG campus, and we need your help covering it.

Know of something that's happening? Want to see an event get news coverage? Let us know!

Go online and head to DailyCollegian.com and click "Submit a Tip."

Majors Fair to give students insight on education options

MAJORS from page 1

Education, Domestic Five College Exchange.

Commonwealth College's Cory Pels, Director of Advising and Student Program will be available to answer questions about honors programs, requirements and opportunities.

Access to virtually all of the University's available academic resources makes the Majors Fair particularly useful to first year students who can survey the school's options in one fell swoop.

Undecided students might gain insight and clarity in matching their interests to a particular major by attending the event.

Blundon said the Majors Fair is so comprehensive that any student could have a chance of gaining something for their academic careers.

"Even if students think they're sure about what they want to study, [they] could benefit just from walking around the room, because you can discover about so many departments you may have never heard of, maybe pick up a minor," Blundon said. "It's a great opportunity for anyone no matter how decided they may be."

Undergraduate Advising reports an estimate of 1,200 students attending last year's two hour Fair.

Advising suggests being prepared for the crowds by checking out its website, which features a detailed map of the fair layout, and a set of questions designed to help figure out what students would like to get out of the experience.

Michael Toomey can be reached at mjtoomey@student.umass.edu.

This year's Majors Fair will be held on Wednesday. Here students can be seen perusing last year's tables and advisors in the Campus Center.

New York band makes rock look 'Easy'

DIY U Mass hosted a rock show in the Earth Foods Cafe in the Student Union on Sunday, Oct. 25, featuring the band Death is Easy [above].

WORCESTER POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE

WPI Learn about our graduate programs at the Career Fair

WPI, one of the nation's premier technology-focused universities, is internationally distinguished in graduate research and education. Merging theory with practice, WPI offers nearly 50 masters and doctoral programs.

Graduate Programs at WPI:

- Biology & Biotechnology
- Biomedical Engineering
- Chemical Engineering
- Chemistry & Biochemistry
- Civil & Environmental Engineering
- Computer Science
- Electrical & Computer Engineering
- Fire Protection Engineering
- Learning Sciences
- Management
- Manufacturing Engineering
- Materials Process Engineering
- Materials Science & Engineering
- Mathematical Sciences
- Mechanical Engineering
- Physics
- Robotics
- Social Science & Policy Studies

Visit us for more information at:

University of Massachusetts Amherst Career Fair
Wednesday, October 28, 11:00am-3:00pm
Student Union Ballroom

www.grad.wpi.edu

Graduate Studies at Worcester Polytechnic Institute
100 Institute Road • Worcester, MA 01609-2280
gradoffice@wpi.edu • 508-831-5301

Whether you work in Washington or London, your challenges are global. Your MBA should be too.

Discover our redesigned MBA and MS degrees, including courses in Environmental Finance, Social Entrepreneurship, Competitive Intelligence, Knowledge Management, Entrepreneurial Financing, and Digital Marketing.

JOHNS HOPKINS CAREY BUSINESS SCHOOL

1.877.88 CAREY carey.jhu.edu

Where business is taught with humanity in mind.

COLLEGE of ARTS & SCIENCES
AMERICAN UNIVERSITY • WASHINGTON, D.C.

Visit our booth at the Graduate School Fair to learn more about over 50 graduate programs in the arts, education, humanities, sciences, and social sciences.

Wednesday, October 28
11–3 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

www.american.edu/cas

Wanted: Change Agents

- MBA in Social Change
  Business for Social Change–Social Entrepreneurship–Environmental Policy–Community Development–International Development
- MBA/MA in Community Development and Planning
- MBA/MA in Environmental Science and Policy

As the sectors of our global society become increasingly intertwined, demand is surging for professionals who understand the social, political, and environmental forces that shape communities and businesses.

Merit-based scholarships and graduate assistantships are available. Visit us at the Graduate Schools Information Day on October 28th to learn more.

CLARK UNIVERSITY
CHALLENGE CONVENTION CHANGE OUR WORLD™
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT
Worcester, Massachusetts

THE PRINCETON REVIEW 301 BEST BUSINESS SCHOOLS

www.clarku.edu/gsom
508.793.7406

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." - Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Should American sports leagues globalize?

There's no tea in football

Nick O'Malley

While watching the New England Patriots play the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in London yesterday morning, I noticed two things that were out of place. One: The Bucs didn't belong on the same field (to elaborate would move this column to the back page). And two: Football has no place on that side of the ocean.

It's an increasingly common trend among sports leagues in America. Seeing the potential in foreign markets, teams are attempting to export their product into other countries. Whether it's through exhibition games, regular season games, tournaments or even putting a franchise there, each of the "big four" sports leagues (the NFL, NBA, MLB and NHL) have tried this globalization tactic. The NFL and commissioner Roger Goodell's foray into jolly old England is just another attempt at that.

Now, word has it, that the NFL wants to put a team in London. Why would they want to do that? The league already has a dispassionate fan base in Jacksonville.

Who was the guy in the NFL board room that said "hey, let's go to London guys!" No. Screw London. They have their football; we have ours.

Who was the guy in the NFL board room that said "hey, let's go to London, guys!" No. Screw London. They have their football; we have ours.

To stretch it even further, one can even look at the attempts to globalize the game of soccer. Except in this case, the rest of the world is trying to "soccerize" America.

Regardless of which way the process goes, the pattern is consistent. People get tired of it quickly.

It's great that these leagues, which, in an essence, are merely enormously publicized companies with 30 some-odd subdivisions, want to spread their product abroad. They're pumping out the same amount of games, why not get more exposure?

While, on paper, this seems like a positive marketing decision for these groups, the truth is that globalization weakens the domestic product.

While a flight from Logan Airport likely wasn't too much of a hassle, it probably gave the San Diego Chargers a bit of jet lag to travel the nearly 5,500 miles to play the New Orleans Saints in London's Wembley Stadium. NFL officials may even push it further with their plans to play an exhibition game in China.

It's great to say that an organization like Major League Baseball wants to try something like the World Baseball Classic (a global tournament held every few years by national baseball teams). However, when marquis players of both major leagues suffer when they return for the summer baseball season, it's a poor reflection on American fans.

Plus, it's not like the MLB has to work too hard to globalize their product, the Caribbean and East Asia have eaten up the game.

The NBA, meanwhile, has been attempting to capitalize on having two good Chinese basketball players, Yao Ming and Yi Jianlian. Unfortunately, Ming keeps getting hurt and Jianlian plays in Milwaukee. I can pretty much guarantee you that there are like, four people in China that have heard of the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

In fact, the only one of the "big four" leagues that has had success in another country is the NHL. If only they could get people in America to care out hockey. And to those nine hockey fans out there that want to refute that, get the games off of Versus and then we'll talk.

In the end though, it falls back to the NFL and the game of football. The MLB and NBA have made their bed in Canada (Toronto Blue Jays, Raptors, the late Montreal Expos) and have yet to strike gold up north. So why would the NFL think a franchise in Europe would work?

I get it, we have planes. But there's little reason for a fan base in England to develop.

"Oh look, London's playing some city called Cleveland in a sport we don't care about. Let's stop watching this British comedy likely involving men in drag to watch it." No, not so much.

Finally, there's the case that Britain and America have never really seen eye-to-eye in terms of sports culture. Sure, both teams play in the Ryder Cup each year (for 90 percent of you out there, that's golf) and compete in Wimbledon (to the same demographic, that's tennis). But beyond that, there's no connection. They really, really like soccer and we really, really like football. Sure, there's most likely some dormant fans out there, but it's not going to be worth the investment.

They tried football in Europe once. It was called NFL Europe. It's now gone in the trash heap with the XFL, USFL, Arena Football league and every other attempt to make football work in any other way.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Time to bring football to all

Michael Phillis

This past summer, I spent about two months in London. During my time there, I had an internship at Alliance magazine – the leading publication on the latest in philanthropy and social investment news – where I discussed, among other things, American football.

It is from my experience in London that I began to see that American football might have a place in Europe. At Alliance magazine, I usually worked and talked with two people from the office – David and Kai.

Their opinions on football were polar opposites. Kai took the perspective that I had assumed most of England held – a privately laced admonishment describing a sport so many Americans love. To quote him, football is, "Fing stupid."

David's perspective, however, was a nice surprise. Not only did he like football but he knew a lot about the sport. I was able to debate with him about the readiness of Tom Brady after his injuries or the change in coaching style of Bill Belichick. We both concluded that he has a far better strategy now than he did with the Cleveland Browns, where he was a controlling micromanager.

Right now, many Europeans I talk to don't have the first clue about American football. This can and should change.

It was talking with David about football that let me feel a little closer to home. It was nice to talk about an element of America that was appreciated by someone who was foreign to the country.

Yesterday, more than 80,000 fans packed Wembley stadium in London for an NFL game, the New England Patriots against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. According to the announcers, tickets sold out in less than 10 minutes. NFL commissioner Roger Goodell talked with the CBS announcers during the game about the possibility of expanding the league's presence in London with the potential of even putting a team there.

I was especially happy to hear about the NFL's initiative. I think that American football could do very well overseas in places like England. The sport could be popular. All you have to do is look at their current fanatical love for soccer to see why.

European soccer games can be near riotous on ordinary days. Before a big game in London, I saw a huge crowd assembled outside one of the town's numerous pubs, collectively throwing food at cars and people passing by. Certain bars are hangout spots for one team or another, and if a fan of the opposing side wants a drink, he or she won't be allowed.

Football fans, like many fans of American sports, are utterly polarized and hang on to their team's colors and accomplishments to the bitter, sometimes miserable, end. The brutality in football coincides nicely with the angry fans and mob mentality that surrounds soccer. The sports may be different, but the feel of football would be just right for such raucous London crowds.

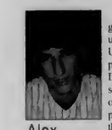
The biggest gains, however, that the NFL and the United States could have from expanding professional football to other countries, are the diplomatic opportunities that would result from worldwide acceptance.

Right now, football is undisputedly an American tradition. It could not do any harm to have other countries think that one of our traditions was worth replicating. Internationally, America's image is not particularly shiny. Two wars and a former president that many foreigners simply hated have soured America's name abroad.

Believe it or not, football could be a bridge to better understanding. The expansion of football could act as a sort of secondary Peace Corps. On their website, their mission is outlined, "The Peace Corps has shared with the world America's most precious resource its people." The expansion of football would share one of this country's most popular sporting events to the world, creating positive dialogue between countries.

Most importantly, it would provide a reason for other countries to have an interest in a portion of American culture.

Right now, many Europeans I talk to don't have the first clue about American football. This can and should change.



Goodell is taking a positive step not only for the financial security of the league, but also for the interests of the country.

I think places like England could have a positive experience with football. I am less sure about other European countries, although the idea of a French football team gives me a wide smile. In a world where France, a country known for cheese, romance and wine can turn into fans of American football, the future is bright.

Sports are a worldwide institution. Let's support the effort to expand America's image and transform sports like football from an American to an international phenomenon.

Micheal Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu

Debunking a convenient myth

Alex Perry

I'm so sick and tired of all this "go green" and global warming talk. I can't use a tray at the dining hall because the University of Massachusetts needs to pretend it's saving the environment one Dining Commons swipe at a time? Is the school even helping to save the world or is it really just saving itself money by preparing less food? One would think the school makes so much money off of parking that they wouldn't need to bother to save a few dollars by conserving organically grown carrots. But regardless of where you come out on that issue, I think this whole global warming fairy tale has gotten way out of hand.

Based on all of the research I've read, global warming is nothing more then a myth. It's a fantasy. It makes for fun sci-fi movies, but at the end of the day it is about as legitimate as the 2008 Detroit Lions' Super Bowl chances. In fact, many scientists think that man-made global warming does not exist and that there is significant evidence suggesting that global cooling has been going on for nearly 11 years.

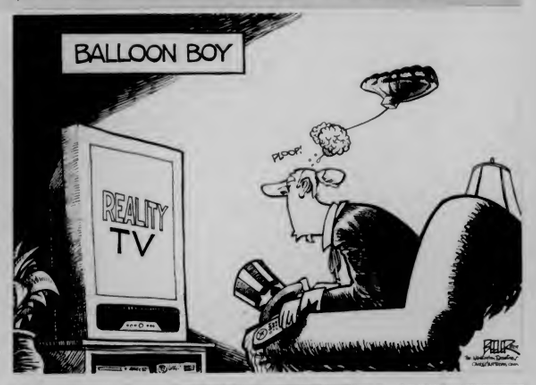
One would think the school makes so much money off of the parking they wouldn't need to bother to save a few dollars by conserving organically grown carrots.

Everyone who is familiar with the man-made global warming argument knows the fundamental idea behind it is that humans are creating too much carbon dioxide. Those increasing levels of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere cause more solar radiation to be trapped in it, increasing global temperature. This theory is taken seriously by leaders around the world. President Barack Obama and the rest of the democrats in our government are taking the global warming myth so seriously that they are considering putting a cap-and-trade system into place to regulate carbon dioxide emissions nationwide. They are considering this despite the fact that the system would put American corporations at a disadvantage and raise taxes on all Americans during an economic slow down. But is carbon dioxide even causing climate change?

In March of this year, Alan Carlin of the Environmental Protection Agency wrote a report that is extremely skeptical of the science backing global warming. He said, as of the time of the report, that, "given the downward trend in temperatures since 1998 there is no particular reason to rush into decisions based on a scientific hypothesis that does not appear to explain most of the available data." He also said that a decline in global temperatures over the past 11 years, during a time when carbon dioxide emissions have risen, would indicate that the supposed cause of global warming needs to be re-examined. Carlin didn't think it was necessary for government to step in and put regulations on carbon dioxide emissions.

Obviously, the liberal left and the "inconvenient truthers" didn't take too kindly to this report. According to CBS news, the EPA allegedly tried to prevent the report from being released in the first place. So much for Obama's promises of transparency and integrity.

I think the data in Carlin's and many other reports needs to be emphasized. The world is not undergoing global warming. Data shows that over the past 11 years the world has actually been cooling down, despite the increase in atmospheric carbon levels during the same time frame. Because the observed decrease of global temperature and the observed increase of carbon dioxide emissions contradict what is predicted by proponents of man-made global warming, the theory must be false and another mechanism must be proposed to explain the data.



I encourage everyone who doesn't believe what they are reading in this column to look up the data for themselves. The fact that you have to just lets you know how ridiculously liberal the media is in this country.

The tough questions aren't asked. Nothing is investigated anymore. Things just get reported as accepted facts and published in science books even though they aren't proven.

The cap-and-trade bill will be the next big discussion in Congress after health care reform is dealt with. As I and many others have written in the past, although the bill will likely succeed in reducing carbon emissions, the cost will be higher taxes for everyone and still higher costs for American corporations. Considering that the U.S. already has one of the world's highest corporate tax rates, the unnecessary environmental costs forced on businesses by a cap-and-trade bill will put corporations at an even greater disadvantage to other countries that don't have the same regulations. The results will be more outsourcing of American jobs to those countries.

If corporations, schools, cities, towns or any other communities want to "go green" in order to minimize waste and be more efficient to save money and energy I'm all for it. I think efficiency is a good thing. But let's not have government or anyone else force it on us. There is no global warming problem, just a bunch of generally accepted myths and sci-fi movies. That's the real inconvenient truth.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu.

Daily Collegian Poll Question:

Should former Guantanamo Bay inmates be formally invited to the town of Amherst?

- Yes, I think it would be a progressive decision.
- No, that's not something that should happen here.
- Doesn't matter to me.
- They shouldn't be released at all.
- Wait, they're doing what?

Vote online at DailyCollegian.com

Rockin' the Mullins ain't easy...

...except for Hova

Jay-Z from page 1

ops completing what was a diverse crowd, to say the least.

J.Cole and Wale opened the show as the majority of the crowd was still piling in. A thick fog of marijuana smoke filled the rafters of the Mullins as some other crowd members popped pills.

The masses erupted when N.E.R.D took the stage led by front-man Pharrell Williams with a full instrumental band behind him. They premiered the crowd for the big main ...performing their huge hits including ... Sweat," "She Wants to Move" and even "Lap In Lake it's Hot."

...high rhythms and catchy tracks ...ed a sea of dancing and partying like a ...hardcore party at its peak before the cops

...ed all the "good lookin' ... at the front ... brought about ... on the ... speed ... with their hands ... flailing ... fourth minute of emotional ... pushed and shoved through the ...

The pop-rock band made a lot of new fans and satisfied old ones with their electric and energetic set.

A rowing drum roll into the song "No Sleep Till Brooklyn" by the Beastie Boys brought all to their feet as a 10 minute countdown appeared on the screens on each side of the stage. As someone was thrown out with three minutes to go, the mass of partiers went crazy in a cheer for the ejected fan. Whatever he was doing must have been pretty terrible to catch security's attention considering the abundant rowdiness and drug use.

The Beatles' "Live and Let Die" blasted through the massive speakers as the clock wound down, the lights dimmed and the fans passionately chanted "HOVA! HOVA! HOVA!"

From a cloud of smoke in a spotlight, the King of New York, Jay-Z, emerged like a godly being to the stage and began a song of his latest album, "The Blueprint III," "Already Home."

The back screen of the ... "Blueprint III" slowed down the ... show, and while "Empire ... "Empire ... "Encore" and a bass-heavy "U Don't Know" set-up the Jigga Man to awaken his following with "99 Problems," "Show Me What You Got," and "I Just Wanna Love U (Give It 2 Me)."

The hits were great and got everyone bumping up and down out of their seats, but as he did the rest of the night as well, they were far too short. Unfortunately, some of his big songs such as "99 Problems," and later on "Dirt Off You Shoulder" seemed much shorter than the studio version as the crowd would have been familiar with.

Slowing it down a bit, Jay-Z showed his talent as a performer and a rapper as ... with some breathtaking rap solos ... "Lose What, Jigga Wins."

...right into "Public Service An...nouncement" and simultaneously shot a bolt ... into the audience to an eruption ... making the famous diamond symbol ... with Hova.

"Can I get a..." brought everyone back to the 90s and pumped everyone up for a quick string of his biggest hits. He transi... ...and ... ...ZanyMane ... ...a party.

He quickly switched ... "I Just ... ...and kept the singing and dancing ... bursting ... ...and ... on the ...

While he did not ... ...an encore, he took it long ... ...a solo ... version of his song "Encore" to ... ...point out ... ...he blew from each ... ... It was interesting ... at first, but got old very quick.

Finally, Jay-Z ... his set with "Forever Young," and said, "Every time I take the stage, I don't take it for granted."

Despite short cuts of his most popular songs and a controversial ticket sale, the shows will certainly prove to be unforgettable for all those who were able to find tickets.

And even though some people, like ... ...lucky, had to wait ...til today and/or had to pay a highly inflated price to get in, she said "I know I spent way too much money on these tickets, but it was totally worth it."

...reached at ...egion.com.

Portugal blows away the hype

By Angela Stasiowski
Collegian Staff

Sarah Palin has given Americans the wrong idea about Alaska. Not everyone that hails from Wasilla is a baby-popping hockey mom. In fact, some of them play music.

Portugal. The Man, mad scientists of the musical world, had the potential to single-handedly redeem the state with last Wednesday's performance at Northampton's Pearl Street Clubroom. Equipped with a cavalry of guitars, strings, keyboards and harmonies, the Wasilla natives were out to defend their home with their alternative rock artillery.

The band has a reputation for breathtaking live shows, which brought out a substantial number of fans for a weekday night. With all this hype, there were great expectations in the air that night.

Portugal's current cross-country tour is in support of their latest release "The Satanic Satanist." The prolific young band has released a grand total of four full-length albums and a fifth acoustic record within their mere three years of fame.

The Wednesday show was part of Iron Horse Entertainment Group's "Left of the Dial: Brave New Music" series, which showcases such up-and-comers as White Rabbits and Mum, Iceland's post rock collective.

Opening the evening, Cambridge quartet Drug Rug warmed up the crowd with a hearty round of four part harmonies in the key of folk.

The multitalented band showcased their talent as they switched positions and instruments throughout the set. They kicked the night off right with the promise of innovative independent music.

Next to bat was Hockey, a band born from 80's dance beats and incessantly catchy lyrics. Hailing from Portland Ore., the band combined synthesizers, funky bass grooves and even a little Dylan-esque harmonica to produce what was certainly a highlight of the evening.

The band walked out of the venue with a throng of new followers, peddling its recent release, "Mind Chaos" at the merchandising booth.

When Portugal finally took the stage after a significant delay, the crowd was more than ready. Followers were not put off by the wait, however, merely amusing themselves with a massive Animal Collective sing-along.

The members of Portugal looked as if they were stolen from a bygone decade, adorned in handlebar mustaches and vintage sweaters. Complete with flashing colors and trippy canvases, the stoner shtick seemed a little overdone.

That said, Portugal has always had a reputation for the unconventional. Much of the band's oddities stem from singer and guitarist John Gourley's unusual Alaskan upbringing. The artist resided in a log cabin powered only by a generator and without a telephone.

The band began with some of its older material, performing "Stables and Chairs" from their 2006 debut, "Waiter: 'You Vultures.'" While the sound mixing wasn't ideal, they managed to bang out the tune with practiced ease.

One of Portugal's brightest moments came in the form of Three Dog Night's "One." The band tackled the number one single with its own refreshing twist.

It was at this moment that the seams began to show, however.

Halfway through the performance, overzealous fans in the front row began the smoking of a certain green substance, ending in the collapse of one audience member.

Portugal seemed unfazed, perhaps blind to the incident from the stage lights, as the young man was escorted out of the clubroom.

The group played on as the front rows recovered, performing the new single "Everyone is Golden" from "The Satanic Satanist." The tune is a lesson in Portugal's influences, paying clear homage to the Beatles.

The crowd sang along wholeheartedly to the surprisingly cheery chorus of, "Everyone is golden/ Nobody will love them."

"And I" from the album "Censored Colors" was another redeeming moment of the evening. The song started out slowly in the acoustic vein and approached harder-hitting guitars riffs with cat-like stealth, all topped off with rich harmonies.

Portugal. The Man did not introduce songs, nor did they engage with the audience at any point, but the oversight seemed excusable.

The band knew that they were there to play music and did just that.

As a whole, the show was stunning on the music front, but the atmosphere upset what could have been a truly great performance.

If Portugal peeled away some of the flashing lights and hype, they would be golden. These distractions only hid the band's talent behind clichés.

Angela Stasiowski can be reached at astasiow@student.umass.edu

Portugal. The Man lived up to its reputation of performing breathtaking live shows with their appearance last Wednesday at the Iron Horse. The band played tracks from their latest album, "The Satanic Satanist," as part of IHEG's "Left of the Dial: Brave New Music" series.

Feed your future

See how more than 29,000 people are working together to help inspire change.

Begin at www.pwc.tv

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2009 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or (as the context requires) the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Sophomore Michael Marcou found the net in UMass' 5-3 win over Maine on Friday. James Marcou, Michael's brother, assisted him on the goal.

Marcou records goal, 3 assists

HOCKEY from page 12

The goal was Wellman's second of the season and gave Marcou a team-high five points at the time. Marcou would finish the game with nine on the season, notching a goal and three assists on the night.

UMass struck again later in the first period when, shortly after a faceoff, the Maine defense was out of position and senior Martin Nolet sniped a shot over Darling's right shoulder and into the net. The goal marked the second-straight game where the Minutemen have jumped out to a multiple-goal lead in the first 10 minutes.

The two-goal lead would not last long. Four minutes later in the period, the Minutemen turned over the puck in their own defensive end. Maine freshman Matt Mangene passed near the right face-off circle to Spencer Abbott, forcing UMass goaltender Paul Dainton to commit. Abbott then one-timed it across the slot to Shemansky for the goal.

Dainton provided another solid performance for the Minutemen in goal on the night, notching 26 saves. In the midst of raised emotions, Dainton was solid and composed throughout the game.

"The game itself was that for our team and Paul, as the game within the game, certainly could've given up a goal like that and really lost his focus. But he didn't. That's maturity and that's his strength right now," Cahoon said.

UMass would add a third goal in the period when Marcou fired a shot to Darling's glove side. Darling got a piece of it, but couldn't find it as he fell back and the puck dribbled down behind him and into the net.

After giving up three goals in the first period, Darling was pulled from the net and freshman Shawn Sirman was inserted between the pipes. Dave Wilson, who started last year's game against UMass, did not make the trip for the Black Bears, much to the chagrin of the fans in the Mullins Center, who had taken pleasure in taunting the goalie in past games.

After several early scoring chances for UMass in the second period, it looked as though the Minutemen were going to pile onto their lead. However, it was Dainton who surrendered the next goal.

After the Maine offense caught a break when a referee's skate slowed a puck from leaving the UMass zone, defenseman Will O'Neil, from behind the left face-off circle, fired a shot in that deflected off of UMass defender Mike Donnellan and in for the goal.

UMass responded later in the period on another goal sparked by Marcou. After penetrating into the Maine zone, Marcou held on to the puck and drifted through the zone, looking for a shot. Marcou never took it; instead, he dished the puck to his brother, defenseman Michael Marcou, who, after his first shot was blocked, fired again for his first-career goal.

In the closing minutes of the second half, emotions for both teams spilled over as the two teams engaged in as close to a fight as possible without major penalties being called. Five minors were issued in the scuffle, three on UMass.

The Minutemen killed off the penalty, despite several prime-scoring chances for Maine. The physical play and scuffles late in the game prevented either team from putting much together offensively. Maine, though, was able to add a late goal after pulling the goalie. Moments after a believed goal was called off, Brian Flynn put one in the back of the net with 1:02 left in the game.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Dainton's goal work keeps UM perfect

DAINTON from page 12

Marcou leads the Minutemen squad in points, it was his brother, sophomore defenseman Michael Marcou, who scored the pivotal goal to kill a comeback attempt by the Black Bears. After picking off a pass, the elder Marcou skated into the Maine zone and held the puck until reinforcements arrived. Michael Marcou caught up and found an opening to receive a feed from his brother to punch it in net for his first collegiate goal.

"Yeah, we drew it up just like that too," Cahoon joked. "We've just spent a long time talking to James about just getting the patience. Everyone in the building's yelling 'shoot, shoot' and he's got some other idea. Michael's probably the only one on the ice that had an idea of what he was thinking because he's been around him so much."

In a physical game where the two teams accounted for 97 penalty minutes, the power play unit of the Minutemen was a significant factor.

When the shots were even at 29, UMass was opportunistic with its chances when it had the man advantage and went 3-for-6 on the power play. The Minutemen were also able to limit the Black Bears when they were undermanned, holding them to 1-for-4.

Cahoon was impressed with how the Minutemen were able to stay poised amidst the frequent scuffles and penalty calls throughout the game.

"I give my guys pretty good grades, being able to keep themselves composed and be able to play forward," he said. "I think that allowed us to execute in a couple of the power play situations from that point on and take the game over."

UMass' 3-0-0 start to the season is its best since 2003-04 when the Minutemen won four consecutive games before finally suffering their first loss. UMass will look to match the strong start of nearly six years ago in a matchup against Providence in its first road game of the season on Friday night.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Junior Paul Dainton clears the puck from behind the net in UMass' win over Maine. The goaltender stopped 26 shots in the victory.

Peace Corps

26 UMASS Amherst alumni are currently serving overseas. Find out how you can join them!

Information Meeting:
Thursday, October 29
7:00 pm - 8:00 pm
508 Goodell Building
UMASS Amherst

Life is calling.
How far will you go?

Find out more at www.peacecorps.gov

What's your next step?

The next step of your higher education can be a degree more personal at Western New England College School of Law.

In our close-knit collegial environment you may:

- discuss constitutional law with faculty over coffee in the Court Café
- learn to be a team player in our Small Business Law Clinic
- handle real cases for real clients as an intern

With a law degree from our School of Law, you'll have the freedom to pursue career paths that extend in many directions. Our graduates are attorneys, judges, business executives, counter-terrorism experts, filmmakers, and even the Lt. Governor of Massachusetts.

Let your next step take you to
WESTERN NEW ENGLAND COLLEGE SCHOOL of LAW
SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS

law.wnec.edu
800-782-6665 or 413-782-1406

Envisioning tomorrow—educating today.

Your degree can't wait.

Discover the competitive advantage of a Saint Rose graduate degree.

Do you ever wonder if your degree is going to be enough in these challenging economic times? Do you want to be a force for positive change? The answer is simple — earn a Saint Rose graduate degree.

With 45 graduate degrees and 19 graduate certificates to choose from in education, business, computer information systems, and the arts and humanities, a Saint Rose graduate degree provides the employment credentials to boost your earning power and enrich your career. Apply today!

Passion. Knowledge. Purpose.
www.strose.edu/gradapply

School of Arts & Humanities
Art Education
Communications
English
History/Political Science
Music Education

School of Business
Accounting
MBA
Financial Planning (Advanced Certificate)
Not-For-Profit Management (Advanced Certificate)

School of Mathematics & Sciences
Computer Information Systems (also Advanced Certificate)
Internet Programming (Advanced Certificate)

School of Education
Adolescence Education (Grades 7–12)
Business/Marketing Education (K–12)
Childhood Education (Grades 1–6)
College Student Services Administration
Communication Sciences & Disorders
Curriculum and Instruction*
Early Childhood Education (Birth–Grade 2)
Educational Leadership and Administration
Educational Psychology
Educational Technology Specialist
Instructional Technology (Advanced Certificate)
Literacy*
Mental Health Counseling
Program Evaluation (Advanced Certificate)
School Counseling
School Psychology
Special Education*
Technology Education

Special Education Dual Certification Programs
Special Education/Adolescence Education
Special Education/Childhood Education

* Applicants must hold initial certification prior to applying.

Application Deadlines:
Spring Enrollment: October 15
Summer Enrollment: March 15
Fall Enrollment: June 1
For more information: 1-800-637-8556 www.strose.edu/gradapply

Information Sessions:
www.strose.edu/infosession

Campus Tours:
Call 1-800-637-8556 ext. 2.

The College of Saint Rose

UM in close contests

Roswess, Vaccaro try to replace sick DeSantis

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

If there's anything that the Massachusetts men's soccer team has learned during Atlantic 10 play, it's that one goal can make the difference between a win and a loss.

Four of the first five games of the A-10 schedule for UMass were decided by 1-0 scores. In two of those games, that goal went the Minutemen's way. That one goal also leaves little margin for error as, more often than not, they have missed out on having goals go their way, even with the best defense (0.54 goals-against average) in the A-10.

UMass (5-5-3, 2-3-0 A-10) is currently on the outside looking in of the A-10 Tournament picture as it is currently tied for ninth place with George Washington. The next four games are going to be critical to the Minutemen if they hope to earn a spot in this year's tournament.

However, one game separates them from postseason contention and all four games are against teams with a .500 record at best.

In order for that to happen, UMass won't only have to continue its solid defense, but be the first ones to strike. The Minutemen are undefeated when they are the first ones to score.

When the opposing team scores first, it has pretty much taken UMass out of the game. The only time the Minutemen avoided a loss after not scoring first was on Sept. 13 against Vermont when UMass forward Mark DeSantis netted his first tally of the season to give his team the tie.

Roswess gaining confidence

As a starting forward, Chris Roswess had the expectations of being a leading goal-scorer for the Minutemen.

His ability to become an offensive threat shined in both exhibition games against Adelphi and the Winstars when he tallied two goals in each of those games. However, he lacked the opportunities during the non-conference schedule to show his talent as he had one shot on goal during the non-conference schedule.

The start of the A-10 schedule has been a different story.

Even without a goal, Roswess has become an offensive threat just by his aggressiveness. In three of his last four games, Roswess finished the game with a shot on goal. He has played more confidently with the ball as he is starting to take more shots later in the season.

Roswess took eight shots between the Dayton and Temple games, which is as many shots as he took in UMass' first seven games combined.

Although the sophomore has yet to score his first goal as a Minuteman this season, he is starting to get more touches. If Roswess can become the scorer that UMass coach Sam Koch wants him to be, he could put his team back in contention for the A-10 Tournament.

Sophomore forward Chris Roswess races past two Colgate defenders earlier this year.

Midfielder Chris Vaccaro runs down the sideline with the ball against Colgate earlier this year. The junior has filled in on the attack for the sick Mark DeSantis, getting the start at forward against Rhode Island.

Vaccaro earns nod at forward

Ever since the start of the A-10 schedule, Koch has mixed and matched his lineups to find someone to make up for DeSantis' loss as he recovers from his illness.

The UMass coach didn't have to go deep to his bench to find someone to play Saturday's game against Rhode Island. Junior Chris Vaccaro earned his first start at forward after he started at midfield for six games.

Vaccaro is no stranger to starting. He had seven starts his freshman year and finished the season with a goal and two assists. After coming off the bench for six games, Vaccaro got back into the lineup at midfield against Saint Joseph's before getting moved to forward against the Rams.

The junior had his first and only opportunity at the goal during the 80th minute as he took a shot saved by URI goalkeeper Chris Pennock.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

Early lapse for defense becomes game winner

SOCCER from page 12

one in the second half.

Midfielder Bryant Kraft gave the Minutemen their best opportunity to score, registering two shots along with forward Chris Roswess, who had two shots, one on goal.

However, URI out shot UMass 13-8, including seven in the second half.

"Give them credit, they put us under pressure a lot, they didn't let us play, but I thought we had good chances behind their backs, especially in the second half," Koch said.

In the 84th minute, the Minutemen earned back-to-back corner kicks, and looked as if they were going to score. Koch substituted defender Dominic Skrajewski in for Chris Roswess in order to get more of his players forward to potentially tie the game. But UMass was unable to capitalize on either try, and even continued putting more shots in the box, but nothing could come of it.

"We're trying to get guys that are going to make things happen up top, and you've got to work off of the ball," Koch said. "Their back four was very high, so we had to get runs in behind them and we felt that we needed to get fresh legs in there, and that's what we tried to do."

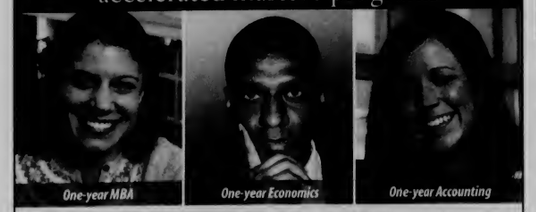
Senior forward Mark DeSantis did not see action in the game because of an illness. Koch tried to make up for his leading scorer's absence by putting some fresh faces on the attack.

Freshman Brodie Steigerwald and Morgan Brandso saw substantial time with DeSantis out on Saturday, as Koch wanted to find a combination that could generate offense.

"We aren't scoring a lot of goals, so we are trying to get some guys in there," Koch said. "I think Morgan had a good opportunity and with Mark out, unfortunately, it's like going through preseason again. We are trying to find that combination that's going to work, and unfortunately, we didn't get that today. It's out there, its just not working yet."

The Minutemen will host Duquesne noon this Friday at Rudd Field.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.



WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?

Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

HERBALIFE
Independent Distributor

Fun Part Time Work for College Students!
Be a Wellness Coach!
Host a Shake Party!
Full Training Included Call Zac 800-919-4922

Fast-track your success with accelerated master's programs

"I studied biology as an undergraduate. What I learned in this program will help me in my medical career."
—Liberty Elliott '06
MD Candidate
U. of Toledo, College of Medicine

"The program gave me the analytical and quantitative skills that I needed to become an energy analyst right after graduation."
—Will Chiume, MA '00
Director of Investment Promotion
Tanzania Investment Centre

"The small class setting really encourages class preparation and participation. The professors guided me through the material and acted as mentors and resources for all of us."
—Abby Paul '06, '07G
Assurance Associate
PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP

Visit us at the Graduate School Fair.

University of New Hampshire
The Whittemore School of Business and Economics
www.wsbe.unh.edu/grad
(603) 862-1367

THE BRYANT GRADUATE PROGRAMS

The Bryant University Graduate School of Business prepares students for success in their chosen professions. As a graduate, you will join an impressive alumni community that includes industry leaders across the country and around the world.

The Bryant MBA One-Year Program
Full-time, day program for all majors
- No professional experience necessary
- Distinguish yourself in a competitive job market
- Gain hands-on experience with the Business Practicum

The Bryant MBA Two-Year Program
Part-time, evening program for professionals from any field
- Develop high-level business skills for long-term career success
- Enter and progress through the program with a supportive team
- Build your network while enhancing your resume

The Bryant Master of Professional Accountancy (MPAc)
Full-time, day program for accounting majors
- Meets the 150 hour requirement for CPA licensure
- Complete in Summer/Fall, Summer/Summer, Fall/Spring, or Spring/Summer
- More than 40 top global, national and regional accounting firms recruit at Bryant

The Bryant Master of Science in Taxation (MST)
Part-time, evening program for tax professionals
- Build an expertise in all areas of taxation
- Network with tax executives and industry professionals
- Flexible scheduling options

Learn More About What Bryant University Graduate School Has to Offer
www.bryant.edu/gradschool • 401-232-6230

Bryant University
Graduate School of Business
1150 Douglas Pike
Smithfield, Rhode Island

UM drops two over weekend

Smith scores in OT loss to XU, undefeated Dayton too much

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

The last thing the Massachusetts women's soccer team needed this weekend was two losses against Atlantic 10 rivals Xavier and Dayton.

Fresh off a 3-2 victory over Rhode Island last week, the Minutewomen took to the road in an attempt to better their record for a shot at making the A-10 Tournament. Instead of taking strides forward, however, UMass fell farther behind, dropping two important games that might end up determining whether or not it makes the tournament. UMass has just two more games before the start of the tournament, which begins on November 5.

Xavier	2
UMass	1
Dayton	3
UMass	0

On Friday against the Musketeers (3-13-1, 3-6-1 A-10), the Minutewomen overcame an early 1-0 deficit with an unassisted goal from junior Therese Smith, but fell short in overtime 2-1. The goal was Smith's team-leading fifth of the season and marked her fourth-straight game of at least one point.

Taking a 1-1 tie into overtime, UMass gave up the game-winner just 38 seconds into the frame to Xavier's Brittany Green, who also scored in the 55th minute of regulation. Green's shot came from about 30 yards out, tipping off freshman goalkeeper Emily Cota's hands and into the net.

Redshirt junior Sydney Stoll and Smith once again led the team in shots with five and four, respectively. UMass had a 6-1 corner kick advantage in the game, failing to capitalize on any.

The Minutewomen then traveled to Dayton on Sunday to face the A-10 powerhouse Flyers for their final road game of the season. UMass could not achieve the upset it desired, dropping the match, 3-0. Following the loss, UMass dropped to 4-10-2 overall and 3-6-0 in the A-10. The Flyers remained as one of two undefeated teams in the country as they improved to 12-0-5 overall and 8-0-1 in the A-10.

Getting her first start in a few weeks was senior goalkeeper Lauren Luckey, who could not do much to stifle the high-powered Dayton offense. Luckey saved nine of the Flyer's 12 shots on goal, while Dayton goalie Katherine Boone turned aside the two shots the Minutewomen put on goal. In total, UMass was outshot 22-7, and took the disadvantage in corner kicks, 9-1.

Last weekend represented more of the same for UMass, which is now 0-3-2 in overtime periods and continues to get outdone on the offensive side of the ball. The Minutewomen have relied on Smith and Stoll all season long to provide the scoring, which has not let to recent success. Stoll leads UMass in shots against Dayton with three, but was not able to convert.

UMass would have been happy splitting the weekend with one win against Xavier, which still sits below the Minutewomen in the standings.

Now for UMass, it's crunch time. The Minutewomen will host George Washington (5-7-4 overall, 2-4-2 A-10) and Richmond (8-7-2 overall, 4-3-1 A-10) at home during Halloween weekend, and two losses would almost certainly prevent them from making the tournament. With just two matches remaining before the start of the A-10 Tournament, wins are as important as ever.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

UMass' Katie Kelly watches the ball earlier this year against Northeastern. Kelly had two goals and four assists in UMass's 10-1 rout over St. Louis.

UMass loses to UR, routs St. Louis 10–1

FIELD HOCKEY from page 12

were to go down with 10 or so minutes to go, and I actually think we played pretty good hockey when we made that move," Sowry said. "I was actually pretty pleased with how we played that situation and it was unfortunate not to get a corner or two."

Though the game added to a list of recent devastating losses for UMass, Sowry didn't give up on the rest of the season.

"Unfortunately, that's the way the cookie crumbles and we have to go back to the drawing board."

On Sunday, in a do-or-die situation, the Minutewomen released their offensive tension, exploding for 10 goals against the Billikens (1-14, 0-4 A-10).

In a 10 minute stretch midway through the first half, UMass put the game away early with four scores.

At the 7:13 mark, Kelly gave the Minutewomen a lead that was never challenged, scoring her seventh goal of the season. Nearly three minutes later, she fed Kate Henneman for an assist. Kelly had one of her better games for her career, ending the afternoon with two goals and four assists.

Saint Louis had its only goal scored by Lexie Lindblad, her second of the year, on a penalty corner in the second half.

Sowry was pleased with her squad after Sunday's game and felt that it was a much needed win to get UMass out of its funk and playing well going forward.

"Overall, it was an excellent team effort coming off a couple weeks of hard games," she said. "I was very happy, everyone got involved. We didn't have players looking to go one-on-one."

The Minutewomen will look to maintain their momentum this week when they play Dartmouth on Wednesday, before facing two more A-10 opponents in La Salle and West Chester on the weekend.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Havens benched in loss to No. 1 UR

FOOTBALL from page 12

pass of the game by Parker Miles who returned the interception 15 yards for a touchdown and a 27-3 Richmond lead.

UMass later pulled to within 15 yards after a safety on a poor snap on a Richmond punt and a 68-yard, six-play drive orchestrated by Woodward and his second touchdown pass of his career. Woodward finished 11-of-22 for 137 yards with one touchdown and two interceptions. His second interception came on the final play of the game.

The Minutemen offense was without some of its major weapons, possibly explaining why it struggled throughout the rain-soaked game. Tailback Tony Nelson, who missed most of last week's victory over New Hampshire, did not even make the trip with the team, and his back up Jon Hernandez who has helped the offense not miss a beat without Nelson, only played in the first half.

Hernandez rushed for 37 yards on 12 carries in the first half, but gave way to Chris Zardas in the second half in the backfield. It was uncertain why Hernandez did not return to the backfield in the second half, but was not believed to be due to an injury.

Richmond's Eric Ward proved that he is a dual-threat quarterback against UMass, but was more effective with his legs as he rushed for 62 yards on nine carries while he threw for 52 yards on 8-of-20 passing. While the Minutemen held Ward's arm at bay, they did give up some yardage on the ground beyond what Ward did with his legs. Forte rushed for 118 yards and two scores on 26 carries.

Game notes

The win for Richmond now gives them 16-straight victories, a streak that started last year with a win over UMass … the loss on the road keeps the Minutemen winless on the road at 0-3 in 2009 … UMass had five more first downs than Richmond in the game, gaining 18 first downs compared to Richmond's 13 … Tyler Holmes led the Minutemen with 17 tackles including a sack to go with his interception … UMass out-gained Richmond in total offensive yards 277-236 … The Minutemen converted higher percentages of third and fourth downs than the Spiders going 5-of-17 on third down compared to Richmond going 2-of-14 and converting 2-of-3 fourth downs compared to the Spiders 1-of-5 …

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

UMass' Emil Igwenagu holds on to a reception as he is tackled by a UNH defender last week. The sophomore had three catches for 38 yards at Richmond.

Annual

FIVE COLLEGE GRADUATE & PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS INFORMATION DAY

Wednesday, October 28, 2009
11 A.M. - 3 P.M.
The Student Union Ballroom,
UMass Amherst

Meet representatives from nationaland international graduate programs.
Explore theology, medicine, socail services, engineering and much more...

This event is free and open to the Western Massachusetts College Community.

UMASS AMHERST Career Services
Student Affairs & Campus Life

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com
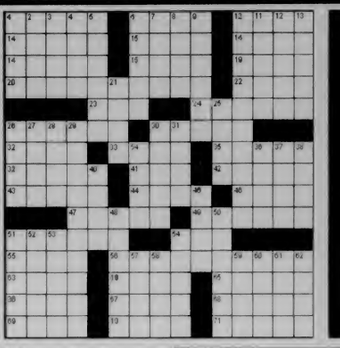
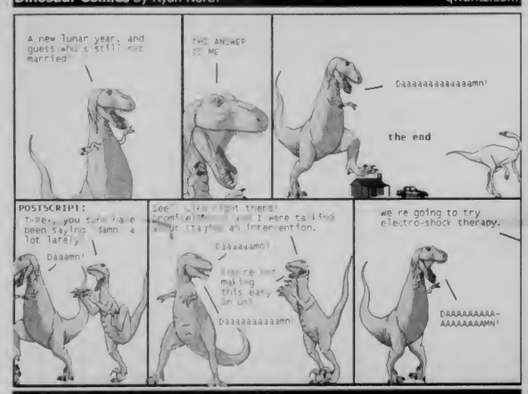
Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"



SUDOKU

	8	2		6		4	3
						1		9
1		7			4
		4					6
6				5			8
				8	6
5	7						1
						3
			1	4		6	9

Labrat by Richard Martelly

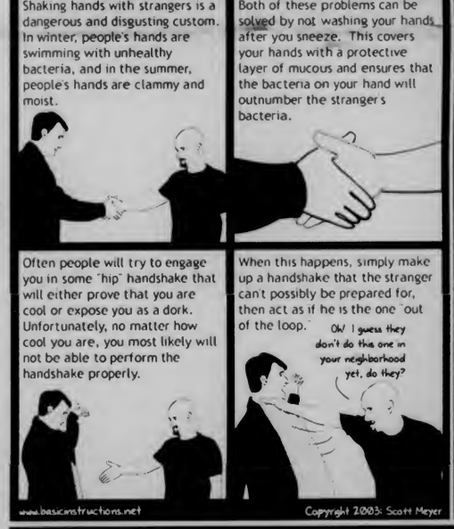


CROSSWORD

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees — mnftiu.cc



ACROSS
1. Also known as
6. Storage building
10. Droops
14. A division in a long poem
15. Yield
16. Former Italian currency
17. Sword
18. Traditional Indian music
19. As Soon As Possible
20. A store merchant
22. Snip
23. East southeast
24. Probable
26. A suit of playing cards
30. What some poems do
32. Skin disease
33. Jacob's brother
35. Type of Japanese animation
39. Part of a barrel
41. Identity cards
42. A young person
43. Hollowed out
44. A male figure in Polynesian mythology
46. Gestures of assent
47. Cowboy sport
49. Official seal
51. A type of inflorescence
54. Type of tree
55. In a little while (archaic)
56. Insightful
63. A discharge of lightning
64. Seed coat
65. An impressive display
66. Object of worship
67. Capital of Latvia
68. Stop
69. Declare untrue
70. A period of difficulty
71. Temporary canvas dwellings

DOWN
1. Expert flyers
2. Whip
3. Within
4. At the peak
5. An electrical receptacle
6. Talus
7. Pile
8. The boundary of a surface
9. In a heartfelt way
10. Loosening
11. Corridor
12. Chalice
13. Foolish
21. Nature of being
25. Islamic prayer leader
26. Chop up
27. Prefix indicating outer
28. A Freudian stage
29. Worshipfully
30. Wireless audio
31. Outer membranous covering
34. Location
36. Knowing a secret (2 words)
37. Style
38. Formerly (archaic)
40. Ancient Biblical kingdom
45. Small island
48. Leave
50. A forceful consequence
51. Fanatical
52. Positive electrode
53. Intestine
54. Acclaim
57. A famous Amercan canal
58. Manipulates by dishonest means
59. Oak or birch
60. Modern day Persia
61. Immense
62. Visual organs

UMASS AMHERST
New Schedule for Winter Session
Earn credits during break!
Online classes begin: December 21, 2009
On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010
View Classes and Register now on SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

Basic Instructions — How to Shake Hands — By Scott Meyer

A child of five would understand this. Send someone to fetch a child of five.

Groucho Marx

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends, From $89. Includes Hotel, Bus, and clubs. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

SPRING BREAK 2010

Spring Break 2010 sell trips, earn cash, and go free! Call for group discounts. Best prices guranteed! Info/reservations 1-800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
When the game comes down to two cups, you just can't bounce.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
In a way, aren't we all just malnourished orphans in a terrifying war zone?

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
The Climate Bill may fluctuate by variable degrees. Isn't that hot?

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
It's not size that matters; it's how many papers you got.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
The glass may be half full, but how much of that is backwash?

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Enrcoachment by the defense is a penalty we all should respect.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Your forays into the world of PCP will not bring about a social networking company called "Lacedbook."

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Moccasins should not make you imitate bad decisions.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Acoustic guitar will only get you so far. Acoustic spoons are what really get the chicks goin'.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Every once in a while the world just needs to stop. Hammertime.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
If you're still Undecided, you could always BDIC in infomercials starring John Basedow.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Success only truly occurs when your goal is represented by a Klondike Bar.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass beats Black Bears

Marcou's team up for goal, both teams see penalty box

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

With 11 minutes, 19 seconds left in the game, the Massachusetts hockey team held a 5-2 lead on Maine. The Minutemen had been ahead for virtually the entire game and moments earlier, had gone up by three.

It was a comfortable lead by any stretch of the imagination. But the eight men in the penalty box and chippy play on the ice told a different story.

UMass	5
Maine	3

On the night, the two teams accumulated 26 minor penalties, one five-minute major and four 10-minute game misconducts, totaling 97 penalty minutes.

Play was civil for the first period and half, but that all changed after a hit on Maine freshman Adam Shemansky. UMass defenseman Martin Nolet crushed Shemansky into the boards, drawing a rise from the crowd. The situation turned serious, though, as Shemansky remained on the ice for several minutes and was eventually taken out on a stretcher. Nolet was called for a five-minute contact to the head boarding penalty on the play.

"I was probably looking for the two minutes instead of the five. But at the end of the day, all we're looking for is if the kid's alright," UMass coach Don Cahoon said of the hit.

The referees and Maine coach Tim Whitehead, though, disagreed.

"I saw it on tape, it was certainly deserving of a five [minute penalty] in a game, no doubt," Whitehead said.

From that point on, Nolet was a marked man on the ice and for every shove after the whistle Maine gave, UMass responded in full. When the dust had settled, UMass (3-0-0, 2-0-0 Hockey East) came away on top 5-3.

"Those disjointed games are a challenge in themselves, trying to keep focus," Cahoon said. "Losing players breaks up combinations. It becomes a little bit more difficult on the bench and your team can lose focus and make a lot of bad mistakes as a result."

The Minutemen wasted no time getting their first goal of the night. Just 1:37 into the game, on a Black Bears (1-4-0, 0-1-0 HEA) elbowing penalty, James Marcou found Casey Wellman, who crossed towards the slot and fired a shot past Maine goalkeeper Scott Darling for the first score of the game.

See HOCKEY on page 8

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

After a hit to Maine's Adam Shemansky led to him being carted of the ice on a stretcher, the contest between the Minutemen and the Black Bears was full of tension resulting in a combined 97 minutes spent in the penalty boxes.

Dainton strong in net for UM

Saves 26 in victory over Black Bears, keeps team perfect 3-0

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

A brother-to-brother connection provided the key score while Paul Dainton played efficiently in goal Friday night, to skate the Massachusetts hockey team past Maine 5-3 at the Mullins Center.

In the first period, the Minutemen (3-0-0, 2-0-0 Hockey East) got off to a fast start, netting three goals to force the Black Bears (1-4-0, 0-1-0 HEA) to play from behind all night.

Though Maine scored only one goal in the frame due to a breakdown in the UMass zone, UMass coach Don Cahoon felt the score could have been flip-flopped if not for Dainton.

"I thought Maine carried the play there in the first period with the exception of our power play execution and we could've been in trouble if [Dainton] didn't give the type of goaltending that he gave us," Cahoon said after the game. "Instead of going off the ice with a 3-1 win, we could've gone off the ice losing by two."

Dainton continued to be a strong presence in net throughout the game, swatting away 26 Maine shots. Despite allowing three goals, the junior goalkeeper never allowed the Black Bears' to gain momentum. Even when Maine climbed back within one score midway through the second period, Dainton held off the Maine attack long enough for a Marcou to Marcou goal to provide separation for UMass.

Though junior forward James

See DAINTON on page 8

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

UMass' Julian Talley looks downfield against UNH. The wideout caught three passes for 38 yards at Richmond.

Road woes contiue, Minutemen fall to UR

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

As if battling the pouring rain and the No. 1 team in the country wasn't enough, the Massachusetts football team made things even more difficult by turning the ball over seven times and giving up the ball again on a botched punt.

Those turnovers put UMass (4-3, 2-2 Colonial Athletic Association) in a 20-3 hole at halftime, a hole they did not overcome as they fell 34-12 to Richmond Saturday evening.

Richmond	34
UMass	12

"We took ourselves right out of the ball game and didn't even have a chance to win," UMass coach Kevin Morris said.

The No. 14 Minutemen led the Spiders (7-0, 5-0 CAA) after Armando Cuko hit a 33-yard field goal on the first drive of the game. The defense came up strong, as it was the entire game, on the next drive with a three-and-out, but Richmond's offense got the ball back quickly after Kyle Havens threw his first of four interceptions on the day, giving the Spiders the ball on the UMass 27-yard line.

Richmond capitalized to take a 7-3 lead, and then extended the lead to 14-3 in the second quarter after a Havens fumble was recovered by the Spiders' Justin Rodgers and Justin Forte rushed the ball in from 17 yards out.

UMass was stalled again on its next offensive possession and the Spiders tacked on a field goal after a low snap on a punt resulted in punter Caleb Violette being tackled for a 16-yard loss and a turnover on downs. However, the defense held its ground on the drive, holding Richmond to the field goal and then did the same on the last possession of the half, despite being deep in its own territory.

The defense continued to dominate in the second half, but the numerous turnovers by the offense were too much for even the stellar play by the defense to overcome. On Richmond's first three drives of the second half, UMass' defense stopped them on fourth down including an interception in the endzone by Tyler Holmes.

"The defense played extremely hard, we just kept them out there all night," Morris said after the game. "They had a lot of short fields to work with and I'm really proud of the guys, they really kept their heads up and really played hard."

On the next drive, backup quarterback Scott Woodward replaced Havens, who finished 10-of-25 for 78 yards, but found similar trouble. Woodward was picked off on his first

See FOOTBALL on page 10

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Jon Hernandez rushes against UNH last week. The sophomore rushed for 37 yards against No. 1 Richmond.

Koch and Co. drop to URI

Defense strong in loss to Rams, offense continues its struggles

By David Brisch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team executed the way they always have on Saturday afternoon.

In rainy conditions, the Minutemen (5-5-1, 2-3-0 Atlantic 10), used a strong defensive game plan in order to keep an offensive-minded team from generating multiple goals. Unfortunately for UMass, its offense got off to a slow start, and couldn't capitalize on a number of opportunities in the second half, as the Minutemen fell to Rhode Island, 1-0, at Rudd Field.

URI	1
UMass	0

"In the second half, we had the opportunities, [but] we let down for that one moment in the first half and it cost us, and that's the difference in the game," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

In the 12th minute of play, URI forward Irie Lindroos headed home what proved to be the winning goal of the match on a feed from Andrew Ruiz that was played in on a free kick from Erkko Puranen.

"I don't know if we thought the ball was going out, but the bottom line is that we didn't challenge for the header, and it was on the back post," Koch said. "For a moment we relaxed, and we can't, and I don't know if the guys that were on the back post when they crossed it back thought it was out of play, but it doesn't matter. We just turned off for that split second, and that's all it took."

After the Rams scored, the Minutemen tightened up on defense, allowing no corner kicks in the first half and just

See SOCCER on page 9

MAXWELL SPARK/COLLEGIAN

Mark DeSantis looks to beat a defender against Colgate earlier this season. The senior has been out as of late due to illness, weakening UMass' offense.

Minutewomen snap 4-game losing streak

On the outside looking in of A-10 Tournament picture

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

After suffering four-straight losses, three to Atlantic 10 opponents, and being held scoreless in three games, the Massachusetts field hockey team let all of its frustration spill out Sunday in a must-win stomping of Saint Louis by a score of 10-1.

UMass	10
St. Louis	1
Richmond	1
UMass	0

The favorites to win the A-10 this year after claiming the conference the past two seasons, UMass scheduled to host this year's tournament. The No. 16 Minutewomen (10-7, 1-3 A-10), however, were on the outside looking in for the A-10 tournament when they dropped their third-straight conference game, losing 1-0 on Friday at home against Richmond.

Through the first half and the beginning of the second half, the two teams were deadlocked in a scoreless game. In the 53rd minute, the Spiders' (10-7, 4-0 A-10) received a goal from Katelin Peterson, providing enough scoring for Richmond against a struggling UMass offense.

The Minutewomen amassed only one shot on goal for the game and suffered a major loss when junior captain and leading scorer Katie Kelly exited the contest after receiving a yellow card with 10 minutes, 40 seconds remaining in the second half. The 10-minute penalty forced UMass to continue down a player until there was just 40 seconds left in the game, making it even more difficult for the Minutewomen to assemble a comeback.

"It was frustrating that I wasn't able to be out there to help my teammates and I feel like I let them down," Kelly said after Friday's game.

With 9:04 left, UMass coach Justine Sowry pulled goalie Alesha Widdall and inserted Callie Sweigart as a kicking back to place an extra attacker on the field. Following the move, the Minutewomen were able to move the ball into the Spiders' zone but couldn't find the tying goal.

"That was going to be our plan if we

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 10

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 56 LOW: 40 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2009

UM director to debut WWI documentary

By Michael Phillis
Collegian Staff

Before President Woodrow Wilson gained congressional approval for America's entrance into the First World War, more than 2,500 U.S. ambulance service volunteers had already been in France to help in the fight against Germany.

Starting in November, there will be a PBS documentary on the American ambulance volunteers.

The documentary will air on two-thirds of the nation's public television airwaves entitled "Model T's to War."

"Model T's to War," written by retired UMass biology professor Ed Klekowski, focuses on the Model T and its use by Americans in France on the Western front during World War I.

"Most of them, not all of them, were either entering college or were in the middle of their undergraduate career," said Klekowski.

Klekowski explains that many American volunteers were well educated ,and sometimes, the overeager ones even paid their own way to travel to France in order to volunteer for service.

The Model T acted as the ambulance for an American force that often had neither driving experience nor medical knowledge.

Ford's Model T was cheap, good at driving off road and had a high ground clearance, which was helpful when navigating potholes and obstacles on the wartime roads.

Klekowski tried to gain an understanding of what it was like for these American volunteers who went over before the country was officially at war.

"Driving is fairly new still," he said.

Klekowski added that, "Throughout the whole war, horses were probably the main means of transportation."

The Americans first served in a town in the northeast of France called Pont-a-Mousson.

When a soldier was wounded, they would either walk or, if they were too injured, carried to dressing stations for rudimentary medical assistance.

From these dressing stations, American volunteers used the Model T to transport injured soldiers to nearby wartime hospitals.

The Americans were always in range of German artillery and some Americans died as a result of the hostilities.

According to Klekowski, nine and 10 million military had died in World War I.

Klekowski explained that after the success of the ambulance service at Pont-a-Mousson, Americans began volunteering at the battle of Verdun.

The documentary said that 350,000 people died in the struggle for control of the town.

Elizabeth Wilda, producer and director of UMass media relations, filmed and edited the documentary in high definition.

"Model T's to War," she said took two, one-month stays in France filming over a two-year period to complete.

According to Wilda, the documentary's national release has happened at an opportune time.

"It seems so timely with wars going on today," she said.

She added that, "Supposedly [World War I] was the war to end all wars."

She added, "It's kind of sad it wasn't."

Ed Klekowski's wife, Libby Klekowski, conducted much of the historical research for the project.

According to the documentary, the leader of the volunteer American ambulance service was a Harvard professor named A. Piatt Andrew.

It was said in the film that Andrew knew that because the United States was not yet involved in the war, much of the funds had to be raised by the volunteer outfit itself.

"Recognizing the importance of publicity, [Andrew] commissioned an hour long film documenting the heroic activities of the American ambulance volunteers," said the documentary.

Funds began pouring into the effort. W.K. Vanderbilt, a member of the wealthy Vanderbilt family went to France in order to gain publicity for the American volunteers.

The Model T was meant to carry three people on stretchers in the back of the car.

During especially difficult periods, however, the car would transport up to seven injured people, in addition to the driver.

Three on stretchers in the back, two sitting next to the driver, and possibly, two more men laying on the fenders.

Despite all its use in the war effort, Ford motor company had made the volunteers pay retail price for the vehicles.

Ed Klekowski conducted much of his research by reading the personal memoirs of the

See DOCUMENTARY on page 2

Sponsored by UMass, the "Dinner on Us" program provides both local and student families with free dinners and workshops designed to better parenting skills.

Parents receive support from UM dinner, workshop event

By Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

Jessica Jazz Dautruche, an undergraduate communications major at the University of Massachusetts, thought she may have had to drop out of school when she found out she was pregnant.

Dautruche said, "When I became pregnant many people expected me to drop out, but I heard about the Dinner on Us through the Amherst Family Center, and Joanne Levenson [one of the directors of the program] said she could get me an internship."

Dautruche views the "Dinner on Us" program as a way to support young single mothers like her: "It helps to be around people going through the exact same thing as me, and it is a support system."

Every week undergraduate student parents, graduate student parents and parents from the Amherst community gather for a free dinner in the Student Union, located on the UMass campus, to find ways of more effective parenting.

These events are run by the "Dinner on Us" program offered by the Office of Family Resources. According to Joanne Levenson, child-care director, "Dinner on Us" is a support program for campus families with young children."

The events, said Levenson, occur in three parts beginning with a free dinner in the Earthfoods café for the families, followed by play time in the Cape Cod Lounge for the children while the parents attend a workshop on parenting.

The program has different guest speakers every week, who are usually local experts, such as professors of psychology and specialists on child care.

"This program is unique to UMass," said Levenson. "No other campus has a program like it."

This Monday Oct. 26 workshop was slotted for "Positive Parenting."

The speaker a Certified Positive Discipline Parent Educator could not attend due to a family emergency. However Suzanne Kelly, a program director with a Masters in education who is currently being trained as a facilitator for new mothers, adjusted on the fly and filled in as the guest speaker.

She opened the workshop up with a discussion. "What do you seek to learn from this workshop?"

Michelle Dunch, who has a two and half year old son, said she hopes to learn new "techniques" on positive parenting.

One example that came up was how to put a child in a car seat. Some parents offered strategies that have worked. Erin Doherty, a frequent attendee of "Dinner on Us" spoke of how she turned getting into the car seat into a competition between her and her children.

Others mentioned that giving positive reinforcement when the child cooperates.

Kelly then cut into the discussion to emphasize a point, writing on the white board the following statement. "Positive parenting is the use of specific positive statements about behavior you want and long term characteristics you are looking for [as a parent]."

"It was hard to find a schedule to work around being a mother," said Dautruche.

She added that, "People think they cannot do it. But programs such as this allowed me be a mother while still attending school."

Dautruche felt it was imperative to spread the information about the program to other new mothers: "It is important for the University to tell people about this program."

"She is amazing," said Levenson. "She had her baby the eighteenth and came back the next Monday."

"There is no person to talk to if you are pregnant on campus, which is part of the reason why when students get pregnant they drop out," Dautruche said.

There are no current studies or statistics available recording the number of student parents or students who drop out due to their pregnancies or children, but both Dautruche and Levenson had said this would be a topic worth looking into.

UMass undergraduates also volunteer in the programs offered by "Dinner on Us."

The America Reads Program provides some students who specialize in teaching early literacy.

The goal of the program is to promote literacy in young children.

The program provides work study to those students involved in the program, though a student does not have to be a part of The America Reads Program to volunteer.

Residents of the Amherst community were also welcome to "Dinner on Us."

With one resident having said, "This is our third time here, the first two times weren't that interesting, but we think this week's topic should be more worthwhile."

With the holidays approaching, the program will also be running a special event for Halloween. Titled, "Little Folks Halloween," the first part of the event starts on Oct. 31 from 10:00am-10:45am in the Student Union Crafts Center.

Parents and other Caregivers will accompany the children while the children create Halloween themed artwork.

From 11a.m.-12 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge parents and their children can attend a concert and sing along with local musician Roger Linckneil.

Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu

Cookies for cancer awareness

Freshman John Adams Tower resident Ryan Carter pours sprinkles onto a pink frosted cookie as part of the cluster's event to promote Breast Cancer Awareness on Oct. 26, officially known as Pink Ribbon

ARTS & LIVING

Halloween classic opens again

South Hadley Cone Again Players perform "Rocky Horror Picture Show" the old-fashioned way.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen swim past Army

The Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team pulled out a win while the Minutemen struggled and dropped their meet after defeating BU last weekend.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Chris Amoroso says that, even though networks finally got something right with Hulu.com, they've still managed to screw it up by proposing a subscription

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Log on to DailyCollegian.com to view the photo slideshow of Jay Z's mind-blowing performance last night

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVX
ISSUE 34

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Prowse
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness
COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

Pumpkin painting in Southwest

Southwest Area Government invited students to paint small pumpkins in the Hampden Gallery in preparation of Halloween, as well as to promote student involvement with their area government.

A popular video on Youtube.com lands a South Carolina man back in jail for his failure to uphold rules of his probation

By Anthony Colarossi
The Orlando Sentinel

TAVARES, Fla. On the YouTube video-sharing Web site, Edward Muscare is known by his user name "Edarem."

On the website, his recordings show an older man lip syncing and singing songs such as Roy Orbison's "Oh, Pretty Woman."

Many of them have drawn hundreds of thousands of page views.

Muscare's online fame, though, helped land him back in jail.

Muscare's videos have become so viral that law enforcement in Florida and South Carolina, where he has been living, became aware of his online presence.

The former Lake County, Fla., resident was jailed for violating probation and for not complying with conditions related to his status as a registered sex offender.

One of those conditions was that he not use the Internet or other computer services, according to court records.

Now, some of Muscare's YouTube followers are coming to his defense by posting messages online.

In the messages Muscare's group of supporters are urging "Freedom for Edward Muscare" and "Libertad para Edarem."

One Muscare supporter has posted a lengthy message addressed to Lake Circuit Judge Mark Hill on YouTube.

"I am writing you on behalf of an individual who is now in jail for posting videos of his dogs and advice on how to scratch your back ..." the YouTube user wrote.

"If there is any justice in the world Edward Muscare will be liberated."

Muscare, 77, has an arraignment scheduled for Monday.

His case ultimately will go before Hill, who sentenced Muscare two years ago for failure to comply with sex-offender reporting requirements.

Court records show Muscare avoided a five-year prison sentence when he pleaded guilty in 200.

Muscare had received five years probation with special conditions of sex-offender probation.

He had apparently moved out of his Lady Lake, Fla., home and up to a new residence in Orangeburg, S.C.

However, Muscare had failed to notify officials about the move as required.

In a letter sent to Hill at that time, Muscare wrote, "In the past 21 years, the only law I broke was leaving Florida in December 2005 without notifying the Sheriff's Office."

In the letter he also had wrote, "And I did that only because of threats to my life and property."

Muscare declined a request for an interview Friday at the Lake County Jail.

His criminal problems in Central Florida date back to 1986, when The Orlando Sentinel identified Muscare as a former Kansas City television host who was arrested in San Diego on charges that he molested a 14-year-old Orange County, Fla., boy while he was in Orlando.

In Kansas City he worked as a late-night television show host known as "Uncle Ed."

He later worked for a station in San Diego.

In 1987, Muscare pleaded no contest to sexual battery, according to records with the Ninth Judicial Circuit State Attorney's Office.

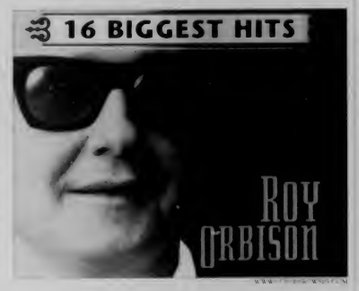
He was sentenced to 2 1/2 years in prison followed by 10 years of supervised probation.

Records show he also was ordered not be alone with children under 14, state attorney's spokeswoman Danielle Tavernier said.

In 1998, he was accused of failing to promptly register as a sex offender after coming off of his probation.

And then in 2006, he was hit was the similar charge of failure to comply when he made the move out of state.

Muscare's history has not fazed his online fans though.



Below his "Oh, Pretty Woman" video, one fan wrote in typical unpunctuated Web-speak, "edarem you look like a cross between uncle fester and doc out of back to the future, and maybe a bit of boris karloff thrown in the mix. you are a true youtube legend and will be for some time to come."

Another user wrote, "this guy is one cool grandpa."

At least one supporter, the one with the lengthy note addressed to Hill, suggested that Muscare might not have controlled what videos appeared online.

His defense lawyer, Jeremy Pykosz, an assistant public defender who just received the case, said that could be a defense, but he must review the facts first.

"It could be a good argument. ... Someone could take different videos and post them online without their knowledge or permission," he said.

Edward Muscare became a Youtube sensation with his recordings of the song "Oh, Pretty Woman," by Roy Orbison, as seen above.

WWI film reveals use of Ford Model-T cars in war effort

DOCUMENTARY from page 1

American ambulance volunteers written during their time at war.

"I like to read original memoirs from the time rather than synopsis written ten years ago," said Klekowski.

The memoirs hold a prominent place in the documentary.

To commemorate the debut of the film, members of the UMass theater department read the memoirs and narrated portions of the documentary.

Klekowski said, "The first time I ever heard someone reading for us, I didn't know what that person would do. I was stunned."

He added, "I had read the same thing at home... this guy reads this and my mouth falls off. I guess that's the difference being a professional."

The National Archives was a main source of archival video footage for the project, according to Klekowski.

A VCR sat on a table next to Klekowski's desk where he could review original footage for the project.

This interest in early American efforts in World War I will be the subject of Klekowski's next documentary.

He said he is hoping to complete his next work by the spring of 2010.

"This new one we are doing is on the Yankee division, it was made up of all the national guards of the New England states," Klekowski said.

Congress officially declared war on Germany on April 6th, 1917, and because America had a small army of about 120,000, according to Klekowski, National Guard units were activated and sent to the front.

"This is the first full division from America on the western front," he said.

The video, Klekowski said, "Really gives you the inside of what [the war] was about."

Michael Phillis can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu

Author reveals top 10 life-saving foods

Dave Grotto provides list of healthy foods to ward off illness

By Julie Knapp
Mother Nature Network (mnn.com)

Buried in the controversy over whether to get the H1N1 vaccination (or even where to find one), is, that one of the best ways to ward off any flu is to build up your overall immunity.

Dave Grotto, author of "101 Foods That Could Save Your Life," reveals 10 foods that provide top doses of the vitamins and nutrients you need to protect and defend against illness.

MUSHROOMS

Mushrooms used to get overlooked as a health food, but they possess two big weapons you need this flu season.

Selenium, which helps white blood cells produce cytokines that clear sickness.

Beta glucan, an antimicrobial type of fiber, helps activate "superhero" cells that find and destroy infections.

FRESH GARLIC

Strong smelling foods like garlic can stink out sickness thanks to the phytochemical allicin, an antimicrobial compound.

A British study found that people taking allicin supplements suffered 46 percent fewer colds and recovered faster from the ones they did get.

So start cooking with it daily —experts recommend two fresh cloves a day.

WILD-CAUGHT SALMON

In a recent study, participants with the lowest levels of vitamin D were about 40 percent more likely to report a recent respiratory infection than those with higher levels of vitamin D.

Increase your intake with salmon, a 3.5-ounce serving provides 360 IU – some experts recommend as much as 800 to 1000 IU each day.

TEA

Researchers at Harvard University found that drinking five cups of black tea a day quadrupled the body's immune defense system after two weeks, probably because of theanine.

Tea also contains catechins, including ECGC, which act like a cleanup crew against free radicals.

Grotto suggests drinking one to three cups of black, green or white tea every day.

YOGURT

The digestive tract is one of your biggest immune organs, so keep disease-causing germs out with probiotics and prebiotics, found in naturally fermented foods like yogurt.

One serving a day labeled with "live and active cultures" will enhance immune function according to a study from the University of Vienna in Austria.

DARK CHOCOLATE

Nutrition experts agree that dark chocolate deserves a place in healthy diets, and a study published in the British Journal of Nutrition says it can boost your immunity, too.

High doses of cocoa support T-helper cells, which increase the immune system's ability to defend against infection.

Sweet!

OYSTERS

Zinc is critical for the immune system — it rallies the troupes, or white blood cells, to attack bacteria and viruses like a flu or cold.

One medium oyster provides nearly all of the zinc you need for a day, while a portion of six gives you more than five times the recommended amount.

ALMONDS

Heart-healthy almonds boast immune-boosting antioxidant vitamin E, which can reduce your chance of catching colds and developing respiratory infections according to researchers at Tufts University.

You'll need more than a serving of almonds for your daily dose though, so try fortified cereals, sunflower seeds, turnip greens and wheat germ, too.

STRAWBERRIES

Even though vitamin C-rich foods (hello oranges!) are probably the first thing you think of when you feel a cold coming. Grotto says the illness-preventing power of the antioxidant is debatable.

That said, some studies show it can reduce the intensity and duration of cold and flu, so it's worth a try.

One cup of strawberries provides 160 percent of your daily needs.

SWEET POTATO

Beta-carotene improves your body's defenses.

It's instrumental in the growth and development of immune system cells and helps neutralize harmful toxins.

Sweet potatoes and other orange foods like carrots, squash, pumpkin, egg yolks and cantaloupe are top sources.

Researchers say increasing intake of wild salmon, as seen here, can help prevent respiratory ailments, as well as a myriad of other diseases.

Student justice program becomes a target

Journalism students at Northwestern under scrutiny following controversial investigation

By Jeff Long
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — After spending three years investigating the conviction of a Harvey, Ill., man accused of killing a security guard with a shotgun blast in 1978, journalism students at Northwestern University say they have uncovered new evidence that proves his innocence.

Their efforts helped win a new day in court for Anthony McKinney.

McKinney has spent the past 31 years in prison for the slaying.

But as they prepare for that crucial hearing, prosecutors seem to have focused on the students and teacher who led the investigation for the school's internationally acclaimed Innocence Project.

The Cook County state's attorney subpoenaed the students' grades, notes and recordings of witness interviews, the class syllabus and even e-mails they sent to each other and to professor David Protess of the university's Medill School of Journalism.

Northwestern has turned over documents related to on-the-record interviews with witnesses that students conducted, as well as copies of audio and videotapes, Protess said.

But the school is fighting the effort to get grades and grading criteria, evaluations of student performance, expenses incurred during the inquiry, the syllabus, e-mails and unpublished student memos, as well as interviews not conducted on the record, or where witnesses weren't willing to be recorded.

"I don't think it's any of the state's business to know the state of mind of my students," Protess said.

He added that, "Prosecutors should be more concerned with the wrongful conviction of Anthony McKinney than with my students' grades."

Prosecutors declined to discuss their request for grade reports, but a spokeswoman said the subpoena is about seeking truth in the case.

"They have material that's relevant to the ongoing investigation, and we should be entitled to that information," said spokeswoman Sally Daly.

Don Craven, acting executive director of the Illinois Press Association, said the request seems harassing at best, and at worst looks like an attempt to discredit the work done by the Innocence Project to ferret out wrongful convictions.

"They're either trying to undermine the investigation, or they're trying to undermine the entire project," Craven said.

Turning over such a wide range of information, he said, would cripple the Innocence Project's ability to get witnesses to cooperate in the future.

Richard O'Brien, the lawyer representing the university, said it's an unwarranted fishing expedition that focuses on the messenger — rather than on the possibility that an innocent man has spent more than three decades behind bars.

Prosecutors, he said, "seem to be peeved" at the Innocence Project for uncovering a wrongful conviction.

Former student Sarah Forte said a prosecutor implied to her that students might have been pressured to find evidence that McKinney was innocent or else they would get poor grades in the class.

"I think it's frustrating and sad," said Forte, who graduated from Northwestern in 2006.

Her journalism work at the school inspired her to join the Southern Center for Human Rights, which conducts similar investigations.

Since the Innocence Project was founded in 1999, Protess and his students have uncovered evidence that helped free 11 innocent men, according to a class Web site.

The cases included the Ford Heights Four, exonerated of the 1978 murders of a suburban couple.

Another case centered on Anthony Porter, who came within 50 hours of execution in 1998 before he won a reprieve.

Examination of the Porter case by an investigative reporting class taught by Protess helped trigger the Innocence Project's creation.

Those investigations and others spurred headlines and policy changes.

Former Illinois Gov. George Ryan, now serving time in federal prison on corruption charges, had credited the project's investigations with helping him decide to halt executions in January 2000.

Before leaving office in 2003, he granted clemency to all death row inmates.

The project's most recent effort focuses on McKinney and on a crime that happened Sept. 15, 1978.

Donald Lundahl, a security guard in south suburban Harvey, was sitting in his car about 9:30 p.m. when someone with a shotgun killed him.

Later that evening, police saw McKinney, 18, running down the street near the crime scene.

He told them he was fleeing gang members.

Initially held for questioning and released, McKinney remained a prime suspect.

Another Harvey teenager told police he saw McKinney kill Lundahl.

After a lengthy interrogation, McKinney signed a confession and was charged with first-degree murder.

The Innocence Project began to examine the case in October 2003 at the request of McKinney's younger brother.

The effort continued over three academic years, until June 2006.

In November 2008, Protess laid out on the Project's Web site what his students reportedly uncovered.

They tracked down the witness who originally fingered McKinney for police.

He recanted his story in a videotaped interview, saying police beat him until he made up the details about McKinney's involvement, according to the Web site.

The students also interviewed two admitted gang members said to have chased McKinney on the night of the murder; they corroborated his story.

"Angry that Anthony had recently damaged their car, they admitted pursuing him after a chance encounter," Protess wrote on the Project's Web site.

Seven others who were identified as witnesses told the students about a man who they said admitted years ago to the killing.

The students eventually tracked him down.

In a videotaped interview, the man said he was present during the murder and that McKinney was not there.

The reputed witness identified two people he claimed were the real killers, according to the Innocence Project investigation.

Protess said his students talked to one, now living in Racine, Wis., who denied involvement.

The other, jailed on an unrelated crime, declined to talk to them.

In 2006, the students took their findings to the Center on Wrongful Convictions at the Northwestern law school's Bluhm Legal Clinic.

A year ago, it filed a petition on McKinney's behalf for a hearing in Cook County Circuit Court.

The state's attorney did not seek to have the petition dismissed and agreed that a hearing should be held.

So far, a date has not been set.

A judge will decide whether the evidence warrants a new trial for McKinney.

Prosecutors argue in court documents that they need the school information to make "an accurate assessment of witnesses' credibility and other essential issues."

Prosecutors had also said that their own investigation uncovered credibility problems with the people interviewed by the students.

Because government investigations are regulated by strict ethical and disclosure guidelines.

A full explanation of the school's procedures is necessary to ensure justice, prosecutors said in court papers.

The prosecutors had stated in the court papers that, "Without full disclosure, the potential for great abuse will increase as private entities conduct their own investigations," the court documents said.

Prosecutors also have asserted that the Medill students and their professor are not journalists and, therefore, not protected from revealing sources and turning over notes under the Illinois Reporter's Privilege Act.

It's a contention that John Lavine, dean of the journalism school, called false and irrelevant.

Said Lavine, "They took reporting to the Nth degree."

Northwestern University journalism students claim to have found new evidence proving the innocence of Anthony McKinney, who has spent 31 years in prison for murder.

Lawmakers claim to be wary of President Obama's plan to dismantle failing institutions

By Kevin G. Hall
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON — The chairman of a key congressional panel Monday scaled back important parts of the Obama administration's plan to dismantle financial institutions that are deemed "too big to fail."

Lawmakers won't give the independent Federal Reserve as many powers as President Barack Obama had proposed, according to a senior congressional staffer, sharing details with McClatchy Newspapers on the condition of anonymity because the emerging bill hasn't been made public. The measure, which tackles some of the thorniest issues of bank oversight, is intended to rewrite seven decades of financial regulation.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., the chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, worked over the weekend and throughout Monday to draft the legislation. It would provide the government with first-ever authority to shut down large globally interconnected financial institutions.

Under this authority, jokingly referred to as "Death Panels for Banks," the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. would oversee the dismantling of large financial firms much as it does now when it intervenes in commercial banks that are at risk of insolvency.

Decisions about which institutions are so large that they pose a systemwide risk and must be monitored would be made by a Council of Regulators, composed of leaders from the Fed, the Treasury Department, the FDIC and other bank-oversight agencies.

This marks a shift, since Obama wanted the Fed to take the lead role as a "systemic risk regulator." However, lawmakers in the House of Representatives and the Senate are wary of that, not least because the Fed didn't foresee the gathering storm in mortgage finance that led to a near meltdown of the global financial order last year.

"A lot of members thought the Fed missed it," the congressional staffer said.

Some independent analysts also have warned that handing the Fed new, expansive powers as the systemic risk regulator could distract it from its principal role of setting monetary policy to sustain growth and contain inflation.

"I didn't want the Fed to have that role because I think monetary policy is too important," said Vincent Reinhart, a former top Fed economist who's also wary of the emerging legislation. "If all you do is a college of regulators, that's just inviting a debating society."

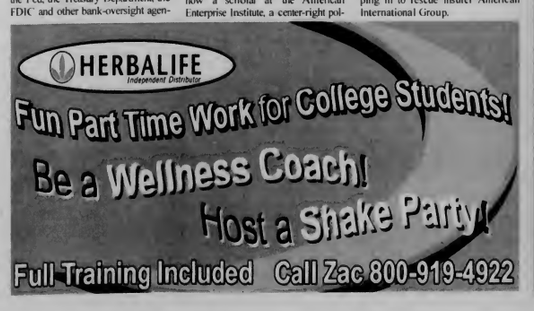
Details of the widely anticipated bill filtered out Monday as Frank's staff negotiated final issues with the Obama administration, which earlier had issued its own blueprint for the biggest overhaul of financial regulation since the Great Depression.

One unanswered question was whether the Council of Regulators would have a first among equals who calls the shots.

"By not having a decider, they're potentially creating an entity that won't be forceful enough," said Reinhart, now a scholar at the American Enterprise Institute, a center-right policy organization.

"A committee without a head is an invitation to create a discussion group."

Under the emerging bill, Congress wouldn't set specific requirements, but would leave it to the Council of Regulators to determine how much capital banks should hold in reserve, or how much investing they can do with borrowed money.



Insufficient reserves and too much borrowed money, called leverage, were primary contributors to the financial meltdown.

Many pieces of Obama's plan already have moved through Frank's committee, or are about to do so.

These include curbs on executive compensation in the financial sector, the creation of a new Consumer Financial Protection Agency, first-ever rules for complex financial instruments called derivatives, first-ever registration for secretive hedge funds that invest on behalf of the mega-wealthy and new rules for credit-rating agencies that shirked their duty in the run-up to the financial crisis.

The centerpiece, however, remained how to dismantle banks that are so large that their failure would endanger the world's biggest economy and thus the rest of the global financial system.

During last year's turmoil in global finance, the government lacked such powers and improvised, first brokering the sale of investment bank Bear Stearns, later sending a conflicting signal by letting Lehman Brothers fail, and then stepping in to rescue insurer American International Group.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Borderline paradise

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Mike Fox

It starts as small streams, continues into roaring rapids and opens up into broad rivers until it combines with water from all over to create what could best be described as God's Playground. A menagerie of blue and green popping out of the jungle mists lends it all an almost prehistoric air. Flocks of toucans circle above the site.

The cataracts at Iguazu have been described as one of the seven wonders of the natural world. It is a combination of over 200 waterfalls pulsing 3,000 liters of water per second over its cliffs, in the utterly picturesque setting of the Argentine-Brazilian jungle.

The hike around the waterfalls on the Argentine side starts with a light walk through the jungle to witness the roots of the massive currents that Eleanor Roosevelt was known to have said dwarf Niagara Falls. Suddenly, the jungle canopy parts to reveal the stunning view of a furious – yet beautiful – force of nature set in a deep river valley.

The site is the utter panoply of brilliance and spectacle. From the pulsating waters at the top, to the white frothy destructive force of foam at the waterfall's base, to the dense thicket of jungle that surrounds all, it is an assault on vision.

Never before have I truly felt the sensation of being in the midst of the exotic and the great. Watching rainbows break out over the many falls with the sun sinking through the sky, I got a feeling that the wide world out there could be seen and could be reached. If I could make it here, if I could see this magnificent place with my own eyes, anything could be within grasp.

If I could make it here, if I could see this magnificent place with my own eyes, anything could be within reach.

Iguazu is in a region known as the tri-frontier, a place where the borders of Argentina, Brazil and Paraguay meet. Equal in its fame for its natural beauty is the notoriousness of the zone. Ciudad del Este, on the Paraguayan side, is infamous as one of the smuggling havens of the world.

A good deal of Paraguayan-made drugs escape through the area's lax border control. Additionally, the terrorist bombers behind several anti-Israel bombings in Buenos Aires were known to have reached the country through the region. Simply put, depending on the day, the border rules can be so lax, that people can drive uninterrupted into each of the three countries.

Puerto Iguazu, on the Argentine side, has the feel of a true border town. Nightclubs and bars fill with people from all three countries and tourists from many more, giving the feeling of a rough globalization.

A few hours down the road lies the ruins of an earlier vision of cultural diffusion. The ruins of the Jesuit Mission of San Ignacio Mini poke out of a jungle situated in another rough-feeling border town. Back in the 1700s, Jesuit Missionaries arrived from Europe to share their vision of culture and civilization with the Guarani natives of the tri-frontier area.

For a while, they succeeded in constructing cities of sandstone and ceramic out of the forest, blending elements of the native culture and the imported European one. Over time, foreign politics began to exercise their force on those in the area, and the light of education brought to the area began to fade.

Thinking about the absolute beauty of the place I've just passed through, the romantic and inspiring splendor of nature at its most furious and finest, I hope that the outside world doesn't destroy something beautiful here again.

Mike Fox is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

dorms, the Recreation Center's not open yet, swine flu's everywhere, my midterms stink, school costs too much, some guy in the Collegian just said something weird, marijuana should be legalized, people keep complaining about health care, there are ladybugs in my room, my RA's a jerk, there's nowhere to park, the buses are never on time, every time I go to the library it's crowded, one of these days a car's going to hit me when I cross the

Feel like ranting?

Send letters to the editor to:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

street, one of these days a bike rider is just going to fling himself at my car, athletes just got caught with cocaine, there are too many people in the DC, I want my trays back, people keep puking in my hallway, my window won't open, those kids outside never shut up, housing services won't let me keep my python, Spark and SPIRE never work right, there's construction everywhere that never gets completed, it burns when I pee, my roommate keeps setting my bedsheets on fire, my professor's horrifying haircut keeps distracting me in class, ComCol is an asinine concept, the sprinkler will never be considered a real dance move, the squirrels on campus keep biting me, kids keep

Hulu turns its back on viewers

Chris Amorosi

It is 11:57 p.m. on Sunday night. I finish skimming the week's reading assignments and let the Glee musical slide show on YouTube run through for the final time. Robed in matching pinstripe pajamas due to equal parts cool weather and cool fashion sense, I am ready for bed. I twist my monitor around to face my pillow and press full screen and play, for I am not going to sleep. I am catching up with my stories on Hulu.

For those of you still on dial-up, Hulu.com is a joint venture between the owners of NBC, Fox and ABC. The website offers their current television shows soon after broadcast plus various old shows and movies from their libraries. Hulu was the medium that introduced me to Arrested Development during finals week, later inducing me to buy it on DVD.

I bought the DVD due to the panicked notion that Hulu might take the series away from me before I had finished watching. I was only a few months off in my prediction, though, as a recent PC World article says a Fox executive announced that a subscription fee would be added to some of Hulu's content in 2010. For me, it is as if 2010 is the new 2012 – the end of a world.

Broadcasting & Cable, a trade magazine for television broadcasters, quotes News Corp's Chase Carey: "I think a free model is a very difficult way to capture the value of our content. I think what we need to do is deliver that content to consumers in a way where they will appreciate the value ... Hulu concurs with that, it needs to evolve to have a meaningful subscription model as part of its business."

I always knew that Fox and News Corp were against freedom, but I suppose this is to be expected from a combination of the most murderous doctor on House and my least favorite 1990s comedian. Let us dissect this statement.

Exactly how high do they value their content? A portion of the offered movies are loser sequels made to cash in on great movies. Sorry Hulu proprietors, but DVD sales of Grease 2 will always fall somewhere short of Greased Lightning – somewhere short being between epoxied drizzle and desiccated dew. You should be thanking me for the fractions of pennies you earned when I watched the movie out of sheer curiosity.

Sorry, Hulu proprietors, but DVD sales of Grease 2 will always fall somewhere short of greased lightning – somewhere short being between epoxied drizzle and desiccated dew.

Or perhaps you mean your current offerings? Only your test audiences told you to pay millions for such tepid offerings like Community, The Cleveland Show and Sit Down, Shut Up, so why do you expect me to reimburse you?

The fact that the long-canceled Arrested Development is fourth on their list of all time -popular shows is telling. Additional zombie shows like Firefly and Kings show up on page two and are ahead of 24 and The Cleveland Show, respectively. You can find purgatory-bound Scrubs on page four, but you have to get past Babylon 5, NewsRadio, and Doogie Howser M.D. first.

Of course I can understand why their advertisers are reluctant to pay. Consider that the audience is people who use the Internet often enough to watch shows for big blocks of time. I am a male college student with no income and whose highest employment position was "guy in the mascot suit." Do they really expect me to buy a Toyota Prius, birth control and antidepressants after an episode of Bones? Maybe if I was a student at Smith College.

My favorite use of Hulu's television content is for watching shows I missed. If I watch a missed episode on Hulu, then presumably the network still gets some advertising revenue. Apparently, this system is too reasonable. So, some networks force an eight-day delay between airing an episode and uploading it. I operate on a seven-day calendar, though, which ensures that I can't watch a previous episode until after the more current one airs. The final season of Battlestar Galactica got this treatment, giving me a choice between dealing with time hiccups in the plot or acquiring the missing episode elsewhere. University internet connections render the dilemma moot, I'm sure, for others. Not me, of course, but for others.

I think the goal behind founding Hulu was to watch it fail. The Internet is a huge threat to the entertainment industry because it challenges the old broadcast model of producing large amounts of crap and getting paid to do so. Remember UPN and The WB? Hulu was a dishonest truce between networks and a more discerning audience. After they introduce the subscription and thus ensure utter failure, executives will whine to Congress about how they tried to play nice. Their preferred solution will be to draw and quarter perpetrators of copyright and fair use violations.

Watching network CEOs play the part of Howard Beale is by far the most original idea since the invention of the medium itself.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at camorosi@student.umass.edu.

Seeking truth in the science of testimony

Eric Magazu

The experience of providing testimony is often associated with court cases and criminal prosecutions. Testimony is also equated with public professions of religious faith. According to Noah Webster's dictionary, testimony is "an open acknowledgement" or "a firsthand authentication of a fact."

Two recent talks given at Amherst College as part of a lecture series on the philosophy and science of testimony have addressed the relationship between testimony and our acceptance of knowledge.

On Oct. 1, University of Notre Dame Professor Robert Audi addressed a crowd assembled at the Pruyne Lecture Hall in the Fayerweather building at Amherst College in a lecture titled "Testimony as a Social Foundation of Knowledge."

In the course of our acquisition of facts, there is a balance between our acceptance of the testimony of another person and our direct firsthand perceptions. At first, we may not realize that our acceptance of testimony is a central foundation of our base of knowledge. How much of what (we assume) we know actually comes from our firsthand experiences?

From childhood onward, we accept testimony as almost completely reliable. We will implicitly trust our parents and not require much corroboration of the facts as they are presented to us. But as teenagers, we often challenge our parents regardless of the truth of what they are saying. Haven't we all seen the bumper sticker that tells us to "question authority?"

Even now that we are in college, most all of what we will learn will come from testimony. It may be the testimony of our professors, our fellow students or people we meet in downtown Amherst.

In the course of our acquisition of facts, there is a balance between our acceptance of the testimony of another person and our direct firsthand perceptions.

What causes us to accept testimony as reliable? This is what the lecture series at Amherst attempts to address, and something we really ought to consider.

There seems to be a strong basis in our level of trust of another person and our readiness to accept testimony from them as reliable.

The second lecture in the series was delivered last Thursday by UCLA Professor Pamela Hieronymi, titled "The Reason of Trust."

Professor Hieronymi concluded, and common sense would also affirm, that as our level of trust of another individual increases, the need for corroborating facts to support their testimony is lessened.

According to Professor Audi's research, we sometimes believe testimony over and above plain facts when presented with them.

This brings us to a crossroads, because closely related to our acceptance of testimony is our perception of the world.

The way we process information, both sensory perceptions and testimony, is influenced by the presuppositions we make about how the world operates.

Our worldview is shaped by presuppositions that we have been making since our childhood, and it can often be rooted in an ethnic, national or religious identity. Our mind sorts through information based upon these presuppositions, but how can we tell if our presuppositions are valid?

So many of us are locked into our view of the world that we defend our worldview at all costs, sometimes even to the point of violence. We may tell ourselves otherwise, but more often than not, we seek reaffirmation and reassurance in place of objective information.

The basis of many conflicts in the world can be traced to a situation where the opposing parties have competing worldviews. The parties involved are simply not even communicating on the same wavelength. From the outset, both sides simply reject the testimony of the other side. They simply aren't even speaking the same language.

Throughout our college years, we will take classes with many professors and become involved with various organizations. They are all out there seeking to affirm their own worldview, and to influence others to see things in the way they see them. How do we know who we can trust, in whom we can believe?

The mission and motto of most universities is the search for truth. We must wholeheatedly seek the truth. Knowing that testimony forms a significant portion of how we perceive the world, it is essential to know in whom we can trust.

This should be simpler than we realize, because we can see truth plainly from falsehood. We only have to see who is looking after us and cares for the soul that is inside of us. Some may offer us a membership card, but there is only one who cares for us completely.

To begin this quest, it may be worthwhile to check out the next lecture on the philosophy and science of testimony, titled "Testimony: Depending on Others." This talk is scheduled to be delivered by Northwestern University Professor Jennifer Lackey on March 4, 2010 at 4:30 p.m. at the Pruyne Lecture Hall at Amherst College.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu

No 'lone killer,' magic bullet in JFK killing

Matt Kushi

America: the land of truth and justice. If this is not already one of our mottos in the United States, it ought to be.

One event that comes up with the issue of truth and justice is the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. Was it a conspiracy, or the work of one man that felled the American president? The government claimed the latter. But, is that the whole truth?

Last weekend, I was watching the History Channel when a show came on called "The Kennedy Assassination: 24 Hours After." In the show write-up, the History Channel stated that they were, "using never-before-seen transcripts only recently made public."

I will go on the record right here and now and tell you that I believe there was a conspiracy to kill President Kennedy, though I will not say the same of his brother, Senator Robert F. Kennedy, in 1968.

I believe that it was the Mafia that did this and that Lee Harvey Oswald was the scapegoat. I believe that a part of the government, knowing it had ties with the Mafia, covered it up behind some convenient "truths" to hide an embarrassing episode within the government. I believe that some people in the government made themselves more corrupt in trying to cover-up this event.

I would like to note that I have read multiple sources, from books to websites (including a biography of Robert Kennedy, documentaries and excerpts of the Warren Commission) concerning this matter, from which I have reached my conclusions.

How was the Mafia tied in with this? There are rumors that President Kennedy's father had some ties related to a Chicago-based Mafia that later, among others, included Sam "Momo" Giancana, a Robert Kennedy rival.

During Kennedy's years in office, his brother, Robert, was the attorney general. Robert Kennedy used the Justice Department as a platform to attack organized crime.

Robert Kennedy had an up-and-down relationship with the FBI, headed by J. Edgar Hoover. He also had a fondness for back channel operations, which he shared with his brother in the White House.

One of JFK's main operations in the early 1960s was how to oust Cuban dictator Fidel Castro, who had recently taken over Cuba. Many back channels were used by the CIA in this, including a scheme that involved under-the-table methods of assassination using Mafia members as the instigators (which Robert Kennedy may have known about).

Do I truly know what happened on that fateful November day? No, but I have my hunches.

Therefore, some members of the Mafia were working for the government. At the same time, Robert Kennedy was trying to prosecute them. After the failure of the Bay of Pigs invasion and the resolution of the Cuban Missile Crisis, the Kennedy administration toned down their attacks on Castro. This must have felt like a double-cross to the Mafia and they decided to retaliate before they ended up in jail. Thus, the motive for the assassination was set for the attempt for Nov. 22, 1963 in Dallas, Texas.

Do I truly know what happened on that fateful November day? No, but I have my hunches.

The "lone assassin" theory of the event has Oswald shooting three times and striking Kennedy twice, Texas Governor John Connally once, and missing once, meaning that one bullet had to strike two men who were seated at two different angles. The bullet thought to be this bullet was found in pristine condition. Thus, the magic bullet theory.

However, was it so? Was the Warren Commission (the government report that claimed the lone assassin theory) accurate? According to the History Channel show, people situated on the grassy knoll to the front-right of the Presidential motorcade state that they heard a shot come from behind them, not front where the Texas School Depository was located, where Oswald was.

What I believed happened was that Oswald took a shot from behind the motorcade and missed. A man situated at the bridge, to the front, shot and hit Connally or Kennedy. Perhaps Oswald shot again and hit the motorcade. However, the fateful shot that penetrated President Kennedy's head came from the grassy knoll, to the front-right. It's feasible that a triangle of shooters with multiple shots with multiple angles were used to cut down on the risk of missing. Direct and flank (deflection) shots.

Later at the courthouse, after his capture, Oswald is heard crying out "I'm just a patsy!"

Could it be that he speaks the truth? Was he the scapegoat? No professional lone assassin would leave his finger-printed rifle in clear view and walk around the streets following his act. Isn't it interesting that Oswald was apprehended so quickly? That Jack Ruby killed him days later while Oswald was still under police supervision?

This theory is neither as complicated as Oliver Stone's movie "JFK" or as simple as the lone assassin.

This article is not meant to be a bashing of the American government. Rather, it is meant to try and define the path that we should take to follow what should be an American ideal – the truth.

Let all of the documents be released. Let the American public know the truth behind this matter for once and for all time.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2009

Dammit Janet! Frank-n-Furter says, "Read more Collegian!"

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Let's do the Time Warp again...

South Hadley's Come Again Players channel sweet transvestites in 'Rocky Horror' revival

Fans will converge in droves this weekend at Northampton's Academy of Music as members of South Hadley's Come Again Players perform scenes from "Rocky Horror."

ALISSA MESIBOV
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

For most people "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is a film to see once a year for Halloween. This is not the case for the Come Again Players of South Hadley, Mass.

Every Saturday at midnight, this troupe of everyday locals transform into the characters from the cult classic. They mimic, or "shadow," every movement of the film, which plays behind them at the Tower Theaters.

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is based on a stage play by Richard O'Brien, who co-starred in the film. The plot revolves around Brad Majors (played by Barry Bostwick), and his fiancee, Janet Weiss (a then-unknown Susan Sarandon).

They seem like ordinary young people from the fictional Denton, Ohio, but on the rain-soaked night of their engagement, their car gets a flat tire. They go to the castle (yes, apparently there are castles in Ohio) of Dr. Frank-n-Furter (Tim Curry), a transvestite alien mad scientist bent on creating the perfect man. All they want is to use a phone, but instead, they get a night of chart-topping songs ("The Time Warp"), strange sexcapades and bizarre encounters with everyone ranging from a brain-damaged rock star to a closeted Nazi.

The plot can be confusing the first time out.

"I had no idea about 'Rocky Horror,'" said University of Massachusetts freshman Adam Karp, "I heard I'd have a lot of fun and that I'd be a little freaked out. I guess it was both. I still don't know what it's about." Up until recently, Karp was a "Rocky Horror" virgin – the word commonly used to describe a first time audience member of the live show.

This tradition of audience interaction began in New York City, sometime shortly after the musical film's 1975 premiere. It started with audience members joining in for the film's famous dance, "The Time Warp." Soon after, people started acting out the entire film, calling out obscenities in response to different lines of dialogue and bringing related props to throw about the theater.

Now, almost 35 years later, that tradition continues in almost every major city in the United States, as well as in many cities around the world.

Almost every production has its cast of "regulars," of people who come to the show faithfully, week after week.

Erin Fitzgerald, who plays Janet in the Come Again Players rendition of the show, recalled one of the cast's favorite regulars, "Steve, who was 80. He was this adorable old man." This is one of the truly incredible aspects of "Rocky" culture: the culture is accepting of everyone, from the high school misfit, to the open-minded 80-year-old.

"I feel like I fit in. I feel like I don't fit in 'normal' society," said freshman Melissa Sims, who has since joined the Come Again Players as a trainee. "When I go to 'Rocky,' I know I'm with the other freaks of society."

Whether you consider yourself a freak or not, this certainly is a Halloween tradition to experience.

"Even if you're not really the typical 'Rocky' fan, it's something to experience. It's something to say, 'I was there. I did this,'" said Sims.

Half the fun of going to "Rocky Horror" is in the pre-show. This usually consists of some kind of musical number, with the actors lip-singing along, usually with a comedic twist. Also, an emcee goes through the rules.

"Number one, just don't be stupid," proclaimed the emcee at the most recent show. This seems pointless, but it is important. When "Rocky Horror" first started out, people would bring lighters and squirt guns that could prove to be hazardous today.

A little further down the list is the rule that defines "Rocky Horror" culture to the utmost: be offensive. All inhibition should be thrown out the window at "Rocky Horror."

"Part of it is the atmosphere," said Fitzgerald in response to why she started performing. "People are really accepting. People who are normally quiet really get to expand."

The final - and often most entertaining aspect of the pre-show - is the de-virginizing ceremony. There is no escaping it; upon entering the theater, virgins are marked with a red lipstick "V" on their foreheads. Depending on the location, the severity of the virgin tasks can vary. The most recent virgin task involved faking an orgasm as a favorite cartoon character.

Cast director Amanda Taylor, who, among other roles also plays Columbia, said, "Some [virgins] are timid, so we keep it a bit tamer for them."

What makes the Come Again Players unique is that they have a cause. Last year, they lost a cast member to Cystic Fibrosis, a disease that involves the clogging of important organs. Now, they donate a percent of the money made at many of their special events to Cystic Fibrosis foundations.

One such event is this coming Saturday night, Oct. 31. On Saturday, they plan to perform "Rocky Horror" at the Academy of Music in Northampton, Mass. For regular shows in South Hadley, tickets are $7.25. Tickets are $15 for general admission, and $13 for student admission.

Alissa Mesibov can be reached at amesibov@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY 20TH CENTURY FOX

Barry Bostwick and Susan Sarandon star as an engaged couple stranded at the mansion of the perverse, outlandish Dr. Frank-n-Furter (Tim Curry) in 1975's "The Rocky Horror Picture Show."

Bittersweet treats, fresh breads stand out at neighborhood deli

BY ALEX TILLOTSON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

As you first walk up to The Black Sheep Deli, you feel invited by its little hole-in-the-wall nature and its charming atmosphere. With shelves of bakery items displayed neatly in the windows and a crowd of customers waiting to indulge in one, or a few of the many delicious items on the menu, the place exudes Amherst.

Black Sheep bakes all their own breads and pastries, using all natural ingredients and real butter; they also offer a variety of side dishes made fresh daily. The Caramelized Cauliflower with garlic, olive oil and parmesan is a great and healthy alternative to some of the heavier, yet equally delicious sides like Potatoes Dauphinoise, a potato dish layered with garlic, nutmeg, asiago cheese and cream. Deep dish quiches and macaroni and cheese are just two of the heartier entrees offered there.

From the specialty sandwiches (3.95/half, 7.95/full) to the incredible selection of bakery items (as well as many other things) there is guaranteed to be something on the menu for everyone at Black Sheep. The establishment also offers catering services with a wide selection of choices fit to please every palate.

When you go, be sure to try the "European," a specialty sandwich which is chock full of black forest ham, brie, tomatoes, lettuce and red onions, all on pumpernickel bread. For a vegetarian option, the "Great Garlic" is to die for. Take a French baguette, spread it with a layer of incredibly creamy local goat cheese, then spread on whole caramelized garlic cloves, grilled portobellos, roasted red peppers and lettuce.

Black Sheep also offers patrons the opportunity to design their own sandwiches, choosing from an array of freshly-baked breads and fillings at half sandwich and whole sandwich prices. And don't worry – if there's an ingredient on a specialty sandwich that you don't like, or if you want it all just on a different type of bread, the folks at Black Sheep are happy and willing to make any and all alterations to ensure you enjoy each savory bite.

If you're in the mood for something a little dangerous, opt for the Bittersweet Chocolate Espresso Torte, a melt-in-your-mouth, flourless chocolate treat with a hint of espresso flavor that is covered in seasonal fruit (raspberries are the best) and home-made whipped cream. The great part about the cakes and pastries is that they can be bought as whole cakes for events like parties, or individually by the slice.

A variety of iced teas and natural juices and soft drinks are on hand at Black Sheep to wash it all down and, if in the winter months you're looking for something to warm you up, they also carry a wide selection of freshly roasted coffees, various teas, as well as Chai and mulled cider.

Black Sheep can get very busy around lunch time, being nestled right in the heart of downtown Amherst between two colleges, so plan ahead if you only have a certain amount of time for a lunch break. If this is the case, you can call in your order ahead of time, and they will make it for you and have it ready as soon as you set foot in the door.

If you're looking for a great place to eat, with an eclectic environment and a sprawling menu filled with only the best in homemade and local ingredients, the Black Sheep Deli is a local must.

Alex Tillotson can be reached at atillots@student.umass.edu.

The Black Sheep Deli may seem like a hole-in-the-wall, but it's eclectic atmosphere and specialty pastries, including the Bittersweet Chocolate Espresso Torte, make it a local favorite.

Students score with annual date auction

BY RACHEL DOUGHERTY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There's just one word to describe the Haitian American Student Association (HASA) Date Auction last Thursday night: hot. Between the crowds crammed into the Herter Annex Thursday night and the physiques of those volunteering to be auctioned off, the HASA Date Auction was sweltering.

The second annual HASA Date auction was a tremendous success as volunteers from the University of Massachusetts Amherst, Amherst College, Smith College and American International College auctioned off their time to raise money for the HASA/CASA cultural event and the HASA Fresh Start Scholarship. The event opened at 7 p.m. on Thursday, with music from DJs Abdoulie Senesie and Parkie Mbianda of MashUp Entertainment. By the time the auctioning began at 8 p.m., it was standing room only, and people were lined up along the walls of Herter Annex to win a date with the volunteers.

"It went really, really well," said HASA President Leo Jean-Louis. "We had people come in from all the different colleges, which we didn't have last year.

The HASA eboard members worked really hard to put this together, and I think they did a great job."

The event was hosted by Octavia Farquharson of the Black Student Union and Edward Jean Louis of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity. The event featured performances from Tamika Brinson from Smith College and the South Asian Student Alliance dance team.

Male and female volunteers were escorted to the stage while the DJ played a song of their choice and the host read a description provided to HASA by the volunteers. The bidding started between five and 10 dollars and went as high as 60 or 70 dollars. The heat continued to rise throughout the night as volunteers went to extreme levels to win bids from the audience. Shirts were taken off, booties were flaunted and butt cheeks exposed as one misinformed Kappa thought dropping his pants would be a good way to up his bidding.

The bidders won a date with the volunteers to a local business with vouchers provided by HASA.

"Each HASA eboard member was required to go out and ask for restaurant vouchers or any vouchers that the auctionee and bidder could use on a date," said Jean-Louis. "Some of the restaurants that helped with the cause were Antonio's, Arizona Pizza, Buffalo Wings, Chez Albert, Interskate 91 and Laser Storm and the Cinemark Theater in the Hampshire Mall."

The money raised by the Date Auction is intended to help support the annual HASA/CASA cultural event in the spring, an event in which Haitian and Dominican students collaborate to celebrate the style and rhythms of Hispaniola through performances and food.

"It's a good event to raise money for the RSO," said auctionee and Alpha Phi Alpha Incorporated member Jason Barrell. "I'm in an RSO myself, so I know how hard it can be to raise money for these things."

Proceeds also went to support the HASA Fresh Start Scholarship, which provides two $200 book vouchers to students who demonstrate academic excellence and have community service experience. Applicants must be undergraduates at UMass with a minimum GPA of 3.0, and must demonstrate an interest in Haiti it's culture.

Nia Schenk, an auctionee from Smith College, said that she agreed to participate in the event "for the novelty of it and to support the scholarship. I'm a scholarship student myself, so I know what it's like. One of the main reasons people don't go to college is the expense. This is giving people the chance to get a better education and a better life."

The auction was interspersed with performances from various RSO's and Five College groups. There was singing from HASA members, a Bollywood-style dance routine from SASA and a special performance from members of the Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity. The Kappas ended the night by dancing for a handful of female audience members, whose reactions ranged from delight to mortification.

The event was an overall success, bringing in money for a good cause and some needed laughter to midterm-burdened students. According to Jean-Louis, the event is likely to happen again next year.

"We're trying to make it an annual thing," he said. "I'd love for HASA to have it again next year."

Applications for the HASA Fresh Start scholarship are available in the Center for Student Development Resource Room in the Student Union. The deadline to apply is December 1, 2009.

Rachel Dougherty can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu.

SBU edge out GWU in 2OT

SOCCER from page 8

offense for the 3-0 win. MacCormick took an assist from Colleen Williams to open up scoring in the first minute of play. Back gave the Flyers a second goal in 17th minute. Back wrapped up the scoring early in the second half when Blumeschein executed her second assist of the weekend for the win. The goal served as Back's 36th career score, tying her in fourth place for all-time goals scored in Dayton history.

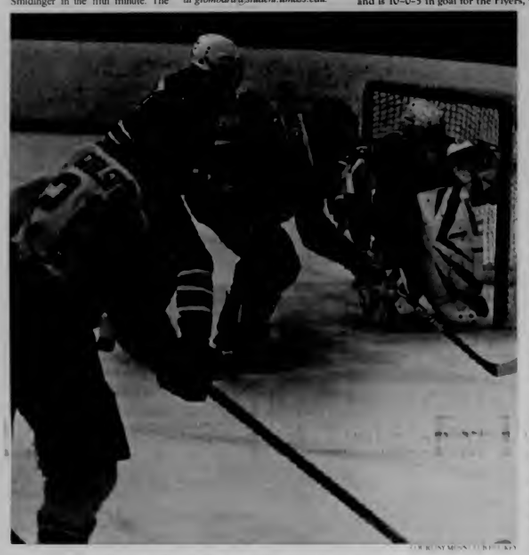
The two shutouts from the Flyers defense kept its number of goals allowed this season to five. One more shutout will tie the school's record of 13 set in 2004.

Bonnies take OT thriller

After a loss to George Washington Friday night, St. Bonaventure redeemed itself in a double overtime victory against Richmond.

The Colonials (6-7-4, 3-4-2 A-10) recieved a lone goal by Sierra Smidinger in the fifth minute. The Bonnie's (9-8, 6-2 A-10) offense was unable to score the equalizer, giving George Washington the 1-0 win. St. Bonaventure had seven shots on goal in the second half, but could not capitalize on any.

On the defensive end, Colonial's goalkeeper Lindsey Rowe had seven saves for the win, just two more than the Bonnie's Nicole Markert.



Neither St. Bonaventure nor Richmond (8-8-2, 4-4-1 A-10) could connect with the goal during Sunday's first overtime period. It was sophomore Tori Burchett who broke the tie in the 107th minute of double overtime. scoring her fifth goal of the season off of an assist from sophomore Janelle Taylor. The Bonnies recorded a 16-11 advantage in shots.

Richmond keeper Melissa Pacheco had a total of seven saves. Markert helped out for the win with four saves to mark her fifth shutout of the season.

Geena Lombardi can be reached at glombard@student.umass.edu.

Goalkeeper Katherine Boone makes a diving save, helping Dayton defeat UMass 3-0 on Sunday. Boone recorded her 10th shutout of the season and is 10-0-5 in goal for the Flyers, who head to New York to take on St. Bonaventure on Wednesday.

Captain Alec Goolsby and assistant captain Julian Maleski attack the net earlier this season. Goolsby had three assists in a 7-2 win against New Haven and a goal and an assist in a 4-0 shutout against Vermont this past weekend.

UMass still perfect after weekend wins

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's club hockey team remains undefeated this season after defeating New Haven and Vermont this weekend.

The Minutemen (9-0-0) defense proved to be a key factor in this weekend's matches, allowing just two goals in their 7-2 rout over the Chargers (1-3-0) this past Friday.

While last week's match against Millersville featured defensive players scoring goals, the match against New Haven saw a lone defender goal scored by first year player Craig Charest.

The six other scores came from the offensive effort. Forward Danny Arnao racked up two goals in the game, while captain Alec Goolsby lead in assists with three, which raised his assist tally to 11 for the season.

"As we started to reset through the game, we worked on things," UMass coach Robert Talloni said. "We were hustling, hustling, and we were the stronger team. We didn't out-do them; they put everything they had into the game."

Freshman Joe Iadarola played goalkeeper for the second time this season and stopped 30 of the 32 shots taken during the 60 minutes he was in the game.

Men's Club Hockey

"The players really responded to him. They really supported him," Talloni said.

He explained that the Chargers will join the Northeastern Collegiate Hockey Association (NECHA) next season.

"We'd really like to keep them on the game schedule. We hope to see them next season," he said.

This past Sunday, the Minutemen came home to the Mullins Center with a mission to defeat the conference rival Catamounts (2-5-0). The Minutemen did not let up, allowing no goals en route to a 4-0 shutout.

"We played a lot of games; they played a lot of games. Sometimes you find your groove; sometimes you lose your groove," Talloni said. "So, we just wanted to see which was true [in this game]."

Goolsby returned to his scoring ways, netting the final goal of the game. He also tallied an assist along with forward Craig Cardone who passed out three pucks that would find their way to net.

Assistant captains Reed Powers and Julian Maleski both scored goals in the match, marking the third time this season that the captain and both assistant captains scored in the same game.

"They got the goals, but the whole line should get an assist," Talloni said.

On Friday, UMass will host Long Island-C.W. Post at the Mullins Center. This is the first meeting between the Minutemen and the Pioneers (3-5-1), so Talloni is looking to use some new strategy.

"I wanted them to come to us for the first time. I've known their coach, I've played them in the past," he said. "I thought it'd be a good mix for us because they're a very physical team. I think it'll make us stronger for the season."

Long Island was last shut out by Marist by a score of 8-0. With the Minutemen having just shut out Vermont, the match between the two teams has an interesting connection.

"We shut a team out, and then they got shutout. So now we catch them here, so we'll see what kind of team they are," Talloni said.

Following the match against C.W. Post, the Minutemen will travel to the Big Apple to face New York (1-4-0). The Violets have allowed 45 goals all season, which is six less than the Minutemen have scored. The offense of the Minutemen may not have trouble finding the back of the net, unless New York rebuilds its game plan.

"We're going to try to run them into the ground. Open up the ice and we're going to let them worry about us," Talloni said.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribner@student.umass.edu.

UM advances to semifinals against BU

By Daniel Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts club rugby team showed its ability to win close games on Saturday as it beat Bentley in the New England Rugby Football Union quarterfinal playoffs.

The Minutemen (5-1) faced a 12-5 deficit late in the game and the Falcons (3-1-2) showed little sign of relenting. With 10 minutes remaining, after many attempts and with a man down, UMass broke Bentley's defense with a 17-12 win.

Defense dictated the match as both teams battled mostly between the 22-meter lines. Steady rain dampened the pitch, making scoring temperate and possession a premium. They traded blows around midfield and stifled each other around the goal-line.

UMass took the pitch organized, gaining possession and sloshing its way downfield for the opening score. A missed conversion held the score at 5-0. Bentley came back and muscled its way in for a try 7-5.

Many whistles were blown throughout the course of the afternoon. With each team vying for position, the referee made numerous offside calls as he did his best to uphold order amidst a heated contest.

Points were tough to come by as the ruggers seemed to rally around their own end-line. Bentley's goal-line presence was more prevalent around halftime when the Minutemen steadily worked their way downfield only to be smothered by the Falcon's resistance as the whistle blew.

Coming out of the break, UMass relayed its way down Bentley's half, but its defense would once again weather the attack. The Falcons denied the Minutemen, stripping them of the orb and booting it to midfield. A possession-minded Bentley player sped up-field, confronted a UMass back and deftly redirected the ball to a teammate off the side of his cleat.

Club Rugby

That play led to a turning point in momentum in which the Falcons would build on their scoring advantage. Bentley punched in a try midway through the second half, but a missed conversion left the Minutemen within one score.

With fewer than 20 minutes remaining in the game, and possibly its season, UMass tied the game. A major penalty put the Minutemen's season in jeopardy, but they prevailed in the end.

The Manvon and White pressured the Falcons' defense, penetrating deep into their territory. Bentley tried for a clear and rendered a throw-in around its own 22-meter line. Following the throw-in, the Falcons cleared the ball to midfield where Dan Morgan found the sphere in his clutches. Attempting an up-and-under, the senior hooker punted the ball 10 meters towards the goal.

A Bentley fullback fielded the punt and quickly tried to redirect it when Morgan met him with full force. The forward went for a charge down, colliding with his opponent and sending him to the pitch. He was given a yellow card and a 10 minute misconduct penalty.

Playing undermanned, UMass worked to cut the field in half by pushing the ball up-field with its backs and moving the pile with its forwards.

The Minutemen pushed their way to the goal-line, looking for the end-zone. They pried their way towards goal where they met confrontation. After nearly 10 minutes of forceful offense, UMass barged its way through for a try.

The Minutemen needed a conversion to tie the game and would not get it, missing the posts wide-right, leaving them down, 12-10.

UMass received the ensuing kick-off deep in its own territory. The two teams clashed in Minutemen field until a tripping penalty by Bentley gave position to the Minutemen.

As UMass steamed ahead towards goal, each team tried to gain leverage and competition was closely monitored by the referee who was quick to stop play for misconduct. Multiple scrums kept the crowd in suspense as they began to get loud.

With fewer than 10 minutes remaining, the Minutemen breached the Falcon's defense for the game-winning try.

With the win, the Minutemen move to the semifinals of the NERFU tournament, which will be held on Saturday at Middlebury College in Vermont and an automatic bid to the Northeast Regional Tournament. In its next match, UMass will take on Eastern Conference champions Boston University that boast a 4-1-1 record during the regular season.

Daniel Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

Peace Corps

26 UMASS Amherst alumni are currently serving overseas. Find out how you can join them!

Information Meeting:
Thursday, October 29
7:00 pm - 8:00 pm
508 Goodell Building
UMASS Amherst

Life is calling. How far will you go?

Find out more at www.peacecorps.gov

Yankees win pennant in 6

By Pete Caldera
The Record (Hackensack N.J.)

NEW YORK — They needed another big October performance from Andy Pettitte.

They needed a key hit by Johnny Damon, another RBI by Alex Rodriguez and some more stellar defense by Mark Teixeira.

And at the end, the Yankees needed – and received – six outs from Mariano Rivera to vanquish the Angels and earn their way back to the World Series.

Bernie Williams tossed out Sunday night's ceremonial first pitch, and Rivera threw the final pitch to seal a 5-2 victory – clinching the club's 40th pennant in Game 6 of the AL Championship Series at Yankee Stadium, where a sellout crowd stood through the final inning.

For the first time since Oct 16, 2003, when Aaron Boone hit an 11th-inning home run off Boston's Tim Wakefield – at the ballpark that stands vacant and dark across the street – the Yankees had won the pennant.

Now, the World Series will open Wednesday night at Yankee Stadium, with Yanks' ace CC Sabathia facing the Phillies' Cliff Lee.

"I think (this mix of players) worked because they get along so well," Yankees co-chairman Hal Steinbrenner said. "They really care about each other. They're a family. They really support each other."

Derek Jeter, Jorge Posada, Hideki Matsui and Rivera were on that '03 club, and now they take a collection of first-timers to the World Series – players such as Mark Teixeira, Robinson Cano, Phil Hughes, Joba Chamberlain, A.J. Burnett.

And Alex Rodriguez.

Shaking off the demons of past Octobers, A-Rod reached base all five times Sunday with two singles, three walks and an RBI, extending a postseason where he is 14-for-32 (.438) with five homers and 12 RBI.

Damon's two-run single off lefty starter Joe Saunders capped a three-run fourth. Saunders would never make it out of the inning.

Pettitte wound up going 6⅔ innings, giving up one run on seven hits, with a walk and six strikeouts. And he had to survive a nervous sixth-inning moment, after an infield hit by Torii Hunter and a double by Vladimir Guerrero put runners at second and third.

Kendry Morales hit a hard, one-hop comebacker that broke of Pettitte's glove, but the ball dropped near the lefty's feet, and he made the play with ease.

Pettitte put a man on in the seventh before yielding to Chamberlain, who retired the next two batters.

"(Pettitte) is the guy you want on the mound for Game 6," Steinbrenner said. "He's got the heart; he's got the experience."

But the next six outs belonged to Rivera, who gave up a bloop hit to Chone Figgins – just past the reach of Jeter – to start the eighth. Figgins scored on Guerrero's two-out single, but Teixeira's diving play – off a broken bat grounder by Bobby Abreu – prevented the Angels from starting the inning with two men aboard.

The Yanks wound up scoring twice more in the eighth, as the Angels made two throwing errors on sac bunt attempts – one by reliever Scott Kazmir, scoring a run – before Teixiera hit a long sac fly.

Saunders walked five batters in his 3⅔ innings, and started the fateful fourth with a walk to Robinson Cano.

Just 3-for-30 in the playoffs, and 2-for-18 in the ALCS, Nick Swisher followed up a failed bunt attempt with a sharp single to left, and Melky Cabrera's sacrifice put both runners in scoring position.

Jeter then engaged in a tense battle with Saunders, fouling off three pitches before drawing a full-count walk. That brought up Damon, who laced an opposite-field hit that scored Cano and Swisher for a 2-1 lead.

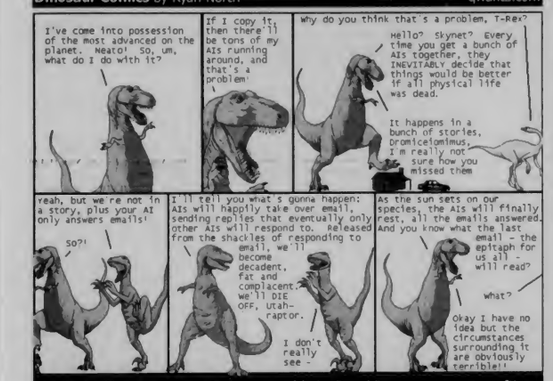
Teixeira's infield hit to deep shortstop re-loaded the bases for A-Rod, who took a close 3-1 pitch for ball four, forcing in a run and forcing manager Mike Scioscia to go to his bullpen.

The Yankees had 50,173 fans – the largest crowd yet at the new Yankee Stadium – believing that the 40th pennant in pinstriped history was at hand. Steinbrenner said his father, George, will be on hand Wednesday.

"He's excited to be here. We've waited six years. It's a lot of years (to get back to the World Series)."

COMICS

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub



Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro travisdandro.com

Wondermark by David Malki! wondermark.com

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North qwantz.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees mnftiu.cc

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Party Weekends, From $89. Includes Hotel, Bus, and clubs. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.

Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com

Friend us on Facebook: "Collegian Comix"

SUDOKU

4		5						9
			4			2	7
9		2		6	3
		7			3		1	5
					8
8	5		1			9	3	2
	1					5
			3		2

CROSSWORD

WE WANT YOUR COMICS

ACROSS
1. Dismay
6. Talk aloud
11. Comes from a chicken
14. A Eurasian goat-like antelope
15. Breed of dog
16. Paddle
17. Fracas
19. Resort
20. Furze
21. The air above us
23. A type of internal-combustion engine
27. Restitution
28. Examined scientifically
32. Gifted
33. A radioactive gaseous element
34. Sack
37. Fluff
38. Cloak
39. German for "Mister"
40. Seated oneself
41. Committee
42. A strong light-weight wood
43. Enrollment
45. A tuna-like fish
48. Express agreement
49. Explode
50. Representative
53. Small boy
54. Make famous forever
60. Dined
61. What we are called
62. Angers
63. Affirmative
64. Gander
65. Levees

DOWN
1. Film speed
2. Friend
3. Large hole in the ground
4. How old one is
5. Biggest
6. Left by a wound
7. Cooking vessels
8. A Great Lake
9. In the past
10. Male relatives
11. A red fluorescent dye
12. Gawked
13. Is sometimes greener elsewhere
18. Young male horse
22. A wingless parasitic fly
23. They're found on rotary phones
24. 2nd most populous country
25. Something that happens
26. French for "Seven"
27. "Smallest" particle
29. Pertaining to modern day Persia
30. Dried leaves of the hemp plant
31. Grown up
34. Negate
35. Malicious setting of fires
36. Bestow
38. A powdery food starch
39. Caps
41. Stroking
42. Illegitimate offspring
43. Tear
44. Rave
45. Secure by means of a rope
46. Give a speech
47. Naked people
50. Ammunition (slang)
51. Leaves
52. Gaelic
55. Chinese revolutionary
56. Fifty-two in Roman numerals
57. Kind or type
58. Z (American spelling)
59. S

EXPLORE YOUR FUTURE

at the Majors Fair
TOMORROW
5:30-7:30
Campus Center Auditorium
&First-Floor Concourse

→ Investigate the range of majors & research at UMass Amherst

→ Meet representatives from more than 100 departments & programs in one location!

For more information visit: http://tiny.cc/MajorsFair

Sponsored by Undergraduate Advising

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Due to one action last night, you have triggered the premise of "Final Destination 5."

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
The world needs more montages of people running to epic music.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Change things up by doing a barrel roll!

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Your biological clock does not end with the release of "Modern Warfare 2."

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Don't just take things like Olivia Newton John in "Grease."

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Should you really be giving retirement advice to twenty-somethings?

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
A tisket, a tasket, you must find the green and yellow basket.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Are you the result of why it's okay to scare your kids?

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Don't feel so bad — even Brad Pitt needed training wheels.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Cable TV has become even more valuable now that FEAR FEST has begun.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Your mouth is dry from singing all those Biggie songs in your ethereal sleep.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Will you go down in the annals of zombie killers?

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen win while men struggle

Walsh leads team to first dual meet victory, named UMass/Dinn Bros. Athlete of the Week

By Daniel Herberholz
Collegian Correspondent

This past Saturday, the team accomplishment of the first dual meet victory of the season came with individual honors for Massachusetts' Athlete of the Week, Elizabeth Walsh.

The Massachusetts swimming team beat Army, 166.5-127.5, and Walsh was named UMass/Dinn Bros. Athlete of the Week for her performance.

Walsh, a senior, won the 200-yard freestyle (1 minute, 57.44 seconds) and the 200-yard backstroke (2:11.60), along with a 400-yard freestyle relay victory. UMass coach Bob Newcomb said Walsh has been "thriving" so far in her senior season.

UMass	166.5
Army	127.5

Junior Jennifer Corriveau, along with freshmen Amina Meho and Julie Myagar joined, Walsh in the 3:36.74 relay win. Myagar also won two events on her own.

"Magyar has exceeded our expectations this year," Newcomb said, who called her the performer of the meet.

She captured first in the 500 freestyle with a time of 5:11.64, as well as in the 1000 freestyle (10:39.59).

Corriveau notched first in 100 backstroke (1:01.14) and finished behind Meho's 53.65 time for third in 100-yard freestyle (54.39).

Juniors Jessica Starosielec and Meghan Nowak finished alongside each other twice.

Starosielec beat Nowak by .03 for second place in 100 breaststroke (1:08.34).

The 200 breaststroke had a similarly close finish, with Starosielec's 2:27.10 out-touching Nowak's 2:27.40.

"Meghan Nowak's 200 Breast was by far the fastest she's swum," Newcomb said. "I would call that single best performance of the meet."

Other contributors to the women's victory were sophomore Kayla Tegeler, junior Tavis Potter and diver Hannah Swift.

Sophomore Hannah Swift won the 1-meter event with a score of 225.89, and placed second for three-meter.

Tegeler won the 200 fly (2:09.81) and Potter won her first event of the year with a 200 IM time of 2:13.65.

A week after the men beat Boston University they dropped the meet at Army, 183-117.

The loss to Army hinged on losing three-fourths of the events, a reverse showing of how the Minutemen performed against the Black Knights last year.

"This was basically a mirror image meet," said men's coach Russ Yarworth. "We were hyped to perform like we did last year here against Army, when we won 12 of 16 events. They were just charged up, and won 12 this year."

The Minutemen were led again by the diving team and had one individual swimming event victory. Freshman Jorge Fortin finished first in the 200 freestyle with a two-second improvement on his time a week ago (1:43.27).

"He has been a pleasant surprise this year," said Yarworth, who noted that Fortin has been very receptive to coaching on his mechanics.

Sophomore Jason Cook captured victory in 1-meter and 3-meter diving, with scores of 344.18 and 310.95. Minutemen were in the top three places for 1-meter diving, with juniors Adam Duffield and John Clark in second and third. Duffield also placed second in the 3-meter event.

Following a final-race victory last week to win the meet against BU, Juan Moliere had two second place finishes – one by .01 of a second. The senior had a 50-freestyle time of 21.32, but was outtouched by Army's Daniel Folky.

Moliere also earned second in 100 freestyle (46.85) and was named A-10's first Performer of the Week, the third time he's earned the honor.

Juniors Chris Howard and Trevor Ziegler joined Moliere and Fortin for a 400 freestyle relay victory in the final race of the meet, beating Army by less than a second (3:07.88).

"We won the last event of the day, and that shows we didn't give up," Yarworth said.

Massachusetts will host Stony Brook in their dual meet opener on Oct. 31, at 1 p.m.

Daniel Herberholz can be reached at dherberh@student.umass.edu.

MAXWELL SHARP/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen dropped the meet this past Sunday to Army, 183-117, after losing three-fourths of the events. UMass will be action when it faces Stony Brook at home on Saturday.

COURTESY: CHARLOTTE MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior Whitney Weinraub was named A-10 Player of the Week for her performance in last week's victories. Weinraub recorded two assists and two goals last weekend in wins over Temple and Saint Joseph's.

Beam becomes all-time points leader at UC

By Geena Lombardi
Collegian Staff

With two victories over Saint Joseph's and Temple during this past weekend's play, Charlotte extended its winning streak over Atlantic 10 competition to 26 games. The impressive weekend of play also moved the 49ers up to No. 25 in the National Soccer Coaches Association of America rankings.

Goals from Jonna Handra, Hailey Beam, Kirby Stenard, Macky Wingo and Whitney Weinraub helped Charlotte (15-2-1, 9-0-1 A-10) to a 5-0 shutout over the Owls (6-11-1, 2-8-0 A-10).

A-10 Notebook

Handra started off the scoring for the 49ers with a goal in the 16th minute from a Weinraub assist. Three minutes later, Beam increased her career goals to 35 with a rebounded shot. Weinraub executed a second assist to Stenard for the third goal in the first half, and the scoring continued into the second half with a goal from Wingo. Two assists were not enough for Weinraub as she scored the last goal of the game in the 69th minute, marking the 30th of her career.

Lauren Brown and Jessica Barton shared goalkeeping duties to give Charlotte its 12th shutout of the season.

Whitney Bryant joined Beam and Weinraub to produce the three goals that gave the 49ers a win over Saint Joseph's (7-8-3, 4-5-1 A-10).

Saint Joseph's scored its one and only goal early in the first half. In the 35th minute, Bryant tied up the game with her first goal of the season.

Weinraub's goal in the 66th minute put Charlotte in the lead.

Beam capitalized on a free kick to give the 49ers the 3-1 win. Beam's second goal of the weekend moved her career points to 103, a new school record for all-time points leader. She also tied Courtney Cook's record of 36 career goals.

The two victories not only made Charlotte a nationally ranked team, but also kept its NSCAA Mid-Atlantic ranking at No. 1.

Flyers soaring in A-10

Dayton extended its unbeaten streak to 17 games with victories over Massachusetts and Rhode Island. The Flyer's defense also recorded its 12th shutout of the season.

Friday's game versus the Rams (5-11-1, 3-6-0 A-10) was dominated by Dayton (12-0-5, 8-0-1 A-10), who outshot URI, 21-8. The game remained scoreless until the 51st minute when junior Tori Oelschlanger took a pass from Kelly Blumenschein and headed the ball into the net. A second goal, scored by fellow junior Allison Giner in the 83rd minute, ensured the Flyers the win.

Freshman goalkeeper Katherine Boone made five saves for Dayton. She improved her goals against average to .27, ranking her No. 1 in the A-10.

Sunday's game against UMass (4-10-2, 3-6-0 A-10) proved to have a similar outcome as seniors Lauren MacCormick and Mandi Black led the

See SOCCER on page 6

COURTESY: TEMPLE MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior captain Charise Young brings the ball upfield for Temple in a game earlier this season. Young assisted Bridget Settles for the game-winning goal Sunday to top La Salle, 1-0.

SJU tops conference rival West Chester

By Drew Morrison
Collegian Staff

The Saint Joseph's field hockey team got back in the win column on Sunday with a 3-1 victory at conference rival West Chester.

The Hawks (6-8, 3-1 Atlantic 10) got the scoring started on a penalty corner about 10 minutes into the game. Senior Anne Schreuders put the ball in play to sophomore Teresa Testa who put the ball in the goal to give St. Joe's a 1-0 lead. It was Testa's second-consecutive game with a goal.

A-10 Notebook

About mid-way through the first half, Testa set up another Hawks goal when she passed the ball to junior Hannah Rodgers, who finished the play to extend her team's lead to 2-0. With eight minutes, 46 seconds left in the first half, Hawks senior Kellie Walter tallied an unassisted goal to give her team a 3-0 advantage.

West Chester (8-9, 3-2 A-10) got on the board with five minutes left in the half when Alyssa Gallen got a shot past Hawks keeper Kelley Swanick to make the score 3-1. Swanick made three saves on the day for St. Joseph's while West Chester keeper Joelle Zarefoss finished with four.

Temple wins at home

Temple's Bridget Settles scored the only goal of the game against La Salle at about the 10 minute mark of the second half to ensure a 1-0 victory.

With the win, the Owls (6-11, 2-2 A-10) are currently in fourth place in the conference with the tournament right around the corner.

The teams played to a stalemate in the first half, and neither generated much in the way of offense as the play was highly concentrated around the center third of the field. The Explorers had the only penalty corner of the frame but couldn't capitalize on the opportunity.

The Owls cracked La Salle goalie Emma Ruth early in the second half on a penalty corner of their own.

Off the inbounds pass, senior Mandi Ruth stopped the ball at the top of the circle for fellow senior Charise Young. The midfielder opted for another pass over a shot and dished the ball to Settles who fired a shot home that deflected off the goalie. Solid defense won out for both teams for the remainder for the game as it ended in a 1-0 decision.

Drew Morrison can be reached at ajmorris@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 53 LOW: 38 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2009

Town of Amherst debates inviting former detainees

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

A warrant article, or resolution, which proposes ending a ban on allowing freed former terror suspects to emigrate to America and offering two current Guantanamo Bay prison detainees the chance to move to Amherst will be debated at Amherst's Town Meeting, which begins Nov. 2.

The article, introduced by Town Meeting member Ruth Hooke, who is also a member of the group, Pioneer Valley for No More Guantanamos, is one of 14 on the ballot at this year's meeting.

To get an article on the ballot, one must obtain 100 signatures from citizens and submit it to the Select Board, according to Select Board Chair, Stephanie O'Keeffe.

The warrant article was put to a non-binding vote by the Select Board, which voted 2-1 minus two absent members to recommend the article last Monday.

O'Keeffe said that while there has been much speculation that the vote is in some way binding or actually put the measure into place, no such thing had happened and the Select Board merely voted on whether or not to recommend the article, as it does every other question.

"The Select Board is required to take a position on every warrant article for [the] Town Meeting," she said. "We took a position on maybe half a dozen articles last week, nothing happens on any of the articles until Town Meeting."

O'Keeffe said she personally does not support the article because she believes it is not pertinent to local politics and that decisions on national and international policy should be left to Congress and the president.

"I voted not to recommend the article because, first of all, I don't think that the Town Meeting has the information and expertise necessary to offer productive guidance to Congress on this issue," she said.

O'Keeffe continued to say that she feels the local government's function is to address local issues, not foreign policy, and that she feels the town's government would be better suited for other jobs.

"We're elected to deal with local things, I think that it is a non-productive use of Town Meeting time," she said. "Amherst town meeting deals with issues that are of national and international scope periodically, and my position is always that I don't think it's appropriate to be dealing with those issues, no matter what the issue is," she elaborated.

The two Select Board members who voted for the article were Diana Stein and Gerald Weis.

Stein said she supported the article because she feels the two men invited to move to Amherst are innocent and should be welcomed.

"I decided to support this article when I saw the profiles of the two men and read about them," she said. "The critical points for me is that we know, one, that the U.S. made mistakes and arrested people and two, that these men have been cleared by the U.S. of any crime."

Stein said she believes supporting the measure "is the morally correct thing to do," and that she believes it will help diversify the community.

"If Congress decides to let the cleared detainees into the country and they come, they will add to the diversity of our community," she said.

Hooke, who introduced the measure, said she brought the article before the Town Meeting because she hopes it will bring the Guantanamo Bay issue greater attention.

"I figured it would be a way to bring this whole issue of Guantanamo before a larger public," she said. "I think it's a local issue, I think we are trying very hard to lift the ban on any Guantanamo detainees coming into this country," she said of her group's efforts.

Along with both Weis and O'Keeffe, Hooke stressed that the move would bring only cleared suspects to Amherst.

"They have not been charged with any crime, they have never been tried," she said. "I believe in the principle that you are innocent until proven guilty, and our government has said they are no risk."

Hooke said she hopes this move will create similar enthusiasm around the country.

"We hope there will be reverberations around the country," she said. "Our president has said he wants to close Guantanamo by Jan. 22, we are helping the president," she added.

O'Keeffe mentioned that Hooke's legislation notes that similar efforts have been undertaken in North Carolina, Colorado, Florida and Virginia.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

COURTESY PAUL CHIELLO

On Nov. 2, members of the Amherst community will vote to allow former terror suspects detained in Guantanamo Bay to take up residency within the town.

SAMANTHA WEINER/COLLEGIAN

Students who want the Showtime Networks in their University cable packages can sign the online petition on the company's Facebook page.

Showtime Networks posts Facebook page petitioning for access

By Tim Jones
Collegian Staff

An online petition from Showtime Networks is now available for University of Massachusetts students who wish to have the network included in their cable packaging in their dorms.

Showtime, a subscription television brand consisting of a variety of channels, has launched an online petition for students to sign, which will be used for support when they contact various universities and colleges about including their subscription in the television provided for students.

The petition will not make any finalized decisions, but only act as a voice for college students if there is a large enough response from the college student body.

The network is home to several critically acclaimed shows such as, "Weeds," a program following a suburban woman who sells drugs to make a living, "Dexter," a show that describes the life of a serial killer who is also a blood spatter for the Miami Metro Police Department, and "Californication," a show about a writer who moves to California to sort out his issue-laden life and writer's block.

Showtime also has contracts with several film companies such as "Summit Entertainment." "Summit Entertainment" is responsible the "Twilight" series," "Push" and "The Knowing." These contracts allow the channels to broadcast many newly released movies before other networks, as well as some occasional special televised events.

See SHOWTIME on page 3

Lea discusses effects of WWII

University professor speaks on infamous Nuremberg trials

By Jennifer Heshion
Collegian Staff

Approaching the podium in the University of Massachusetts' Herter Hall, Henry A. Lea, professor emeritus of German and Scandinavian studies, took a deep breath before he addressed a gathered audience of students and faculty on what was destined to be a sensitive issue.

"It is a difficult topic I'll have to impose on you because of the subject matter," Lea began. "Please consider this as much an academic report as much as a historical one."

The subject matter in question for the lecture, hosted by the UMass department of German and Scandinavian studies on Oct. 27, delved into the ramifications of World War II. The lecture, titled, "Criminals with Doctorates: An SS Officer in the Killing Fields of Russia, as Told by the Jewish Novelist Jonathan Littell," was an analysis of the novel, "The Kindly Ones" by Jonathan Littell.

Focusing on the Einsatzgruppen case of the Nuremberg trials following Germany's defeat in the war, the narrator in the novel is an SS officer who becomes a part of the death squads sent out by the Germans across Russia to kill the Jewish population and other "undesirables," and is later forced to stand trial with his fellow SS officers for such crimes.

For Lea, who was born in Germany but later emigrated to the United States, the Einsatzgruppen case was especially poignant to his past as an interrogator in the American Armed Forces. Working for the U.S., Lea served as an interrogator of prisoners of war and later as an interpreter during the Nuremberg trials, including the trial examined in Littell's novel. The Nuremberg trials held from Nov. 1945 until Oct. 1946 were a series of tribunals in which the SS forces were tried for crimes against humanity. The SS officers, who were under the command of German officer, Heinrich Himmler, were responsible for carrying out the most severe of the Nazi Party's crimes against humanity as ordered by Hitler.

From his own viewpoint during the Einsatzgruppen case, Lea said the SS officers seemed to have no sympathy for the people they planned to exterminate.

"I can recall no remorse as was played out in the novel," Lea said.

As depicted in the novel, Lea read a scene during the trial in which an SS officer defended his actions while also trying to gain some sympathy for what he deemed the psychological suffering of his men who had to carry out the orders.

"The victims knew what was going to happen to them, they were resigned to their fate," says the officer in the novel. "The men suffered from nervous exhaustion, more so than the people they had to shoot."

See WWII on page 3

SAMANTHA WEINER/COLLEGIAN

University of Massachusetts professor emeritus of German and Scandinavian studies, Henry A. Lea, held a lecture titled, "Criminals with Doctorates: An SS Officer in the Killing Fields of Russia, as Told by the Jewish Novelist Jonathan Littell," on Oct. 27 in Herter Hall.

ARTS & LIVING

The Bad Plus to play NoHo

The members of The Bad Plus will bring the noise to the Iron Horse Music Hall Thursday night at 7 p.m.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Field Hockey hosts Dartmouth

With two must-win games this weekend, the Minutewomen hope to gain some momentum against the Big Green to prepare them for their final A-10 games.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Collegian columnist Sabiian Tariq explains the meaning behind fasting, charity and pilgrimage, three of the five tenants of Islam.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Log on to DailyCollegian.com to view the photo slideshow of Jay-Z's mind-blowing performance last night.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 35

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Mas Deimer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shawna Murphy
COPY EDITOR Annie Keithline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elve Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COPY Andrew Witts
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSITANT EDITORIAL Hannah Nelson
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alissa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Index-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

COPY EDITOR
Elizabeth Tran

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

A bulletin board displays details about the Five Colleges, Inc.'s program of interchange outside room 614 in Goodell Hall.

Executive director discusses plan for future of program

BY ANGELA HILSMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As costs and requirements for both schools and students go up, Executive Director Neal Abraham of the Five Colleges, Inc., brainstorms to bring innovative programs to campus without the financial burden.

Abraham is working with the Five Colleges to form a research ethics training program. He says that since the federal government will soon require any researcher supported by federal funding to have formal training in research ethics, a collaboration effort between the schools would be less costly than having each set up its own training.

Abraham believes this requirement will be "a good thing." He notes that "It highlights the importance of ethical practice in providing a credible outcome for research endeavors." Abraham adds that since students, faculty members, post-

See CONSORTIUM on page 3

Bonner speaks at event on Teach for America

BY VINCENT CAPONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Teach for America (TFA) will be hosting an information session for prospective applicants on Oct. 28 at 6:30 p.m. at the University of Massachusetts.

The event will be held in the Malcolm X Cultural Center, located in the basement of the Berkshire Dining Commons. The event is co-sponsored by Teach For America, the Malcolm X Cultural Center and the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS) office.

The information session will feature guest speaker Leigh Bonner, a 2006 corps member. Leigh taught middle school math and science in Harlem, New York City, N.Y. She will speak about her experience with TFA and answer any questions prospective students may have.

"I believed this idea that if two people make the same choices, work equally as hard, that they will have the same opportunities," said Bonner. "Education is intended to be the lever for upward mobility and the great equalizer."

"Unfortunately, the reality is that a students' educational prospects are determined by where they are born," added Bonner. "There are 14 million children in the US growing up in poverty whose life prospects are incredibly limited by their academic opportunities. Teach For America was a way for me to contribute to the solution for this problem."

TFA is a program that recruits at universities all across the United States, placing college graduates in two-year teaching positions in low-income school systems throughout the nation.

The program's goal is to eliminate the inequity gap that is said to be plaguing our nation's school systems, while at the same time enlisting corps members who will become the leaders of tomorrow.

TFA places their corps members in classrooms teaching subjects within the K-12 teaching level. The program seeks soon-to-be graduates looking to make a difference in America.

TFA helps corps members work on their leadership skills in a fast-paced work environment right out of college. Program alums go on to work for leading employers and attend top graduate schools across the country.

The program provides a support system throughout the teaching experience, granting a full support staff in the location of a corps member's field teaching as well as assistance obtaining a job once the program concludes. The program also provides full salary and benefits to graduates directly out of college.

Applicants come from all academic backgrounds and do not need prior teaching experience. All students are encouraged to apply.

Over 24,000 corps members have passed through TFA since its founding, affecting the lives of over three million students in America. TFA currently has job placements in thirty-five urban and rural areas across the country.

Kelly Quinn, a senior at UMass and the campus campaign coordinator for TFA is helping plan the event.

"Wednesday's information session will be a great way to learn about a job opportunity that truly makes an impact in the lives of thousands of children," said Quinn. "I would encourage UMass students to come learn about the different career and financial benefits of Teach For America."

Applying for TFA is a three-part process, consisting of an online application, a 30-minute phone interview, and a full day in-person interview.

The next TFA application deadline is Jan. 8, 2010. Applications can be found online at TeachForAmerica.org.

The information is located in the Malcolm X Cultural Center in the basement of the Berkshire Dining Commons, and is accessible by walking to the side of the building. Bruno's Pizza and refreshments will be served.

Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu.

YOU'VE ALREADY GOT YOUR COSTUME.
WHERE ARE YOU GOING TO WEAR IT?
Log on to DailyCollegian.com to view our map of Halloween events on campus or submit your own!

Annual
FIVE COLLEGE GRADUATE & PROFESSIONAL SCHOOLS INFORMATION DAY

Wednesday, October 28, 2009
11 A.M. - 3 P.M.
The Student Union Ballroom,
UMass Amherst

Meet representatives from national and international graduate programs.
Explore theology, medicine, socail services, engineering and much more...

This event is free and open to the Western Massachusetts College Community.

UMASS AMHERST Career Services
Student Affairs & Campus Life

Vigil Against Violence

On Oct. 27, Alpha Chi Omega Sorority, Sigma Psi Zeta Sorority and the Everywoman's Center hosted a candlelight vigil to raise awareness for victims of domestic abuse and violence.

Showtime encourages UM to sign petition

SHOWTIME from page 1

Variations of the channels include Showtime Beyond, which features programming relating to science fiction, Showtime Extreme, which has programs that emphasize action and thrill television, and Showtime Family Zone, a channel dedicated to movies that are suitable for all ages.

Students can sign the petition on Facebook, where Showtime officials have created a "Students for Showtime: Hook Us Up" page. It is there that people may sign the petition, browse clips of their original programming and leave comments on the home page. The petition currently has 1,098 fans on the page, many of whom are UMass students. Located on the page are files of various posters that students can print out to place around their own school.

There is also a discussion board that asks users of the application why they want to have Showtime included in their on-campus housing. There have been no replies to the discussion board, which has been active since Sept. 3.

The homepage wall that students are able to post comments on is primarily updated with Showtime's own posts, either with links to episodes or offers of merchandise.

UMass students all have varying opinions on the possibility.

"I would like having Showtime in my dorm, but there is obviously the issue of the cost for the telecommunications department," said junior Tom Kennedy.

Sophomore Maria DeRosa said, "People always want the full package and extra channels and end up never watching them. People can watch their favorite shows online for free. So the money could be put to something better."

Some students remain indifferent on the matter, like sophomore Alice Trei, who said, "I don't have the time to watch those shows. It wouldn't affect me at all."

UMass currently offers a few home box office channels, along with a basic cable package that students can watch in their dorms. UMass' own cable provider, the Housing Cable Service Provider, is a privately owned cable service provider as defined by the Federal Communications Commission, and it is operated by housing services.

Showtime will also be visiting several campuses in an attempt to do grassroots marketing. Representatives will advertise the petition and the channels in an attempt to raise excitement and possible sales. There is no word on when or where the company will be visiting as of now.

Tim Jones can be reached at timothyj@student.umass.edu

Students Yasmine DeSouza, Edds and Joey Kalinowski and Ed Ikhariale watch television in Leach Hall in Northeast Residential Area.

Lecture describes brutalities of German officers against Jews

WWII from page 1

In response to the dismissals of responsibility by the assembled defendants, Lea also read a passage from the novel in which one judge addressed an SS officer who claimed if he had not carried out his orders, his replacement most certainly would have.

To the SS officer in question who was being interrogated about several executions he conducted, the judge stated, "You can never be absolutely sure what the next man is going to do. It is your responsibility and you cannot be sure someone else would have done the same thing. If you had left on that day, nobody would have been shot."

According to Lea, the rationale of the judge in the case was based on the presumption that the SS police would not have stopped their brutalities until all the Jews had been killed.

In an ironic twist, Lea described how the loyalty of the officers to their home country of Germany did, at times, interfere with the orders they gave in regards to harming their own countrymen. The novel describes one German officer who, upon receiving orders to execute a group of German Jews, refused to do so because they were of his country. The officer received no severe punishment for his disobedience, and after a brief stay in the infantry, he had resumed his position in the SS forces.

The characterization of this German SS officer was, as Lea said, common among some of the German officers. Though, he added, these officers had not given a second thought to the execution of Russian Jews. According to Lea, Russians Jews were "barbaric" to the Germans because they were foreigners; therefore, the Germans were able to detach themselves from their actions in these circumstances.

The SS officer depicted in the novel is described by Lea as a sociopath committed to self-preservation at all costs. Despite all the destruction this officer carries out in the name of Germany, he, according to Lea, disregards all responsibility for his actions with his repeated saying of, "I observe and do nothing."

According to Lea, the Littell uses heightened narration of events throughout the novel in order to highlight their historical significance, particularly in the depiction of the interrogations. The reality of the devastation left in the wake of the SS Party was inconsequential, according to Lea, because of the unwavering devotion the officers held for both Hitler and their home country of Germany.

"In case Germany loses the war, none of the assembled Nazi leaders would be able to plead ignorance during the trials," Lea said. "They stand together and fall together."

Despite having a "shaky plot" and lacking some fluency, Lea said, speaking from his own experience, the novel provides a comprehensive historical account of the atrocities during WWII.

"The novel is remarkable for exposing Nazi crimes in Russia, especially for its wealth of thought provoking ideas," Lea said.

"The book has dramatized to me that I was a part of an inexplicable event," Lea said.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Man allegedly defaces vehicle

The Amherst Police Department announced on Tuesday, Oct. 26, the arrest of Belchertown resident Jayson Stinson following an alleged altercation in the Townhouse Apartments on Sunday, Oct. 25.

According to a press release distributed by the Amherst Police yesterday, officers responded to a home invasion at 39 Townhouse Apartments at 3:58 p.m. Sunday, and found evidence that 26-year-old suspect Stinson had entered the apartment of a Townhouse resident and his girlfriend, and threatened the two 20-year-olds with a knife later recovered by police.

The suspect went on to allegedly smash the windows of the female's car with a metal chair, before fleeing the scene prior to the police's arrival. Stinson was located by police at Colonial Apartments on 5:19 p.m. on Sunday, and he was subsequently arrested according to the Amherst Police press release. He remains in prison on $1,000 cash bail following his arraignment in Eastern Hampshire District Court on charges of home invasion, breaking and entering, and malicious destruction of property over $250.

Nick Bush, Collegian Staff

Five Colleges explore collaborative options

CONSORTIUM from page 2

doctoral scholars and graduate students at all five colleges will need this training. "It makes sense to develop in-person and on-line programs that will benefit all five institutions with a minimum of redundant work."

"Both the colleges and the University are exploring the development of five-year programs and fifth-year programs that will provide enhanced educational opportunities for undergraduate students and which will lead to enhanced credentials," said Abraham. These programs prepare students for additional studies in graduate or professional programs, or train them for careers.

Abraham said these programs are "an opportunity to blend a liberal arts education with professional opportunities." He notes that the colleges are considering ways to bridge students from their arts programs into graduate studies in a five-year program because many students are not able to assemble enough of a portfolio in just four years.

Some of these five or fifth-year programs will accelerate the degree process by allowing students to finish in one year instead of two. Others allow students to receive graduate credit for courses they complete in their first four years.

According to Abraham, the five institutions are discussing the development of their five or fifth-year programs either through joint action or parallel action to reduce duplication. "Building on combined resources and interest should result in stronger programs," says Abraham.

Abraham hopes to have 10 to 20 of these five or fifth -year programs launched in the next year or two.

These are not the only goals on Abraham's list. "There is a long list of 'Five Colleges' endeavors,'" he said. He continued saying that the Five Colleges have "a broad array of programs and scholarships," including 22 joint faculty appointments. This means that faculty members based at one campus regularly teach on other campuses.

Also, the Five College Center for the Study of World Languages is available to students, and this program offers languages that would not otherwise be available on any of the five campuses. Plus, over 350 women's studies scholars work within the Five College Women's Studies Research Center.

The Five Colleges also have joint dance and astronomy departments, and also hold joint library services. According to Abraham, these services are the longest running and most elaborate joint programs.

Abraham said the Five Colleges are working on more ways to promote collaboration as well as financial support for their efforts. "Some foundations provide funding for exploring collaboration," he said, pointing out that the Mellon Foundation has supported many Five College joint programs.

"We will continue to look for other opportunities," said Abraham. "It's unreasonable to imagine there will be less change in the next 20 years than there was in the last 20."

According to Abraham, his position as the executive director of the Five Colleges program requires him to provide "strategic leadership for the collaborative, coordinated and integrated endeavors of the member institutions."

The Five Colleges program includes the University of Massachusetts, Amherst College, Hampshire College, Mount Holyoke College and Smith College.

Angela Hilsman can be reached at ahilsman@student.umass.edu

ALL TREATS, NO TRICKS
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31 · ALL DCS: 5-9 PM
THE BIGGEST HALLOWEEN PARTY ON CAMPUS!

CONTESTS:
Pumpkin Painting Contest
- All entrants will receive a UMass Travel Hot Bottle
- Pumpkins will be displayed in all DCs

UMass Student Costume Contest
- Grand Prize: $100 gift card
- Gift cards (10 winners/DC)

MENU:
Maine Live Lobsters
New York Strip Steak
Chesterfield Chicken
NE Clam Chowder (local)
Ratatouille (local)
Butternut Squash (local)
Grilled Vegetables (local)
Mulled Cider (local)
Candied Apples (local)

ENTERTAINMENT:
Table Magic · Fortune Telling · DJs

UMass Students Wearing a Costume receives a UMass Travel Hot Bottle (1st 100)

SPONSORED BY UMASS DINING BE A LOCAL HERO
RESTAURANT ASSOCIATION
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
facebook.com/umassdining

ALL ARE WELCOME
USE YOUR MEAL CARD OR $15 CASH

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Islam and the role of charity

Subhan Tariq

Ever wonder what it feels like to starve? Or to go hungry for an entire day without food or drink? Ever wonder how people in other countries survive? Ever wonder what people who are less fortunate than us feel like? That is the purpose of fasting in Islam, to gain consciousness.

Like other major religions, Muslims fast as well. In the month of Ramadan, the holiest month of the Islamic lunar calendar, Muslims fast from sunrise to sunset, during which we can't eat or drink.

If everyone helped out by donating 2.5 percent of their total wealth (including investments, gold, land, anything), the world as we know it would be different.

The purpose of this is for Muslims to be more conscious both of the plight of those less fortunate as well as to become closer to God.

There are five main tenants in Islam; faith, prayer, fasting, charity and pilgrimage. I've discussed the first two pillars in previous columns, and wanted to use this column to focus on the last three.

There is a great emphasis in Islam on helping others and the community. In Islam, helping those who are less fortunate is one of the greatest good deeds one can do. Whether it is with a smile or helping someone accomplish something, Islam has always looked favorably on those who help others.

One of the ways Muslims have the ability to help and raise awareness about those who are less fortunate and in need is through fasting. Often, Muslims will donate their meals and help raise money and awareness about those in need. By putting oneself in the same feeling as those who are hungry, Muslims have the ability to relate better and ultimately have the ability to help others more efficiently.

Zakah, or the giving of charity, is the fourth pillar of Islam. It is important to note that of the five pillars of Islam, two of them are about helping others and giving back to the community. Zakah is something that Muslims have to give every year. It is essentially Muslims giving 2.5 percent of their total wealth every year to those who need it the most.

If everyone helped out by donating 2.5 percent of their total wealth (including investments, gold, land, anything), the world as we know it would be different. It would be 2.5 percent that would go directly to the poor and therefore would have the ability to help those who are in need the most. We would be able to help those in need the most if we all just put a small amount in.

Lastly, is the concept of community that is incredibly important in Islam. The hajj (pilgrimage) is the fifth pillar of Islam. It is required for every able Muslim who can afford it and has the means to go to Mekkah for Hajj. It is the culmination of the ritual that Abraham took part in on his way to sacrifice his son. The trip takes Muslims upon a spiritual journey to the two holiest mosques in Islam. Hajj takes place in the 12th month of the Islamic lunar calendar, Dhu-al-Hijjah, which is the next month on the lunar calendar.

It is important to note that during Hajj, everyone is equal. Doctors, lawyers, peasants, the poor, everyone is the same. Whether you are black or white, Asian or Latino, everyone puts on the white garments and does the same rituals that go along with Hajj. At Hajj, just as in daily prayers, class or race doesn't have an impact on who prays where or next to whom. It is the single largest gathering of humans in the world; some three to four million people turn out for the annual event. With current plans for renovations and the expansion of the holy sites in Mekkah, that number could double or triple in the next few years.

The building of community can be seen beyond just that at Hajj. In Islam, all males are required to attend Friday congregational prayers, which include a sermon as well as a prayer. It is highly recommended for women to attend the congregational prayers but it is not obligatory for them. It is at these Friday sermons and prayers, that people build a sense of community with their mosque as well as with other Muslims. It is recommended for Muslims to pray at the Mosque at other times to build a community but it is required on Fridays during Friday prayers.

It is important to learn about the culture and religions of others. In an increasingly globalized world, we interact with people of different cultures all the time, sometimes without even realizing it. Go ahead, ask questions and learn about the cultures and religions of others. Who knows? You might learn something about yourself as well.

Subhan Tariq is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at stariq@student.umass.edu.

Ill timing for inmate invite

Much has been said in the media and in private discussions since the Amherst Select Board voted 2-1 last Monday to recommend a plan to move two Guantanamo Bay detainees to Amherst pending their potential release from the controversial prisoner-of-war camp in Cuba.

Town politicians were very eager to emphasize and reiterate that this plan is not as insane and farfetched as has been widely reported – and they may be right – but people will still see this as an openly un-patriotic, perhaps an even treasonous, gesture.

While no one is proposing building a statue of Osama bin Laden or reading the Pledge of Allegiance in Arabic, Amherst is neither that insensitive nor that stupid. This plan represents another example of Amherst going out of its way to be overly politically correct, making a caricature of itself as the bleeding-heart lefty town that's gone off its rocker. Passing this plan will only further embolden Fox News and the right in attacking Amherst as some crackpot den of dope-smoking freaks. Whether or not this plan even is all that sensational is practically irrelevant. It's the symbolism of it that matters.

While Amherst's motivations may be the best – it sincerely does care about the welfare of these inmates – the move emphatically places Amherst about as far out there on the political spectrum as Carl Everett or Pat Robertson and opens the door to ridicule and scolding for being a decidedly un-American, un-patriotic place.

Whether these accusations are fair or grounded is beside the point. Make no mistake about it, passing this move will only make Amherst fodder for more jokes about being a place filled with pink-haired communists.

Beyond that, are there not more pressing local issues?

Amherst is about to shut down an elementary school, we have people homeless here in Amherst, across the river in Northampton and just down the road in Holyoke, Mass., and Springfield. We have clear infrastructure problems at the University of Massachusetts, traffic congestion in Amherst, budget issues throughout the region, state, nation and world, and we in Amherst are most impassioned by the plight of two inmates stuck in limbo at a prison in Cuba?

The plan, introduced by Town Meeting member Ruth Hooke, also a member of the group Pioneer Valley for No More Guantanamos, is to offer two current inmates who have been deemed non-threatening to America, the chance to move to Amherst once they have been released from the prison and when the current ban on allowing freed detainees to come to America is lifted.

Presently, those released from Guantanamo and other U.S. prison camps around the world may not come to America upon their release.

Hooke's warrant article, as the proposal is called, has two components. One part calls for ending the ban on freed detainees emigrating to America. The other part calls for offering the two inmates in question the chance to come to Amherst.

Now, wait for it. Nothing has happened with this, yet.

The Select Board must vote to either recommend or not recommend every warrant article going before the town meeting. Their recommendation is non-binding and really has no bearing on the fate of the proposal, which lies with the Town Meeting, which commences Nov. 2.

Not to dismiss the struggles of these men, but shouldn't we be working on making Amherst a livelier, safer, richer and happier community, rather than opening the door to ridicule from mainstream America in the hopes of saving accused terrorists?

Amherst is taking on this endeavor with the right intentions, but come on, man, can't we worry about Guantanamo after we, say, close the budget gap, pave the roads, end local injustice, feed the poor, you know, one of those issues which people are usually getting all worked up about?

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

- Boo! That was the worst column I've ever read.
- It was terrible!
- Well, it wasn't that bad.
- Oh yeah?
- There were some parts I liked.
- Well I liked a lot of it.
- Yeah, it was good, actually.
- It was great!
- It was wonderful!
- More!
- More!
- We should write one by e-mailing editorial@dailycollegian.com!

Crippling morality with unnecessary laws

Dave Coffey

While perusing through some news stories recently, I noticed a particularly interesting Associated Press article concerning a new policy recently put into place at Tufts University. The new policy bans students from engaging in sexual activity in their dorm rooms while their roommates are there.

Reception of the new policy was fairly divided within the Tufts student body. Some think the policy is a positive measure, reinforcing respect and proper cohabitation conditions between roommates. Others, however, think it is a blatant and unnecessary intrusion into students' residential lives.

I'm not trying to be all Johnny Anarchist here ... But there are some things that should simply be left up to a person's moral judgment to decide.

After reading the article, I found myself unsure which side I agreed with on the matter. Nevertheless, I found the policy itself to be quite unorthodox, at least in terms of what it was trying to regulate and where.

After thinking about it for a while, I came upon another article on Time.com, this one concerning a discrimination lawsuit between clothing retailer Abercrombie & Fitch and a young woman named Samantha Elauf. Long story short, Abercrombie refused to hire Elauf, who is Muslim, because her religion requires her to wear a hijab, or headscarf, and this apparently doesn't fit in to Abercrombie's "look policy" (a.k.a. their employee dress code). In turn, Elauf is suing Abercrombie & Fitch for "discrimination ... on the basis of religion," said the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, according to the article.

After reading both articles, I came to the conclusion that I disagreed with upholding the rules and policies inherent in both articles. I don't just disagree with them because I am for what they're trying to prevent, however.

As someone who lives in a dorm, I wholeheartedly agree that engaging in sexual activity while your roommate is present should indeed be frowned upon to say the least. I also think that discriminating against someone based on religion, or any personal trait for that matter, is wrong, in terms of employment or otherwise. The reason I disagree with upholding these policies, though, has to do with the subtle repercussions of the moving of the fine line between legality and morality.

In my opinion, just because certain things should or should not be a certain way does not mean we need a law or rule inherently enforcing it. It may seem an arbitrary point to defend at first, but aren't there things we shouldn't have to be bound by law to do or not do? The aforementioned notion of morality becomes muddled and hidden behind legality when certain rules are put in place. As the saying goes, "If you don't use it, you lose it."

Enforcing certain moral decisions – even the easy ones – by law or policy takes away one's ability to flex the morality muscle, so to speak. And it is precisely this that we will lose. The ban on sex while a roommate is present, for example, is supposedly in order to promote "respect and consideration," according to the AP article. But doesn't enforcing the ideas of respect and consideration by policy somewhat undermine the intangible values therein?

I'm not trying to be all Johnny Anarchist here and say all laws and rules are bad for society. Of course laws against stuff like murder and assault and all those kinds of things benefit us as a people. But there are some things that should simply be left up to a person's moral judgment to decide, as opposed to having a decision imposed by some sort of legal measure.

Take the Abercrombie & Fitch lawsuit, for example. I in no way promote or think it right to discriminate against someone based on their personal spiritual practices. However, should Abercrombie & Fitch be persuaded by law to think similarly? The harsh reality about a business like Abercrombie is that it turns a profit by marketing on an association between its clothing and attractive people. Abercrombie as a company would therefore see it fit to associate itself with as many attractive people as physically possible.

Is it morally wrong of them to turn someone down for employment simply because they think the person's "image" isn't attractive enough? It is in my book, but it shouldn't necessarily be illegal for them to do so.

In my opinion, restrictive laws and rules preventing Abercrombie & Fitch from certain hiring practices – such as the one in question – are merely a reactive attitude to a realization of moral values in today's society. The idea of having a "look policy" earns Abercrombie & Fitch, according to Businessweek.com, over $3 billion a year in revenue off of us as a society. Yet our society has rules against such practices.

Is it too much to ask to pull morality out of legality's shadow? Regulating certain moral issues and decisions by policy alone renders any sense of morality impotent, since it takes away the ability to choose the "right" answer, or at least the potency therein. Perhaps if we put a stop to this, we could come to terms with who we are as a society, in a moral sense.

Dave Coffey is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dscoffey@student.umass.edu.

Walking the walk in Afghanistan

Ben Rudnick

During the 2008 presidential campaign, then-candidate Barack Obama repeatedly excoriated the previous administration for their lack of focus on the war in Afghanistan. However, far from being left holding the bag there by George W. Bush, Obama spent nearly two years begging the electorate to be put in charge of it. Which begs the question: At what point do we begin to hold him responsible for what is happening there?

My goal here is not to re-hash the arguments for or against the war in Afghanistan, which is posing a renewed challenge to President Obama. However, there are clear and compelling reasons to ensure that we succeed in this conflict that I believe have been missing from these editorial pages.

Obama is currently considering whether or not to deploy additional troops to Afghanistan. I can appreciate the deliberate nature of the consultative process that he is following, but I contend that he must ultimately decide to deploy the forces requested by his commanders in the field.

In August, in a speech to the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) in Phoenix, Ariz., Obama made his most definitive statements on the War in Afghanistan. He called it a "war of necessity," and admitted that a victory for the Taliban would lead to "an even larger safe haven from which al- Qaeda would plot to kill more Americans." He went on to state that "this is not only a war worth fighting ... this is fundamental to the defense of our people."

On May 6, in a speech following a meeting between Obama, President Asif Ali Zardari of Pakistan and President Hamid Karzai of Afghanistan, Obama remarked that the goal of the U.S. was not merely to defeat al-Qaeda, but also to support the "democratically-elected" government of Afghanistan. Whatever our reasons for going to war in Afghanistan might have been in the past, Obama made it clear that our focus now is on building a viable democracy there.

In the same speech, Obama said that the U.S. cannot meet these challenges if we delay or "deny the resources necessary to get the job done." He highlighted the comprehensive nature of his new strategy, which he announced in March, and lauded himself for the fact that "for the first time, this strategy will be matched by the resources that it demands."

The plain truth is that we have a moral obligation to leave Afghanistan and its people a better country.

What has changed since May to cause any alteration in Obama's idea of victory, or his belief that the full weight of America's military and civilian power must be brought to bear to achieve it? We have heard that the rampant fraud in the recent Afghan elections call for even greater caution in the question of whether to deploy more troops, but I would argue just the opposite.

First of all, while many have claimed that the troop decision must wait for a resolution of the election issue, including our own Sen. John Kerry, this does not jibe with Obama's strategy thus far. In particular, the deployment of an additional 21,000 troops that Obama announced in March was not tied to the legitimacy of the Afghan electoral process, and neither should the issue of more support now.

In addition, our commitment is to the people of Afghanistan, not to whatever leaders are in power at any given time. As Obama said in May, we must "support the capacity of local governments and stand up to corruption that blocks progress." As such, the choice to increase military and civilian support must not depend specifically on eliminating all corruption from the Afghan government, but rather upon an assessment of how best to combat that corruption.

Based on these views, how can the president come to any other decision but to provide his handpicked commander, Gen. Stanley McChrystal, with the forces he needs to achieve success? I can understand that Obama is under tremendous pressure from his political base to end a war that has now lasted longer than America's war in Vietnam. Yet none of the reasons I have heard for ending the war immediately are convincing.

For example, I have heard it said that the U.S. is making the same mistakes as the Soviet Union, Great Britain and every other "empire" that has tried to "conquer" Afghanistan going all the way back to Alexander the Great. However, as valid as this comparison may seem at first, it does not hold up when one considers the goals that President Obama himself has set out for our current efforts.

This is what sets our efforts apart from past "adventures" in Afghanistan. It is also at the heart of the most compelling reason why it is so critical that we live up to the challenge that Obama has set for us. The plain truth is that we have a moral obligation to leave Afghanistan and its people a better country than the one that existed before we toppled the Taliban.

Just as with Iraq, we "broke" the existing government of Afghanistan, which means that we have a responsibility to "fix" both nations by ensuring that their people are left in a better situation than that before we intervened. We are close to achieving this goal in Iraq, and now we must act to ensure a similar outcome in Afghanistan.

President Obama has spoken as if he accepts this to be true. Now he must make the difficult decisions needed to live up to that commitment.

Ben Rudnick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at brudnick@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Bad Plus to bring unconventional sound

By Ben Silverman and Craig Holland
Collegian Correspondents

The Bad Plus might be considered a piano trio, maybe a progressive band or possibly a jazz fusion group. What they are, however, is a totally acoustic power trio, consisting of drums, piano and upright bass, playing everything along the jazz spectrum from furious avant-garde stylings to jazz standards, to slow-tempo, soft ballads to tweaked, sometimes absurd renditions of Flaming Lips, Yes and Nirvana songs.

The members of The Bad Plus met as teenagers and formed the band in 2000, releasing their self-titled debut album the next year. Five albums and nine years later, the band will return to the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton this Thursday.

The Bad Plus compositions show a wide range of dynamics and often change the tempo and timing – with an extra measure, flat, short or an almost indiscernibly syncopated drum solo inserted where one would expect the melody.

Some compositions might make you cringe. Others might make you frustratingly tap your toes and fingers to try and figure out a time signature. Others still will command your attention and make you work up a sweat trying to get a grip on what is happening musically, and then tease you when you can't.

If John Bonham or Keith Moon had Tony Williams or Billy Cobham as a drum teacher and learned how to focus their drumming energy into a tiny, 4-piece drum set, they might sound like Dave King, who plays as bombastically and furiously as he does controlled, syncopated or disciplined. His fills are full of polyrhythms, and last as long as he wants them to, and his grooves may playfully, even distractingly, dance around the rest of the band's music. But in the end, nothing else would mesh so perfectly with the rest of the group.

Bassist Reid Anderson is more subtle. He lays down the low-end while adding melodic fills and chords, and provides a solid foundation for the drums and piano to build on. He also writes many of the group's more impressive compositions.

Pianist Ethan Iverson has a unique, powerful piano technique, often playing two completely independent and difficult musical figures simultaneously. His textured, rhythmic and often "out" playing is the melodic face of the band.

For listeners new to the band, check out "1979 Semi-Finalist" and "And Here We Test Our Powers of Observation" from the band's 2004 album, "Give," and the cover of Rush's "Tom Sawyer" from its 2007 album, "Prog."

The Bad Plus is a musicians' band, catering to a crowd who would also appreciate music by Frank Zappa, Miles Davis and Igor Stravinsky. The most devoted fans appreciate the artistry of the compositions and interpretive covers while being wowed by the technical expertise involved in playing the music. The Bad Plus is dynamic, moving like a piece of romantic classical music, and bringing the rock when it's time.

The composition of its original pieces stands out even more than the impressive skill required to play them. There are many jazz tunes that do very interesting things harmonically and rhythmically, but leave the untrained audience behind. People like to feel something when listening to music, and The Bad Plus brings this emotionality out in its compositions.

The Bad Plus will be playing the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton on Thursday, Oct. 29 at 7:00 p.m.

Ben Silverman can be reached at bsilverm@student.umass.edu.

Craig Holland can be reached at chollandd@student.umass.edu.

The Bad Plus will bring its fire to Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall tomorrow night at 7 p.m. Friends since high school, the trio produced five recorded albums since their band's start nine years ago.

Michael Stuhlbarg, star of the latest Coen brother's latest release, "A Serious Man," portrays a Jewish father, professor and family man living in the 1960s. While the film is a comedy, it is said to hit realistic dark points.

'A Serious Man' proves serious success

By Mark Schiffer
Collegian Staff

The figure of the "nebbish" has had a long and proud history in film. Ranging from Woody Allen's entire pre-Mia Farrow divorce output to Paul Giamatti's portrayal of Harvey Pekar, the neurotic Jewish male has long held interest for filmmakers. The Coen Brothers began their interest in the nebbish back in 1991, with John Turturro's titular character in their Oscar-nominated "Barton Fink." With their latest effort, "A Serious Man," they bring this figure full circle. The question is: Is the nebbish truly worthy of a film of his own? And if he is, will the film justify his nebbishness with a world that molds him?

"A Serious Man" examines the fall of Midwestern Jewish physics professor Larry Gopnick (Michael Stuhlbarg) as he deals with a divorce, financial doom, a pot-smoking son who is on the verge of his Bar Mitzvah and a disgruntled Korean student. As a consequence, he also is forced to face, like many others of the nebbish persuasion, a complete disconnect from his faith. And boy, do the Coen Brothers nail that aspect of the film. Judaism is portrayed as the "Saturday Morning Bar Mitzvah Show," with the only ties to any kind of ancient tradition acted out by men who very well could have written the Torah.

While the Coens don't necessarily turn a self-hating eye towards Modern Judaism, the critical perspective they take is bound to cause some kind of controversy in the community. In what is probably one of the more troubling sequences, a young rabbi spouts truisms about finding beauty in the mundane – which, while not necessarily a negative statement, doesn't seem to carry much weight in the washed-out Midwest concrete slab that serves as the setting for much of this film. While self-deprecation has long been a staple of Jewish humor, some may be somewhat put off by this aspect of the film. The humor verges on cruelty at points. While the finger seems to be pointed more at the modern synagogue rather than Judaism itself, the film's darkly humorous prologue set in a folkloric shtetl makes one wonder.

Mention must be made of the Coen Brothers' decision to populate this film with mostly unknown actors. The only major recognizable actors are Richard Kind (Spin City) and Fred Melamed. Even then, these are not glamour roles. We see these actors undergo a complete loss of self, until we only know them as Sy Abelman and Uncle Arthur. As a result, the characters are allowed to stand on their own, preventing the audience from spending the movie recognizing familiar faces. A more profound connection to the film is able to be made. Not since "Barton Fink" have these fantastic directors stirred up such volatile emotions.

One fantastic element of the film which seems to have been overlooked by most critics is the superb performance by first-time actor Aaron Wolff, as Larry's pothead son Danny Gopnick. Not since Seth Green acted out Woody Allen's neuroses as a child in "Radio Days" has there been a performance of this kind. The dialogue delivered by him and his fellow classmates is pitch-perfect. Remember how beautiful the day was when you discovered cursing? Remember how horrible that day was for everyone else? Children curse in this film with all the joy of people discovering a whole new realm of language, one which is filled with wonder. The world of middle school has been captured, in all its tedious profane glory.

Michael Stuhlbarg's performance as Larry Gopnick most certainly should be receiving at the very least an Oscar mention, if not an actual award. He portrays his nebbishness admirably, and, like everyone else, completely absorbs himself in the character. Larry is a man who is slowly but surely being worn down by his surroundings. Circumstance has driven him to fits of weeping and twitching, and is almost more painful than funny to watch. It is a very brave performance, and once again deserves to receive attention when the award season comes around.

"A Serious Man" was a very brave film for the Coen Brothers to make. After the one-two punch of "No Country for Old Men" and "Burn After Reading," people were expecting this to be more of the same darkly humorous postmodern films, based on the trailer. What developed, instead, was something wholly different. "A Serious Man" is darker, weirder, wilder and an angrier animal than anyone could have ever expected. The question is: Is this an animal you want to let into your home?

Mark Schiffer can be reached at mschiffe@student.umass.edu.

"A SERIOUS MAN"

FOCUS FEATURES

4/5

★★★★

Arigato serves up savory sushi cuisine in style

By Maria Pedone
Collegian Correspondent

Among the already countless attractions existing in downtown Amherst, including the sensational Monkey Bar and reliable CVS, I was lucky enough to stumble upon another one last weekend. Arigato, a quaint Japanese restaurant and sushi bar, was the perfect prescription for my Berkshire Dining Commons blues. Located at 11 North Pleasant Street, Arigato caters to a wide audience. Whether you are modest to the concept of sushi and adhere strictly to California rolls, or you aspire to find the fishiest entree on the menu, Arigato's selection is sure to satisfy.

Though Arigato's size is not grandiose, the array of window-shaped mirrors established an open and comfortable atmosphere. This is a perfect setting to bring a date or a few close friends as a getaway from hectic campus life. As I started on the edamame appetizer on my table, I opened up the menu to order Dinner Box Special A. At a reasonable $16.50, this dinner special consists of miso soup, salad, a California roll, chicken teriyaki, a selection of tempura and rice. This box is an affordable way to fulfill your every craving for raw, grilled or fried food.

The miso soup and salad set the stage for the rest of my Japanese meal. Mushrooms added a bit of bitterness to the miso soup, but the flavor was still an enjoyable segue into my main dishes. As the actual dinner box was carefully placed in front of me, I instantly picked up my chopsticks and first targeted the chicken teriyaki. The meat was tender, with just the correct amount of teriyaki sauce dribbled on top of it. My slices of chicken were not drowning in sauce, nor were they burdened by a teriyaki drought.

Afterwards, my chopsticks wandered toward the California roll. The sushi chef was clearly generous with this collection of cucumber, crab and avocado. Each of the six pieces appeared as well-constructed cylinders surrounded by enough rice to keep their contents intact. When topped with a slab of white ginger and dipped in a mixture of soy sauce and wasabi, these rolls will turn even the shyest of sushi newbies into confident foodies. With two rolls left in my dinner box, I took a deep breath and decided to save the rest of my appetite for the neighboring tempura.

Tempura is a Japanese method of deep-frying and battering. The batter is a light combination of water and wheat flour, and causes the texture of the fried food to become crispy and flaky. The shrimp tempura proved to be succulent and paired well with the more subtle taste of Arigato's vegetable tempura. Both were an enjoyable break from the distinct flavors of the chicken teriyaki and California roll. While the tempura excelled in an airy texture, it is not an item to order by itself. The tofu tempura, also an item in Dinner Box A, caught my attention for a bite or two, but the blandness of the soft, unseasoned tofu and its crispy shell led me to deter from it.

Just as I was about to end my meal with a wad of brown rice, our waitress walked toward our table with a large platter in hand. With the same cordial smile that welcomed me as I walked into Arigato, she said, "This is new from our chef! It is called 'OMG Roll.'" This was indeed the highlight of my dinner. My friends and I, chopsticks in hand, dug into the sushi chef's latest recipe. Just as the salmon, spicy mayo and fried rice hit our taste buds, it was almost instinctive for all five of us to mutter "Oh-my-god." The amalgamation of the faintly spicy sauce and the element of crunchiness tucked away in the roll excited my tongue to a new degree. I suggest this delicious maki roll to any level of sushi eater, from the apprehensive to the experienced. A trip to Arigato requires the inquiry of this modernly exquisite dish.

Arigato surpasses the array of restaurants in downtown Amherst with its welcoming service, soothing atmosphere and phenomenal assortment of Japanese cuisine. It allows college students in the area a relief and reward from a long week of midterms. Fifteen dollars is a small price to pay when accompanied by such convivial staff and savory food, so I suggest that everyone from the University of Massachusetts and beyond take the time to experience what awaits at Arigato.

Maria Pedone can be reached at mpedone@student.umass.edu.

Fordham holds on to 1st place

Six teams within four points, Gross, Brewster grab honors

BY HERB SCRIBNER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Five teams are within a games reach of leading the Atlantic 10 division, with the A-10 Men's Soccer Championships just over two weeks away. After this weekend, the true contenders have started to emerge.

While A-10 leader Fordham gained a single point this weekend, other teams were moving up. Dayton, who is tied for second place with Saint Louis, lost its first match in eight games to Richmond by a score of 1-0. Receiving the loss fired up the Flyers (9-4-1, 4-1-0 A-10) as they cruised to a 2-1 win at George Washington.

The Billikens (9-5-0, 4-1-0 A-10) looked to capitalize on Dayton's loss to the Spiders (5-8-2, 2-2-2 A-10) when they played league-leader Fordham. Saint Louis picked up three points after the match, having defeated the Rams 4-1. The Billikens went back home to face La Salle, where goalkeeper Ross Kaufman earned an assist in the 1-0 victory for Saint Louis.

No. 9 Charlotte (9-1-4, 3-0-2, A-10) gained four points this weekend with a 3-0 shutout over the Explorers. The 49ers continued its 13-game unbeaten streak with a 2-2 tie to Fordham.

The Rams lead the A-10 with 13 points, just ahead of Dayton and Saint Louis (12 points). Charlotte sits in fourth place within a games reach with 11 points. The top six teams in conference play make the tournament. Duquesne currently sits in fifth place and St. Bonaventure, Rhode Island and Temple sit in a three-way tie for sixth place with nine points.

COURTESY SAINT LOUIS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore Ben Brewster was named Co-Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, after he scored two goals in Richmond's 2-1 win over Xavier.

RAMS STRUGGLE OVER WEEKEND

League leader Fordham did not gain a victory this weekend, losing 4-1 on Oct. 23 at St. Louis. The game started off tight, as both the Rams and Billikens scored goals in the opening 30 minutes.

The second half saw an entirely different game. Sophomore Alex Johnson started off St. Louis' second half tear with a goal right after the halftime break. His goal was succeeded by Mike Roach's two scores in the remainder of the half, shutting down Fordham.

Following the match against the Billikens, Fordham faced off against No. 9 Charlotte. The match ended in a 2-2 draw after two periods of overtime.

The match opened up with a goal from Rams midfielder Tim Richardson. Charlotte came right back with a goal by senior Adam Gross, who won Co-Player of the Week honors. Going into halftime, the two A-10 powerhouses were tied up despite Charlotte's 8-2 shot advantage.

Almost 15 minutes after the halftime break, sophomore Charles Rodriguez netted a goal to give the 49ers the lead. Fordham found itself down with three minutes left in the match, which provided senior Alex Brunbauer with the opportunity to score a goal (second of season) which leveled the score. After two scoreless periods of overtime, each team took away one point with the draw.

COURTESY SAINT LOUIS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior goalkeeper Ross Kaufman had seven saves over the weekend for St. Louis as well as an assist on a punt against La Salle.

GROSS, BREWSTER EARN POW

Both Charlotte's Adam Gross and Richmond's Ben Brewster came away from this past weekend with the honor of being named A-10 Player of the Week.

For Gross, this is his second Player of the Week honor, with the first coming in the opening weekend of the season. He received the award after netting a goal in the 49er's 3-0 victory over La Salle as well as an early goal in Charlotte's draw with Fordham. Gross now leads the 49ers with a seven goals.

Gross has found much success this season, leading the 49ers in goals and assists. He also leads the team in game-winning goals, with a total of three. Gross is tied for third in goals in the A-10, and is in second place for assists.

Brewster earned the award after being a factor in the Spiders' Oct. 25 victory over Xavier. Brewster scored the first goal of the game in the second minute. After the Musketeers (2-10-1, 1-5-0 A-10) came back to tie the game up, it was Brewster who changed the score with a timely goal, minutes before the conclusion of the match.

On the Richmond squad, Brewster is tied for second in goals scored with three. He also is in second place for the Spiders with shots taken.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribne@student.umass.edu.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR Fall 2009

The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:

Thursday, Oct. 29, at 6:00 pm in Bartlett 121

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

Boney, Lecluyse fall in second round to Beehler, Houghton

TENNIS from page 8

Ploch is 8-2 on the season and has nearly reached her win total from last year (10-9 in singles play).

Meanwhile, the Minutewomen doubles team of Candynce Boney and Maude Lecluyse – which had been dominant up to this point – finally met its match this weekend.

Boney and Lecluyse, ranked eighth, earned themselves a first round bye as well. They then suffered an 8-3 loss to the Army doubles team of Kristin Beehler and Houghton.

"Maude and Candynce ran into a tough situation," Dixon said. "Everything just went too quickly for them."

The entire Minutewomen team was scheduled to play against Fordham today in a match that had been postponed earlier in the season due to weather. But due to inclement weather forecasts for today, the match will be cancelled and will not be rescheduled this fall.

Because of poor weather on match days this fall, the full team has not played competitively since the 7-0 win against Rhode Island on Oct. 14.

Their final match of the fall season will be the Big Green Invitational in Hanover, N.H. The tournament, played over the weekend of Nov. 7-9, is a mock-dual tournament between four schools: St. John's, Boston University, Dartmouth and UMass.

Each team will play eight singles matches and four doubles matches against the other three schools. These matches do not affect team rankings, but can affect the individuals' rankings.

Dixon has spent a majority of this fall season training and fine-tuning the doubles squads. In the past weeks, the team has spent a significant amount of time working in doubles, going over strategies for matches.

A key element to the restructured doubles teams is the return of freshman Chantal Swissez from injury. Dixon is excited to have Swissez available for the Big Green Invitational.

Beginning this week, the team will begin to practice indoors. Following the tournament, the team will have a reduced practice schedule before breaking for the holiday season. When the players return in January, the team will officially begin its indoor season. Dixon has said that her squad will perform even stronger as an indoor team.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@dailycollegian.com.

Powers out with broken foot

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

per game. The Minutewomen hope to play similar as they did against St. Louis today against Dartmouth, who allows 3.17 goals per game, to set them up for the final weekend of conference play.

"What was great about our play against Saint Louis, we were unselfish as a team. We passed the ball around rather than going at it one-on-one. We passed to the open player on the field to get quality shots off," Sowry said. "If we play together as a team and avoid situations where we go one-on-one, our offense is capable of scoring and the Saint Louis game was an example of that."

The struggles for UMass to start its A-10 schedule came as a surprise to many. After a perfect year in 2008 in the conference, the Minutewomen were picked to repeat, and still did as it had a strong beginning to the season. The Minutewomen started the year 5-1 as it climbed the national polls, and were a perfect 3-0 against ranked opponents in that stretch. UMass has since gone 5-6, and 0-3 against ranked opponents.

The recent struggles come largely in part to the fact that the Minutewomen have faced a lot of injuries and face possibly one of its biggest with Jill Powers now out for the rest of the season. With its depleted bench, UMass had to play numerous games with minimal subs and even some with no subs, tiring out the team for the stretch run.

"We're still short on numbers. Jill Powers broke her foot Friday, and she's out indefinitely for the rest of the season," Sowry said. "We have a couple starters out, but we have players coming off the bench and we're relying on some freshman and young players to provide solid performances."

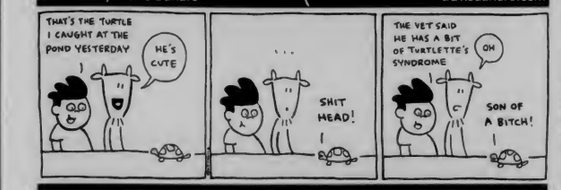
Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

HERBALIFE Independent Distributor
Fun Part Time Work for College Students!
Be a Wellness Coach!
Host a Shake Party!
Full Training Included Call Zac 800-919-4922

perfect BOOTS
Ugg
Madden Girl
Frye
North Face
Born
ZANNA
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com Become a fan of ZANNA on facebook

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN WANTS TO SEE YOUR HALLOWEEN COSTUME.
Enter The Daily Collegian Halloween Contest!
Friend the Massachusetts Daily Collegian on Facebook and Tag us in a photo of you and your costume
More of a flickr person? Tag "CollegianContest" on your best costume picture.
Submit your photo by 7PM on SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 1st.
THE WINNER WILL BE ANNOUNCED TUESDAY.

Free Rides on Halloween Weekend 10pm to 3am
Oct 30/31—Fri/Sat Call 548-9474 Sponsored by MERCYhouse knowmercy.org



COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com

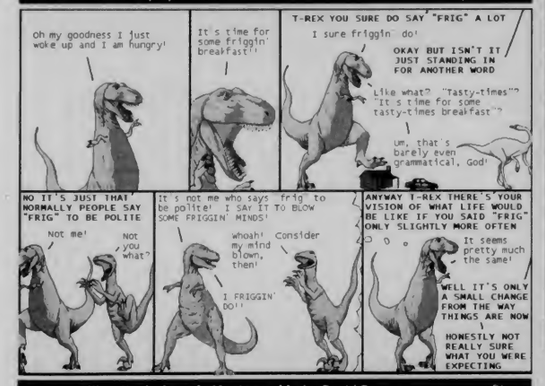
Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub



Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro travisdandro.com

Wondermark by David Malki! wondermark.com

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North qwantz.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees mnftiu.cc

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20 - FEB. 18
How many companies are actually anxious to know what's in your wallet?

pisces FEB. 19 - MAR. 20
Disney finally apologized for corrupting children's minds. Go get your compensation, yo.

aries MAR. 21 - APR. 19
Motivate your body: Give out awards for top muscle performances of the year. And your nominees are...

taurus APR. 20 - MAY. 20
Your financial situation is way too good. Blow some dough on Shaq's rap CDs.

gemini MAY. 21 - JUN. 21
Kids need a reality check. Create a children's book about an abortionist and his number-one foe.

cancer JUN. 22 - JUL. 22
In your eyes, the light the heat, in your eyes, I am complete.

leo JUL. 23 - AUG. 22
Learn from Iron Man 2's casting debacle. Don't let yourself get too Cheadle'd in life.

virgo AUG. 23 - SEPT. 22
Need lessons on life? A mummy expert should offer fantastic advice.

libra SEPT. 23 - OCT. 22
If only everyone felt as needed as Joe the Plumber.

scorpio OCT. 23 - NOV. 21
Kate Gosselin just needs to haunt other people's children to achieve her goal of being the first boogey-woman.

sagittarius NOV. 22 - DEC. 21
Do the world a favor and document the histroy of men's swimwear.

capricorn DEC. 22 - JAN. 19
Solve your boredom by envisioning a battle between vampires and zombies. FIGHT!

SUDOKU

	3			2
		1						6
6			8		7	2
		2					5
4				8			6
3	7			5
						9		2
7			4
5	2			7	6			4

EVERY WEDNESDAY: Poker Night
EVERY THURSDAY: Promo & Trivia Night
EVERYDAY: $1.00 Drafts!
Hampshire Mall
Across from Cinemark
413-549-0077
FREE Delivery
ARIZONA PIZZA

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Highest point
5. Travel through water
9. Potato state
14. Accomplishes
15. Stow, as cargo
16. Cantaloupe or honeydew
17. Cards with just one symbol
18. Inspiration
19. Point in time
20. Existing in possibility
22. Harps
23. Piece of armor for a thigh
24. Church council
26. American Dental Association
29. Take into custody
33. Gravely
38. Lustrous
39. Journey
40. Streamlined
42. Russian emperor
43. Not outside
45. Kind of heel
47. A literate person
48. No particular one
49. Outer or exterior
52. Relaxes
57. Shop
60. Sundog
63. Lava
64. Chocolate cookie
65. Largest continent
66. German ins
67. Trade
68. Chat
69. Fliers in V's
70. Swirl
71. If not

DOWN
1. Customize
2. Drink served with marshmallows
3. Encounters
4. S S S S
5. Narrow opening
6. Dry riverbed
7. Concepts
8. Granular
9. Call upon in supplication
10. Dry up
11. Winged
12. A flexible tube
13. 1 1 1 1
21. Close
25. A small piece of table linen
27. Abandon
28. Each and every one
30. At one time (archaic)
31. Strip of wood
32. Apprentice
33. Mix
34. Coastal raptor
35. Credit card brand
36. The outer layer of the skin
37. An affirmative
41. Estimated time of arrival
44. Perish
46. Stringed instrument
50. Having no limbs
51. Challenged
53. Cheer up
54. Rope fiber
55. Works
56. Viper or boa
57. Urban haze
58. Container weight
59. Monster
61. Absorb written material
62. Sacred

UMASS AMHERST
New Schedule for Winter Session
Earn credits during break!
Online classes begin: December 21, 2009
On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010
View Classes and Register now on SPIRE or www.UMassULearn.net

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

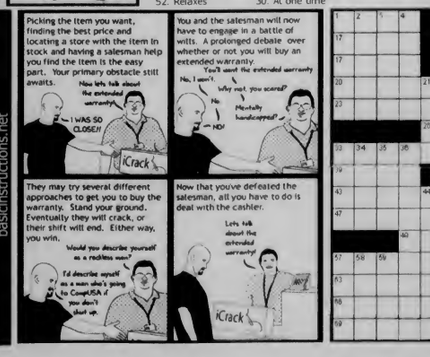
Bartending $300/Day potential. NO expenences necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

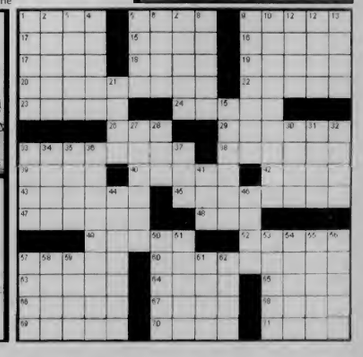
Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu



ANNOUNCEMENTS



Montreal Party Weekends, From $89. Includes Hotel, Bus, and clubs. montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers Wanted, Must be able to work 20 hrs/week including one weekend night. Apply at D.P. Dough, Downtown Amherst

How To Purchase Electronics by Scott Meyer basicinstructions.net

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

After receiving a first-round bye, sophomore Magdalena Ploch (third from the left) advanced to the quarterfinals of the ITA Regional Championships, knocking off No. 3-seeded Hideko Tachibana.

Ploch advances to 5th round of ITA regional

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts tennis star Magdalena Ploch advanced as far as the quarterfinals at this weekend's ITA Regional Championships hosted by Yale.

Ploch entered the tournament ranked 17th and despite being sick with a cold the entire weekend, she was able to pull off three victories before losing in the fifth round.

UMass Coach Judy Dixon was impressed with Ploch's play, especially in the wake of her illness.

"The biggest thing was that she fought through the difficulty," Dixon said.

The field of the final eight included a player from Brown, and two each from Harvard, Yale and Princeton. For Ploch to be included in that group says a lot about her performance this weekend according to Dixon.

The sophomore earned a first-round bye, then defeated two straight opponents from Army. Her second round match against Army's highest ranked player, Erin Colton, was cut short with Ploch ahead 4-1. Her opponent ended the match prematurely due to an illness.

In the third round, Ploch faced off against No. 14 ranked Annie Houghton. Ploch took the first set 6-4 but was then swept 6-0. In the tiebreaker set, Ploch pulled off the victory winning 6-2.

The fourth round – a field of 16 – pitted Ploch against the No. 3 seed: Hideko Tachibana from Harvard. Ploch pulled off the upset in two straight sets, 6-2, 6-2. Prior to that match, Tachibana had been undefeated this season with three tournament titles under her belt.

In a hard-fought match against fifth ranked Hilary Bartlett from Princeton, Ploch came up short. Bartlett defeated her in three sets, 3-6, 7-5, 6-4.

See TENNIS on page 6

UMass looking for offense

Hopes to build momentum, hosts Dartmouth in Amherst

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

Before hosting two Atlantic 10 Conference foes in must-win situations this weekend, the Massachusetts field hockey team faces Dartmouth today at Garber Field.

After thrashing Saint Louis with a 10-goal effort in their last game, the No. 19 Minutewomen (10-7, 1-3 A-10) will look to sustain their momentum heading into the home stretch of the season.

Even though the offense was shut out in three of the four consecutive losses prior to the St. Louis win, UMass coach Justine Sowry feels like the Minutewomen are now back on track.

"I think the St. Louis game definitely is exactly what we needed," Sowry said. "We had six different goal scorers, so to get goals on the board and gain some confidence on our front line, it holds well for the rest of the week."

Dartmouth had its own ups-and-downs and played inconsistently at times earlier this year. The Big Green (7-7, 3-2 Ivy League) began the season dropping four of their first five games before forming a four-game winning streak. Since the winning streak, Dartmouth has had trouble stringing together victories and is floating around .500 for the season.

In their last game, the Big Green defeated Columbia, 2-1, in rainy conditions on Homecoming. The two teams were at a stalemate through the first half, though Dartmouth held a 6-1 advantage in shots. Early in the second half, sophomore Kelly Hood scored one of her two penalty-corner goals, soaring a shot over the Lions (6-7, 1-3 Ivy) goalkeeper, Christie O'Hara.

Columbia came back and knotted the game at one with a rebound goal 13 minutes into the frame. Hood, however, scored her second penalty-corner goal and the eventual game winner nearly five minutes later to give the Big Green the victory.

This season, UMass has given up plenty of penalty corners, allowing 38 more than awarded. Limiting Dartmouth in penalty corners will be one of the main challenges the Minutewomen will face Wednesday.

"They're a tough a team, they have a couple of key players that we have to take care of," Sowry said. "I think if we just stick to our basics, it should be a good game. Our priority would be to pass the ball more and let the ball do more work and us do less running."

UMass and Darimouth met last year towards the beginning of the season and the Minutewomen won, 2-0, ending their three-game losing streak against the Big Green. Jill Powers and Katie Kelly each tallied a score, while goalkeeper Alesha Widdall recorded her second shutout victory. UMass was dominant in its performance, outshooting and out-cornering Dartmouth, 18-8 and 11-5, respectively. However, UMass will be without Powers this time around and for the rest of the season after she suffered a broken foot last Friday.

Though the Big Green are first on the schedule of three games to close out the season, the last two contests are the most significant. In order to reach the A-10 Tournament, which UMass hosts, it will have to win out against conference opponents La Salle and West Chester this weekend.

"We need to make it, but we can't focus on that," Sowry said. "We're preparing for Dartmouth. We don't want to talk too much about the weekend and just take it one day at a time."

To reach the conference tournament and win it for the third consecutive season, Sowry believes the team will have to relax on the field and not get caught up in their emotions.

"We have to chunk the game together and play some nice hockey. It's very dangerous when we get a little desperate and frustrated in our play," Sowry said. "We like to say chunk it five minutes at a time and hopefully at the end of the day we'll make it through."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

Nikki Panciocco shields a defender from the ball against Northeastern in a game this season. The sophomore started all 17 games this year.

Freshman Kim Young moves the ball downfield against Northeastern earlier this year. UMass hosts non-conference foe Dartmouth today.

Minutewomen take top 4 singles races

By Neil Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team had another solid showing last weekend, as the Minutewomen raced in the Head of the Fish Regatta in Saratoga Springs, N.Y., on Sunday.

In the team's sixth competition this year, the Minutewomen placed boats in first place in the singles and the Lightweight 4 races. Julia Richter finished first in the singles race with a time of 14 minutes, 32.73 seconds.

UMass sophomore Emily Boucher finished 41.59 seconds behind Richter in the singles race as the Minutewomen swept the top four spots. Junior Liz Euler and senior Sam Smith finished in third and fourth places in the race with times of 15:30.31 and 16:18.66 respectively.

UMass head coach Jim Dietz has been training the Minutewomen using the singles and doubles boats throughout the season and was happy with the team's success.

"For the entire week we focused on small boats and it's the small boats we did well in," Dietz said.

In the Lightweight 4, 1 Mass also took first place. The boat finished in a time of 15:17.54 and was led by Amy Nash, co-captain Ana Iocco, Megan Donovan and Ali Donzanti and was coxed by Carly Payne.

UMass Varsity 8 boat finished in a close third behind a boat from Ithaca and Vermont. The Minutewomen in that race finished only 2.78 seconds behind the second place boat. The Varsity 8 boat was coxed by junior Samantha Schnoerr and is rowed by Smith, Kelsey Schachter, Ali DiMatteo, Amanda Doolin, Katelyn Alloeco, Meredith Kearney, Meghan Rodgers and Rachel Spielberg.

Dietz was satisfied with the results from the boats in the Varsity and Junior Varsity 8 races because his rowers had not been practicing in the larger boats all week.

"I thought that those guys did really well in that, they hadn't been in the 8 all week, and the competition we're going against was pretty strong," Dietz said. "Overall their times compared to the other teams were pretty good."

The Minutewomen have been gaining momentum this season while they have strung together a couple of impressive showings against a high level of competition. Although rowing is typically looked at just as a sport of endurance, the UMass team has successfully found a combination of cardio and strength training that is evident in the results from races like the Head of the Fish.

"It's a question of mileage and getting physically stronger," Dietz said on his team's routine. "As we're going into these races from race to race we're not backing off on training and not backing off on weightlifting because that's essential to getting faster."

Dietz also believes that his team's success is due in part to the way that they train in the water. He and the rest of the coaching staff use an uncommon method of training the team in only smaller boats in order to get a better measure of a rower's individual talent and effort.

"Very few people do it the way we do it," Dietz said. "It gives you more accountability as to the work level of the individual and the skill level of the individual."

This weekend 1 Mass will have a week off as the team looks to prepare for the last two events of the fall season. On Nov. 7, 1 Mass freshman rowers will head to Hanover, N.H., to gain experience in the Dartmouth Novice Head.

Neil Carroll can be reached at ncarroll@student.umass.edu

Must-win weekend for UM

Senior Cher King looks for an open teammate downfield against Northeastern in a contest earlier this year. King missed significant time for UMass, playing in only 12 of 17 games this season, something that hurt the Minutewomen in Atlantic 10 play.

Focused on Big Green despite looming conference contests

By Jeffrey R. Larsard
Collegian Staff

For a team who was ranked as high as No. 10 in the country, picked to repeat as Atlantic 10 champions and coming off an undefeated year in 2008 in conference play, it's hard to believe the Massachusetts field hockey team is in a must-win situation in its last two conference games.

After starting their A-10 schedule with three-straight losses, in addition to a loss to Connecticut before starting A-10 play, the No. 19 Minutewomen were able to bounce back with an offensive explosion Sunday against Saint Louis, but the skid may have ended too late. UMass (10-7, 1-3 A-10) currently sits in sixth place in the seven-team conference. St. Louis, who is winless in A-10 play, sits in last place and needs to move up within the top four if it wants to qualify for the conference tournament that is hosted in Amherst on Nov. 6-7.

To do so, the Minutewomen need victories in their last two conference games against fifth-place La Salle on Friday and third-place West Chester on Sunday, both of which are at home, a loss in either contest would eliminate the Minutewomen.

Even if UMass is able to win both games, its destiny is uncertain. With two wins for UMass and a Temple win over St. Louis, a loss to Richmond could create a three-way tie for the final two positions in the tournament. In that case, it could come down to the fourth tie breaker, goal differential. There is even a possibility of a four-way tie if Saint Joseph's falls in its final two games of conference play.

"They're very important because if we don't win them, we don't make the tournament. We really have to take it one day at a time, sharpen up, stay relaxed, score some goals, and hopefully the rest will take care of itself," UMass coach Justine Sowry said. "We still have control of our own destiny so we have to stick together as a team and put some goals in the back of the net."

The Minutewomen play today against Dartmouth in Amherst a non-conference game in hopes of building some momentum off of their 10-1 rout over St. Louis. The Big Green (7-7, 3-2 Ivy League) are coming off a 2-1 win over conference foe Columbia and will not be an easy game for UMass.

While the contest may mean nothing to whether or not the Minutewomen make the A-10 Tournament, it is important for them to keep winning and find some offensive rhythm. In UMass' four-game losing streak against UConn, St. Joe's, Temple and Richmond, its offense managed to score just one goal, in a 2-1 double-overtime loss at Temple. In the four games the Minutewomen were outscored 9-1, and 6-1 in the three A-10 conference games.

With Alesha Widdall in goal for UMass, just a little offense will go a long way for the Minutewomen, especially against its two remaining opponents. West Chester averages 2.11 goals per game and La Salle averages 1.67 per game, ranking near the middle of the A-10, and the two give up 1.99 and 2.51 goals per game, respectively, compared to UMass' 1.43.

The Minutewomen's nearly record 10-goal game against St. Louis may seem as if they are out of their offensive funk, but the 10 goals came against a Billikens squad who allows 7.08 goals

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 58 LOW: 36 www.DailyCollegian.com THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2009

UCSD chancellor speaks at UMass

Marye Anne Fox discusses higher education

By Caitlin Soto
Collegian Staff

University of California at San Diego Chancellor Marye Anne Fox spoke Wednesday in the Integrated Sciences Building on the future of public higher education.

"State governments are unreliable partners," said Fox initially, encapsulating yesterday's remarks. Beginning her lecture just after noon, she discussed how the current financial crisis facing America has affected the state of public higher education, particularly research universities.

Fox presented many methods which can burden and occupy the responsibilities that state governments are increasingly reluctant to address. Fox also touched base on the competitiveness of higher education and how to entice young people to pursue studying the sciences.

"This year alone, UC San Diego has experienced $85 million dollars in budget cuts," said Fox. Budget cuts usually mean slashes in teacher salaries and underfunded research however, UC San Diego remains focused on advancing knowledge in math and science through excellence in education and research, according to Fox. She further elaborated that UC San Diego's Sustainability 2.0 initiative transforms current research into new possibilities that skyrocket beyond imagination.

UC San Diego and Scripps Institution of Oceanography set the pace for climate awareness beginning in the 1950s. Researchers at UC San Diego and Scripps have expanded their early investigations into today's studies of climate breakthroughs in every aspect of sustainability. With a daily population of over 45,000, UC San Diego can be compared to a small city.

Fox said that UC San Diego strives to practice and promote the principles of sustainability, which it defines as taking from the earth only what it can provide. Through the Sustainability 2.0 initiative, there are twelve elements of strategy towards which UC San Diego strives.

The twelve elements of strategy are: new technology in old buildings, alternative transportation, new technology in new buildings, new smart grid, conservation and recycling, advance in energy storage, developing solar power, developing fuel cells, reclaiming water sources, using ocean water for cooling and heating, wind power and faculty research.

These twelve steps that help UC San Diego become sustainable are saving the university millions of dollars annually. These savings make up for the recent budget cuts. Each strategy is made possible by private sectors without state or government help.

There have been many technological advances on campus to help the pursuit of sustainability. UC San Diego installed a one megawatt solar electric system on the main campus. The system will supply about 1.5 million hours of green energy per year.

Researchers at UC San Diego are also currently developing an alternative fuel station that will provide campus vehicles with alternatives to gas. One million square feet of existing buildings have received energy-efficient retrofits such as programmable HVAC controls, motion-sensitive light controls and installation of Energy Star equipment. In 2010, UC San Diego will be the first university to have an all-electric shuttle bus fleet. Students can rent these vehicles on campus for a low rate.

UC San Diego is investigating pumping sea water from La Jolla Canyon, a deep off-shore trench, through a system to help cool and heat campus buildings. Water will then be returned to the sea. Sea water, a clean renewable energy source, could offset up to four megawatts of energy, potentially saving 100 million gallons of water annually. All these developments are making the university a competitor in the field of sustainability.

Fox stressed the fact that breakthroughs in sustainability are only possible by emphasizing competitiveness and pushing the sciences to students across the country. Fox stated that the way to entice students to pursue science

See UCSD page 3

University of California at San Diego Chancellor Marye Anne Fox discussed the future of public higher education and science-oriented higher education Wednesday at the Integrated Sciences Building as Chancellor Holub looked on.

Guardpic.me creates cell-photo database

By Michelle Williams
Collegian Staff

A new website has introduced a safety service which allows users to take photos of the people around them, aiming to build a database of photos to aid investigators in case of crime.

Guardpic.me is a service that allows users to e-mail or text photos of a date, or someone one has left a bar with, to their database. With this photo application, if something were to happen to the user, law enforcement agencies have a photo of the person with whom they were last seen, as well as a time and possibly even a location.

With the slogan "you wear a seatbelt as a safety precaution... start using Guardpic.me for the same reason," Guardpic.me advertises their service as a precautionary measure, aimed to help locate criminals and those who might be able to aid in an investigation. The service has been available for about two months, currently boasting 1,600 users.

Michael Vitale, CEO of Guardpic.me said that "about 95 percent of the current members are women."

Vitale said that his company's clientele is primarily college-age women and women working in the real estate business.

"We have younger college age women who use the service as well as realtors in their 40's using the service at open houses," he said.

Once the photos are sent to Guardpic.me, they are stored in the user's account. The accounts are protected and can only be released to law enforcement agencies, either by a public safety officer's request or by request of the Guardpic.me member.

Through its service, Guardpic.me hopes potential offenders can be identified for crimes ranging from harassment to murder.

The inspiration for the site came from Vitale's personal experiences. Vitale watched a movie about a teenaged-girl who, while on vacation, goes on a date with a man she barely knows, only to be murdered and impossible to locate.

Thinking of the circumstances of his 13 and 20-year-old daughters, Vitale said he was alarmed at the rates of violence affecting young girls.

"I was amazed to find out how many times this happens, usually only at the hands of someone they know or just met," he said.

Vitale hopes that with publicity, attackers will become wary after a photo has been taken.

"I hope that someday Guardpic.me will be well so known that once a potential attacker sees his photo taken, he will be less likely to commit a crime," Vitale continued.

One UMass student, Gabrielle Gasparre, 18, a freshman from Brewster, NY, said she believes Guardpic.me is a sensible product for people who could be victimized by crime.

"I can see why this is a good idea," she said, "it allows people to feel comfortable in different environments."

Gasparre added that she could see how Guardpic.me could raise civil liberties issues.

"Despite that, I also could see this as an invasion of privacy, unless those having their photo taken are comfortable with their name and photo being sent to this website," she said.

While the University of Guardpic.me, a new service which lets users send pictures to a database in case they go missing, hopes cell phone users like this one will try their app.

See GUARD on page 2

Alpha Kappa wonders if you love your body

By Netha Gill
Collegian Staff

On October 26, 2009 at 8 p.m. the Alpha Kappa chapter of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity and the University of Massachusetts section of the Sigma Lambda Gamma sorority hosted an event in the Malcolm X center entitled "Love Your Body." The event addressed body image issues that affect both sexes in modern society in the context of a college campus.

Love Your Body began with some light mingling of those in attendance, mostly UMass students. The socializing went on until about 8:30 p.m., with the discussion that followed beginning with an anonymous survey of five yes or no questions pertaining to one's personal body image. These surveys were collected and tallied to be discussed at the end of the discussion.

The discussion began with conversation about the physical characteristics that people look for in the opposite sex. After listing traits on a large sheet of paper, people started to talk about the list and questioned its significance.

Jason Burrell, a junior at UMass and a member of Alpha Phi Alpha, said that the list in its entirety is "impossible," but that having at least some of the characteristics listed is nice.

Another UMass student and a member of Phi Beta Sigma, Corey Smith, implied that some people look beyond looks, saying that he looks at "how 'she' is, how 'she' carries herself." Smith also said that women need to be happy with the bodies they are given.

Carolina Davila, a member of Sigma Lambda Gamma, said that looks only go so far, and that ultimately she would want a relationship with "intellectual conversation and an emotional connection."

The next question brought up was if the list ultimately did not matter and personality was what people were looking for, why even have lists at all?

See BODY on page 2

Members of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity and the Sigma Lambda Gamma sorority posed for a shot at Love Your Body night, a discussion of body image issues at the Malcolm X center October 26.

ARTS & LIVING

Say 'no' to hackneyed costumes

A superhero spin on vintage with the power to vanquish all your Halloween costume woes.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Minutewomen fall to Big Green

The UMass field hockey team could not stop Dartmouth last night, falling 6-3 at Garber Field.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Daily Collegian columnist Ashley Lesperance argues that the swine flu hysteria that has infected our nation is for the pigs.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Log on to DailyCollegian.com to view the photo slideshow of Jay-Z, the BOAA's, mind blowing performance last night.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 36

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shanta Murphy
COMICS EDITOR Annie Keishline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Barnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamilio
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COMICS Andrew Witts
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Hannah Nelson
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alyssa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Hedison
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Bush
COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Dugan
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Nick Guarino

APA asks: Do you love your body?

Fraternity and sorority host event on body image issues at Malcolm X center

BODY from page 1

NETHA GILL/COLLEGIAN

Students participated in a collage making session on common presumptions about body types at Alpha Kappa Alpha's Love Your Body night October 26 in the Malcolm X center.

Most people said that it was due to media portrayals of both sexes.

Harold Turner, junior at UMass and president of Alpha Phi Alpha, also brought up the point that these ideas are internalized and thus become a social norm.

Then the audience began to put this idea in the perspective of relationships versus "casual hook-ups."

One student said that looks matter more when it is just a hook-up, since personality is not as much of a factor. In regards to a relationship, people were more willing to accept and look past flaws.

Maria Payano, a junior at UMass, elaborated from there, stating that relationships may develop with people one might not initially find attractive due to a growing friendship and falling for that person's personality as the friendship grows.

The discussion continued with the topic of bad hair versus good hair, and what it really means. Some identified the issue as merely using good hair products, and that once used, anyone's hair will be just as good. Others associated good hair as longer hair, which is something that has been implied in society for as long as most can remember.

Kethia Joseph, a junior at UMass and a member of the Sigma Gamma Rho sorority, mentioned that texture is a factor in distinguishing good hair and bad hair.

NETHA GILL/COLLEGIAN

Students learn how to love their bodies at an Alpha Kappa Alpha event on body image consciousness and finding fulfillment regardless of body type at the Malcolm X center on Monday.

Photos of ideal and not so ideal bodies were passed around for the students to observe and to be observed by the facilitators. Many people had their share of side comments, critiquing the photos of those who were supposed to be good-looking. The images were also compared and contrasted with each other.

After this, students in attendance made a collage of good images versus bad images. There were glue sticks, scissors and magazines provided for the students to use to make this collage within about 15 minutes. Many students chose to be involved in making the collage, while others opted instead to mingle with those around them.

The collage was soon presented and the photos displayed were discussed briefly and summarized. Basically, the bad images were photos of people that were either too skinny, too fat, skanky, or even "tacky," as one student said.

The good images, of course, were associated with the ideals posted on the previous list of good physical characteristics of men and women.

The event concluded with a discussion of the survey questions given at the beginning of the event. It turned out that 38 out of 44 people, 86 percent, said that they love their bodies, but 40 out of 44, or 91 percent, said that if they could change their bodies they would. Another interesting statistic was that the majority of students also said that they often compare their bodies to others, 41 out of 44, or 93 percent.

Joseph thought that the event "...was a great discussion, and [it had] a good turnout, as far as the audience and the audience participation."

"The questions really enabled people to dig deep within ourselves and also to confront ourselves," she said. "And, the discussions gave us all a chance to encourage others to feel good about themselves and to accept ourselves."

Netha Gill can be reached at nmgill@student.umass.edu.

New cell phone app will create photo bank

GUARD from page 1

Guardpic.me hopes that young women in particular will take advantage of its service, which lets law enforcement view images users send in case of emergency.

Massachusetts Amherst Crime Statistics for 2008 only report 20 acts of forcible sex offenses, it is believed by the Federal Bureau of Justice that 90 percent of rapes or sexual offenses are not reported to the police, placing the possible number of sex offenses on campus closer to 200.

Guardpic.me is a free service available to all online. To register, one must give a name, address, e-mail address and phone number. After receiving a confirmation e-mail, users may send photos immediately. To send photos to Guardpic.me by e-mail, send the photo to pics@guardpic.me or by SMS text message to (800) 123-4567@guardpic.me. The site is currently working on a one-touch application for smart phones.

Michelle Williams can be reached at mnwilli@student.umass.edu.

UM to host candidate forum

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

COURTESY MICHAEL CAPUANO

Representative Michael Capuano is one of the senate candidates who will be visiting UMass Nov. 8 for a Leage of Women voters forum.

The University of Massachusetts will host the field of candidates seeking the U.S. Senate seat left vacant by the death of former Massachusetts senator Ted Kennedy on Nov. 8 at Bowker Auditorium.

UMass will hold a candidate forum at 7:30 p.m. next Sunday sponsored by the League of Women Voters of Massachusetts and public radio stations WFCR and WNNZ.

The forum is free and open to the public.

Candidates for the Dec. 8 primary ballot, including Democrats U.S. representative Michael Capuano, Celtics co-owner Stephen Pagliuca and City Year founder Alan Khazei are already slated to appear in the forum, while fellow Democrat Attorney General Martha Coakley and Republicans State Senator Scott Brown and his likely challenger Jack E. Robinson have not yet agreed to participate.

The League of Women Voters said in a release that it plans to hold a second candidate forum sometime in January before the special election Jan. 19.

Bob Paquette, WFCR's Morning Edition host, will moderate the forum at UMass, with half of the two hour event dedicated to focusing on domestic issues and half slated for discussion on international issues.

The questions for the forum will be submitted by UMass students and League of Women Voters members from around the state.

Voter registration will be taking place in Bowker starting at 6:30 p.m., the night of the forum.

"The upcoming special U.S. Senate election is of critical importance to the citizens of Massachusetts, and the League hopes that all of the candidates in the primary contests will participate in the candidate's night," said Zaxaro Bennett, president of the Massachusetts League of Women Voters, in a release.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@daily-collegian.com.

COURTESY MARTHA COAKLEY

Massachusetts Attorney General Martha Coakley is one of the candidates who has not indicated whether she will attend the forum Nov. 8 at UMass.

HAVE A GREAT HALLOWEEN COSTUME?
Enter it in the Daily Collegian
Halloween Costume Contest!
On Facebook, add as a friend and tag Massachusetts Daily Collegian in a picture of you with your costume!
More of a Flickr person? Tag "Collegian Contest" on your best costume picture.
Complete your tagging by Sunday night; winner will be announced on Tuesday!

HERBALIFE
Independent Distributor
Fun Part Time Work for College Students!
Be a Wellness Coach!
Host a Shake Party!
Full Training Included Call Zac 800-919-4922

Amherst Police win enforcement award

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Police Department has won an Award of Excellence in the silver category for municipal departments participating in the annual Massachusetts Law Enforcement Challenge.

The award, which the department will receive November 17 at a ceremony in Worcester along with 16 other departments from across the state, recognizes departments for their efforts to reduce motor vehicle related fatalities, injuries and economic loss in communities by combining traffic enforcement with public education and information.

The department was judged on six separate categories, including policy and guidelines, officer training, incentives and recognition, public education and information, enforcement activity and effectiveness of effort. The award is based on Amherst's 2008 data and accomplishments.

In 2008, Amherst cited 3,411 people for speeding, 123 for operating under the influence, and investigated 796 crashes with 108 resulting in personal injury.

The department attributes its accolades to "our officers' proactive enforcement efforts," according to a statement from Lieutenant Ronald Young.

In other police news, the department will continue its Community Enhancement through Community Service Program this year, with offenders convicted of minor infractions like open container and noise violations sentenced to doing community service work in Amherst.

Since 2007, the department says various cleanup work has been completed, such as work on Kendrick Park and improvements to Jessie's House playground.

Program coordinator Detective Dave Foster is looking for suggestions for more work and can be reached at (413) 259-3166 or by e-mail at foster@amherstma.org.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@daily-collegian.com.

The Amherst Police Department has won an Award of Excellence in the Massachusetts Law Enforcement Challenge for reducing motor vehicle accidents through effective enforcement.

Leaves keep on droppin'

A view of the pond at campus center shows UMass on a crisp fall afternoon, as the campus settles in for the long haul of winter.

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
BUY 6 BOTTLES OF WINE WITH YOUR REUSABLE FOUR SEASON WINE BAG AND RECEIVE 10% OFF
LIQUOR SPECIALS

Macallan 12yr Single Malt		10 Cane Rum		Capt. Morgan RTS Long Island Ice Tea
750 ml	$45.99	750 ml	$26.99	1.75 liter	$18.99
Tierras Reposado 100% Organic Tequila		Absinthe Ordinaire		Boru Irish Vodka
750 ml	$39.99	750 ml	$24.99	1.75 liter	$17.99
Hennessy Black Cognac		V-One Vodka		Feckin' Irish Whiskey
750 ml	$38.99	750 ml	$23.99	750 ml	$16.99
Grand Marnier Cordon Rouge		Pallini Limoncello		Jeremiah Weed Sweet Tea Vodka*
750 ml	$34.99	750 ml	$23.99	750 ml	$16.99
Bushmills BlackBush		Parrot Bay Key Lime Rum		*Including Original, Peach and Bourbon
750ml	$34.99	1.0 liter	$20.99	Smirnoff Twist Pineapple Flavored Vodka
Glenmorangie 10yr		Myer's Platinum Rum		750 ml	$12.99
750 ml	$34.99	1.75 liter	$19.99	Smirnoff Twist Pear Flavored Vodka
Cointreau		Pinnacle Vodka		750 ml	$12.99
750 ml	$32.99	1.75 liter	$19.99	Popov Flavored Vodka
Hennessy Cognac V.S.		Kilo Kai Spiced Rum		1.75 liter	$11.99
750 ml	$30.99	750 ml	$18.99	Burnett's Flavored Vodka
Remy Martin Cognac V.S.		Jagermeister		750 ml	$8.29
750 ml	$29.99	750 ml	$18.99
Ciroc Snap Frost Vodka		Mount Gay Eclipse Rum
750 ml	$29.99	1.0 liter	$18.99
Nuvo L'Esprit de Paris		Famous Grouse
750 ml	$27.99	750 ml	$18.99

SALE 10/29 - 11/04
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

UCSD Chancellor visits UM, shares insight on future of higher ed, science education

University of California at San Diego Chancellor Marye Anne Fox told an audience at the Integrated Sciences Building about her school's goals in continuing to provide high quality science education Wednesday.

UCSD from page 1

is to sponsor science fairs.

"3,500 American students participated in science fairs this year alone," she said. "Compare this to 7.5 million Chinese students," she continued, "students are unprepared for a world of competitiveness beginning at higher education."

Today, Americans are feeling the gradual effects of globalization. A sizeable fraction of the American workforce finds itself in direct competition for jobs with lower-wage workers around the globe. Also, Americans feel the push of attempting to accomplish cutting-edge scientific and engineering work. Because of globalization, driven by modern communications and other advances, workers in virtually every sector must now face competitors who live just a mouse-click away in Europe and Asia.

"You have to be competitive and ask until the answer is 'yes,' to get what you want," said Fox.

Caitlin Sato can be reached at csato@student.umass.edu.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR Fall 2009

The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:

Thursday, Oct. 29, at 6:00 pm in Bartlett 121

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

ALL TREATS, NO TRICKS
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31 · ALL DCS: 5-9 PM
THE BIGGEST HALLOWEEN PARTY ON CAMPUS!

CONTESTS:
Pumpkin Painting Contest
- All entrants will receive a UMass Travel Hot Bottle
- Pumpkins will be displayed in all DCs

UMass Student Costume Contest
- Grand Prize: $100 gift card
- Gift cards (10 winners/DC)

MENU:
Maine Live Lobsters
New York Strip Steak
Chesterfield Chicken
NE Clam Chowder (local)
Ratatouille (local)
Butternut Squash (local)
Grilled Vegetables (local)
Mulled Cider (local)
Candied Apples (local)

ENTERTAINMENT:
Table Magic · Fortune Telling · DJs

UMass Students Wearing a Costume receives a UMass Travel Hot Bottle (1st 100)

SPONSORED BY UMASS DINING LOCAL HERO
UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
facebook.com/umassdining
ALL ARE WELCOME
USE YOUR MEAL CARD OR $15 CASH

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

On grammar

Ending sentences in prepositions is something up with which I will not put. And, neither should you. Also, please do not begin sentences with conjunctions. I will not apologize for grammar policing, but I do have an entertaining point that's not quite as snobby, so read henceforth

Brian Benson

Among the greatest grammatical transgressions, some of the worst include using a possessive when one means to use a contraction, using only one comma in a three object series, ending sentences in prepositions, and writing ridiculous "he or she" constructs in an undying crusade to be linguistically diplomatic.

Using the masculine pronoun for a human antecedent whose gender is not otherwise specified upsets a lot of people and it is easy to imagine why. Many who disapprove of this sexist history.

To be fair, I imagine this topic is not at the top of most people's lists of things explosive and highly notable, so this may be a new light on an issue for he, she, (s)he, s/he, s-he, shim, her-him, he-she, or herm who is not so concerned with the woeful trend of increasingly clunky language

But the problem is not just a slippery slope toward cumbersome word usage; there is also a problem of how future generations would approach classic texts assuming present tendencies become more popular.

Will people one hundred years from now read the classics and dismiss their ideas on the basis of what may be seen as open sexism? If they grow so accustomed to gut associations of traditional language with something it is not, will authors that contributed so much to our culture and philosophy be thoughtlessly disregarded by those

So this may be a new light on an issue for he, she, (s)he, s/he, s-he, shim, her-him, he-she, or herm who is not so concerned with the woeful trend of increasingly clunky language.

usage argue that it supports a kind of implicit attitude that males are either more important or notable and point to an underlying sexism that permeates traditional language. But this does not consider a very obvious, similarly traditional, practice – using feminine pronouns for almost everything else. Nearly every country, ocean, nautical vessel and personification for things lovely or inspiring is referred to as being feminine.

These include, but are not limited to: liberty, nature, truth, knowledge, beauty, love, and justice.

These are all things for which people have traded their lives. Think about this: these are things worth defending to death. This is a truly profound thing – to willingly and knowingly terminate one's own existence in exchange for protecting and preserving them. They have begun and ended wars, created and destroyed nations, and served as the fundamental bases for truly ethical and civilized behavior. This is an honor so poetic and great it dwarfs the privileges enjoyed by masculine pronouns in most every sense.

However, this may not be sufficient reason to convince some people. Frankly, I do not quite understand why. Compare transcendent and culturally refined ideas taking feminine pronouns to baser and more mundane objects taking masculine ones, and you might appreciate traditional language regardless of its nominally who think themselves "up with the times?"

If you think this is a trivial issue, then I challenge you to consistently use only masculine pronouns instead of "he or she" or "they" in your speech for even a few days around campus and listen as people snip at you for it – and it would happen; believe me.

The real point I would like to make is that language works best when succinct and clear. Having a codified system of rules and syntax is not just an aesthetic point – it is one of personal benefit as well. How many independent scenarios can you recall where core disagreements came about due to poorly communicated language?

Or perhaps you recall a few conversations where you were using a key word in a way another person was clearly using differently. Can you feel how frustrated you were? Did you rapidly lose interest in communicating with this person as you got more flustered? This is what happens when people start saying things like "sick" when they really mean "good."

Really, it is a terrible thing to sacrifice accurate and concise language to please those with delicate sensibilities. The whole mess almost reminds me of a few scenes from "Life of Brian" only the offended people aren't acting and no one is having a good time.

Brian Benson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bbenson@student.umass.edu.

Flu got you blue? We've got you covered

I've been working at UHS for over a year and a half now and have become accustomed to the building's antibacterial soap stations, students wearing face masks into the building to avoid viruses and the colorful signs used to teach adults (yes, we're students but we too often forget that we're also grown adults) how to properly sneeze, cough and wash our hands. I'm waiting to close the stall door in the ladies room and see a sign labeled "How to properly use the toilet!"

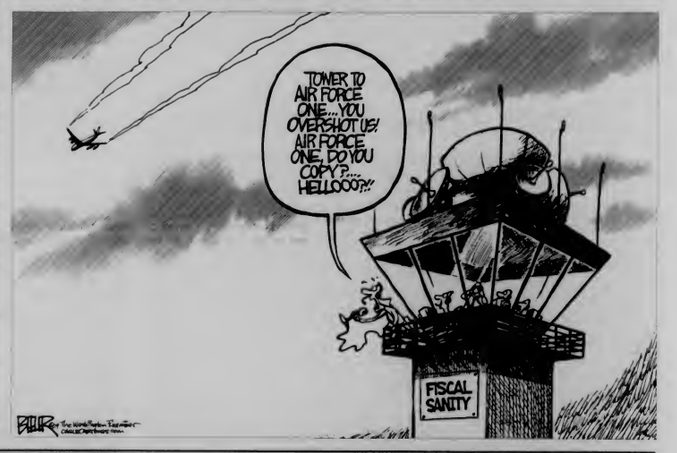
Ashley Lesperance

The recent swine flu scare has brought our campus and its health policies to an all-new extreme. At the entrance to the dining commons, at both ends of the campus center, outside of classrooms and randomly placed all over campus, are antibacterial hand sanitizer stations. I'm starting to think that the Center for Health Promotion at UHS is simply going around duck taping them to any spot they can.

Since the swine flu scare began back in April, the panic has been rapidly increasing. While panic isn't necessary, proper hygiene and hand washing techniques are needed more than ever.

I see countless numbers of people use these sanitizing hot spots all day. But is anti-bacterial soap helping or hurting the student population? According to Everyday Health, "Residue-producing antibacterials are found in the majority of antibacterial soaps. These newer compounds break down more slowly, leaving a residue on the skin. They work more slowly to eliminate bacteria, and can allow for the development of resistant bacteria. One such residue-producing antibacterial, Triclosan, can be found in 76 percent of liquid antibacterial soaps used in the United States."

Instead of using the bathrooms at the entrance of every dining commons to wash their hands with soap and hot water, students are taking the quick and easier option of simply putting their hands under the automatic sanitizer dispenser. The increase in the use of this antibacterial soap could very likely harm students by ridding their hands of healthy bacteria as well as unhealthy bacteria and allow resistant bacteria to take its place, which can later make antibiotics less effective.



I don't think that antibacterial soaps are entirely useless. Antibacterial soap is easily portable, provides hygiene when water is not available and is effective at preventing the spread of infections in a health care setting – which is why it is most suited for this environment. However, in addition to creating resistant bacteria, antibacterial soap can cause dry cracking skin, increasing the risk of infection. More concerning for our students, who have the stations available at every turn, is the fact that it can (and does) give its users a false sense of security by creating a relaxed attitude towards proper hygiene.

With winter, colder temperatures and far more head colds quickly approaching, I can't help but wonder how much the panic will increase on campus. Since the swine flu scare began back in April, the panic has been rapidly increasing. While panic isn't necessary, proper hygiene and hand washing techniques are needed more than ever.

An August 7 report by the President's Council of Advisors on Science and Technology anticipates that the infection rate among the population for H1N1 (Swine flu) could possibly affect between 30 to 50 percent of the US population, causing between 30,000 and 90,000 deaths, primarily among children and young adults. This is a bit alarming when compared to influenza (the common flu) rates of infection, which are between 5 and 20 percent of the population each year, with approximately 36,000 deaths primarily in groups aged 65 and up.

In any college setting, especially one with a student body of over 20,000, it's normal for students to come down with common colds and very often the flu. As Swine flu is significantly more concerning than the common flu, why are we turning to harmful antibacterial soaps to rid our hands of germs? It's time for us to remember the simple hand washing techniques we learned back in grade school, and if we can't do that, take the time to read the colorful signs placed around campus by UHS.

Ashley Lesperance is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at aslespera@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Letters@DailyCollegian.com

WANT TO WRITE TO US?

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed, but can be found online.

THE GOVERNOR AND RIGHTS

Dear Editor,

After reading the article about Governor Patrick's visit, I was disappointed to learn that neither the governor nor the students seemed particularly interested in addressing the real issues facing young adults in the Commonwealth. That is not to say tuition hikes and taxes are not important to every resident of Massachusetts of any age - they are - but they are nowhere near as important as the real, legal issues surrounding the rights of Massachusetts residents. I am, of course, speaking about the prohibitions on the rights of not only legal adults (such as the drinking age) but the prohibition on the rights of so-called "minors" as well.

Restrictions on the rights of youth have increased several fold since the 1950s, according to an article in Governance magazine entitled "What is the Age of Responsibility," but for what reason? According to parents, teachers and other authority figures it is because those under whatever arbitrary age is set (18 or 21) are incompetent and irresponsible so they must be strictly controlled. But what benefit does this have on society? Nothing besides the possibility for more controllable people once they have reached 18 or 21 and are granted more rights than they had before to control their lives and bodies.

Society has gradually been stripping away the rights of citizens (those under 18 are citizens with the responsibilities to obey the law but with few, if any, of the rights to change it) and criminalizing ordinary playground, adolescent behavior like fighting (assault and battery), kissing, hugging, holding hands (sexual assault), consensual sex between two underage parties (statutory rape, sex offender), staying out late (curfew violation-possible arrest), not going to school (truancy-possible arrest), saying controversial things (restrictions of freedom of speech in schools), bringing non-prescription drugs to school (drug law violation-possible arrest), other drug law violation (arrest, loss of financial aid) having "weapons" in cars (zero tolerance-possible arrest), caught with alcohol as a legal adult 18-20 years old (Minor in Possession, charged in adult court) and so on. The list goes on and on. All of these things have happened to students, to taxpayers, to adults, to soldiers.

But there is good news, Boston College Law students have actually helped to overturn criminal penalties for curfew violations ($50 civil fine still applies) in the entire state of Massachusetts thanks to a lawsuit by a 15 year old. Savanna Redding, once a 13-year old, was accused of carrying prescription strength Ibuprofen and was subsequently strip searched and has partially won her case. The school was at fault, but the administrators will not lose their jobs. A lawsuit is ongoing on in Boca Raton, Florida where a local chapter of the National Youth Rights Association is attempting to overturn an illegal curfew and lower the voting age. The Amethyst Initiative and the National Youth Rights Association are attempting to overturn, or at least open up, debate about overturning the unconstitutional 1984 National Minimum Drinking Age Act and restore the rights of legal adults in the United States, but without the active support of everyone of all ages this can not be achieved.

Is it too much to ask for a little bit of help? There seems to be a plethora of apathy on campus and that should change, people need to speak up and defend their rights because if they don't, no one else will.

Lindsay Coley
UMass Student

GLOBAL WARMING FACT CHECK

RE: "A very convienent myth;" Alex Perry, October 25

Dear Editor,

Having read the recent column, "Debunking a convenient myth," I decided to take the author at his word and do a little debunking of my own. A quick glance at Wikipedia, which provides multiple pages detailing the global warming controversy, revealed that, despite Mr. Perry's allegations of a lack of scientific consensus, there is in fact overwhelming consensus on the issue, and "since 2007 no scientific body of national or international standing has maintained a dissenting opinion." For those who wish to see for themselves, any of the following pages will provide plenty of information:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Scientific_opinion_on_climate_change
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Global_warming_controversy http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Global_warming http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Politics_of_global_warming
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Climate_change_denial

Furthermore – just to do Mr. Perry justice – I looked into Alan Carlin's report rejecting the worldwide scientific consensus on global warming to see if he had a point. Unsurprisingly, he didn't. According to the New York Times, Dr. Carlin is not a climatologist, but an economist, and his skeptical views on global warming have been argued by scientists both within and outside the Environmental Protection Agency. His views had not been ignored due to political disagreements, but because they were simply incorrect, citing unverified blog posts as fact and using selective quotes from scientific journal articles. So, for anyone else who is unsure about the truth behind global warming, I would recommend taking Mr. Perry's advice, and looking up the data. After all, it worked for me.

Alex Forrest
UMass student

YES, FACTS ARE NEEDED

RE: "A very convienent myth," Alex Perry, October 25

Dear Editor,

It would be nice to read editorials based on facts rather than random claims. I am curious to know what "research" Alex Perry claims to have done on global warming based on his claim that "many scientists think that man-made global warming does not exist."

Since Perry could not bother himself to check the facts, I did so myself; hardly surprising is that 97 percent of climatologists and 82 percent of all scientists agree that global warming is man-made, according to a survey by the University of Illinois in Chicago.

The IPCC report on climate change, which included 2,000 scientists input, has claimed to be 90 percent sure that global warming is man-made.

But really, a scientist isn't needed to know that 600,000,000 cars and millions of tons of coal releasing heat-trapping carbon dioxide every year is eventually going to do something to the planet. In addition, it would be beneficial for Mr. Perry to re-check his other claims as well, as they too are easily proven false. Shame on Mr. Perry for not getting the facts straight, and shame on the editors for not calling him out.

Tim Cheplic

HATE CRIME LAW

RE: "Massachusetts hate crime laws not effective," Alana Goodman, October 21st

Dear Editor,

I would like to clarify Ms. Goodman's misleading account of the bill, "An Act Relative to Gender-Based Discrimination and Hate Crimes," (HB1728). Her conception of the bill is that it, "...mandates harsher punishments for prejudicial crimes against transgender people." Ms. Goodman's claim, "it's unlikely that [the bill] will actually give additional protection to the transgendered community," is fundamentally wrong.

The scope of the bill covers many aspects of life beyond violent hate crimes. HB 1728 protects transgender individuals from discrimination by public schools, charter schools, employers, labor unions and a multitude of other institutions. In summary, the bill provides clear, unilateral protection for transgender people from discrimination in the state of Massachusetts. For example, a person cannot be fired from a job on the sole basis of gender identity or expression. Such discrimination would be forbidden by explicit state policy.

HB 1728 is designed to protect a vulnerable and marginalized population. It is not a way to waste taxpayer money or for supporters to feel morally righteous. The effectiveness of anti-hate crime legislation deterring violence is debatable. However, contrary to Ms. Goodman's claim, HB 1728 will give additional, concrete protections to the transgender community.

Joseph Terranova
UMass Student

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Just say 'no' to hackneyed costumes

'Ghoul' designs for the pop culture aficionado on the go

By Janam Anand
Collegian Correspondent

As the crisp air and fast falling leaves make the presence of fall known, it is clear that Halloween has almost arrived. Whether you are going to a doctor's appointment or even to the grocery store, the ghosts, black cats and spider webs seem to jump out from everywhere. Aside from all of the macabre ambiance, one question still remains: "What am I going to be this year?"

Each Halloween, we witness those hot, trendy costumes that swarm past our doors in droves, leaving us to ponder why we did not think of the same idea. This Halloween season, however, the line-up of possibilities and the chances to exhibit the most expressive ensembles, are bottomless. From pop culture idols, to Hollywood, to historical eras and even extending into the comfort and affordability of one's own closet, the ingenuity can be drawn to no end. There is not a "ghost" of a chance you will want to go without a totally "killer" costume.

Halloween costumes often reflect recent developments in pop culture. The deaths of Michael Jackson, Farrah Fawcett, Billy Mays and others, mean these personas will be manifesting on the "Halloween Red Carpet" at parties across the globe. As you might have guessed, Michael Jackson costumes are all the rage this year. The death of the King of Pop, whose style epitomized the 1980s, is stimulating an already budding trend in '80s style. Sport some sequined gloves, tight black pants, a military jacket and practice those dance moves. Halloween attire retailers such as Target, iParty and Hot Topic are offering fantastic sales on the classic Michael Jackson "Thriller Jacket" in anticipation of a massive demand.

Even prior to Michael Jackson's death, the '80s have been gearing up to become a searing fad for the Halloween season. Costume companies make decisions based on what is marketable and sought-after in traditional fashion, and since the 1980s styles are in vogue this season, costumes featuring off-the-shoulder sweat shirts, leg warmers, bangle bracelets and glitzy colors like hot pink and turquoise are procurable in an entirely new costume line, maybe even as close as the neighborhood thrift shop.

This past year has seen an unfathomable buildup of fan-craze regarding vampires. With the popularization of Stephanie Meyer's "Twilight" series and the consequent revival of vampire culture, a plethora of these sultry creatures will undoubtedly be lingering around on Halloween this year. Noteworthy, however, is the means by which vampire culture has spread within the past year, chiefly within the young adult population. Since the November 2008 film adaptation of "Twilight," vampire clothing and make-up have become a familiar stock at most Wal-Marts, Targets and Borders book stores, even during the off-season.

Further adding to the vampire rage is the new CW hit television series, "The Vampire Diaries," based on the novels by L.J. Smith. Luckily, this look is incredibly painless to recreate, calling only for a bit of face paint and some synthetic blood. The vacant, lifeless gaze comes in handy for any unwanted advances during the night.

Of course, with the Halloween weekend only a few days away, one cannot help but consider, and conceivably anticipate, the upcoming lingerie-inspired ensembles. Halloween costume companies simply cannot seem to stock enough of the sexy costumes for men and women. New this year in the "Sexy" department is Zeus for men and Aphrodite for women. Seductive devils and pirates, as well as other nautical themed costumes are popular options among young couples. If you are scouting out the local costume stores for a getup that will expectantly make it through an entire weekend of celebrations, consider upgrading to a "deluxe" costume set, as the fabric quality is often much stronger than the standard issue quality.

The wealth of options for those who might want to opt for something hysterically priceless cannot be ignored. How about a Blueberry costume (Who knew there would be vintage cereal attire?) or the Trix Bunny? Other silly and cute novelty costumes on the market this year are the Travelocity Roaming Gnome, Martini or Strawberry Daiquiri drink costumes, a Lobster Pot and Rehab Babe, which is basically a glorified Amy Winehouse costume (Much to our dismay, the bee-hive is not included). Tons of Gangster-related costumes club, very well be made at home this year, following the trend of playing Mafia Wars on Facebook. There is also a rather dimwitted new costume this year, called Magazine Cover-Star, which looks like a tabloid cover. Though all of these costumes are available for over-night delivery online at buycostumes.com (each for under $30), a little imagination and the help of some friends can either cut the price down, or eliminate it entirely.

For those who are looking for a quick and easy, last minute costume fix, look no further than your closet, or that of a friend's. Below is a list of five costumes that most people can put together using items they already have on hand.

1.) Tourist: Just about everyone possesses a Hawaiian shirt. Add some Bermuda shorts, a visor, a camera around your neck, and sandals on your feet (socks optional). For a funny effect, stuff the butt of your pants for that extra-dorky look. Find or make some brochures and tickets to stuff in your pockets and you are good to go!

2.) Cowboy: Everyone owns jeans, and chances are good that you have some kind of western or plaid shirt and boots. If you can get your hands on a cowboy hat, it only adds to the costume. Accessories like a gun belt, lasso, bandana around your neck, chaps, or a vest spice up the look.

3.) Nerd: This is most likely the most fun you can have with a home-made costume. Just wear your clothes a size too small, or maybe even pin them to appear that way. Toss on some long white socks and a pocket protector, mindlessly gel your hair, and you will find an instant nerd in the mirror.

As the generations continue, the themes of Halloween costumes take a slight shift in direction. Naturally, over the years, we have separated from the traditional witches and ghouls and have started edging towards more creative and relatable options.

Whether inspired by pop culture, sexy images, food and drink items, quirky characters, or even the clothes of a certain era, Halloween is that one time of the year when slipping out of one's usual image and adopting a remarkably different semblance is encouraged - even celebrated. This weekend will undeniably accent the originality of an entirely new generation of Halloween costumes.

Janam Anand can be reached at janand@student.umass.edu.

Sami Webber channels Wonder Woman in a Halloween costume she constructed from vintage clothing and raw craft materials.

A superhero spin on vintage to vanquish the costume blues

By Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

Halloween is the best holiday for DIY. No other day of the year allows for the infinite amount of creativity that Halloween does. You can be anything you want, an idea that too many people take for granted (i.e., when every girl you know decides to take the easy way out and be the hottie counterpart to a generic, everyday character, such as a police officer).

As a DIY maniac, there are few things that I appreciate more than when someone I know goes all-out in making their own Halloween costume, even if the idea of their costume has been done before. The fact that they took the time out of their lives to put their own personal touches on the outfit almost always bears amazing results.

Such is the case with Sami Webber. She has been spending the last several months accumulating the raw materials for her Wonder Woman costume. Everything she used to make it was bought either from a thrift store or a craft store.

"The biggest piece that I actually had to construct was the red strapless top of the costume," Webber said, which was made out of disassembled parts of a red bridesmaid's dress she purchased for $7 at a thrift store.

To make the top, Webber took apart the bridesmaid's dress and completely reworked it. After removing the zipper, skirt, sleeves and other smaller elements of the dress, she was left with "the base of a simple red corset-style top," she said.

She then took it in to fit her body better and added hook-and-eye fasteners to the back so it would close. She used a poster board to create stencils for the design on Wonder Woman's chest, which she used to cut out pieces of gold fabric. She then spray painted over it with gold paint to accentuate it.

For the bottom of the costume, Webber stuck a couple of white felt stars where she wanted them to go using a needle and thread. Webber, a former cheerleader, already had the blue spandex bottoms from her high school cheer squad, so the last major piece of the costume she needed to buy were a pair of black high-heeled boots, which she later found for $6. She spray painted the boots red and added a white stripe using strips of white fabric and a little hot glue.

The rest of the supplies Webber bought were from a craft store and included spray paint, a tiara, a bed sheet, white ribbon and pieces of fabric in gold, silver and white. She used the silver fabric and velcro strips she bought to make the wrist gauntlets. The bed sheet was used as her cape.

She will also be wearing a pair of "nude-colored tights to keep myself from freezing," said Webber.

"Collectively, [the costume] probably took me a total of about 30 hours to complete," she said. She began working on it in the middle of September.

Webber's costume was mostly inspired by the Wonder Woman in the more recent Justice League cartoons, she said.

For her hair and makeup, she said she plans "to straighten it and add a little bit of curl at the ends for some volume" and that she wants to "keep the makeup fairly classic, with smokey eyes and red lipstick."

With such a time-consuming, intricate costume to make, Webber ran into surprisingly small number of problems in constructing the outfit, saying that her only real problems were having to sew parts of the cape at home on weekends and "finding the exact metallic fabrics I wanted without using certain fabrics, because I wanted the gold and silver pieces to be really shiny but [certain] fabrics cannot be hot glued."

If you've got the time before this Saturday, be sure to add a few personal effects to your costume. Even those clichéd "insert slutty costume here" outfits could be altered into a DIY masterpiece that nobody has every seen before. Take this once-a-year opportunity to impress your friends and fellow partygoers with your skills.

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu.

Better than hot grits

NoHo's Iron Horse gets a hearty serving of psychedelic funk/jazz with Breakfast

By Christiana McDougal
Collegian Correspondent

To the delight of their dedicated fans, The Breakfast is once again touring the Northeast, in promotion of their latest album, "Live As Is."

They will be performing tonight at the Iron Horse in Northampton, to mark the start of their highly anticipated Halloween-inspired 11th Annual Fanghoulish Freakout Tour.

Describing themselves as a "hard hitting jazz rock experimental quartet," the band has always kept their core psychedelic influence present within their music.

Galvanized by their fan base, they have worked their way up through the music scene by remaining distinct in their blend of psychedelically rooted jam, funk, jazz and experimental rock music. The Breakfast infuses these genres into one hard-hitting, bass thumping musical blend.

"Live As Is," their seventh and most recent album, was released on September 12. The album, which was recorded from the band's performance at The Field in Bridgeport, Conn., is the second live album that they've released and can only be purchased through their website, www.thebreakfast.org.

Formed in Connecticut in 1998 under the name "Psychedelic Breakfast," these self-taught musicians – original members include guitarist Tim Palmieri, bassist Rob Spears, keyboardist Jordan Giangreco and drummer Adrian Tramontano – have been together for 11 years. Currently, the only change in the members is the addition of Chris DeAngelis who plays bass and is a vocalist for the band. Collectively, The Breakfast has played over 1,000 shows.

Their original name is in reference to the Pink Floyd song, "Alan's Psychedelic Breakfast." Due to negative connotations some people associated with the term "Psychedelic [Breakfast]," the band made the difficult decision of withdrawing the psychedelic aspect of their name and calling themselves simply The Breakfast.

In 2004 they accepted their first Jammy Award, which gives praise to bands that perform live, improvisational music. For their work, they were awarded "New Groove of the Year."

Throughout their 11 years together, the band has played alongside Mike Gordon, moe., The Wailers, Umphrey's McGee and Disco Biscuits. They have played at prominent music festivals including moe.down, Gathering of the Vibes and Camp Bisco.

The Breakfast is also known for doing covers of entire albums at their shows. At recent shows they have dedicated themselves to playing The Doors' "Morrison Hotel," The Beatles' "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band," and Phish's "Lawn Boy." By fusing such classic albums with their own funk-psychedelic-jazz style, it makes for an exceptionally enjoyable performance.

Members of The Breakfast are also busy working on their own side projects.

Drummer Adrian Tramontano's highly anticipated solo debut, "Vessel" was released earlier this month, while Palmieri plays acoustic shows in the New Haven, Conn. area, including an assortment of covers and original Breakfast songs.

Palmiero, Tramontano and Spears also perform in a Red Hot Chili Peppers tribute band by the name of The Good Time Boys.

The show begins at 10 p.m. Thursday at the Iron Horse. Tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door. Amherst's own Orange Television, a grunge/funk/fusion trio will be opening for The Breakfast, ushering in the powerful performance to come.

Christiana McDougal can be reached at cmcdouga@student.umass.edu.

Bridgeport's The Breakfast make a stop at the Iron Horse tonight, marking the start of their Halloween inspired 11th Annual Fanghoulish Freakout Tour.

Mark DeSantis to return Friday, Minutemen host Dukes, Bonnies

By David Brinch

The Massachusetts men's soccer [illegible] this week that its leading scorer and captain will return to the playing field at home this weekend against Duquesne and St. Bonaventure.

For UMass coach Sam Koch and the Minutemen (5-5-3, 2-3-0 Atlantic 10), inserting senior forward Mark DeSantis back into the lineup could not come at a better time.

DeSantis officially returned to full practice this week with the team after being limited to light jogging last week, with his minutes on Friday being determined by his conditioning.

"We will see how he is doing," Koch said. "Can he play 90 minutes, probably not, but he's going to be able to play."

DeSantis has yet to play in a conference game this season, but leads UMass with three goals in eight games. The Minutemen have gone 2-3-0 without him in A-10 play, but will look to get back on track with DeSantis's help on the offensive play against a physical Dukes team.

"They're extremely hard-working and a physical team, and we have a tough game on our hands," Koch said.

The Dukes (6-5-3, 3-2-1 A-10) are coming off back-to-back shutout wins against Saint Josephs and Temple, outscoring both teams 5-0 in the two-game match-up. They also lead the A-10 in fouls, averaging 14.67 per game.

UMass defeated the Hawks 2-0 but fell in double overtime to the Owls 1-0 earlier this month.

If the Minutemen win against the Dukes, they will move ahead in the tie-breaker and will get closer to qualifying for the conference tournament.

"We can take care of our own destiny if we just keep on winning, but we have to make sure we move the ball quickly and understand the energy and the physicality of the game," Koch said.

Moving the ball quickly and efficiently will have to be a top priority for the Minutemen, along with the defense continuing to play well while generating scoring opportunities.

UMass is still first in the A-10 in goals allowed average (0.62), goals against average (0.57) and is tied for second in shutouts (6), behind the Dukes, who have nine.

"The defense has played really well, but we've given up some soft goals, so we have to eliminate that lack of focus," Koch said.

The Minutemen will look to neutralize freshman forward Joshua Patterson, who leads the Dukes with six goals, and is sixth in the conference in both goals and goals per game (0.43).

"We have to be aware of him," Koch said. "We have to focus on where he is at all times when we don't have possession of the ball, we need to close him down quickly and make it hard for him to turn."

Along with Patterson, junior midfielder Ben Horner is someone who can generate offense, ranking third in the A-10 in shots with 47, while Tyler Tompkins and Alex Trujillo have three goals and two goals, and one assist each, respectively.

Last season, the defense again was huge for the Minutemen, as UMass and the Dukes played to a 0-0 double overtime draw. In the tie, goalkeeper Zack Simmons recorded his school-record 26 career shutout.

The Bonnies (7-6-0, 3-2-0) travel to Rudd on Sunday after beating the Hawks 2-0 on the road. An Oct. 16 match-up against Dayton was rained out, and will be played on Nov. 8, the last game of the season for the Bonnies before the A-10 tournament. They are led by senior forward Sam Maheu, who is first on the team with nine goals and five assists.

Friday's game begins at 12 p.m. and Sundays begins at 1 p.m.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Dangleis contributing

Lehigh transfer helping on both sides of ball after starting past eight games for UMass

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Mark Dangelis always knew he belonged in Massachusetts. It just wasn't until he left that he realized how much he wanted to be back in his home state.

The sophomore originally played collegiate soccer for Lehigh because of its strong academics, and he wanted to be somewhere else. Dangleis also liked what he heard from Lehigh coach Dean Kroski.

He had no comment on what exactly his former coach promised, but when he stepped onto the field his freshman year, he was surprised to find out that what Kroski told him during the recruiting process didn't match up with what actually happened.

Dangleis started the first 10 games of the 2008 season before he was benched. After two games, Kroski did not play Dangleis in four of the last five games of the season before starting him in the last game of the season against Colgate.

"The coach and I didn't really see eye-to-eye," Dangleis said.

He finished with one assist and a shot on the season.

Between missing home and feeling angry about his situation with the Mountain Hawks, Dangleis decided he had had enough of being at Lehigh.

"I had a different outlook going into the season as a freshman, and we didn't really get along," Dangleis said. "We just butted heads."

After deciding that he no longer had a future with the Mountain Hawks, he called UMass coach Sam Koch about the possibility of being a part of the Minutemen.

"I didn't put a red carpet down and give him the best pasta meal he's ever had," Koch said of his decision to let Dangleis tryout for the Minutemen.

The interaction between Koch and Dangleis over the 2009 offseason didn't resemble anything close to a recruiting process. Koch promised him nothing and said that his playing time would be decided by how he performed.

He knew nothing about the prospective sophomore and offered nothing besides an opportunity to prove himself. That was all Dangleis could ask for.

"He was pretty forward in what I was expected to do when I was here, rather than telling me something and then doing something else, like what happened at Lehigh," Dangleis said.

Koch wanted Dangleis to become one of the starting backs in order for junior Stuart Amick to move up to the midfield. However, the UMass coach wasn't initially ready to commit to giving Dangleis starting time.

He came off the bench the first five games of the 2009 season, but made an impact almost immediately. Dangleis had an assist in the Minutemen's first goal of the season against Boston University.

His first start came in UMass's 2-0 win over Siena, allowing Koch to not only have another strong defender in the back, but also allowing him to move Amick up to midfield as an offensive boost.

Since starting the past eight games, Dangleis' role with the team has gradually increased into someone who can now play on both sides of the ball.

He is now the Minutemen's main weapon on corner kicks, and is tied with midfielder Ben Arikian as the leader in assists. For someone who had no expectations coming in, Dangleis has already made a big impression on his new coach.

"He was an unknown coming in," Koch said. "I didn't know if he was going to play one minute or 90. We did not expect anything from him, so we're happy with what he's done."

Now that Koch sees what his transfer is capable of, he is looking for Dangleis to improve even more to help the Minutemen improve their chances of making the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

But as far as Koch is concerned, Dangleis made the right decision coming to UMass, and sees him as an intricate part to the Minutemen program for the next two years.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

Senior forward Mark DeSantis puts a ball past a goalkeeper earlier this season. After sitting out the past seven games with an illness, the Minutemen's leading scorer will return to the field this weekend in match-ups against Duquesne and St. Bonaventure.

Nelson, Hernandez set to play this week, Defense want to neutralize Smith, Williams strong running attack against the Black Bears. UMass, which currently averages 137.1 yards per game, looks to have an advantage against the 10th-ranked rushing defense in the CAA at 174.6 yards per game.

FOOTBALL from page 10

The question for the Minutemen though, is who will be starting at running back next week. Tony Nelson was held out of last week's game, still nursing a thigh contusion. Jon Hernandez, who currently ranks fifth in the conference in yards per game and may have shed the title of back up, started the game against the Spiders, but was taken out due to injury. Senior fullback Chris Zardas replaced him in the back field.

Nelson and Hernadez, though, are both back, and are currently slated to play this week, according to Morris.

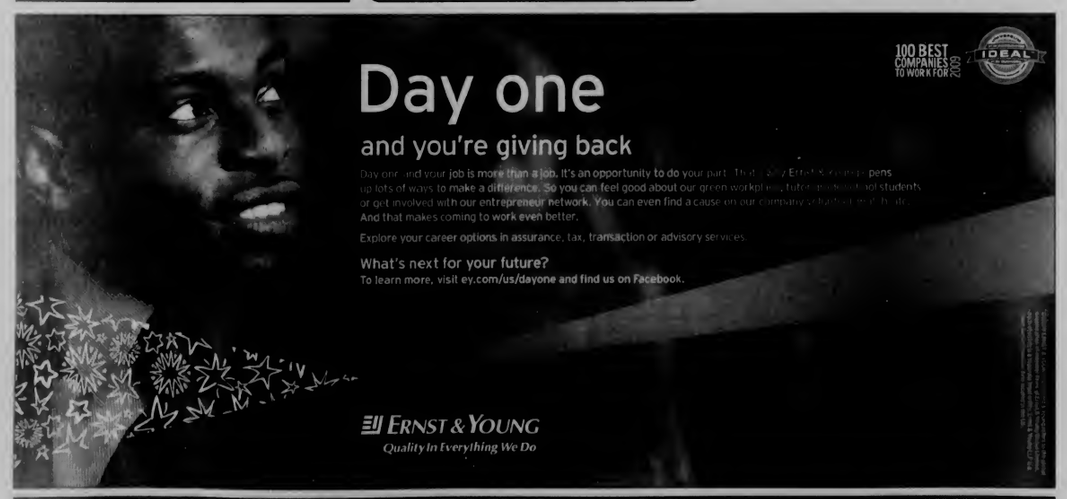
"They're better now, just like last week because everyone was healthy and then they end up not. Right now, everybody's good to go. So we'll have them participating and ready to go."

The decision of who will start the game, though, will be based on health. According to Morris, "It'll come to who's the healthiest coming out of practice."

The UMass defense looks to continue its success, despite giving up 34 points to the Spiders. Repeatedly forced to defend a short field due to the offense's seven turnovers, the defense limited Richmond to only 236 yards of total offense. The defense proved especially effective against Spiders quarterback Eric Ward, who accumulated just 52 yards through the air with an interception.

A strong defensive effort will be vital against the Black Bears and quarterback Eric Smith, who transferred from Iona College after its football program was cut. Smith is third in the conference in passing with 215.2 yards per game and Landis Williams is the conference leader in receptions per game (6.33).

UMass counters with a strong running game, junior Kyle Havens (219.1 yards passing per games) and wide receiver Victor Cruz, who leads the conference with 77.3 yards receiving per game.



To win Saturday, the Minutemen will have to bounce back from their rough performance against Richmond in which Havens was pulled. For Morris, though, it should not be a problem, as long as the team doesn't look to far ahead or behind.

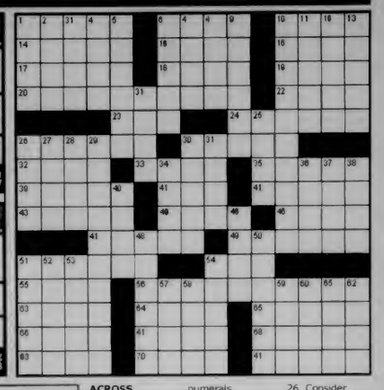
"Does any game make a different season? I don't think so, if you play it game-to-game and say, 'hey, this is a must win because it's the next best game we got,' which is this weekend," Morris said.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Domino's
"A KILLER TRIPLE"
"THE MIX & MATCH DEAL"
Choose any three subs, pasta bowls, or medium one-topping pizzas for $5.55 each!
(413) 256-8911
Route 9, Hadley
Order online!

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

COMICS



WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com

CROSSWORD

LA PIAZZA
SPECIALS:
2 LARGE CHEESE PIZZAS $15.00
ALL CALZONES $5.00
12" SUBS $5.00
8" SUBS $4.25
OCMP Free Delivery
(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR
Thurs. 10/29 DJs BiggZ — Top 40, HipHop, Dance — Pregame Halloween Party
Fri. 10/30 ! HALLOWEEN PARTY ! HOSTED BY DJ BiggZ
Sat. 10/31 Guest DJ — Halloween Party
Tues. 11/3 TECHNO TUESDAY — DJs Yeah Guy & Hott Sizzle
413-259-1600
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

amherst cinema
Fri Oct 30 - Thu Nov 5
A SERIOUS MAN 2:30 4:45 7:30 10:00 +12:00pm Sat & Sun
Bright Star 2:00 (1:30 Tue) 4:30 (4:00 Tue) *7:00 9:30 +11:30am Sat & Sun *NO 7:00 Tue
CAPITALISM: A LOVE STORY 1:45 4:15 7:15 9:45 + 11:15am Sat & Sun
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Oct 30 - Thu Nov 5
THE BOYS ARE BACK 7:15 9:30 +2:30 Sat & Sun
AMREEKA 5:00
ZERO HOUR FILM SERIES: Horror Express
Sat. Oct. 31 Midnight! Special Admission $3!
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantttheatrr.org (413) 584-5848

SUDOKU

			8
5		6	3			8
			7	1		5	4
						6
	5		1	7	8
	7	2
		3	6	4				2
	4				1			3
					3

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
Sunraise printing
586-7133
YOUR 1 COLOR LOGO ON WHITE T-SHIRTS
$4.41 EACH 100 piece minimum SCREEN INCLUDED
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035

MIX TAPE THURSDAYS
HOSTED BY DJ VID KID
HIPHOP DANCE R&B MORE
EVERY WEEK DOWNSTAIRS AT AMHERST BREWING CO.
NO COVER - DRINK SPECIALS
BEST DANCE PARTY IN TOWN
21 PLUS

ACROSS
1. Preserves, as pork
6. Bland
10. Bell sound
14. Female internal reproductive organ
15. Wheel shaft
16. Central American sloth
17. Couch
18. Menton
19. Rumple
20. Alteration
22. A troublesome child
23. Autonomic Nervous System
24. Alone
26. Luxurious
30. Elan
32. Distinctive flair
33. Erode
35. Notions
39. S S S S
41. Payable
42. Sex appeal
43. Steel or tin
44. Chilled
46. Sage
47. Brackish
49. Leased
51. Drink
54. 59 in Roman numerals
55. Horse color
56. Exotic dancer
63. Backside
64. Not long now
65. Glacial ridge
66. Makes lace
67. Lack of difficulty
68. Nigerian monetary unit
69. Visual organs
70. Biblical garden
71. Melodies

DOWN
1. Fizzy drink
2. Keen
3. Magma
4. Snare
5. Sentence structure
6. Pieces of information
7. Sixty-two in Roman numerals
8. Countertenor
9. Minuscule
10. Ramshackle
11. Become accustomed (to)
12. Kind of spray
13. Breezy
21. Once again
25. Mélange
26. Consider
27. If not
28. Not first
29. Feelings of anxiety
30. Impertinent
31. Tall woody plant
34. Modify written material
36. Radiate
37. Basilica area
38. Small storage structure
40. Thick slice
45. Trickle
48. Tenant
50. Magnitude
51. Angered
52. Eel
53. Sew together loosely
54. Cloth from flax
57. Frog
58. A thorny flower
59. Jacob's brother
60. Similar
61. And
62. Historical periods

Wondermark by David Malki! wondermark.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub chainsawsuit.com

Hits Now 94.3 FM
The Valley's Hit Music Now in HD on 99.3 HD2
www.hits943.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
It's inappropriate to get so hungry while thinking about Spiderman's costume.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
It's foolish to treat all hyenas like Ed from "The Lion King."

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Experiencing your personality is like watching "13 Ghosts" on cable.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Productivity can only be measured in Wingdings font.

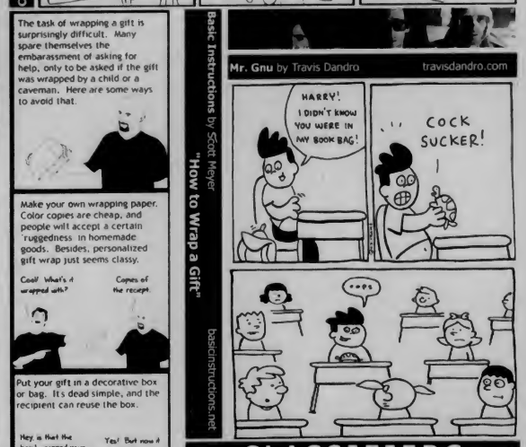
gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Lazy? A neck brace is the perfect disguise.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
A relationship is truly functional when there's an abuse of peanut butter.

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Punctuation enslaves the unworthy. You're either with 'em or against 'em.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Join the coalition to make "Big Pimpin'" a cultural phenomenon.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Speaking of which, the clerks you encounter do not like getting tipped in "cheese."



scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
How many sea shells can you sell by the seashore?

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
You know what it means to be an object touched by many.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Stay away from Myspace. It is a wretched hive of scum and villany.

MIKESMAZE DARWIN!
FOOD, FUN, SPUDZOOKAS!
Weekends & Holidays 10am-5pm thru Nov 1
S. Main Street Rt. 47 Sunderland
www.mikesmaze.com
413-665-8331

Basic Instructions by Scott Meyer basicinstructions.net

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro travisdandro.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers Wanted, Must be able to work 20 hrs/week including one weekend night. Apply at D.P. Dough, Downtown Amherst

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen fall to Dartmouth

Big Green score five straight goals on UMass, Sowry and Co. wrap up A-10 games this weekend

By Herb Scribner
Collegian Staff

The No. 19 Massachusetts field hockey team failed to knock off Dartmouth last night in its final non-conference game of the year, losing by a final tally of 6-3.

"Today was a dead-rubber for us. We wanted to certainly look at passing the ball around a little bit more [and] to gain confidence playing as a team," UMass coach Justine Sowry said. "To give up that many goals is not great, but we gained a lot."

The Minutewomen (10-8, 1-3 Atlantic 10) started off hot with much offensive pressure towards the Big Green (9-8, 3-2 Ivy League) Defender Makaela Potts scored the first goal of the game, slapping the ball high from the top of the circle.

For UMass, the success was short-lived, as Dartmouth tied the game up with a goal from forward Kelly McHenry, who scored off of a cluttered play near the UMass goal.

Two more goals followed for the Big Green before the end of the half, as midfielder Rebecca Sobel and forward Kelly Hood both netted a pair of scores. Sobel's goal was scored when Minutewomen goalkeeper Sarah Williams, who started her first game this season, lost track of the ball. Hood's goal came off of a penalty-corner with just over three minutes left to play in the half.

"We stopped supporting each other off the ball in the first half, which lead to us dribbling a lot more and taking people one on one," forward Katie Kelly said.

"They certainly wanted the ball more than us," Sowry said.

Coming out of the locker room, the Minutewomen continued to show a lack of effort, as the Big Green piled three more goals on UMass. Two straight goals from forward Samantha McPherson and a strike from Hood four minutes later gave the Big Green a commanding 6-1 lead.

After a timeout called by Dartmouth, forward Nicole Cordero gave the 181 fans in attendance something to cheer about, as she netted a goal in the 47th minute of play.

The momentum switched after this second goal, as the Minutewomen continued pressuring the ball, looking to make a comeback. Success came once more when midfielder Kim Young tapped the ball in from the corner.

It was a back and forth battle at the end of the game, with both teams continuing to look for a goal. Eventually, time expired, giving the Big Green a mighty and decisive victory.

Following the pounding by Dartmouth, the Minutewomen have two conference match-ups this weekend to close out their season. These matches are crucial for UMass, as the team will need wins in both games (along with support from other teams around the A-10) to clinch a spot in the championship tournament.

The first will be on Friday, where UMass will take on La Salle at Garber Field. While the two teams have not battled this season, the Minutewomen defeated the Explorers on Oct. 17 of last year by a final score of 2-0. The victory over the Explorers was part of UMass' eight-game winning streak to close out the 2008 season.

Following the clash against La Salle, the Minutewomen will face West Chester Sunday for the first time this season. UMass last took on the Golden Rams (8-9, 3-2 A-10) in the 2008 season on Oct. 19, where they walked away with the 4-1 victory.

Herb Scribner can be reached at hscribner@student.umass.edu

FJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Members of the Massachusetts field hockey look to score in a game last season. UMass could not generate enough offensive opportunites against Dartmouth Wednesday, falling to the Big Green, 6–3.

Freshmen get honors

First years Riley, Venison make All-Rookie squad, Harris named to All-Conference team in '09

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Senior guard Ricky Harris was named to the Atlantic 10 Preseason All-Conference Team, while freshman guard Freddie Riley and freshman forward Terrell Vinson were both named to the preseason All-Rookie Team last Thursday, Oct. 22.

Harris, the A-10's returning leading scorer, (18.2 points per game), is the Massachusetts men's basketball teams only senior, and will takeover the leadership role this season.

"I think it's just a testament of a kid who has worked hard to get better, and a kid who came out of high school not highly acclaimed like some other players, [but] did a great year of prep-school and worked his butt off," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said.

"He didn't have an unbelievable freshman year, so it goes to show that if you work hard and get better, and do what the coaches are asking, you can be successful."

Harris was named to the A-10 Third Team last season after being named to the Preseason Second Team, leading the Minutemen in scoring while becoming the 40th player in UMass history with 1,000 career points.

With a large freshmen recruiting class including Riley and Vinson, Kellogg will look to Harris to help mentor his young players while being a vocal leader on the court.

"Being the only senior, he's really the only guy who's been through four years of what it takes to be a successful college athlete, and I need somebody to take on a leadership role, and he's doing a good job."

Riley and Vinson are both two highly touted recruits who could make an impact for the Minutemen early this season. However, Kellogg wants all of his young players to work hard and have great attitudes, regardless of how much time they see early on in their collegiate careers.

"These guys are probably a little ways away from being what we all expect them to be, and my job is to get them better, to have them just help the team. The perfect case scenario is when you have four seniors and you bring in a freshmen class that can just take them time, but these guys are going to be thrown into the fire and perform early."

Vinson was named to the Baltimore Sun All-Metro team after leading Saint Frances Academy to Baltimore Catholic League and Maryland Interscholastic Athletic Association titles his senior year, while averaging 23 points per game and eight assists.

He was also ESPNU's No. 46 rated player in the nation and eighth-ranked small forward last year.

Before doing a post-graduate year at Hargrave Military Academy in Virginia, Riley had a strong career at Vanguard High School in Ocala, Fla. There, he averaged 16 points and eight rebounds as a senior and 20 points and six rebounds as a junior.

"When you're trying to build and get things going, that first recruiting class has to be a five man class of high level kids that fit how you want to play, and I think I accomplished that with this group," Kellogg said.

Gaffney Cut

Former UMass forward Tony Gaffney was waived by the Los Angeles Lakers last weekend, after playing in seven preseason games with the defending world champions. Gaffney went undrafted in the NBA Draft, and this summer played for the Lakers in the NBA summer league. There, he averaged 3.8 points per game and 2.8 rebounds in four games. Gaffney impressed enough people and was invited to training camp, making the Lakers for the preseason. He averaged 3.0 points per game and 1.7 rebounds in 7.7 minutes. Gaffney was named the 2009 A-10 Defensive Player of the Year after ranking third in the nation in blocks per game (3.8) his senior year. Despite not making the team, Kellogg is extremely proud of his former player in what he has accomplished so far.

"He's that type of guy that just brings energy and enthusiasm to the game, and I envision him in the next two, three, four, years, with more experience, playing in the NBA," Kellogg said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

BRIAN HEDRICK/COLLEGIAN

Guard Ricky Harris was named to the Preseason A-10 All-Conference Team last Thursday, Oct. 22nd.

Defensive woes continuing, Williams starts in net in loss

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

With forward Jill Powers and midfielder Cher King out of the lineup, the No. 19 Massachusetts field hockey team produced too little offense too late against Dartmouth in its 6-3 loss to the Big Green last night.

UMass scored early with a goal by junior Makaela Potts, but could do nothing, while Dartmouth scored six unanswered goals over the next 30 minutes. Offensive opportunities were available for the Minutewomen, but a lack of consistency, execution and key offensive players was a bad formula for UMass coach Justine Sowry's team.

"It's definitely a young lineup," UMass coach Justine Sowry said. "We have a lot of freshmen on the field, and it's a work in progress, I guess, for them to have awareness of each other game by game."

Adding to the injury tally during the game were juniors Potts, who was roughed up during the game in addition to receiving a five-minute yellow card earlier, and Jamie Bourazeris, who left the game after being struck in the head in the second half. Though both are defenders, Potts and Bourazeris are key components on the UMass penalty corner unit. Potts leads the Minutewomen with nine goals on the season, while Bourazeris is fourth with four goals.

While the Minutewomen struggled on the offensive end, the play of Dartmouth goalkeeper Jenna Stearns gave them little chance to bust out of their slump.

Stearns recorded five saves on the night, all coming in key moments, including a stretch of three-straight corners in the first half for the Minutewomen. UMass got off three solid shots in the stretch, all of which were deftly blocked by Stearns.

UMass added two late goals from freshmen Nicole Cordero and Kim Young (her career-first), as the Minutewomen showed some offensive spark in the closing minutes.

"Attacking-wise, I think in the last 24 minutes, we played some really great hockey," junior forward Katie Kelly said. "We passed the ball more and I think that's the key to our attack, passing the ball. We'll get a lot of opportunities in the circle if we do that."

Williams, defense struggles

With the Minutewomen playing a midweek non-conference game in the midst of a tight race to get a spot in the A-10 tournament, senior goalkeeper Sarah Williams got the start spot in goal Wednesday night.

Williams, who started four games last season and 21 games in her career, had yet to make a start this season until Wednesday night. Her first major playing time of the season, though, did not go well, with the senior surrendering five goals on the night, including three goals in the first half.

According to Sowry, the choice to start Williams wasn't due to rest for the stretch of three games in five days. Rather, Sowry believed that Williams was not getting the playing time she had deserved.

With 28 minutes and 57 minutes remaining in the second half, sophomore Aleshia Widdall replaced Williams in goal. But even Widdall couldn't stop the bleeding immediately, as the Big Green added their sixth goal of the game with 24:43 left on a penalty corner.

The UMass defense was able to hold off the Dartmouth attack for the remaining minutes, with Widdall recording five saves in that span. However, even with a late comeback bid, the five-goal deficit was too great to overcome.

"We were definitely disconnected," Sowry said. "We weren't playing together as a solid defensive unit like we would normally. I think the communication was poor and we, perhaps, let our frustration get to us a little bit."

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

UM moving forward, take on Black Bears

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

The No. 19 Massachusetts football team looks to put last week's defeat to No.1 Richmond behind them, and put itself back in the driver's seat in the race for the conference title this Saturday at Maine.

UMass (4-3, 2-2 Colonial Athletic Association) dropped out of the top spot in the CAA North last week, but looks to bounce back against the Black Bears. Maine's last game was also a loss to Richmond two weeks ago, as they are coming off a bye week.

With four conference games left in the season, the Minutemen will have to play at least .500 football if they want to overtake New Hampshire, which leads the CAA North at 3-1. Saturday's game, though, is equally important for the Black Bears, (3-4, 2-2 CAA) who are currently tied for second in the conference. Whoever wins Saturday's game holds the tie-breaker, should the teams remain tied at the end of the season.

"Every game's a must win," UMass coach Kevin Morris said. "It's the CAA, and you want to win every game you play no matter who you're playing. Must wins are every week."

After struggling to run the ball last week, the Minutemen have a prime opportunity to use their

See FOOTBALL on page 6

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Despite throwing four interceptions last weekend, quarterback Kyle Havens will start when the Minutemen travel to Maine this Saturday.

Despite setbacks, Havens still the starter

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Kyle Havens saw significant time on the bench for the first time this season on Saturday after throwing four interceptions in the Massachusetts football team's 34-12 loss to Richmond.

The quarterback gave way to backup Scott Woodward, who Havens battled for the starting job all summer. Despite the bad performance against the No. 1 Spiders (7-0, 5-0 Colonial Athletic Association), Havens got some resounding assurance from his coach that he will be back under center this Saturday when the No. 19 Minutemen (4-3, 2-2 CAA) travel to Maine.

"Kyle Havens is the quarterback," UMass coach Kevin Morris said before Tuesday's practice. "Kyle Havens is starting on Saturday."

Havens' worst game in a UMass uniform was when the Minutemen traveled to Richmond, throwing for only 78 yards on 10-of-25 passing with four interceptions before being replaced in the third quarter. The 78 yards passing was a large drop from what Havens has averaged this season, 219.1 passing yards per game, the second highest in the CAA.

"It wasn't a very good game," Morris said. "[Havens] knew that. That was obvious."

With four minutes, 31 seconds remaining in the third quarter against the Spiders, Woodward came in for Havens, who had thrown two interceptions on the first two drives of the second half. Woodward did not find much more success in the poor weather, as he threw two intereceptions of his own, one that was returned 39 yards for a touchdown on his first drive in the game.

Woodward did put together a touchdown drive, going 11-of-23 for 137 yards and one touchdown pass.

"[Woodward's] job is to get us in the end zone, and we had one touchdown while he was in, so that was a good thing," Morris said of Woodward's performance.

For Havens, the intereceptions are nothing new to him – he has thrown at least one interception in every game this year – but he had yet to throw more than two in a game this season before Saturday. The four intereceptions by Havens came against what is now ranked the second best pass defense in terms of efficiency (108.6) in the CAA, and a Spiders defense that is tied for third most in interceptions with 11.

The Minutemen will have to face the Maine (3-4, 2-2 CAA) squad this weekend that ranks second with 12 interceptions, but seventh with a 120.3 passing defense efficiency.

"We needed a spark last Saturday, and Scott Woodward came in and did a good job giving them some spark, but Kyle is going to be the starting quarterback, and we'll try to remedy those mistakes," Morris said of the quarterback situation.

Havens still knows he has the support of his teammates, and has put the game behind him all ready, while looking for a good week in practice.

"I feel like I got a renewed vow of confidence from everybody. They are still behind me, and they have confidence that I can do the job," Havens said. "That made a real big difference to me. A lot of guys called me and texted me to let me know they still had my back. Saturday is over, it happened, I didn't play well. I need to prepare better in practice."

Even Morris reiterated the need for a strong week of practice, but not only by Havens, but by the whole offense. Against Richmond, the only other scoring drive, other than Woodward's, came on the first drive of the game, when Havens drove down the field leading to an Armando Cuko field goal.

"We didn't play very well, and we lost so we needed to come back and have a great week of practice and just get in tuned to what we're doing," Morris said. "[We need to] get the offense clicking during practice so we're ready to click during the game."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

the daily collegian

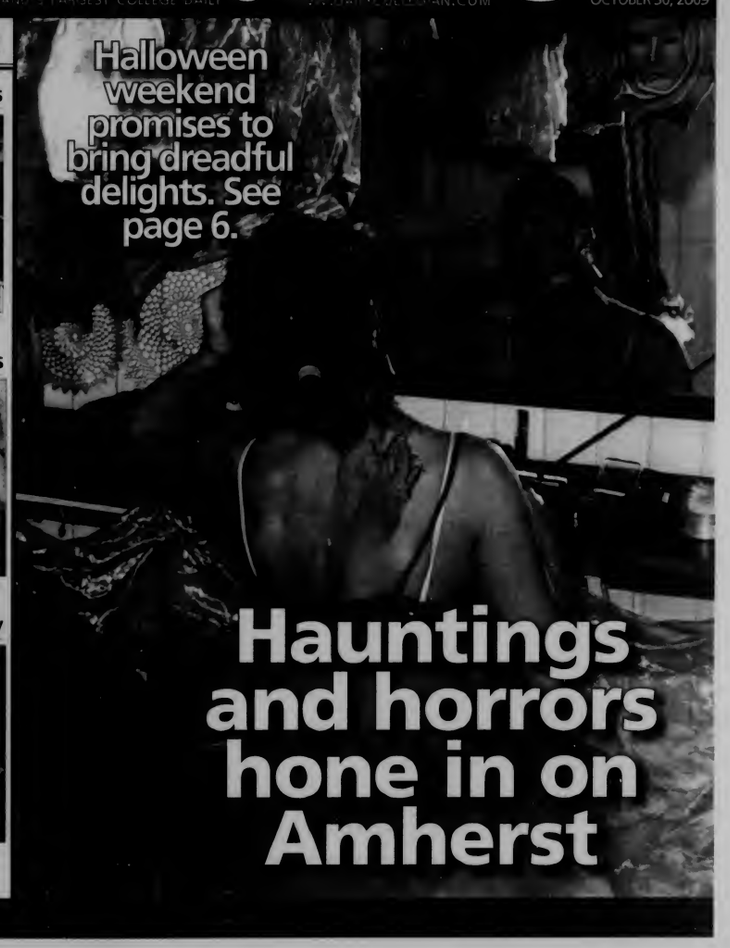
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM OCTOBER 30, 2009

inside this issue:

UM looks to fry Friars

SEE PAGE 13

Poe-down on campus



SEE PAGE 3

Paranormal Mediocrity

SEE PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 37

113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S P Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Lanoard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolneirz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Scannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
WILLIAM MCGUINNESS
COPY EDITOR
HANNAH MCGOLDRICK
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

SGA passes Khanna motion

Internal investigation of use of funds to be launched

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Commuter Senator Derek Khanna's complaint alleging misuse of Student Government Association funds by last year's SGA administration was put to a vote Wednesday night in a regular SGA meeting, passing 11-to-10 with 10 senators abstaining from voting.

The complaint, which Khanna circulated to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Jean Kim as well as SGA members and others, originally carried a deadline for response of October 18, but that deadline passed without further movement.

The 53-page complaint seeks an internal investigation into the alleged use of SGA funds to print and sell t-shirts to benefit the Committee for Justice for Jason, as well as asking for a University review of the matter and a University of Massachusetts Police Department and Northwestern District Attorney review. The complaint also calls for greater transparency in disclosing how Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) monies are used.

On Wednesday in the Cape Cod Lounge, the SGA voted on a number of addendums, but Khanna's legislation proved the most contentious and the most impactful.

With its passage, the complaint calls for SGA President Ngozi Mbauwike to appear at the next SGA meeting, set for November 4, to both present a legislative agenda and "to discuss the serious outstanding allegations of misuse of student funds," according to the text of the motion. The complaint also asks the SGA to perform "an exhaustive internal investigation to determine what happened regarding this complaint, and to provide an official response to the allegations listed to the SGA, Vice Chancellors' office, UMPD and the District Attorney's Office," according to the motion.

Khanna said the vote and the Vice Chancellor's investigation gave credence to his allegations and that he hopes it will result in greater transparency in the SGA.

"I hope that they conduct a full investigation and that they take it seriously," he said.

He continued to say that he believes an investigation will shed more light on this matter and fully illuminate the details which have often been hazy throughout this investigation.

"I'm pretty positive that there's a lot more information that can be gleaned," he said, "students don't know how much of their funds were stolen, how much was involved, when this took place," he elaborated.

Khanna went on to say that he hopes Mbauwike's expected legislative speech will bring more accountability to student government.

"This is the first time in history that an SGA president has been legally forced to come before the senate, that will give us the ability to ask what we need," he said.

SGA Speaker Modesto Montero said the results were less binding than Khanna indicated and that the actions Khanna was requesting were not yet concrete.

"What took place was [Khanna] demanding more action take place outside of his complaint," Montero said, "what this motion was pretty much demanding was that both the president give her legislative agenda and also to further explain to the student body what steps she and her administration took to respond to these allegations."

Montero intimated that Mbauwike could still veto Khanna's complaint if she chooses.

"Obviously she still has the veto power," he said. "She might veto that motion."

Beyond the SGA's vote on the matter, Vice

See SGA on page 3

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

SGA senator Derek Khanna introduced the complaint that the SGA passed Wednesday.

CINEMARK
For advance tickets & showtimes visit
cinemark.com
or call 1-800-FANDANGO ✦ Exp Code 1118#
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
FIRST MATINEE SHOWTIME (7 DAYS A WEEK) $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)

◆ CLOUDY WITH A CHANCE OF MEATBALLS - REAL D 3D ($2.75 SURCHARGE)
[PG] 200 425 645 900
◆ MICHAEL JACKSON'S THIS IS IT [PG]
115 415 700 945
◆ AMELIA [PG] 100 410 720 1000
◆ ASTRO BOY [PG] 130 400 630 850
◆ CIRQUE DU FREAK: THE VAMPIRE'S ASSISTANT [PG13] 145 420 730 1015
◆ SAW VI [R] ①
120 230 340 600 710 820 1040
COUPLES RETREAT [PG13]
140 420 700 940
LAW ABIDING CITIZEN [R] ①
135 415 725 1010
PARANORMAL ACTIVITY [R] ①
155 440 745 1005
THE STEPFATHER [PG13] 435 930
WHERE THE WILD THINGS ARE [PG]
105 430 705 935
ZOMBIELAND [R] ① 205 445 740 1025
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

UMass dining talks healthy fats and oils

By Cameron Ford and Bobby Hitt
Collegian Staff

Anyone who regularly eats at Berkshire Dining Commons has most likely noticed its promotional advertisements outlining its use of healthy fats in its food. There have been chops on the tables as well as laminated signs above different foods such as French fries, pesto and fried meats.

On Wednesday, Oct. 28, Executive Dining Director Ken Toong and members of the University of Massachusetts' department of nutrition held a presentation on the different types of oils used in cooking and the ways that UMass' dining halls have adjusted to this information. At the forefront of the PowerPoint presentation on saturated, monounsaturated, polyunsaturated and trans fats was Dr. Srimathi Kannan and graduate student Shannon Seguin, both from the department of nutrition, and UMass Dining's dietician Dianne Sutherland.

Kannan and her colleagues advocated that fats are not essential or bad for a person's health.

"We need fats to help us absorb vitamins A, D, E and K," said Kannan. "Fats are also important for maintaining healthy skin. In India, where I grew up, people would rub olive oil on their skin to give it a nice healthy glow."

However, Kannan went on to warn about the dangers of some fat consumption.

"Monounsaturated fats will only lower bad cholesterol in the blood, but polyunsaturated fats will lower bad and good cholesterols together."

According to a slide in the presentation outlining the 2005 Dietary Guidelines, a person should consume 20 to 35 percent of his calorie intake in the form of fat. The survey by the nutrition department found that nearly 40 percent of students believe that a healthy diet would include five to 15 percent of calories by fat.

One of the highlights of the presentation was the dining halls' acquisition of chemical company Dow's Omega-9 frying oil, which has become the feature oil in all fried foods served in the dining halls. According to Toong, the use of the healthiest oil possible has become an absolute necessity.

"At UMass dining halls, 20 percent of the items are deep-fried," said Toong. "Because of this we cannot just get rid of them, and so we must make sure we use the freshest and best oil we can buy."

See HEALTHY on page 3

Poe-down on campus

UMass hosts Poe's 200th birthday anniversary events

By Vincent Capone and Dave Mansfield
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Amherst will be celebrating the 200th birthday of the great American writer and poet Edgar Allan Poe this Halloween weekend with a conference to celebrate his works and influence on New England's culture.

"Poe and the Writers and Artists of New England" is scheduled for October 29-31 and will be located primarily in the Campus Center. The conference will feature scholars, writers and artists discussing the works and character of Poe.

The weekend events include public readings, book signings, a concert and exhibition of Poe-inspired visual arts, a Poe film series and other events.

The conference has been set up by committee chairs Professor Christopher Couch of the Comparative Literature department and Professor Steven Tracy of Afro-American studies.

"We decided to organize this conference because there was no other conference on Poe taking place in New England on the bicentennial of his birth," said Couch. "In addition, there was no event that included creative artists as participants."

"Most events were limited to scholars or authors of works on Poe, but Poe is a major influence on literature, and particularly on fantasy and science fiction, horror and crime writing, and was the creator of the detective story," he said. "Of course these are all world literatures, but New England has a particular claim on Poe," he added.

Couch said that he and Tracy saw the anniversary of Poe's birthday and his connection to the region as opportunities for creating an exciting gathering.

"We both had some courses containing material by Poe on our schedules, and we thought that with the Poe Bicentennial and the Poe connection to New England, we could put together an exciting Poe conference."

"We are the flagship campus of the University of Massachusetts, and no one else in New England was doing this," said Couch.

Poe has a storied, sometimes controversial history in New England. Born on January 19th, 1809, in Boston, Poe emerged into one of the most enigmatic figures in American history and into the most well known gothic writer of all time. His first book, Tamerlane, was credited to an anonymous Bostonian, not to Poe himself.

Considering Poe's New England affiliation, Tracy and Couch decided to only invite writers and artists from New England to participate. John Crowley, author of Little, Big and Great Work of Time, both World Fantasy Award winners, will provide readings and lectures, as will Elizabeth Hand, author of psychological thrillers "Mortal Love" and "Generation Loss." Hand was recently awarded the Shirley Jackson Award for her work in the horror/fantasy genre.

Also making an appearance will be the heralded artist Barry Moser. A Western Massachusetts native, Moser has provided illustrations for books such as Moby Dick and Alice in Wonderland. He currently serves on the faculty at the prestigious Rhode Island School of Design. Linda Graves, an artist known best for her illustrations in children books, will also present.

The kickoff event will feature a public reading and book signing by UMass Amherst

COURTESY JACK GUIGUN

Pictured is a piece from the exhibit of Poe art that will be showcased this weekend.

See POE on page 7

Motion passes

SGA from page 2

Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Jean Kim, along with Associate Vice Chancellor Jo-Anne Vann and Associate Vice Chancellor Byron Bullock, responded to Khanna's complaint with an October 15 statement on the matter.

The statement from the Dean of Students Office holds that there was insufficient evidence to charge any mentioned students with violations of the Code of Student Conduct, although the letter mentioned that the three students named still enrolled "will be asked to meet with the Dean of Students Office to discuss the complaint."

The document also states that the Center for Student Development "conducted a thorough audit of all funds involved and, based on our findings, there was no clear evidence that the T-shirts were sold either for donations or outright purchases."

It continues to say that there was no way to document any alleged deposits from the SGA to the Justice for Jason defense fund.

Khanna's complaint also asks for the Dean's office to be provided a list of students who may have violated the code of student conduct and for a list to be turned over to the UMPD for investigation, which Dean Kim's office decided not to do.

Lastly, the statement provides several recommendations to avoid such situations in the future.

Student organizations will now need to provide purchase requests with details explaining the purpose of expenditures, which will need to be reviewed by an advisor in the Center for Student Development.

The CSD will consider sanctions for organizations which violate the new expenditure policies. CSD business staff will work with the SGA Ways and Means Committee to establish clear guidelines for what is acceptable use of the Student Activities Trust Fund, in addition to recommending that the SGA create a treasurer position.

The SGA's Secretary of Finance will create a manual for organizations, detailing appropriate use of fee and revenue monies, and the CSD has appointed an SGA advisor to provide oversight, and has appointed a graduate assistant to aid the Ways and Means Committee.

President Mbauwike did not return a phone call requesting comment in time for press.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com.

Dining dishes out fat tips

HEALTHY from page 2

According to Dianne Sutherland, UMass became partnered with Dow over the summer.

"They came to our Culinary Conference in June and offered us a partnership," she said. "The Omega-9 oil is made from a mix of canola and sunflower seeds. It also has no trans fat and has a very low amount of saturated fats. It also has a very light taste that won't overpower the food it is used in."

Beyond the utilization of the Omega-9 oil, UMass has also made some significant changes in the food it serves, according to graduate student Shannon Seguin.

"We were the first university to feature baked goods with no trans fat," she said. "Dining Services also began to offer more fruits, vegetables, wholegrain foods and fish. They also cut back on red-meat entrées served."

Toong, who was also present at the lecture, outlined some plans of his own to make the DC food healthier.

"Sodium in the foods we serve will be reduced by 25 percent next year," he said. According to Toong, dining services is looking to replace its wheat pizza crust.

"We are researching a different type of pizza crust made of sprouted brown rice," said Toong.

Toong also gave the reasoning behind having the smaller beef sliders that made their appearance in September as a replacement to the quarter-pound patties served in past years.

"Part of our effort is reducing portion sizes," he said. "We reduced the portions of grilled chicken from six ounces to three ounces. We did the same with the sliders. They are more expensive and take longer to cook, but we need to educate students to take what they can consume."

After the lecture, Chef Anthony Jung gave a cooking demonstration in which he concocted fried tempura shrimp made with the new Omega-9 cooking oil as well as a mixed green salad topped with lightly fried apple rings, Roquefort cheese crumbles and an apple-walnut vinaigrette.

Cameron Ford can be reached at cford@student.umass.edu, and Bobby Hitt can be reached at rhitt@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY CHRISTOPHER HOWLAND

UMass executive chef Ken Toong meets with students outside the Berkshire Room after a discussion of healthy oils and fats Thursday.

Free Rides on Halloween Weekend 10pm to 3am
Oct 30/31—Fri/Sat Call 548-9474 Sponsored by MERCYhouse knowmercy.org

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Online classes: a campus disservice

The fate of academic affairs lingers on an uncertain thread in the 21st century. Officials of large land-grant colleges, like the University of Massachusetts, are slowly whittling away the fat of their academic programs in search of new, cost effective modes of education.

Evan Haddad

The preeminent consideration now on the table is undoubtedly the online course – many herald it as the future of education – the Pepto-Bismol for bloated classrooms and a valuable asset to the University purse.

Some would attribute the rapid growth of online education to burdening financial pressures on the state systems, to growing utilitarian concern, or both. Whatever the case may be, practical skills are in hot demand again, and UMass is harkening to the call.

Like many fundamental changes, the very notion of the online course has been gradually introduced. At college fairs years ago, brochures for online programs, like the University of Phoenix were scattered among those of local community colleges and National Guard recruitment forms; the so called "distance education" table was in the back corner of the musty high school gym, like a sorry and laughable opponent in the higher learning game.

But that reputation is giving way to progressive ideas about its potential use in a more traditional context.

Statistics pooled by UMassOnline.net indicate definite attitude shifts towards online education. The website claims "60 percent of employers believe that online education is as good as or better than campus programs."

It also cites in addition "62 percent of academic leaders believe that online education is equal to face-to-face instruction."

The survey, of course, conveniently omits any definition of the words "academic leaders," or the type of employers polled; anyone who takes statistics at UMass learns about how manipulating survey questions can yield better, more favorable poll results.

The issue here is whether UMassOnline.net could possibly have an exterior motive in citing these percentages. I think it is fair to say: probably.

This ploy to legitimize distance education with percentages suggests there is something of an intrinsic aversion to the idea. Continuing Education, like any other business, has invoked the "common reason" of the majority to make its lucrative commodity more palatable to buyers. Unfortunately, it seems to be working.

But steel-fisted state colleges don't hold the online education business in monopoly.

Sloan Consortium, a self-professed coalition dedicated to "quality online education," is one of the up-and-coming middle party organizations designed to ease the pain of integrating online methods into mainstream academia.

In theory, Sloan Consortium is non-profit and member supported. It claims to provide practical knowledge of digital pedagogy for members – that is, paying members – of the online community. Their website boasts numerous tabs which link viewers to 'authentic' sources and resources. These include various workshops for educators, publications and even an online teaching certificate.

The image which Sloan Consortium is banking on, however, is unmistakable. The designers of the website have artfully spackled pictures of mothers with babies and old men smiling gleefully behind computers into their homepage.

> "It just wouldn't be the same to learn Greek from a computerized professor," says sophomore classics major Jack Norcross, between munches of a homemade doughnut.

Why is Sloan Consortium important in this discussion? Because the statistics cited by UMassOnline.net, quoted earlier in this column, come from a Sloan Consortium "study."

While there is no definite timetable for incorporating more sophisticated e-learning programs into UMass during the academic year, the influence of the Continuing Education department seems to be gaining a foothold.

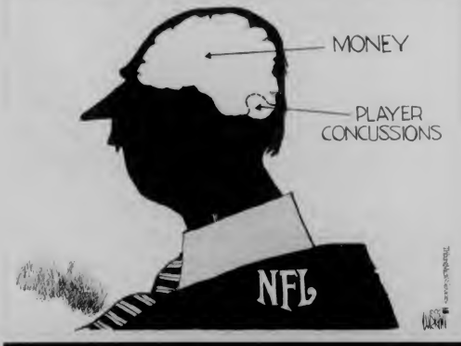
This is especially true in the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, where carping voices from above have questioned the utility of liberal education for years. Pressure is coming from the Dean to offer more classes online during the summer, as a kind of fundraiser – or justifier – for the humanities.

Although the idea of online education appears convenient to our society, in some cases even chic, there still remains students of this generation who wholly oppose it.

A little cashbox chimes with the drop of quarters this week in the Herter lobby, as classics majors and members of Eta Sigma Phi dutifully peddle pumpkin spice muffins and used books to support their ailing department.

And although each bake sale seems as desperate as the last, students seem optimistic and dedicated to the cause of preserving tradition from the digital age.

"It just wouldn't be the same to learn Greek from a computerized professor," said sophomore classics major Jack Norcross, between munches of a homemade doughnut.



"Learning is about the experience, not the end result."

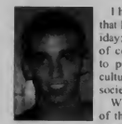
The original goal behind the land-grant college, nevertheless, was for the end result; the UMass of today was a few small buildings and a lot of farmland yesterday.

But while the values of society ebb and flow quickly in America, they are never totally blotted out.

Just as witch hunting Puritanism still exists under some modern guise, the utilitarian intent of UMass floats, anchored, in the very nature of the place. It was only a matter of time before it was again detached.

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu

Feel like ranting?



Send letters to the editor to:

editorial@dailycollegian.com

dorms, the Recreation Center's not open yet, swine flu's everywhere, my midterms stink, school costs too much, some guy in the Collegian just said something weird, marijuana should be legalized, people keep complaining about health care, there are ladybugs in my room, my RA's a jerk, there's nowhere to park, the buses are never on time, every time I go to the library it's crowded, one of these days a car's going to hit me when I cross the street, one of these days a bike rider is going to fling himself at my car, athletes just got caught with cocaine, there are too many people in the DC, I want my trays back, people keep puking in my hallway, my window won't open, those kids outside never shut up, housing services won't let me keep my python, Spark and SPIRE never work right, there's construction everywhere that never gets completed, it burns when I pee, my roommate keeps setting my bedsheets on fire, my professor's horrifying haircut keeps distracting me in class, ComCol is an asinine concept, the sprinkler will never be considered a real dance move, the squirrels on campus keep Halloween!

Best holiday of the year

Nick Milano

I have often heard it said that Halloween is not a holiday; it is merely a product of corporations who wish to prey on the consumer culture so embedded in our society.

While some elements of this may be true – the History Channel says it is one of the most profitable holidays every year – there is much more to the ritual of Halloween than the big bad merchants out to get us.

Even if it were, who cares?

Halloween, at UMass of all places, is a treat, probably one of the funniest nights of the year.

Halloween has no peers at the top of the holiday ranking systems.

Rooted in the practices of the Celts of Ireland, United Kingdom and France, Halloween has gone through hundreds of years of evolution before becoming what we recognize as a night of revelry, trick-or-treating and candy.

Halloween was first the Celtic festival of Samhain (pronounced sow-in, typical of Celtic languages in that it makes no sense). Samhain was when the season life and the harvest of summer meet the season of death – humans most closely associated winter as the season of death.

It was no different from the Celts whose priests, the Druids, used the night to make predictions about the future. Bonfires were built and costumes were worn by the Celts, usually made from animal heads and skins, and they tried to tell each other's future, according to the History Channel.

Since then, the Romans fused Samhain with two of their own holidays. Christian influences were soon to follow, and Pope Boniface declared All Saint's Day to be Nov. 1, and the day before became known as All Hallow's Eve.

With an enchanting history like that, how can Halloween be rivaled?

The religious overtones of Easter and Christmas are two holiest of days of the year knock much off their luster.

Though the night before Easter (Feaster to my family) is a traditional night to party, the mood is dampened by the realization that the next day is the holiest of the year, with Church and stiff family parties to attend.

Christmas is a beautiful holiday marked by the ultimate family party, great food and presents, but the meaning of Christmas – Christ's birth – has unfortunately been altered by consumer society. Thanksgiving is glorious.

There is no debating that, but the amount of time spent recovering from the night before by attending subzero football games muddies its joy – until food is served anyway.

When Halloween is compared to these holidays and any of the others, it takes the cake decidedly.

On what other holiday do you have an excuse to dress like an idiot and be complimented on your attire?

On what other holiday do you have an excuse to run around egging people, acting like the teenage punk you are (a West Roxbury tradition)?

UMass Halloween ups the ante considerably, however. For the first two Halloweens of my college career, I traveled to upstate New York to visit two of my best friends from high school.

Though both Skidmore and Cornell were a blast; each time I got home to friends lamenting the fact that I was not here for Halloween.

Those of us at UMass last year remember Halloween fondly.

Though there were too many Sarah Palins (I think we had three at our party), the costumes were still impressive.

There were four Teletubbies and then later in the night a different Laa-Laa showed up on its own. Most importantly, when else can girls walk around in little to no clothing and be perfectly fine?

> Though there were too many Sarah Palins (I think we had three at our party), the costumes were still impressive. There were four Teletubbies and then later in the night a different Laa-Laa showed up on its own.

From a hilarious time at a dance at Skidmore, to the greatest costume ever and the only good frat party I have ever been too at Cornell to last year's epic three day fiesta of a weekend at UMass, there is no longer any doubt that Halloween is the most fun of the holidays.

It provides an excuse to spend hours cutting up Keystone Light 30 racks to make a full suit of armor and going out dressed absurdly for three nights in a row. With this year's Thursday, Friday and Saturday lineup, let the goodtimes roll.

It has evolved from the Celt's dressing up and predicting futures, it has survived attempts by popes to make it overly religious and has become the best party night of the year. Here's to Halloween.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Building for band,

Why it should have to wait

Among the slew of construction and deconstruction projects currently underway, there is another significant undertaking beginning on campus. This is the new building for the University of Massachusetts Marching Band, and it is going to cost us – big. The total price tag associated with this project is an estimated $5.7 million.

Brian Benson

And concerned student fee and tax payers have paid for about $4.5 million of it.

Given recent precedents of unrivaled government spending, this relatively small value may not at first appear worrisome.

At a time when numbers like $300 billion to $800 billion are regularly thrown around Washington on a six-month schedule like it is the federal government's new favorite guessing game, it is not surprising how easily people are willing to accept the cost of the marching band building. Perhaps they are so desensitized by the unparalleled numbers about which we hear on national news, or maybe they don't realize just how serious the University's budget problem is. Whatever the reason may be, people apparently do not seem to think the cost of projects like the marching band building, which will be near Dickinson Hall, is a big enough problem to collectively oppose.

> The UMass administration thinks it is a good idea to spend $4.5 million it does not have in the first place and make you pay for it either through fees or tax dollars.

Now, before I delve into what will inevitably inspire dozens of angry hate letters, I feel like I should briefly discuss the context of the latest construction endeavor on campus.

The marching band has been without a stable place to practice and store its things since 1997 when the Old Chapel was condemned and could no longer be used for its space. Since then, the band has practiced on the fields, where one can imagine the elements would prove inconvenient, and other areas like the Fine Arts Center, which offers less than ideal room to accommodate the entire group of over 300. Currently, they are using the Arnold House in Northeast as an office area, where space is already limited.

Now, let's be honest with our campus state of affairs. This past spring, Chancellor Robert Holub met with The Collegian, the Amherst Wire and MassLive regarding to the University of Massachusetts' budget.

Holub spoke of the estimated $46 million budget deficit and discussed what it will mean for students. In the discussion, he said that class scheduling will be "tighter next year than it is this year."

You may be woefully familiar with how frustrating class scheduling can be due to seat unavailability. I am quite sure you are familiar with the fees increasing each year. Now, the UMass administration thinks it is a good idea to spend $4.5 million it does not have in the first place and make you pay for it, either through fees or tax dollars. This is appalling, and you should be vocally upset about this.

I want everyone reading this to write a personal letter to the UMass administration. In it, openly condemn its decision to approve the building plans for these projects.

Do not think your single voice will be too transient to matter.

Go to your computer or get a pen, and write a letter letting the UMass administration know that already struggling students do not want more financial burdens and that the trend of incessantly starting new construction projects is clearly not helping them.

Do this even if you write only two or three sentences. It will not take you five minutes. There is a point at which the line in the sand must be drawn, and that power belongs to you as an individual.

One great misconception of the cost of making these new buildings on campus is that the total cost of the project is equal to estimated construction costs. This is false.

Factor into the initial estimates the costs – regular state inspections, maintenance, staffing, renovations and zoning regulations – and consider the fact that these costs would exist indeterminately. Suddenly, the plethora of new buildings on campus doesn't seem so financially practical or appealing. And we don't need another one with more screeching, drilling and beeping noises coming from ugly machinery in ditches surrounded by hunter orange fencing.

Band members are understandably excited about the making of this building, even if some of them will not be around to enjoy it when it is completed.

What they are failing to recognize is that, regardless of how wonderful it may be, and regardless of how relatively insignificant $4.5 million is compared to other things, projects like this play into a larger system of unbridled spending, and the new cost will only hurt us more. To recover from debt, people have to make sacrifices and restrain spending. If we are not willing to make those sacrifices and put our luxuries on hold, we are going to find ourselves in a situation far worse than one where we have to play our instruments outside in the cold.

Brian Benson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bbenson@student.umass.edu.

Hampshire Halloween gives Amherst a trippy treat

(MCT)

Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

The leaves are turning, and the tacky decor displays are out at CVS. That can only mean one thing: Hampshire Halloween and all of its madness, depravity and carnal merry-making must be nearly upon us.

Hampshire Halloween, colloquially referred to as Trip or Treat, is a campus tradition which dates back as far as anyone can remember at Hampshire, which probably is not back to the beginning of Hampshire Halloweens, given the event's reputation for substance-induced mischief.

The small liberal arts college in South Amherst will host Hampshire Halloween Friday with the campus officially slated to close for the festivities at 5 p.m.

The event is such a legend that it has earned widespread acclaim and reviews in places like Rolling Stone, rivaling the University of Wisconsin for the most debauched Halloween celebration in the nation.

This year's event boasts a more than $40,000 price tag, with upwards of 15 bands slated to bring an irresistible medley of monstrous Halloween melodies to Hampshire, plus a variety of other on-campus activities and events.

Tickets through Hampshire and allotted for the rest of the Five Colleges have already sold out, but resourceful party-goers can still find an in on the Internet, with the Western Massachusetts page of Craigslist posting numerous ticket offers.

Those planning on making the trek across Amherst should be forewarned; Hampshire is going to be something of a madhouse Friday.

Campus will close to everyone not coming to the event at 5 p.m. Those wishing to enter campus after will be checked for either Hampshire ID cards or tickets.

Non-Hampshire students will need to exchange their tickets upon arrival to campus for wristbands, which can be done at the Eric Carle Museum, located across from Adele Simmons Hall and beyond the Dakin and Merill residential areas.

The event's page on Hampedia, the Hampshire wiki site, stresses that anyone without a ticket will be refused entrance and that taking PVTA buses is highly encouraged. The 38 or 39 buses travel to Hampshire, depositing riders at Campus Center.

The event is expected to draw some 2,000 revelers, with performances scheduled for the quad in front of the library, behind the Robert Crown Center (RCC), Hampshire's gym and central building and in the gallery of the library.

Kicking off the performances will be Hampshire's own The Gin and Chronics, sampling music and literature at 6 p.m. on the library lawn. Also at 6:00 will be Hampshire's burlesque group, bringing the thrill of scantily clad vaudeville dancers alive for 21st century college students, behind the RCC.

From there, Justin Kahn will play the library lawn at 7 p.m., with Andrew Squid Frank taking over behind the RCC.

At 8 p.m., the band AKAKAKAK will take over the library lawn in what can only be an ak-ward performance of ak-someness, while fellow Hampshire act, Lights with Music, will make its debut behind the RCC.

At 9 p.m., the group TOMBS will play the library lawn, with The Stimulus Package, another Hampshire group describing itself as "fun rock with horns and dancing beats," is slated to perform at the RCC starting at 8:15 p.m.

At 10 p.m., the library lawn will see DJ KAT FYTE spin the night away, while perennial funk, groove, jazz group The Bubonic Souls scheduled to take over behind the RCC at 9:30 p.m.

From 11:30 p.m. to 1 a.m., Blanche Deveraux will play the library lawn, while longtime local party-rock outfit, Outer Stylie, will bring their reggae grooves to the RCC.

At midnight, Austin, Texas based electronic-funk band, Plus Move, will take over the RCC stage in what promises to be the evening's ultimate headliner.

Meanwhile, the library gallery will be hosting what it calls "stimulus overload - all night!"

The gallery will feature Crazy Pitches, a self-described unconventional acappella troupe, starting at 7:30 p.m., with the Gin & Tonics, another acappella group focused on what it calls classic, independent rock and pop, taking over from 8:30 to 9 p.m., followed by slam poetry from 9 to 9:30 p.m., and a question mark at the end of the night, an act with no details other than its name, Professor Science.

The rest of the campus will feature Halloween themed gags, with the Prescott area of campus showing classic horror flicks like Nosferatu and Brahm Stoker's Dracula, Dakin showing a 90s TV show Halloween episode marathon, Merill featuring pumpkin carving and ghost stories around a fake campfire, and the bus loop featuring hay rides.

Hampshire Halloween is put together by Hampshire's Council for Community Activities (COCA), which plans and manages the event every year.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

Impress all the ghosts and zombies at your Halloween party with these treats

Nora Drapalski
Collegian Staff

For the average college student, Halloween conjures up images of delicious candy, elaborate costumes and – shall we say, interesting – parties. One does not typically think of the variety of baked goods created specifically for this wonderful day.

Just because college students are forced to deal with cramped kitchens and limited supplies does not mean that they cannot create tasty treats specifically for their Halloween events.

For those lacking skills in the kitchen, cooking a simple sugar cookie with a Halloween twist is an easy way to add a bit of ghastly horror to a yummy treat.

Recipe: Finger Cookies
Makes several dozen cookies
Ingredients:
Sugar cookie mix
Raspberry jam (strawberry is also acceptable)
A cup of sliced almonds
Utensils:
Fork
Tablespoon
Cookie sheet
Preparation:
Follow directions for sugar cookie mix, or make your own dough.

Separate into small, 2-in wide balls on cookie sheet. Shape balls into cylindrical, finger-shaped pieces. Be sure to make the middle of the piece lumpy on the top (this will be the joint)

Using a fork, make lines in the dough at the "joint," perpendicular to the length of the dough.

Make an indentation using your thumb at one end of the cookie.

Place a sliced almond in indentation, pressing firmly to keep it in place.

Cook the cookies following the directions on the package.

Let the cookies cool for a few minutes. Spoon the jam into the indentation on the cookie and in patterns mimicking blood on the finger.

My mother and I make "Finger Cookies" every year for Halloween. Based on jam-filled sugar cookies, "Finger Cookies" use raspberry jam, sliced almonds, and a bit of decoration to look like a severed, bloody finger straight out of a horror movie. The cookies are both quick (it takes 15 minutes or less to prepare) and easy to make (all it needs is a few ingredients). In addition, the small shape and size make them ideal as – no pun intended – finger foods at parties.

Do severed fingers not sound appetizing? Or maybe you're allergic to almonds? Fear not. This next original treat is undeniably tempting for all.

"Humans vs. Zombies" players and cursers alike, put your leftover, unopened bags of marshmallows to good use by making Nora Drapalski's original "Snap, Crackle, Jack-O'-Lantern?!" treat. A combination of the oh-so-delicious Rice Krispie Treat and a pinch of chocolate and candy corn (you're just dying to know the recipe now, aren't you?), "Snap, Crackle, Jack-O'-Lantern?!" is a handy, bite-sized treat perfect for the wannabe baker.

Recipe: Snap, Crackle, Jack-O'-Lantern?!
Makes 8 Jack-O- Lanterns
Ingredients:
1 stick margarine
1 bag mini marshmallows
Orange food coloring
3-4 cups Rice Krispie cereal
A handful of chocolate chips
A handful of candy corn
Utensils:
1 large pot
Large spoon
Wax paper
Preparation:

In large pot, melt margarine over medium heat.

Stir in marshmallows. Stir until completely melted. Reduce heat.

Add 2-3 drops of food coloring and stir until marshmallow is orange.

Add Rice Krispies a cup at a time, stirring until all are coated.

Place a large spoonful onto wax paper. Form into hollowed circular sphere (in the shape of a pumpkin).

Make a hole in the side of the treat in the shape of a mouth.

While the marshmallow is still sticky, place a candy corn in the middle of the bottom of the pumpkin (it should resemble a candle).

Press three chocolate chips into the same side of the treat as the mouth, to resemble two triangular eyes and a nose.

The key to this recipe is speed, since the treat needs to be shaped before the marshmallow cools and hardens. It is advised that multiple people are included in the preparation of this dessert, with one individual spooning out the rice krispies, another shaping them and another decorating the treat.

While the "Snap, Crackle, Jack-O'-Lanterns?!" may take a bit longer to prepare, and cleaning out the sticky pot is no easy task either, they add a cute touch to a generally horrifying holiday. And you might also find that the time spent preparing the treat with friends is just as enjoyable as eating it after.

So when the time comes this Saturday night and you are debating what to serve to your friends, consider these yummy alternatives to typical party food. Your guests will be impressed by your creativity, and the themed treats will add to the festive atmosphere. After all, what kind of Halloween party is it if guests can't bite into severed fingers and Jack-O'-Lanterns?

Nora Drapalski can be reached at ndrapals@student.umass.edu.

Literary conference has Poe-tential

POE from page 3

The kickoff event will feature a public reading and book signing by UMass Amherst English professor and poet Martin Espada, as well as Crowley and Hand. Each will read from the works of Poe as well as their own poems and stories. This event was located in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Thursday at 7 p.m.

Today will feature readings and talks by writers, artists and scholars including Barry Moser, Crowley, Hand and Sabina Murray, professor of English at UMass Amherst. These readings will take place between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. in Campus Center room 163.

Tonight the Herter Art Gallery will feature a Poe art exhibition with works by Moser, Jack Coughlin, Christin Couture, and the complete original artwork for a 1948 Spirit story by Will Eisner (his adaptation of "The Fall of the House of Usher"), lent from Paris for this exhibition. This event will run from 5 to 7 p.m.

Following the Poe art exhibition there will be a performance by UMass student and actor Peter Storey, who will perform a monologue as Edgar Allan Poe. Storey will be accompanied by musical arrangements of Poe's poems performed by members of student a cappella group, Wicked Pitch. The performance will begin at 8 p.m. in the Falvin Family Auditorium room 137 in the Isenberg School of Management.

The final event on Saturday will be located in Campus Center room 163 and will feature readings and talks by writers, artists and scholars Jack Haringa, R. Patrick Gates, Stanley Wiater and Paul Lewis. This event will run from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Keynote speakers include Paul Lewis, curator of the Boston Public Library's exhibition "The Raven in the Frog Pond: Edgar Allan Poe and the City of Boston," and bestselling author of A Malady of Magicks and Batman Returns, Craig Shaw Gardner.

New England artists and writers will discuss their own works in relation to the works of Poe. These artists include UMass Amherst professor emeritus of art Jack Coughlin, children's book illustrator Linda Graves, dark fantasy artist Christin Couture and horror and fantasy writers and critics Jack Haringa, R. Patrick Gates and Stanley Wiater.

"Poe and the Writers and Artists of New England" is sponsored by the dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, the dean of the Graduate School, the departments of English language and literature and Comparative Literature, and Lesleigh Luttrell.

All events will be free of charge and open to the public. For more information, visit www.umass.edu/poeumass.

Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu and Dave Mansfield can be reached at dmansfie@student.umass.edu.

Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

Experience the magic at Earthfoods this Sunday night!

That is, experience the magic of magician Jonas Toutant, in addition to several great local bands.

The DIY UMass club is putting on the free show at the Earthfoods Cafe at 6 p.m. The show will feature three bands in addition to the magician.

The bands, Tashtego, Alottle and the Frills, are all from western Massachusetts and play different varieties of punk and rock.

The Frills, comprised of UMass students Meagan Day (bass) Isaac Simon (drums) and Lauren Garant (lead guitar, vocals), recently recorded and released an eight song EP of unadulterated female-fronted punk rock. Their songs are fast, fun and feminist.

Holyoke-based Alottle's songs are raw and sound almost like those of a garage band, with the tiniest pinch of indie mixed in. Guitar player Eric Cunha describes Alottle as "kind of a rock band with equal parts dunce and scholar," and said that they have been described as a combination of the Beach Boys, the Melvins and the Mr. T Experience. Paul Preston plays the drums while Jamie Miller covers the bass.

Amherst's own Tashtego is more punk-metal than the other two, which is not to say that they are to be considered inferior to the others; all three bands are impressive in their own right.

If the dynamic sounds of the three bands aren't enough to lure you in, Jonas Toutant ought to be.

Toutant is known for his comedic magic acts. Other reviews of his performance have been overwhelmingly positive, describing him as highly entertaining for both children and adults. The club has been toying with the idea of having a magician at one of their shows for some time.

The show will be the DIY UMass Halloween show for this year. Costumes are encouraged but not required. Just don't go as a "sexy pilgrim" as that costume may have already been taken by Cunha.

There will also be a mix swap at Sunday's show. Showgoers are encouraged to bring a mix tape or CD to exchange with another person, each guest leaving with a new mix and hopefully an opportunity to expose themselves to music they wouldn't otherwise listen to.

The show starts at 6 p.m. this Sunday, so be sure to stop by and witness the magic. Don't forget to bring your mix!

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu.

Horror flick epitome of paranormal mediocrity

Rachel Dougherty
Collegian Correspondent

Determining the merit of a new film may be difficult when so many trigger-happy critics are awaiting the first chance they get to blow a fresh release out of proportion. And yet, it can't be all hype. Seeing a teenage girl exit the theater in a fit of hysterics may lead one to believe that "Paranormal Activity" may just be that movie that transcends mindless hype that it might just be "one of the scariest movies ever made," as some viral ad campaigns would have us believe.

If the consistent giggling heard throughout was any indication, "Paranormal Activity" simply is not that scary. Not bad by any means but hardly the horror juggernaut that it was made out to be.

"Paranormal Activity," a mockumentary by first-time director Oren Peli, premiered at the Screamfest Film Festival in the U.S. on Oct. 14th, 2007 and played only in select theaters. In 2009 the movie was released for the general public, albeit with a few cuts and a cleaner ending, resulting in rave reviews from critics and a whopping $19 million in its first weekend alone, beating out "Saw VI". The movie was filmed in a week on a budget of $15,000, yet has grossed $61.5 million thus far. Needless to say, expectations were high, which made this movie-going experience that much more disappointing.

Micah and Katie, a young couple, move into a new home in San Diego. They are happy and life is good until Katie reveals to Micah that she has been haunted by a demon since childhood. Micah is determined to get to the bottom of his girlfriend's curse, so he decides to try and capture all of the potential weirdness on camera.

The reality show that is the first 20 minutes of the movie leads up to the terrifying introduction of the demon, when the camera catches their bedroom door move slightly in the middle of the night.

All hell breaks loose when the demon starts leaving footprints, breaking picture frames and setting the Ouija board on fire.

The freakiest moments in the movie were those quietly creepy scenes when Katie was possessed by the demon. The director makes good use of his limited budget to create moments of nail-biting suspense without the use of sophisticated Computer Generated Imagery effects or buckets of gore.

Unfortunately, those moments are few and far between. The majority of the movie may as well be a couple's episode on Dr. Phil, as Katie and Micah quarrel over Micah's stubbornness while their relationship disintegrates. From disputes over bringing in a psychic to Micah's obsessive camera use, the whole thing feels a lot less like horror and a lot more like Lifetime.

The rest of the movie is comprised of nighttime footage, during which all said "paranormal activity" takes place. These moments – or at least the lead-up to them – can be creepy, but quickly become predictable, to the point where they often elicited laughter instead of fear. Hearing a mock "Whoooo!" halfway through the movie cemented that the audience was left rather unimpressed.

COURTESY BLUMHOUSE PRODUCTIONS

"Paranormal Activity," while rumored to be "one of the scariest movies ever made," causes audiences to laugh hysterically rather than scream.

Gauging the crowd response, the real victims of fear appeared to still be in high school. The average cynical college student, however, appeared more amused than frightened, chuckling at every chance and injecting wit during every moment of silence.

"Paranormal Activity" appears to breed two reactions: one is complete terror and the other, laughter and mockery. You will either gasp in horror, or giggle at the absurdity, but the movie was entertaining regardless. For all respects and purposes, the critic is the real murderer here.

Rachel Dougherty can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu

We just look expensive.

ZANNA

If it's in fashion... it's at ZANNA downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
BUY 6 BOTTLES OF WINE WITH YOUR REUSABLE FOUR SEASON WINE BAG AND RECEIVE 10% OFF

LIQUOR SPECIALS

Macallan 12yr Single Malt 750 ml $45.99	10 Cane Rum 750 ml $26.99	Capt. Morgan RTS Long Island Ice Tea 1.75 liter $18.99
Tierras Reposado 100% Organic Tequila 750 ml $39.99	Absinthe Ordinaire 750 ml $24.99	Boru Irish Vodka 1.75 liter $17.99
Hennessy Black Cognac 750 ml $38.99	V-One Vodka 750 ml $23.99	Feckin' Irish Whiskey 750 ml $16.99
Grand Marnier Cordon Rouge 750 ml $34.99	Pallini Limoncello 750 ml $23.99	Jeremiah Weed Sweet Tea Vodka* 750 ml $16.99
Bushmills BlackBush 750ml $34.99	Parrot Bay Key Lime Rum 1.0 liter $20.99	*Including Original, Peach and Bourbon!
Glenmorangie 10yr 750 ml $34.99	Myer's Platinum Rum 1.75 liter $19.99	Smirnoff Twist Pineapple Flavored Vodka 750 ml $12.99
Cointreau 750 ml $32.99	Pinnacle Vodka 1.75 liter $19.99	Smirnoff Twist Pear Flavored Vodka 750 ml $12.99
Hennessy Cognac V.S. 750 ml $30.99	Kilo Kai Spiced Rum 750 ml $18.99	Popov Flavored Vodka 1.75 liter $11.99
Remy Martin Cognac V.S. 750 ml $29.99	Jagermeister 750 ml $18.99	Burnett's Flavored Vodka 750 ml $8.29
Ciroc Snap Frost Vodka 750 ml $29.99	Mount Gay Eclipse Rum 1.0 liter $18.99
Nuvo L'Esprit de Paris 750 ml $27.99	Famous Grouse 750 ml $18.99

SALE 10.29 - 11.04

333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM
310074

Repo: The Genetic Opera to show in Northampton

Alissa Mesibov and Melissa Sims
Collegian Correspondents

"Repo: The Genetic Opera," is a horror musical directed by Darren Lynn Bousman, of Saw fame. Set in the year 2056, Repo introduces us to a world where one company, GeneCo, has control. In this world, surgery is commonplace and organ repossession is legal. The Largo family, who own GeneCo, has total power.

"Repo: The Genetic Opera" has a colorful cast, including Alexa Vega, Anthony Stewart Head, Sarah Brightman, Bill Moseley, Paris Hilton, Paul Sorvino, as well as creators Terrence Zdunich and Darren Smith.

The film features catchy, rock-based songs, such as "Zydrate Anatomy" and "Mark It Up." Though rock operas have been common in theater for the past decade, it is a fairly new genre for film.

The comic relief comes in the form of two brothers, one a murderer and the other a rapist. However, the movie is jam-packed with graphic depictions of organ repossessions that gore fans will love.

While "Repo" may not be perfect, it is original. This film combines a B-horror movie plot with a stunning rock score. However, there are a few problems, the first being Paris Hilton. Fortunately, the talent of actual, trained actors and large heap of special effects makeup, shadow Paris Hilton's pathetically-played Amber Sweet, the only daughter in the Largo family. She plays a surgery-addicted brat. It is not that much of a stretch, and yet she cannot even accomplish playing the role.

The only other problem that might keep viewers away is the gore. There are two representations of gore in this movie: for the sake of being gory and for the sake of comedy. The wonderfully fake and campy gore is sure to illicit plenty of laughs. Then there is the cringe-worthy gore. Moments where the writers probably thought to themselves, "No one has died in thirty pages...let's kill someone off!"

The major failing of the film is its storytelling ability, which is almost non-existent. The plot is thoroughly confusing. It is best to either go with a friend who has seen "Repo" before, or to look up the plot beforehand.

When "Repo: The Genetic Opera" premiered in 2008, it did not reach mainstream America. The limited release film played in only seven movie theaters in the United States. However, it took in over $3000 per screen on opening day alone, according to promotional materials.

The film became a hit with fans of "The Rocky Horror Picture" show. People started reenacting, or "shadowing," the film, as has been done with the older film for more than 30 years.

The Academy of Music in Northampton will feature a local cast, Genetic Imperfection of South Hadley, shadowing "Repo" tonight, Friday Oct. 30 at midnight.

Special guest, co-author, artist, and star of "Repo," Terrance Zdunich will be in attendance. From 9:30 p.m. to ten minutes before the show, he will be signing autographs. The night will also feature a question and answer session with Zdunich.

Tickets are $13 for students and $15 general admission. "Repo" is rated "R," particularly for its violent content.

If going to the Academy of Music is not possible, Genetic Imperfection plays on the last Friday of each month at the Tower Theater in South Hadley, Mass.

Alissa Mesibov can be reached at amesibov@student.umass.edu and Melissa Sims can be reached at msims@student.umass.edu

COURTESY TWISTED PICTURES

The horrorifying and terribly gory rock-opera "Repo: The Genetic Opera" will be playing at the Academy of Music in Northampton, Mass. tonight at midnight.

Brooklyn-based band Jupiter One shoots for the moons with their second album, 'Volcano'

Daniel Herberholz
Collegian Correspondent

First an electronic bubble sounds like it is about to pop, followed by a splash of the noise an Atari video game would make. All before upbeat, prophet-like voices sing a pre-verse hum.

When an album starts like this, what need is there for the skip button?

"Volcano" rips the roof off of what a rock song is supposed to sound like. The opening song on Jupiter One's sophomore album is destined to be a theme tune somewhere. And "Sunshower" does not end there.

Two years ago, the band put out its debut full-length, featuring the recognizable song "Countdown." That single was heard on shows such as NBC's "Heroes" and ABC Family's "Kyle XY," as well as EA Games' "Madden '08." The album was released by Cordless Records.

Jupiter One, who takes their name from the spaceship in the original TV series "Lost In Space," was formed in 2003 by violinist K Ishibashi and guitarist Zac Caldwell. Soon after, Ishibashi's wife joined the group as full-time keyboardist, along with drummer Dave Heilman and bassist Pat Dougherty.

The Brooklyn, N.Y. band is currently on tour opening for Regina Spektor, whose hit "Fidelity" reached the U.S. Billboard Hot 100.

This September, the band released their second effort, "Sunshower," on the label Rykodisc – a label that also represents Junior Senior and Freezepop.

"Lights Go Out," the follow-up to "Volcano," powerfully jumps into action instantly, with a slightly distorted guitar riff and Nirvana-esque bass. "A white flash splits the sky in two and my heart beat louder than the thunder when I think of you," Ishibashi sings.

With a Shins-like feel and a knack for sounds that practically force a listener to move in their seat, Jupiter One has created an album full of rock sensibility with a heart of indie gold.

One such seat-beat is "Simple Stones." The song captures leading bass and claps as drums in a jazzy verse, followed by a downbeat chorus that begs your body to move. "I could build a fortress with simple stones, right here next to you."

Church bell rings once, guitar strums high, and "I kiss your hand in the graveyard, I laid you down in the grass below." The lengthily-titled "High Plains Drifter Finds the Oracle at Delphi" is a journey of a song, about the beauty of exclusive love between two people. The one-line chorus – "No one knows but us" – needs no extra cushion, because it is the singer describing how he's "been loving things I've loved before."

Other similarly catchy tunes on the record include acoustic "Flaming Arrow," cautionary "Anna" and upbeat upstart "Come On."

As described by Heilman after an October show at the Calvin Theater in Northampton, the album's name and cover come from a Japanese proverb. The proverb describes two foxes meeting in the middle of a sun shower, the phenomena of rain during sunshine. This sight is captured on the album's cover. In the proverb, the foxes get married – a scene shown inside the album booklet.

Variety splatters the album. The group utilizes talent on violin, flute and keyboards to mix things up. Also, Caldwell and Ishibashi share songwriting duties for the band.

Ishibashi's scribing finishes the album with a poem of sorts. "People in the Mountain, People of The Ocean" disregards choruses to bring a straight poem to the record, almost as an antithesis to the crushing album opener, "Volcano." "All I'd wanted was some time alone with my heart here for you and for me but it was only a state of mind, you see, and the people of the ocean, singing..."

And following that – if you set the stereo to repeat you're about to hear an electronic bubble popping.

Daniel Herberholz can be reached at danielherberholz@gmail.com.

UMass heads to St. Louis for A–10 Championships

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

The conditions for this weekend's Atlantic 10 Cross Country Championships seem to be far from ideal. As the Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams head west to Saint Louis, Miss. to compete for the conference crown, it will unfortunately meet tough conditions.

"It will be very interesting, but I think we're ready to go," said UMass coach Julie Lafreniere.

Although it is expected to be a sunny Saturday morning, the cold front that currently hovers over the Midwest will bring significant downpours and thunderstorms, which will accumulate to anywhere from two to four inches by Friday night.

The implications for the meet are that the course is very likely to be saturated, potentially thick and muddy. Lafreniere said cross country runners "run in any type of conditions" but will make sure her team has spiked cleats.

Coach O'Brien has credited his team's success all season to their experience, and has stated in the past that his team has dealt with all types of conditions before. The Minutemen can also look to last year if they want to be reminded what a championship performance looks like.

The men's cross country team captured its first conference title since 1995 last season with an impressive performance and one that helped O'Brien earn A-10 Coach of the Year last season. This year, the team is looking to defend its title but will receive stiff competition from Duquesne, a strong program that it narrowly defeated by one point in last year's race.

Three of the Minutemen's top performers return to this year's race as seniors competing in their last cross country conference championship. Jonathan Pierce had a strong performance in last year's race in which he finished ninth overall. Nicolas Naranjo and Andrew Mulvaney took 16th and 18th place respectively last year.

The women hope to take one more step in closing the gap between them and other A-10 powerhouses. Richmond took home their second A-10 title ever in the women's meet. After finishing seventh overall last year, Lafreniere hopes her team can build off its recent success and capture its first top five finish in the conference championships since 2004.

"We seem to be gelling at the right time. Claire is feeling better than she did at Albany, and Zan looks to be back where she left off last cross country season," she said.

Freshman Courtney Baldwin has lead the Minutewomen in their last two races, and junior co-captain Shyi Zan has also finished second in consecutive races. The team has received top three team finishes by juniors Lauren Stocker and Gina Purno, as well as from sophomores Claire Petit and Karen Roa this season. Lafreniere stated that she is looking for contributions from everyone.

The meets will kick off on Saturday morning for both the men and the women cross country teams.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached via email at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

Domino's

"A KILLER TRIPLE"

"THE MIX & MATCH DEAL"

Choose any three subs, pasta bowls, or medium one-topping pizzas for $5.55 each!

Domino's Pizza

(413) 256-8911

Route 9, Hadley

Order online!

Junior Anthony Gurley looks to take a shot in a game last season. Gurley and the Minutemen will host Super Sunday on Nov. 1 in place of Midnight Madness.

Kellogg and Co. host Super Sunday to kick off season

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Derek Kellogg didn't see the point of showcasing a Massachusetts men's basketball team that in his mind, wasn't ready to play for the public.

However, there was no way that he was going to miss an opportunity for the fans to be introduced to the Minutemen, especially when there are seven new players on the roster (five freshmen, two transfers). That's why instead of holding Midnight Madness, UMass' coach decided to cancel it in favor of Super Sunday on Nov. 1.

The event will be similar to Midnight Madness in many ways with the fan interaction and the dunk contest, but will also be closer to a practice than in the past.

"I wanted the guys to be put out in front of the public," Kellogg said. "But at the same token, I wanted it when I thought they were ready for it."

Super Sunday comes six days before the Minutemen's first exhibition game against Dowling and on a day when the New England Patriots have a bye week. Kellogg hopes the combination of the two will not only show his team at its best, but will also be convenient for the fans with no professional teams from Massachusetts playing at that time.

"Now this is a good time after we put in a couple weeks of work where we at least look like a team," Kellogg said of why he preferred the Nov. 1 date.

UMass will have a closed practice for an hour before the public is allowed in. At around 3 p.m., Kellogg will introduce the team and run a short practice.

The introductions will include a little bit of information on each player. With so many new players, Kellogg knows just seeing who is on the team will go a long way.

"I don't think a lot of people know who these guys even are," Kellogg said.

In addition, UMass will hold an autograph session and will use the event as an opportunity to sell season tickets. Kellogg is hoping to increase the amount of fans who come to home games this year, although the section with the most importance to him is the student section.

Kellogg believes that fan support is critical to the Minutemen's success.

"I think if we had a little better support last year, we would've had two, three, four maybe even five more wins," Kellogg said. "I think it's funny that when you have a better student section, your team plays better."

Part of getting that fan support is playing against teams that fans want to watch. This year, Kellogg scheduled games against several big name opponents including Memphis, Baylor and either Florida or Michigan State depending on the Minutemen's performance during the Legends Classic.

UMass will also play in every area of the Commonwealth – Boston, Springfield, Worcester this season in order to maximize its exposure.

The season starts Nov. 13 when the Minutemen travel to take on Central Florida.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

UMass hosts Stony Brook over weekend

Daniel Herberholz
Collegian Correspondent

With the bicycles running on the upper deck, and the Massachusetts men's swimming team operating them, the relay was close.

The women, at the tail end of their practice race, were being treated to booming cheers from the bikers.

"My boys are rambunctious," said UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth.

Yarworth and women's coach Bob Newcomb hope that energy carries over to this Saturday's dual-meet against Stony Brook.

"Every race is going to be close," said Newcomb after the relay finished. "After that work out, I think we're looking at that."

Both sophomore Chelsea Downing and freshmen Julie Magyar beat their bests in 500- and 1000-yard freestyle last week at Army. Molly Papish also bested her 500-freestyle time.

After improving their times the last two weeks, the coach is looking for the long-distance freestyle group to continue to compete.

One way Newcomb wants the entire team to get better is in their lap exchanges. He noted that the past few weeks haven't gone as planned in starts and turns.

"Last week's starts were horrible," Newcomb said. "We're looking to improve ... we need good exchanges in February [for the Atlantic 10 championships]. I'd rather see a false start, because that means we're being aggressive about it."

The women's team will be swimming the 400-yard individual medley, in the place of the 200-yard IM, on Saturday – for the first time this season. Also they are returning to the 200 medley relay from the 400-yard medley last week at Army. Junior Jennifer Corriveau will open the race, joined by senior Elizabeth Walsh, sophomore Sarah Kanellas and freshman Amina Meho.

"I want that relay quicker," said Newcomb, who expects a two-second improvement this weekend.

Rather than new races this weekend, the men are using new racers. Yarworth wants to test out new water on the men's side.

"This meet is about racing skills and in different events," Yarworth said. "I just want to see them all in the pool."

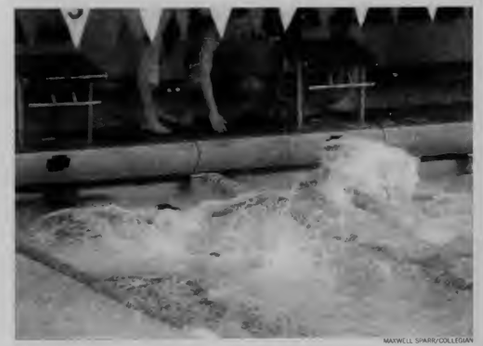
Yarworth highlighted a few changes, including freshmen Jorge Fortin and Sasan Tehrani.

Fortin, last week's sole first-place-finisher, is adding 500-yard freestyle to his schedule. Tehrani will be swimming the 400-yard IM.

Fellow freshman Kyle Jennings, a backstroker who finished right behind junior Max Butler in the 200-yard backstroke last week, will be missing the meet due to flu symptoms.

This will mark the second home meet of the season.

"Despite limited facilities, we're comfortable here," Yarworth said.



Last week's away meet at Army had a warm-up pool, which UMass does not have.

"This week is about the evaluation process," said Yarworth, "but we're ready to bring it to the swim pool."

Massachusetts will be hosting Binghamton on Nov. 7, a second straight home meet, which Newcomb finds different.

"It'll be nice to be home on Saturday night," Newcomb said.

Daniel Herberholz can be reached at daniel-herberholz@gmail.com.

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

UMass swimming and diving teams will face Stony Brook on Saturday in the first of two consecutive home meets in Boyden Gymnasium.

UMass Basketball

Dear Students,

Are you excited for the start of the basketball season? Well, I am totally pumped up for the season to begin. We have been hard at practice since Oct. 16 trying to build a UMass team that you will all be proud of.

This coming Sunday, I want to invite all of you to come over to the Mullins Center for our UMass Basketball "Super Sunday" at 3 p.m. This will be a great opportunity to come out and see your team for the first time this year and as a bonus all students will get FREE PIZZA with your student ID card.

We've got a lot of new faces on the team this year and a few familiar ones. Ricky Harris our lone senior has been named to the First Team of the Atlantic 10 Conference while our five new freshmen have been named one of the top classes in the nation. Come on out and meet the team and see what the future holds for your Minutemen.

Students are the lifeblood of every college basketball program and you guys are very important to the success of the basketball team. As a former UMass basketball player in the mid 1990s, I can't tell you how important it was to have the Mullins Center packed with students to pump us up for the games. I have been at the hockey and football games where 4,000 students are screaming and supporting the Minutemen and look at the results so far!

I love coaching this team and really believe you will love watching them play. We hope that you will come out for "Super Sunday" and then when the regular-season gets underway at the Mullins Center on Wednesday, Nov. 18 as we take on Cornell in the Legends Classic at 7:30 p.m.

See you Sunday!!!

Go UMass!

Dan Kellogg

Derek Kellogg, Class of 1995
UMass Basketball Head Coach

Minutewomen hope to stay alive

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

The only way the Massachusetts women's soccer team can achieve its ultimate goal of reaching the Atlantic 10 Tournament is if it wins the last two games of the season.

As long as the Minutewomen (4-10-2, 3-6-0 A-10) can defeat both George Washington and Richmond on Rudd Field this weekend, their aspirations of a tournament appearance will be kept alive. Certain scenarios would need to play out with other teams in order for UMass to secure a spot, but that does not worry UMass coach Angela Napoli.

"Some other things need to happen, obviously," she said. "But if we win both games, we will put ourselves in a good situation."

Like UMass, GW (6-7-4, 3-4-2 A-10) and Richmond (8-8-2, 4-4-1 A-10) found a niche in the middle of the conference pack this season, so both teams will expectedly be fighting hard for a spot as well.

The Minutewomen will first host the Colonials, who are coming off consecutive 1-0 victories against St. Bonaventure and Duquesne. The Colonials are riding the efforts of sophomore goalkeeper Lindsay Rowe, who was recently named A-10 Co-Player of the Week for her shutout performances last weekend. In 16 starts for GW this season, Rowe leads the A-10 with 76 saves and is tied for third with three shutouts against conference opponents.

UMass will have to take advantage of their opportunities in order to score on the strong keeper.

"[In practice], we've been working on finishing scoring chances," Napoli said. "We had a competition today with our players dividing into two teams. It was very competitive, and we need to stay focused this weekend."

The Minutewomen will welcome Richmond on Sunday for the final match of the regular season. Prior to the match, UMass will honor four seniors who will finish off their careers: Cristina Adams, Lauren Luckey, Katie Ruggles and Jacquelyn Desjardins.

"The seniors are all great kids who have great personalities," Napoli said. "They're good leaders whose personalities brought fun to practices. They're light-hearted, but also know when to get serious."

There's no question the Minutewomen will get serious on Sunday when they will try to accomplish various goals they set at the start of the season.

"The A-10 preseason poll picked us to finish 11th, and our first goal was to finish better than that," Napoli said. "Expanding on that, we want to finish in between number seven and nine in the conference. Our ultimate goal was to make the A-10 Tournament."

All three goals remain in reach for UMass, but the latter will depend not only on what the Minutewomen achieve this weekend but also what other teams achieve as well.

Richmond is currently tied for sixth place in the conference with La Salle, but their inferior overall record to the Explorers' has them on the outside of the tournament looking in. Like many other teams, this weekend can either make or break their playoff chances, so expect the Spiders to play at maximum effort.

Richmond is coming off two consecutive 1-0 losses and will play Rhode Island before their appearance at Rudd Field, when UMass will honor its departing seniors.

However, the seniors may be overshadowed during the 90 minutes by redshirt junior Sydney Stoll, who has become the undisputed leader of the team.

"Day in and day out [Stoll] will give you 110 percent. On top of that, she's a great player," Napoli said. "She works just as hard in practice as she does in games, and I think she's had the most impact on the team, without question."

Although Stoll and fellow junior Therese Smith provided UMass with the majority of offense this year, it simply hasn't been enough to propel the Minutewomen into a successful season. Getting more players involved in the offense has plagued UMass all year, and there would be no better time than now to have more people find the back of the net.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Kelsey Anderson brings the ball in the opposition's zone, attacking the net for a goal.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Junior Sydney Stoll has four goals and one assist this season while starting at forward for the Minutewomen. UMass will look to keep their postseason chances alive with wins this weekend.

Cota, Luckey contributing in net for Napoli and Co.

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

After spending the last seven games on the sidelines, Massachusetts senior goalkeeper Lauren Luckey posted a season-high nine saves in a 3-0 loss to undefeated Dayton on Sunday.

Luckey, who had not seen action since being taken out at halftime versus Saint Joseph's (7-8-3, 4-5-1 Atlantic 10) on Sept. 25, started and played all 90 minutes for the Minutewomen (4-10-2, 3-6-0 A-10). She allowed three goals on 22 attempts.

The first goal came a minute and a half into the game, when Dayton senior Lauren MacCormick tapped in a pass from freshman Colleen Williams. Senior Mandi Bäck then put the next two goals past Luckey.

At the 16:16 mark, Bäck escaped a trap in the corner and fired a strike inside the far post. Exactly 30 minutes later, she chipped a slot pass from junior Kelly Blumenschein.

"The three goals were ones that neither [Luckey nor Emily Cota] could have stopped," UMass coach Angela Napoli said. "She did everything she possibly could have done. Her performance had no effect on the score."

The nine saves tied the third best single game mark of Luckey's career. She accumulated nine saves twice as a junior against Albany and La Salle, while doing it once as a sophomore against Charlotte.

Prior to losing the starting job to Cota, Luckey started in 30 consecutive games for the Minutewomen dating back to 2007. She started in the first eight games this season, allowing six goals in 405 minutes of action. After allowing two scores in back-to-back games to start her senior campaign, Lucky posted three straight scoreless outings. She then closed out September by allowing two goals in her last three games.

For the better part of the past month, Napoli has chosen the goalkeeper on a week-to-week basis. After pulling Luckey, Cota played every minute in net for the Minutewomen up until the loss to Dayton.

"It has always been in discussion," Napoli said in regards to the decision to start Luckey over Cota. "Emily has been great all season and has made some huge saves this year. In terms of training, they are both very close. The benefit of Emily is that she takes her own goal kicks, so that takes pressure off of our backs."

Cota had been solid all season long, allowing three goals in her first seven appearances. The freshman stepped up when Napoli gave her the nod to start, posting a complete game shutout against Duquesne (5-11-0, 2-7-0 A-10) in her first collegiate start. For her effort, she earned A-10 Co-Rookie of the Week honors.

After that, Cota hit the first rough patch of her young career. She allowed an average of three goals over her next six starts, including consecutive 4-0 losses to A-10 opponents Saint Louis (7-8-3, 4-4-2) and Charlotte (15-2-1, 9-0-1).

Luckey, Cota and the Minutewomen return home this weekend to finish off their regular season schedule. Thursday afternoon, UMass played host to George Washington (6-7-4, 3-4-2 A-10) with a start time of 2:30 p.m. The team then has today off before hosting sixth-place Richmond (8-8-2, 4-4-1 A-10) on Sunday morning at 11:30 a.m.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen lean on Dainton against PC

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts hockey coach Don Cahoon made it clear who the two most significant players are on the ice in any game.

"Goaltending is the most vital position on the ice in every game that is played," Cahoon said before Thursday practice. "Rarely can you get through a game without getting good goaltending."

When the No. 17 Minutemen play a home-and-home this weekend with Providence – Friday in Providence and Saturday in Amherst – the two most important players on the ice will also be two of the best at their respective positions so far this year in the Hockey East.

For UMass (3-0-0, 2-0-0 HEA), Paul Dainton will be between the pipes looking to continue his strong start to the season. The junior currently ranks third in the conference in goals-against average (2.34) and save percentage (0.930) as he has led the Minutemen to their best start since 1995.

Opposing Dainton will be the difference maker on the Friars squad, according to Cahoon. Alex Beaudry joined Providence (4-1-0, 0-0-0 HEA) halfway through last season as a freshman and immediately made a difference. In his first start, he helped the Friars to a 4-2 victory over then-No. 4 Boston University and followed with a 40-save performance in a win against UMass. Providence's only win against the Minutemen last season.

"[The Friars] have been a different team since he arrived mid-year last year," Cahoon said of Beaudry's arrival to Providence. "He came in January of '09, and I think his first game was at BU and [Providence] beat them. I was at the game and he was clearly the difference in the game.

"He has given them a confidence they haven't had in quite awhile and he is a huge factor in their success."

While Dainton ranks high among the goalies in the Hockey East, he still ranks below Beaudry in goals-against average and save percentage. Beaudry currently is ranked second with a 1.76 goals-against average and first with his 0.939 save percentage. Dainton ranks first in win percentage (1.000) above Beaudry's 0.750, good for second in the conference, with his only loss coming to then-No. 7 Notre Dame.

"[Beaudry's] ability is very similar to Paul Dainton's. His physical makeup is similar to Paul's; they are in many ways a lot alike," Cahoon said comparing the two goalies. "A little different posture, a little different save selection, but they are very similar type of goaltenders."

Dainton is no stranger to the Friars and no stranger to having success against them, with two victories last year in back-to-back games. Dainton came into the first match with Providence after fellow goaltender Dan Meyers had surrendered four scores in just over 22 minutes, and closed out the rest of the game, not giving up a goal as UMass went on to win 9-4. Dainton gave up one goal the next night as the Minutemen rolled past the Friars 5-1.

When UMass travels to Providence on Friday, Dainton also knows to be aware of the smaller rink the Friars play in. With about five fewer feet of ice on each end of the rink, it makes for a quicker game.

"It is a smaller surface than our own so there a lot of things that happen a lot quicker so you always have to be on your game because plays just develop real quick," Dainton said.

"I just have to come prepared to make all the saves I should make and hopefully steal a couple down the way."

With Dainton's performances so far this year, there isn't much of a question as to whether or not he'll be prepared. Dainton has put a lot of time in focusing more on the mental aspect of his game with certain drills and taken a different focus in net, something that he feels has led to his early success this season.

"This year just kind of taking everything one shot at a time and doing a lot of mental work off the ice for concentration and stuff like that as opposed to more of the technical stuff which we did work on during the summer," Dainton said.

In addition to the work Dainton has put in, Cahoon credits having another year under his belt, as part of the mix of why Dainton is playing at such a high level.

"I think that in conjunction with his maturity, he's older; he's wiser; he's more schooled and that is a big part of why he is playing at a high level right now," Cahoon said. "It takes all of the elements of athleticism, maturity, physical strength and the mental toughness, preparation and focus to constitute a great goaltender at this level. So I think it all is very significant, but it's a little piece to the puzzle."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MAXWELL SPARR/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen huddle in a game earlier this season. UMass will face its first road test this season in a home-and-home against Providence this weekend.

UMass, Providence square off in home-and-home set

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

After getting off to its best league start since 1995-96, the Massachusetts hockey team will look to continue its success when it takes on Hockey East foe Providence in a home-and-home series this weekend.

The No. 17 Minutemen (3-0-0, 2-0-0 HEA) began the season defeating Boston University and Maine in their first two conference matchups and now remain the only team in the Hockey East with an undefeated league record.

Though the strong start and rational ranking is a good beginning for UMass, junior goalkeeper Paul Dainton knows that it's too early in the season to be talking about accomplishments.

"Getting off to a good start is huge, and it's going to help us build momentum," he said. "Then again, you don't win any trophies at the start of the year. We just have to not so much focus on what we've done, but where we're going."

For the first time this season, UMass will go on the road Friday for an away game after playing the first three games at the Mullins Center.

"First road trip is going to be fun," Dainton said. "I know a lot of the guys are excited to get out there and prove that we can do the same thing on the road that we've done at home."

"It's a new test for us – a test that we haven't submitted ourselves to," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "It will be a whole new mindset, a whole new set of challenges and a whole new preparation for us."

The first road game will also be a test for the freshmen players on the Minutemen squad. Younger players, such as Rocco Carzo, who have contributed this season, will get their first taste of an away-collegiate crowd.

"I think they'll be fine by just seeing how they've been at home and how they've gelled with the team," Dainton said. "You wouldn't be able to tell they were underclassmen. They play well above their level, and they've adapted very well."

On the flip side, Providence will be playing only its second home game this season after going on the road for four-straight games following its season opening win in its home rink against Holy Cross.

In their four away contests, the Friars split a series with Notre Dame and swept Bowling Green in back-to-back games by a combined total score of 11-3.

The last matchup with the Falcons (0-4-0, 0-0-0 Central Collegiate Hockey Association) ended, 3-1, in favor of Providence, but the score was misleading regarding how closely contested the game really was.

The two teams were deadlocked in a 1-1 tie through most of the game, with Bowling Green leading for only one minute, eight seconds in the first period. Late in the third period though, the Friars broke through and scored two goals in the last four minutes of the contest to take the victory.

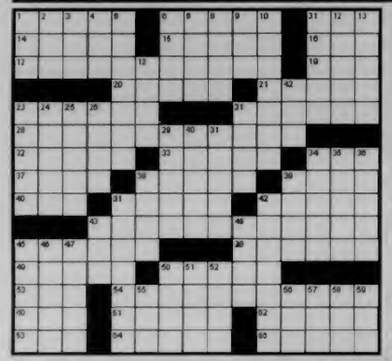
In the all-time series with Providence, the Minutemen trail 19-31-3 since 1931 when the two teams first met. Providence won 12 of the first 13 matchups, but since 2006-07, UMass has gone 4-3-2.

Last year, UMass took the season series, winning two of three games. The first two contests were won decisively by the Minutemen, who had a combined total score of 14-5.

In the last game, the play was closer as the two teams were knotted at four until the last minute of regulation. Though UMass outshot the Friars 46-31 and didn't allow any power plays, it was Providence who came out on top.

With 53 seconds remaining in the game, the Friars' Matt Taormina sent a shot from the blue line which beat UMass' goalkeeper Dan Meyers for the game-winner.

Despite the struggles Providence faced last season, it has the feeling of a different team this year, something that's not lost on Cahoon.

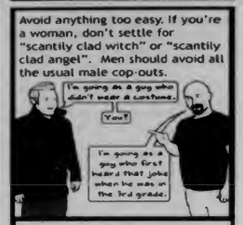


"They're playing with a renewed confidence and a renewed spirit, if you will, from previous years," Cahoon said. "They're going to be dangerous and particularly hard in their building."

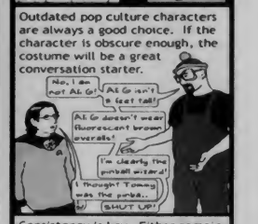
Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

comics

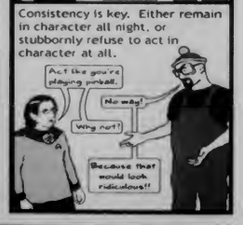
JOURNALISM AT ITS FINEST



CROSSWORD



ACROSS
1. Poison plant
6. Acclaim
11. Geographic illustration
14. A Muse
15. France's longest river
16. Earned Run Average
17. A person who amuses
19. Lair
20. 1000 kilograms
21. French for "Queen"
23. Found at the end of a pencil
27. Mischievous one
28. Statistics
32. Avoid
33. Exchange
34. "Eureka!"
37. Catholic church service
38. Push
39. Smile radiantly
40. Wood chopping tool
41. Shakespeare's theater
42. Vitality
43. Demonstration
45. Magazine feature
48. Bug
49. Diadem
50. Heavy pin
53. Chafe
54. Dinosaur with 3 horns
60. Bother
61. Not inner
62. Small Asian goat antelope
63. Encountered
64. Wheezy
65. Manicurist's board



DOWN
1. Behold
2. Ashes holder
3. Welcome
4. Consumed food
5. A funeral procession
6. Distinctive flair
7. Metal money
8. Connects two points
9. "___ we having fun yet?"
10. Patio
11. First aid attendant
12. Sporting venue
13. A jury or board
18. A unit of pressure
22. S
23. Swelling under the skin
24. Unwind
25. Make smile
26. Mats of grass
27. Carnival attraction
29. A Musketeer
30. Investigate
31. Safe place
34. Eagle's nest
35. Mayhem
36. Catkin
38. Sleigh
39. Wagers
41. One who bestows
42. A more favorable position
43. Church bench
44. Level
45. Leave
46. Puritan
47. Android
50. Ritual
51. Chilled
52. Extremely
55. Regret
56. A male cat
57. Refinable rock
58. Average for a hole
59. Clever

BASIC INSTRUCTIONS
by Scott Meyer
"How to Create and Wear A Successful Halloween Costume" basicinstructions.net

UMASS AMHERST

New Schedule for Winter Session

Earn credits during break!

Online classes begin: December 21, 2009

On campus classes begin: January 4, 2010

View Classes and Register now on SPIRE or www.UMassOnline.net

"Club Nights" at the MONKEY BAR

Fri. 10/30 ! HALLOWEEN PARTY ! HOSTED BY DJ BiggZ

Sat. 10/31 Guest DJ Halloween Party

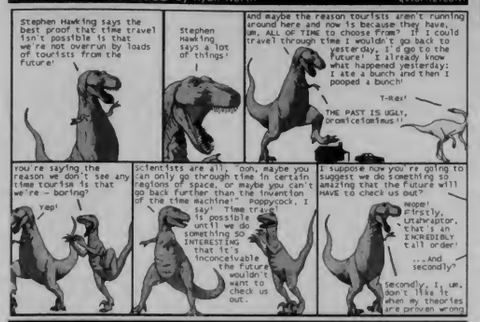
Tues. 11/3 TECHNO TUESDAY DJs Yeah Guy & Hott Sizzle

413-259-1600
63 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
www.mymonkeybar.com
21+

LA PIAZZA

SPECIALS:

2 LARGE CHEESE PIZZAS	$15.00
ALL CALZONES	$5.00
12" SUBS	$5.00
8" SUBS	$4.25



Not valid with any other offer. Valid Through 11/05/09

OCMP Free Delivery

(413) 253-6444
www.lapiazzaristorante.us

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com

Wondermark by David Malki ! — wondermark.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees — mnftiu.cc

HORRORSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
For your post-mortem troubles, seek the office of Frank N. Stein, Esquire.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Skin only truly exfoliates when you're using Pinhead's face-wash.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
If Chucky can get to Redman, then obviously there's no chance for you.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Halloween's the only day that you can actually say, "You've got a purdy throat."

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
Jason and Freddy have got some new competition. His name is H1N1.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Who needs a costume when you can just hold your arm out and make chainsaw noises?

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
If asked why you're dressed as a pimp, just say you're the demon from Paranormal Activity.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Remember: Only cool kids stare creepily at virgins from within the shrubbery.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
Linda Blair did the spider walk for a reason: to make Mom proud.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
For Halloween wear a white sheet and claim that you're the symbol of Hollywood's current creativity.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
It's not a Halloween costume until you show some skin. Rotting skin, that is.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Terrify the male community by dressing up as the Vagina Dentata.

WE WANT YOUR COMICS

Put your comics in front of thousands of readers!

E-MAIL:

comics@dailycollegian.com

SUDOKU

	4		9
7		5
	1	3			5		6
	2						3
3			5	4		9
					6
5						6		7
	9		3			1
		8	7					2

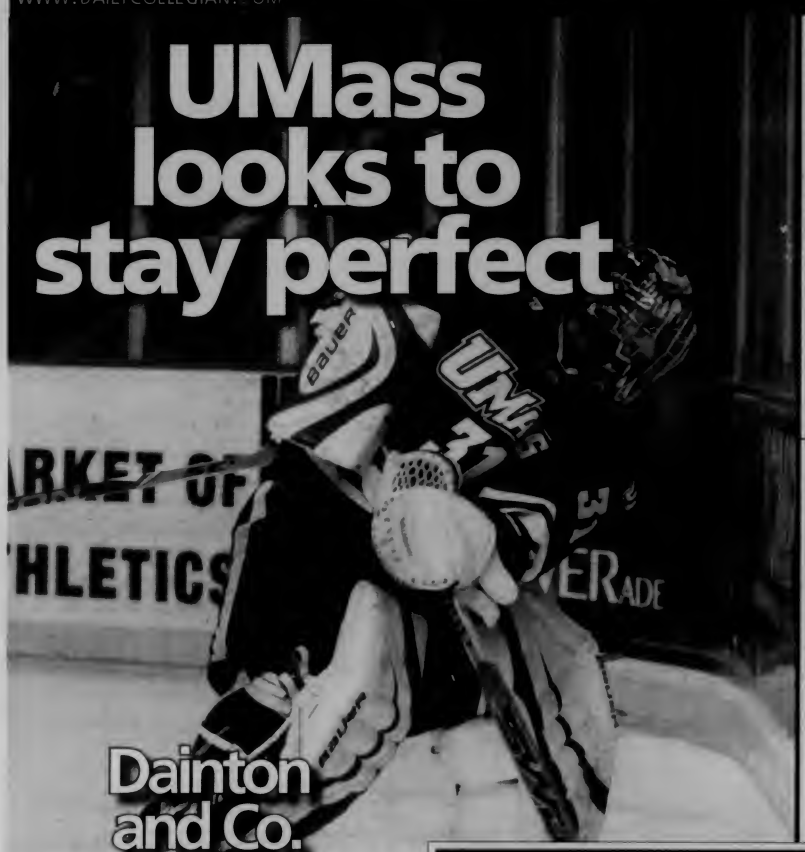
CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303



WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers Wanted, Must be able to work 20 hrs/week including one weekend night. Apply at D.P. Dough, Downtown Amherst

UMass looks to stay perfect

Dainton and Co. get first road game

See pg. 13

WOMEN'S SOCCER

The Minutewomen hope to keep their playoff chances alive as they host George Washington and Dayton in the final two games of the regular season.

SEE PAGE 12

SWIMMING

UMass' swimming and diving teams host Stony Brook in the first of two home meets. The men look to rebound after a loss to Army while the women look for their second consecutive victory.

SEE PAGE 11

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

NOVEMBER

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 55 LOW: 34 www.DailyCollegian.com MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 2009

Engineering a brighter tomorrow

MARISSA MCGRATH/Collegian

Female high school students from across the commonwealth participated in the annual Women in Engineering Career Day Conference on Oct. 29, where they competed to design the most effective way to launch a ping-pong ball into a cup on its side.

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

On Oct. 29, female high school students explored their potential interests in the University of Massachusetts engineering program, along with the field and future of engineering itself, during UMass' annual Women in Engineering Career Day Conference.

Approximately 50 high schools across Massachusetts sent students and faculty to the conference, where the participants sat around circular tables equipped with rubber bands, duct tape and Popsicle sticks which were used by the students during a "hands-on" workshop featuring two activities proctored by headliner of PBS TV program's "Design Squad" Thea Sahr.

The students were challenged to use the materials in front of them to build a machine that would stick a ping-pong ball into a cup lying on its side 12 inches away. Sahr's slide suggested the students design either a pendulum and/or a rubber band system to propel the ball into the cup.

"Engineering consists of building things, modifying things and solving problems," Sahr said. "Most of the time when people are asked what engineers do, people say 'something boring' or 'I don't know.' Engineers change the world by thinking up creative and practical solutions to problems."

The event also featured environmental engineer and UMass master's degree in civil and environmental engineering recipient Gemma Baro-Montes, who spoke to the students about opportunities to "use engineering to create a planet that would be in less despair."

Baro-Montes frequently referenced how UMass' Registered Student Organization known as Engineers Without Borders has allowed UMass students pursuing engineering careers to travel to and create projects that aid nations such as Mali, Mauritania, Nepal, Rwanda and many others in need of various services such as electrical power or fresh water sources.

"When engineering students come back from other countries the impact on them is tremendous," said Baro-Montes. "It truly changed their life."

According to the Engineers Without Borders website, which can be found at ewb-usa.org, Engineers Without Borders

See ENGINEERING on page 3

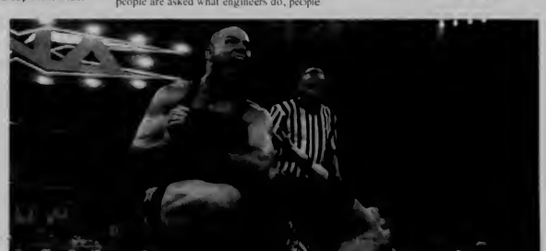
Wrestling league slams into UMass this Dec.

By Ryan Damon
Collegian Staff

Tickets went on sale this weekend for the superstars of Total Nonstop Action (TNA) Wrestling, which will be invading the University of Massachusetts campus on Saturday, Dec. 5 at 7:30 p.m.

"TNA Live!" will take place at the Mullins Center, featuring many of the top stars of the hit Spike TV show, "TNA Wrestling iMPACT!" which airs on Thursdays at 9 p.m.

The stars scheduled to appear are Olympic gold medalist Kurt Angle, TNA World Heavyweight Champion "The Phenomenal" AJ Styles, "The Monster" Abyss, The Beautiful People's Velvet Sky, tag team Beer Money, Inc. and Fairfield, Connecticut's own, "The Blueprint," Matt Morgan, to name a few.



Tickets went on sale last Friday and are priced at $53, $38 and $23 and are available at the Mullins Center Box Office or Ticketmaster.com. UMass faculty, staff, students and military personnel can get discounted tickets on the $38 and $23 priced seats with a valid ID presented at the Mullins Center Box Office.

UMass sports management alumnus Brian Wittenstein was responsible for bringing professional wrestling back to UMass in 2007 after an eight-year draught, when he and a fellow student ran their own independent wrestling event at the Mullins Center.

He now works at TNA Wrestling as the Live Event and Talent Relations Coordinator.

"When I was accepted into the UMass sports

See WRESTLING on page 3

COURTESY BRIAN WITTENSTEIN

The Total Nonstop Action Wresting league will be pile-drivingits way into the Mullins Center on Saturday, Dec. 5. Tickets went on sale last weekend.

UM professor hopes to shrink fuel cells

By Matthew M. Robare
Collegian Staff

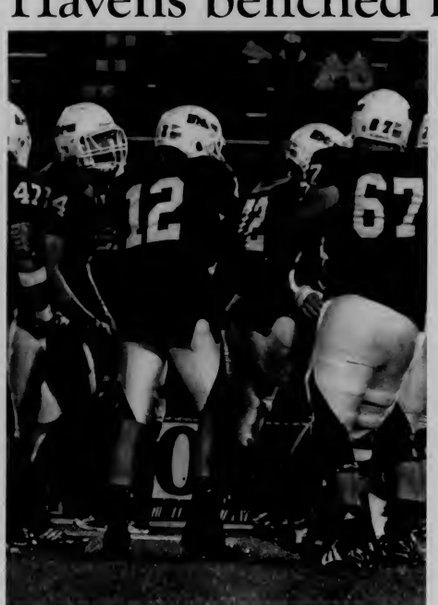
Professor Dimitrios Maroudas of the University of Massachusetts chemical engineering department thinks that briefcase-sized hydrogen car batteries could be on the horizon, thanks to new research attempting to advance hydrogen's effectiveness as a "green" energy source.

Maroudas, graduate student Andre Muniz and NASA scientist M. Meyyappan were researching carbon nanotubes – tube-shaped structures of carbon atoms which measure billionths of a meter – when they discovered that there is a certain density of nanotubes where hydrogen atoms can form bonds with carbon atoms without swelling and preventing more bonds from being formed. Less swelling in the nanotubes ultimately would mean that hydrogen could finally have a viable storage method. This in turn should lead to smaller, more effective hydrogen batteries reaching the consumer market in the coming decades.

With growing concern over the environmental impact of fossil fuels and the Obama administration's commitment to ecologically friendly fuels and technologies, this discovery could have major implications.

"It's [got] big promise because hydrogen's the cleanest fuel you can imagine," Maroudas said. "When you burn hydrogen, you get steam."

The biggest problem with a hydrogen-based economy, Maroudas said, has always been storing the fuel. Hydrogen is the lightest element and its reactivity makes for a very good fuel. However, as Professor John McCarthy of Stanford University wrote in his online journal, "a 15-gallon automobile gasoline tank contains 90 pounds of gasoline. The corresponding hydrogen tank would be 60 gallons, but the hydrogen would weigh only 34 pounds."



The solution discovered by Maroudas and his team may have solved this problem. Scientists realized as early as 1997 that carbon nanotubes could be used for hydrogen storage. However, they always arranged the nanotubes too densely, so that when they attached the hydrogen atoms, the tubes would swell and prevent further bonds from being formed and the maximum number of hydrogen atoms could not be attached.

What the group from UMass has done is develop a computer simulation showing that there is a certain point where the swelling cannot go on. Using this knowledge, they were able to calculate a specific optimum density of the carbon nanotubes so that they can swell to their maximum without preventing the hydrogen atoms from forming all the bonds they can.

The research has been supported by a National Science Foundation grant, as well as a Fulbright Scholarship awarded to Muniz. Maroudas believes that this work could be used to build a briefcase-sized car battery that is up to eight percent hydrogen by weight. A hydrogen car battery that miniscule could have the power to transform the way energy is used across the world, and possibly make the future a whole lot "greener."

Matthew M. Robare can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Havens benched in 19–9 loss

MATTHEW HARRINGTON/Collegian

Quarterback Kyle Havens (12) was benched in Saturday's 19–9 loss to Maine. It was uncertain if he was replaced because of performance or an ankle injury suffered in the first quarter.

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

A change of quarterback at halftime couldn't stop the turnovers or overcome the deficit as the Massachusetts football team fell, 19-9, Saturday at Maine.

Scott Woodward replaced Kyle Havens at the start of the second half after Havens threw an interception – his 14th of the season – as well as lost a fumble and injured his ankle in the first half. Woodward threw three interceptions of his own and pitched a ball to Jon Hernandez that was fumbled.

It was unclear if Woodward replaced Havens due to the starter's performance, as Woodward did last week against Richmond, or if it was because of Havens ankle injury, but UMass coach Kevin Morris seemed to hint after the game that it was due more to Havens performance.

"We had a couple of turnovers so we looked to move on in a new direction," Morris said.

The Black Bears (4-4, 3-2 Colonial Athletic Association) scored 10 of their 19 points off of UMass turnovers, something that has hurt the Minutemen (4-4, 2-3 CAA) in the past two weeks against Richmond and Maine. Both games that were on the road where UMass is 0-4 this season, the Minutemen have had 13 total turnovers – 10 interceptions and three fumbles.

Both UMass and Maine were able to put together lengthy drives on their first possessions of the game, but only the Black Bears came away with points. The Minutemen received the ball to start the game and put together a 12-play, 74-yard drive that brought them to Maine's 7-yard line before Armando Cuko missed a 24-yard field goal wide right.

Maine's Brandon McLaughlin sacked Havens on the drive, forcing Havens to miss the rest of the drive with a right ankle injury. Woodward came in to replace Havens completing a 34-yard screen pass to Hernandez and throwing another incomplete pass intended for Joe Sanford on the drive. Havens returned on the next drive for UMass offense before being replaced at halftime.

The Black Bears had an equally impressive drive on their first offensive drive of the game, but came away with a 3-0 lead after a 25-yard field goal by Jordan Waxman.

The drive ate up eight minutes of the first quarter as the Maine offense drove 72 yards in 14 plays.

Hernandez (14 rushes for 39 yards and one touchdown)

See FOOTBALL on page 6

ARTS & LIVING

"Repo" shadowed for Halloween

Genetic Imperfection performed while cult hit "Repo: The Genetic Opera" was presented on the big screen this past Friday, Oct. 30 in Northampton.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Tournament bound

Both the women's soccer team and field-hockey team won two must-win games this weekend and advanced to their respective A-10 Tournaments.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Chris Russell tells the story of Sherry Fortin, who like many others, is left behind by America's healthcare system.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Log on to DailyCollegian.com to check out a photo slideshow of Jay-Z's sold-out performance at the Mullins Center.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 38

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor N.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Torsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Stannell
Assistant Comics Andrew Watts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Matthew M. Robare
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Jay Auer
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Sparr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914, and the Massachusetts Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick O'Malley

COPY EDITOR
Caitlin Quinn

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

CAMPUS PERSPECTIVES

Are we over-reacting to Swine Flu?

How do you feel about the university's policy on the H1N1 virus (Swine Flu), which states that students with flu-like symptoms should avoid classes?

Shehla Hussein
Graduate student
Architecture major

"[The university's policy] is the most safe thing to do. It's better to be safe than sorry. Some students have even had to leave campus because they had flu symptoms ... That must be difficult for people."

Charlie Felder
Senior
Legal Studies major

"As a teaching assistant, it kind of confused me at first when I started getting e-mails from students saying that they couldn't turn things in thanks to Swine Flu. While I think it's a very real danger on campus, like anything, people will take advantage of situations like this."

Ahsan Hayat
Senior
Finance major

"It's a good policy in the sense that it is convenient for students who have the flu, and safe. But, it can definitely be misused, and probably will result in some empty classrooms. I have friends who were really excited about this."

Jisu Lim
Junior Biology major

"[The university] has to do something to prevent the spread of Swine Flu... But it seems like students have an opportunity to miss exams and papers now."

By Nick Bush and Matthew Harrison, Collegian Staff

Wrestling league prepares to invade Mullins

WRESTLING from page 1

The Total Nonstop Action Wrestling league will be arriving at the Mullins Center Dec. 5. BELOW: Wrestling stars such as the TNA World Heavyweight Champion "The Phenomenal" AJ Styles will be in attendance.

management program, I already had my career goal set and was hoping that UMass was the key." Wittenstein said in an interview. "UMass gave me the opportunity to run my own professional wrestling event and gain the experience needed to make me a more valuable employee. Four days before graduation, I interviewed with TNA Wrestling and was hired," he said.

Wittenstein said that bringing TNA to UMass amounts to bringing his professional and personal pursuits full circle.

"This is truly an example of how everything comes full circle," he said. "All I ever wanted to do was work in pro wrestling. I saw UMass as a school that could help me gain the skills needed to achieve my goal, and now I get to come back to UMass with TNA Wrestling, my dream fulfilled."

Last week, TNA Wrestling made waves throughout the entertainment world by announcing a partnership with Hulk Hogan in a press conference at Madison Square Garden, which is often referred to as the Mecca of professional wrestling.

Hogan was joined in the press conference by TNA Entertainment President Dixie Carter and Spike TV President Kevin Kay. Hogan commented that Madison Square Garden was "the house that he built."

Hulkamania was born on January 23, 1984 when Hulk Hogan defeated The Iron Sheik at MSG for his first heavyweight wrestling championship.

"It looks like Hulkamania has finally come to Spike TV," Kevin Kay said during the press conference. "And we couldn't be more thrilled."

"In my opinion, I believe we have the best talent in the business – the best men and women who wrestle for TNA every week," Carter said during the press conference. "There is no single name that defines an industry more than Hulk Hogan. He is a pop icon. To have this man join us will be an incredible thing for us."

"This is the company that is leading the way into the future, I guarantee that," Hogan said during the press conference.

"Whatcha' gonna do, Hulkamaniacs, when the greatest network of all time, Spike TV, my new partner Dixie Carter and Hulk Hogan run wild on you?" continued "the Hulkster."

With this announcement, it appears that TNA Wrestling will be dawning a new era.

Even though Hogan will not be at the Mullins Center, UMass students can be a part of the new era of TNA Wrestling if they have what it takes to "Cross the Line."

For more information on this event and TNA Wrestling, visit the TNA website at Tnawrestling.com or follow TNA on Twitter at Twitter.com/tnaonline.

Ryan Damon can be reached at rdamon@student.umass.edu.

Campus to Career
Who's Got Your Number?
Tuesday, November 3
5:30 p.m., Memorial Hall
Don't let your credit or identity get swiped!
FREE FOOD • FREE BEVERAGES
Register at UMassAlumni.com/students
The first 10 students who bring their UMass Amherst Alumni Association coupon from the UMass Amherst coupon book receive a special gift.
Student Alumni Association | Alumni | Liberty Mutual
Enter to win a UStore gift card.
Seniors can also enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 13, 2010
Sponsored by the Student Alumni Association & the Alumni Association in partnership with Liberty Mutual

Study: Today's grads lacking professionalism in workplace

David Polk, a professor of behavior science at York, found that many consider today's grads unprofessional.

By Angela Hilsman
Collegian Staff

A new study from York College of Pennsylvania suggests that today's college graduates lack professionalism in the workplace compared to their older peers.

York's newly created Center for Professional Excellence recently commissioned a survey of more than 500 human resources professionals and business leaders to define "professionalism" and see how well college graduates exhibit it.

The study resulted in 37 percent of employers saying that less than half of the graduates they hire exhibit professionalism in their first year. The average employer reports only slightly more than 51 percent of recent hires demonstrate professionalism.

Career Services director for the University of Massachusetts Amherst, Jeffrey Silver, says that those findings are not directly applicable to UMass students. "Very, very rarely do I hear bad things about UMass students, about their work ethic or being professional," Silver said.

Silver defines professionalism as getting to work on time, dressing properly, not emailing all day long, and just knowing office etiquette. The study concluded that professionalism includes, "courtesy and respect," "the ability to communicate," "listening skills," "being motivated and working on a task until it is complete" and "appearance."

The study credits this decrease in professionalism to the younger generation having a greater sense of entitlement and different cultural trends.

Silver, 60, says he "tends not to see" a generational difference, adding that UMass students work hard without displaying unsightly tattoos or piercings. He attempts to explain the study's findings, noting that students who do not care often won't apply for internships through career services. He said that while Bostonian and New Yorker employers often complain that other college graduates lack commitment or experience, they tend to only have good things to say about UMass.

He adds that out of the thousands of students the program places in internships each year, only one every two to three years will get fired.

"UMass is one of the only universities in the country that allows 18 credits worth of internships," says Silver. He believes that because students still pay tuition, plus traveling fees, and intern five days a week, they are going to make sure they do a good job and stay committed. Plus, students are held more accountable, according to Silver, because internship coordinators, career services and college deans have access to the student's performance reviews.

Silver adds that the bigger the internship, the less likely a student is to get into trouble. "They're just so grateful to have it and just so in awe to be there," he says. He wonders if maybe UMass troublemakers just don't apply for big intern employers.

David Polk, professor of behavioral science at York whose research group conducted the survey, believes that pressing professional habits is important, and that "professors can serve as role models." He explains that it is inappropriate for professors to wear jeans to class or to allow students to call them by their first names, as it creates an illusion that professors are more friends than professors.

Silver disagrees, saying "if the teacher has to worry about titles to get respect from the student, then they're not a good professor." Silver does, however, agree that professors should set an example. "You have to set standards," or else students are unprepared for the workplace.

Silver believes that professors shouldn't allow texting or leaving during the middle of class.

"Some faculty will let them get away with it," he said, "and some don't." He recalled Journalism professor Barbara J. Roche. Silver then quoted her saying, "If you are late or texting, there is a door. You're out of the classroom."

"As a professor, most of us see our jobs as conveying knowledge and making sure our students comprehend it, said Polk. "I'm not sure how many would respond that it is also their job to help a student develop good behavior," he continued, noting that most professors aren't comfortable setting a moral standard.

York's Center for Professional Excellence will host seminars with employers discussing their expectations and other workplace issues. Polk says he wants to create a general education course focusing on professionalism.

"It wouldn't hurt," Silver said, responding to the idea of starting required professionalism classes at UMass. He adds that the school of business hosts an etiquette dinner each year. There are also "dress-for-success" seminars on campus.

York's professionalism study concludes that employers value workers who accept "personal responsibility for decisions and actions," who can "act independently" and who have "a clear sense of direction and purpose."

The study says unprofessionalism includes, "[inappropriate] attire, tattoos and piercings," "poor communication skills," "poor work ethic" and "poor attitude."

The study also shows that not all employers surveyed believe there has been a decline in professionalism. Fifty-three percent of respondents say the percentage of professional employees has remained the same for the past five years. Only a third of respondents report a nosedive in college graduates' professionalism.

UMass Career Services provides students with connections to available internships and co-ops. The program provides introductions to internships and co-ops every Monday and Thursday at 3 p.m. in Goodell 508. Appointments can also be set up with Jeff Silver in Goodell on a case-by-case basis.

Angela Hilsman can be reached at ahilsman@student.umass.edu.

'Oozing' with talent

"Raphael" from the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles is seen here singing to the crowd at the Vocal Suspects' 'Holla-ween' concert last Friday in Mahar Auditorium.

Female engineers of future arrive at UM

Hosted by the PBS "Design Squad's" Thea Sahr, the Women in Engineering Conference on Thursday, Oct. 29 gave female high school students a better understanding of the mindset of an engineer.

ENGINEERING from page 1

"is a non-profit humanitarian organization established to partner with developing communities worldwide in order to improve their quality of life."

Baro-Montes went on to explain how some young students in impoverished nations were given access to computers.

Displaying a picture of smiling kids from Nepal who had just received computers, Baro-Montes said, "Look at those kids. They have just seen the world [on computers]. They will never be the same again. Those smiles are what [are] most important to me. Not having a big house or money."

Before showing several examples of how students could help out in the Engineers Without Borders chapter at the University, she said, "we are not only privileged to be living in the developed world, but also, we are responsible for taking care of those who are not as privileged."

"The speaker was really good," said Jamme Lamacchia, of Pathfinder Regional High School. "I like working with my hands, so engineering might be something I want to pursue."

The event also displayed tables from various industry sponsors. The engineering department of Verizon was represented at the conference.

"A lot of companies support ways to motivate students to study math and science and show how they can further their education," said manager of Boston and Braintree's network engineering at Verizon Chris Parker. "The company subsidized three master's degrees for me."

Parker explained that their goal at the conference was to show students what their backgrounds were and what they have accomplished in engineering working for Verizon. They also wanted to talk to students about various opportunities as engineers within the company.

"It's not just civil or mechanical engineering. There are a lot of different types of engineering students can study," said Parker. "Students don't have to study and work within the field they go into originally."

Many of the students expressed an interest in becoming engineers during the conference.

"I thought this [conference] was very inspiring and helpful for what I want to do in the future," said junior Rachel Schluckebier from Minnechaug Regional High School. "I want to be an engineer because a lot of members of my family are engineers. This definitely inspired me to realize there is a lot I can do as an engineer."

When asked about what she thought about UMass' program Chicopee Comprehensive High School student Jessica Dziwonkoski said, "Worcester Polytechnic Institute (WPI) is my number one choice, but UMass is definitely an option. The only difference is that the mechanical engineering program at UMass and Western New England College are theory-based programs. WPI is a project-based mechanical engineering program."

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass on bus route)

Never Again: Genocide
from Cambodia to Darfur and Beyond
Three art exhibits and two panel discussions bring us face to face with the mass atrocities of the 20th and 21st centuries

Beyond Genocide, Ending the Silence, The Children of Darfur
Student Union Art Gallery, November 2-13
Opening Reception, Tuesday 11/3 at 5pm
followed by Artist Talks at 6pm

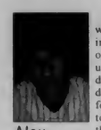
Interfaith Panel Discussion:
Genocide, Reconciliation, Forgiveness, and the Search for Meaning in the Face of Evil
Tuesday, November 3 at 7:30 pm
Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union

Other related events:
Genocide: From Justice to Prevention, 11/10
Cambodia Remembered, 11/15

More information at umass.edu/jewish or 413.545.9642

UMASS AMHERST
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Cambodian Students Association, STAND: Student Anti-Genocide Coalition, Western Mass Darfur Coalition, Student Union Art Gallery, GSS, SGA, UMass Arts Council, and the Harold Grinspoon Foundation

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." - Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Not in my backyard

Alex Perry

When Barack Obama decided he wanted to close Guantanamo Bay in order to appease his liberal base, one of the main questions that came up was what would become of the detainees. Well I guess Amherst has decided to chip its two cents in foreign affairs, as a couple of the town's selectpeople have decided that it would be a good idea to have a few detainees cleared for release to settle down in Amherst.

Well, that raises a few questions. My first is: Really? According to the Pentagon, 11 percent of the detainees released from Guantanamo Bay have returned to terrorist activities. Why would Amherst take the risk of encouraging detainees to come to here, even if they are cleared? An 11 percent chance of terrorist activities is a larger risk than I'm willing to take. Any chance above zero is a chance I'm not willing to take. It's one thing if these select-people are proponents of released detainees being allowed to return to their normal lives. But I think they're just out to make a statement. They could be putting innocent lives in danger for their politics. What if one of these welcomed detainees made a terrorist attack here? Why would we want to go out of our way as a community to take this risk?

An 11 percent chance of terrorist activities is a larger risk than I'm willing to take. Any chance above zero is a chance I'm not willing to take.

I guess none of us should be surprised that Amherst's leaders felt the need to get on a soap box and call attention to how far leftist the town is, though. This isn't the first time the town's select board has wrongly thought that the townspeople care about their thoughts on foreign affairs. At town meetings in the past, according to MassLive.com, Amherst selectpeople have "debated and approved resolutions such as urging the United States to use diplomacy and avoid military action against Iran, opposing genocide in the Darfur region of the Sudan, calling for the withdrawal of troops from Iraq and to impeach then-President George W. Bush and then-Vice President Richard B. Cheney."

Who do these people think they are, voting on foreign affairs or the impeachment of President Bush? Their opinion on these matters is about as important as Paris Hilton's. Normally, I just wouldn't care about the circus these people are making to feel important, but now their actions may have real life consequences. The decision they are making to have Guantanamo Bay detainees come to Amherst is not the same charade it was by supporting the impeachment of President Bush. This vote may affect the lives of everyone here for the worse.

Sometimes liberals simply take their ideals too far. I think this is a prime example. They opposed to people being held at Guantanamo Bay and they want to prove it so much that they are willing to put the people of Amherst in jeopardy. It's ridiculous, but it really isn't much more ridiculous than closing Guantanamo in the first place.

President Obama originally said he would close the prison by Jan. 22, 2010, but some reports indicate that it will not be possible for all the inmates to be removed by that time because nobody in their right mind wants them. Our allies don't want them and the states don't want them in their jails or their communities – besides Amherst.

People can argue that some percentage of individuals at Guantanamo are innocent and that may be true. But that doesn't justify releasing all of them. The people in charge of Guantanamo clearly can't tell who is a terrorist and who isn't based on the percentage released detainees who have returned to terrorism. Let's not risk making another mistake with the detainees they want to send to Amherst. There are no benefits to doing so. It's a needless risk.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu

Food or medicine: our choice

Chris Russell

Sherry Fortin sat against a mailbox outside Pinocchio's in downtown Northampton, knitting a winter hat. On the sidewalk lay her finished products: several hats and scarves, which cost $20, mittens, which cost $15, and bracelets, a bargain at only $1.

A colorful sign advertised her wares: "I have diabetes and need medication. One dollar donation for a bracelet. I can knit anything you want, and will take orders."

Sherry, 45, has had Type 2 Diabetes for 18 years. She is supposed to take insulin and prescription pills everyday to manage her blood sugar. Diabetic coma or death, along with minor symptoms such as dizziness, nausea and extreme sweating can result from blood sugar that is either too low or too high.

However, Sherry has not taken insulin or pills since July. The medicine requires a $30 monthly co-pay through Mass Health, a state insurance program. This payment makes the medicine seem more like a luxury than a necessity, as Sherry is more concerned with finding enough to eat.

Someone with a steady income wouldn't expose themselves to such serious health risks, but Sherry has been out of work for over a year. On good days, she makes about $20 selling her knitted products, enough to buy food and service her addictions to soda and cigarettes, but what about insulin?

"I can't afford it right now," she said.

Sherry said she can't quit cigarettes or soda, and thus save money to buy medication, as she is addicted to both. She started drinking Pepsi heavily when she was eight, and started smoking at 12.

Now when she goes without soda for long periods of time, "I get sick to my stomach, and really bad headaches," she said. Meanwhile, going without cigarettes makes her extremely irritable and stressed. She must satisfy these addictions – along with hunger – to feel normal, which makes them a bigger concern than managing her long term health.

"Whenever I make some money, I'm like, "Do I want my medication or do I want food?" she said. "Most times, food wins."

Unfortunately, medication has been "losing" for a while. Although Sherry was employed until last year, she had no health insurance until she recently became eligible for Mass Health, and thus little or no access to medication over her 18 years with diabetes.

"If anything happens to my hands I would really be in trouble," she said. "My hands are how I make my living."

Inadequate medication, failing to quit smoking and eat properly explains why Sherry now suffers from neuropathy. A common ailment among those with diabetes, neuropathy is nerve damage in the hands and feet caused by either too low or too high blood sugar levels for extended periods of time. Amputation is often needed to prevent the nerve damage from spreading.

"My feet hurt really bad; they have numb feeling of being asleep, but still ache all the time," Sherry said. "They have been threatening to cut my feet off for a while, but I won't let them."

Recently, her pinkie has also started to feel numb, which has made Sherry especially apprehensive.

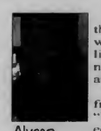
"If anything happens to my hands, I would really be in trouble," she said. "My hands are how I make my living."

Sherry epitomizes the failures of America's health care system, according to Gloria DiFulivo, a professor in University of Massachusetts Amherst's Public Health Department.

DiFulivo said if Sherry had had insurance when she was diagnosed – which would have provided medication and helped her correctly manage the disease – she would probably not have neuropathy now.

This preventive care "would be way cheaper than amputating her legs, if that is what it comes to," DiFulivo said. She provided some figures to make her case: America spends $174 billion a year in health expenses related to diabetes, yet it's estimated 80 percent of Type 2 Diabetes – by far the more common type – could be prevented through lifestyle changes. These changes include proper dieting, physical exercise and stopping smoking, which are all easier when one has a supportive doctor and comprehensive health insurance.

Even though Sherry is uninsured, the Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act, passed by Congress in 1986, ensures that hospitals must provide her emergency care. Living with diabetes and without access to medication is dangerous, and Sherry has been hospitalized several times. Since she can't pay, the federal government partially reimburses the hospital, which covers the rest of the bill by charging health insurance companies more. The companies then pass along these higher costs to everyone else in the form of higher premiums, which have risen 119 percent in the last decade, according to the Commonwealth Fund.



To recap: The government subsidizes costly hospital visits for those it denies health insurance. Doesn't it seem more logical to give people actual insurance rather than the super expensive "emergency room only" health care plan?

"People ask 'How are we going to pay to cover [uninsured people]?'" DiFulivo asked. "Well who do you think is covering them now?"

Chris Russell is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached crussell@student.umass.edu.

Next Halloween, go naked

Alyssa Creamer

"Halloween is the one night a year when girls can dress like a total slut and no other girls can say anything about it."

That quote is from the 2004 movie "Mean Girls" directed by Mark Waters and written in part by comedian Tina Fey. "Mean Girls" had many gems of truth about girl-to-girl interactions. For instance, it described girls' wild and animal-like need to prey on their gender's emotional health by pointing out other girls' physical flaws. The quote about Halloween seemed to nail itself into my brain because it highlights how much girls need an excuse to not be judged. For the past few Halloweens, since the release of the movie, I thought most girls would agree that it is better to have costumes that don't make them look like they work corners near gas stations around 2 a.m. when the bars let out.

Yet again this Halloween, female students had costumes that were, well, more skin than costume.

That made me wonder why, on Halloween when a girl can be just about anything she can possibly dream of being, a girl would want to look like a scantily clad version of a (insert vampire, witch, gypsy, doctor, whatever, here).

Then I thought, maybe it's a form of empowerment for many girls who don't spend all their time running around naked.

For example, when Mary Phelps Jacob invented the modern bra in 1910 because corsets were making it difficult for her to wear a lower cut dress, Uncle John's Bathroom Reader suggests that she liked the way it allowed her to move more freely than the old corsets did. Later on in life, Phelps Jacob supposedly gallivanted through Paris in her naked glory perched on top of an elephant.

This social norm has been instilled so deeply that commercial outlets have responded with vigor. It's impossible to find an outfit that isn't a tad showy if you're a girl. Even at generally wholesome stores like iParty (it's not like it's Spencer's), the only costumes available are choices between "Pocha-Hottie!" or a so-short-its-riding-up-my-butt gypsy getup.

There might be a type of freedom associated with doing things that people don't normally approve of.

If you never did anything crazy in your entire life, wouldn't you want to know that you could? But then there's that problem of being judged by others.

So why tell this little story? Think for a second. If you never did anything crazy in your entire life, wouldn't you want to know that you could? But then there's that problem of being judged by others.

But wait. Then, the American college world just presents this night to you where you have a complete excuse to go wild? It's perfect timing. It's like being as invincible as Mario when he hits that superstar power-up — a girl is untouchable to a lot of criticism on Halloween because almost all the girls around her have made that kind of look Halloween's social norm.

It isn't the case that all Halloween costumes are a form of rebellion for each girl. But maybe for some meeker girls, having an excuse to be outrageously dressed without anyone passing harsh judgments feels deserving.

Please understand that by using the word "outrageously," I am not trying to sound prude. I just figure that it is what a mother might say about Saturday's costumes, and what girls who tend to dress more conservatively might use to describe a "head nurse" outfit complete with fishnet leggings, miniskirt and a low-cut, fire-cracker red, tank top.

Despite it being an empowering moment, there are still some factors girls should think about when choosing a Halloween costume.

For one, if it's freezing outside, wear more clothes as opposed to less. This year, girls were lucky. It was a decently warm October night.

Secondly, walking across campus in eight-inch heels just about always turns into walking across campus barefoot. Dignity points drop for any young lady the moment her bare feet begin to contract dirt-filled scratches.

Lastly, a creative idea that gets laughs is always cool. A bunch of girls were able to balance the need to show off skin while still using playful humor with "Walk of Shame" costumes. Be careful though. Either costume ideas are limited for girls, or everyone's mind is in the same place. Five parties deep that night, I saw the same standard six girl costumes at each one.

Well, what's done is done, and Halloween has passed, so I'm hoping no one takes this article and beats herself up for not being super original about her costume. After all, it's one night, and most students have more, or should have more, important issues at hand than what to wear for any occasion.

Although for next year, it could be really quite fun to see something truly shocking. Someone should rent an elephant and dress up (or well, dress down) like Mary Phelps Jacob.

Alyssa Creamer is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

Daily Collegian Poll Question:

Are students going to skip classes by saying they have swine flu?

- Yes
- No
- I don't go to classes.
- I actually have swine flu.

Vote online at DailyCollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Genetic Imperfection shadows cult hit 'Repo'

By Alissa Mesibov
Collegian Correspondent

On Friday, Oct. 30, Genetic Imperfection of South Hadley presented their first annual Halloween production of "Repo: The Genetic Opera" at the Academy of Music in Northampton.

The group of performers mimicked, or "shadowed," the every movement of the 2008 film, as it was shown on a screen behind them.

The troupe, which started this past March, was the brainchild of Amanda Taylor, one of the directors of a local "Rocky Horror Picture Show" shadow cast.

"The first time I heard about ["Repo"], it was being promoted at a 'Rocky Horror' convention," Taylor said. "There was a lot of interest for a shadow cast among the 'Rocky Horror' cast and fans."

Since then, the group has earned some fame among fans of "Repo." Co-author, illustrator and star of the film Terrance Zdunich, attended the show Friday night and has endorsed Sean Hurt, who shadows the role Zdunich created, as his personal favorite. They are also the only recognized "Repo" shadow cast in western Massachusetts.

"It's great that Terrance said that about me, but what it's about is the fans, and the moment when you can't hear the film behind you because everyone's cheering," Hurt said.

"Repo" takes place in a post-apocalyptic world where there was an epidemic of organ failure. A company called GeneCo becomes a worldwide monopoly in financing in organ transplants. "Repo" focuses in on the journey of Shilo, the 17-year-old daughter of a widowed Repo man, whose job is repossessing organs when clients cannot pay GeneCo back.

The film has a small, though "insanely dedicated [group of] fans," from across the country, as Zdunich described in his opening speech. There are only 36 recognized casts in the United States that present "Repo" either weekly or monthly. Many are part of or linked to "Rocky Horror" casts.

The similarities between the two are remarkable. In both, the writer or writers play roles in the film. Richard O'Brien wrote and played butler Riff Raff in "Rocky Horror," while Zdunich played Graverobber and co-author Darren Smith played the Bandleader. Additionally, their fans are often the same. Many dress up as characters for performances.

Though it has not reached the notoriety of "Rocky Horror," "Repo" has the potential to have the same kind of following. It is already developing.

"Repo" has an eclectic and interesting mix of actors, including former "Spy Kids" star Alexa Vega, Bill Moseley and Paris Hilton.

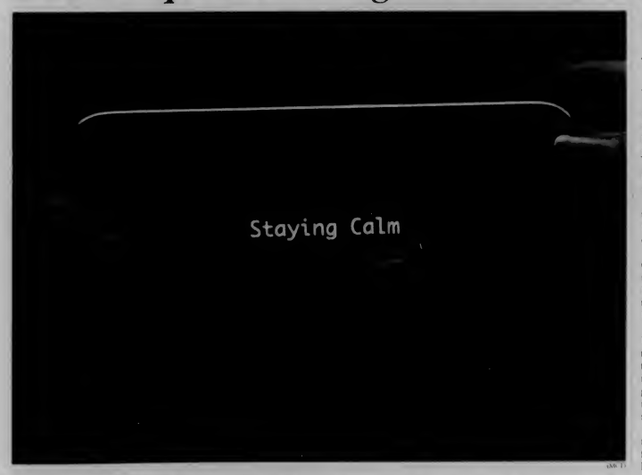
In the question and answer session, Zdunich spoke about the casting process, taking a swipe at Hilton in the process.

"The script spoke to each of them [the actors]," Zdunich said. "Someone might have had to read it to Paris, but it spoke to her."

For several months, a sequel to "Repo" has been both a film industry and fan rumor. To that, Zdunich explained, "the future of 'Repo' is going to come down to how everything goes financially."

"The people that financed the film aren't even aware that it's still playing in theaters," Zdunich said.

As Genetic Imperfection and three dozen other casts prove, it is still playing all over the United States. There are also two Canadian casts and one British cast.



Genetic Imperfection shadows "Repo: The Genetic Opera" on the last Friday of each month at the Tower Theaters in South Hadley. Tickets are $7.50 each, and can be purchased at the box office.

Alissa Mesibov can be reached at amesibov@student.umass.edu.

Genetic Imperfection, a group of actors who "shadow" the soon-to-be cult classic "Repo: The Genetic Opera" presented their first ever Halloween performance along with the film this past Friday, Oct. 30. They will shadow the film on the last Friday of each month in South Hadley.

Droid squares off against iPhone

Verizon's newest "competitor to the iPhone," Droid, has been openly advertised as doing everything the iPhone doesn't. The phone, built by Motorola, is powered by Google's Android software.

By Frank Michael Russell
San Jose Mercury News

SAN JOSE, Calif. – In one corner, we have Silicon Valley tech heavyweight Apple and its widely popular iPhone. In the opposing corner, a new smart-phone challenger: the Droid, powered by Mountain View, Calif., Internet juggernaut Google's Android software, built by Motorola and sold by Verizon Wireless.

Verizon earlier this month offered a tantalizing peek at the Droid in an ad campaign with a slogan aimed directly at the iPhone: "Everything iDon't. Droid Does."

On Wednesday, the carrier provided detailed specs for the Droid, which goes on sale Nov. 6. Verizon is pricing the Droid at $199.99 – after a $100 mail-in rebate, at least, and with a two-year voice and data contract.

Apple's most comparable iPhone 3GS, by contrast, costs $199 for eligible customers – without a rebate, but with a two-year commitment to voice and data service from AT&T.

Among the Droid's features: a high-resolution 3.75-inch screen, a slide-out keyboard, the ability to run more than one application at the same time, a five-megapixel camera, turn-by-turn Google Maps navigation (in beta test mode, at least), access to Amazon.com's MP3 store and other features.

The iPhone 3GS comes with a 3.5-inch touch screen, a three-megapixel camera, a digital compass, access to Apple's popular iTunes music, video and application stores, and other selling points. (But, hey, it's an iPhone.)

The Droid can't match a number of the iPhone's key features in terms of the number of games available for it or its links to content stored in iTunes or available through the iTunes store, noted Avi Greengart, an analyst who covers smart phones for market research firm Current Analysis. But the Droid still has a lot of things going for it, he said.

It's "gorgeous;" it's the first phone to run Android 2.0, the latest version of the operating system; and it's being strongly backed by Verizon.

As such, it's likely to prevent Verizon from losing customers to the iPhone, which is available only from AT&T, and possibly draw in new customers, he said.

"It's not an iPhone killer," said Greengart. "But it is an iPhone defender."

In August, as it became increasingly clear that his company and Apple have become competitors, Google CEO Eric Schmidt left the Cupertino, Calif., iPhone maker's board of directors.

This month, Google and Verizon said they've been collaborating closely on phones that run Android.

"This is an exciting announcement for Verizon Wireless, as the Droid by Motorola is the first device that we are bringing to market under our groundbreaking strategic partnership with Google," John Stratton, chief marketing officer of Verizon Wireless, said in a statement Wednesday.

Of course, the iPhone and the Droid aren't the only smart-phone contenders: Research In Motion has introduced new models of its highly addictive BlackBerry, including the Storm 2, and Sunnyvale, Calif., handheld-device pioneer Palm is offering its new Pre and Pixi phones, which run its webOS software.

Bill Nershi finds his old mountain music roots

By Michael Deeds
McClatchy Newspapers

There were a couple of big reasons why the String Cheese Incident parked its tour bus for good in summer 2007, halting a decade-long run for one of the jam-band scene's biggest bands.

Understandably, the musicians needed a break from 14 years of hard touring – and, well, from each other.

But for singer-guitarist Bill Nershi, the Colorado group's gray-bearded, unofficial frontman, there was also a pressing creative issue.

"The direction of the music in String Cheese was definitely going away from my interests," Nershi explained by phone last week, heading from Durango, Colo., to Los Angeles, with his new Emmitt-Nershi Band.

"As an acoustic guitar player, I'm a little out of my depth when the music moves toward electronica," Nershi continued. "It's just like, 'Well, I guess this is cool. But, you know, as an acoustic guitar player, I'm not sure what my role is. Or even if I have a role anymore in some of this music.'"

That concern is a distant memory now. After leaving String Cheese, Nershi found a like-minded musical soul in Drew Emmitt, vocalist and mandolin extraordinaire for Leftover Salmon. Along with bassist Tyler Grant and banjo player Andy Thorn, Emmitt and Nershi crank out one specialty: bluegrass – the improvisation-friendly, new-grass kind.

Mountain music always was a key element in the fusion approach of the String Cheese Incident, as well as the bluegrassier Leftover Salmon. But, with other members contributing disparate musical influences – particularly in String Cheese – it wasn't the focus.

Emmitt and Nershi had been hoping to work together for the past five or six years, Nershi said. After finally holing up in a friend's house in Estes Park, Colo., they wrote an album's worth of songs in three days and realized they truly clicked as musicians.

Since disbanding, the String Cheese Incident has reunited for a couple of special concerts. But, mostly, Nershi said, his post-Cheese life has been about spending time with his family and enjoying the new collaboration with Emmitt.

"It's great. We're having the time of our lives," Nershi said. "We didn't know when we started playing if this was going to be a long-term thing or not. But I think that making the album together has really shown us that, 'Hey, this is something that is really working and is a really worthwhile project to keep doing.' So the album has really changed our perspective. And, hopefully, it will change the perspective of the people that listen to it."

Released on Sept. 29, the 11-song "New Country Blues" will sound familiar to longtime fans. Nershi and Emmitt re-recorded a song from their better-known groups: the upbeat "Restless Wind" from String Cheese, and the uplifting "This is the Time" from Leftover Salmon. The CD's title track also may remind die-hards of an old Leftover Salmon-covered bluegrass classic called "I Ain't Gonna Work Tomorrow." The playing level on the CD is high, but not overtly flashy. Concerts, however, could be a different story. Emmitt is a smoking mandolin player. And Grant, the group's bassist, also happens to be the 2008 National Flatpicking Champion.

Being a bluegrass group, the Emmitt-Nershi Band doesn't have a drummer. But the acoustic instruments create a rhythmic punch that can be "pretty in your face at times," Nershi said.

"This band definitely gives me incentive to practice," he added. "There's a lot of really hot picking going on."

As expected, the Emmitt-Nershi Band is performing for much smaller crowds than String Cheese did at its peak. Nershi says he's enjoying the opportunity to sign CDs, meet fans and gig on a more personal level.

The Emmitt-Nershi Band's setlists generally include original tunes, String Cheese and Leftover Salmon favorites, and traditional bluegrass breakdowns.

Already, Nershi pointed out happily, "tour hounds" are following the Emmitt-Nershi Band on tour just like they did String Cheese. The difference is that fans won't see a fancy bus rolling up to the venue. The Emmitt-Nershi Band tours in a van.

"We don't have a lot of gear, and that's the beauty of it," Nershi said. "It's less about equipment and having all the gear and more about just playing your instrument – and the four of us locking up to create a rhythm together that has power."

Correction:

The Weekend Edition last week ran a review of the film "Paranormal Activity," which featured only Rachel Dougherty as the author. Dmitriy Gabriel also contributed and can be reached at dmitriy@student.umass.edu.

Junior captain Katie Kelly races after a ball in a game last year. Kelly notched three goals in UMass' win over West Chester on Sunday.

Kelly, King score hat tricks

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

In the most crucial weekend of the 2009 season, the Massachusetts field hockey team received big scoring games from three of its best players to continue its season.

After allowing six goals in a row in the loss against Dartmouth last Wednesday, the No. 19 Minutewomen (12-8, 3-3 Atlantic 10) entered the weekend needing to win out to reach the A-10 Tournament. In order to do so, UMass had to get past conference opponents La Salle and West Chester.

Not wanting their season to end, Cher King, Kim Young, and Katie Kelly provided multi-scoring games to earn victories and a berth in the conference championships.

On Friday, King recorded a career-high four goals, providing all the firepower UMass would need in a 6-3 win over the Explores (7-12, 2-4 A-10). The four scores were the most by a Minutewomen since Erica Johnston put up four in an 8-1 win against California at Garber Field back on Sept. 6, 1997. On Sunday, King would add another score to give her five goals in two games.

King has played 14 games this season and missed six due to injury. However, with the team's fate hanging in the balance, there was no way she was going to miss this weekend's games.

"It's one game at a time for me right now," King said after Friday's win. "It was good to get out there and good to get the win. The goals were a plus, but we got the win so that's all that matters."

UMass coach Justine Sowry was pleased to have King back and performing well after a stretch of games where the offense struggled.

"It's great to have her back on the field. She just has wonderful hand-eye coordination and she knows where the goalie is," Sowry said. "It's something that the team needed and I'm sure it was greatly needed for her own confidence as well."

The scoring didn't end against La Salle as the Minutewomen continued their momentum into Sunday's victory, compiling six goals en route to 6-0 shutout over West Chester.

Kelly followed up King's performance by scoring three goals of her own, giving UMass two hat tricks on the weekend after having none since Kelly's in the A-10 semifinals last year. The junior captain stepped up and had her best game of the season, scoring her team-leading ninth, 10th, and 11th goals, when UMass needed it most.

"She's an incredibly tough, motivated competitor. What she brings everyday is inspiring," Sowry said after Sunday's win. "She's feels a lot of responsibility if our team performance drops off so we've tried to get her relaxed in the last week. She's just been a fantastic captain and I'm very happy for her."

Not to be outdone, Young had three goals of her own over the weekend and combined with King and Kelly to score 11 of UMass' 12 goals.

"It was good that people were able to step up," Kelly said. "It's good knowing we have the support from them and they're back in the game."

To kick off Sunday's game, the freshman wasted little time, attacking the Golden Rams' defense with the dribble to score in the first 15 seconds of the game.

Young has become a vital contributor of the Minutewomen offense, scoring all four of her goals for the season towards the end of the year.

"She's starting to find some confidence," Sowry said.

Along with fellow freshmen Nicole Cordero, Kara Charochack and Kate Heineman, Young provides youthful spirit to the UMass attack.

Heading into the A-10 tournament, the Minutewomen are playing some of their best field hockey of the season. Sowry felt relieved, yet confident at the same time after Sunday's win, sensing that things were ideally coming together.

"All the cards are falling into place for us at the right time," Sowry said.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Seniors extend UMass careers

By Steven Levine
Collegian Staff

On Sunday, Senior Day was either going to knock the Massachusetts women's soccer team out of playoff contention, or put them in it.

Fortunately for the Minutewomen, the latter prevailed as they defeated Richmond, 1-0, locking up the sixth and final spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Aside from a playoff possibility, Sunday's match against the Spiders included another important storyline it would be the last regular season game for seniors Katie Ruggles, Jacquelyn Desjardins, Lauren Luckey and Cristina Adams. Had they lost, it could have been their last game entirely in a UMass uniform. Fortunately for the seniors, another shutout effort by Luckey and Cota coupled with sophomore midfielder Lauren Yelinik's first collegiate goal paved the way for UMass' first tournament appearance since 2004.

The two wins, however were not entirely enough to put UMass in the tournament, they needed some help.

Following the match, UMass' attention quickly turned to the Duquesne/La Salle game, which would ultimately decide whether or not the Minutewomen would secure the sixth and final spot in the tournament. With that in mind, the seniors reflected on their years sporting the maroon and white.

"It went by fast but my time here at UMass meant so much, words can't even explain it," Ruggles said. "We went through some hard times but you always have teammates by your side."

Ruggles' career at UMass began in 2006 as a freshman when she played in eleven games and registered a handful of shots. In 2007, she played in 16 games while starting 15 in the midfield where she accumulated a goal and two assists, good for seventh on the team in points. As a junior last season, Ruggles was converted to a full-time defender. This year, Ruggles started 15 of 16 games, recording six shots and a goal. The goal came on her 21st birthday and saved UMass from a loss, instead taking a tie against Hartford.

For Jacquelyn Desjardins, her soccer career at UMass was highlighted by her teammates.

"I came in as a walk-on and I've really grown as a player and as a person because of it," she said. "It's been awesome becoming close with people I wouldn't have known had it not been for soccer. These girls are like my family."

Desjardins walked on the team in 2006 when former head coach Jim Rudy stood at the helm. This year, Jacquelyn played in 14 games and recorded an assist against Saint Joseph's on September 25 in the midst of UMass' five-game unbeaten streak.

Lauren Luckey offered further insight into the camaraderie she's felt with her teammates.

"It was really fun growing up together [with these girls]," Luckey said. "We came in as freshmen when we were all really little...the time just flew by."

Luckey's UMass career took off in 2007, when the sophomore goaltender was named Most Improved Player at the end-of-year banquet. She played in eight games, starting four, and posted a 2-3 record with a 1.36 goals against average and 0.879 save percentage. In her first collegiate appearance she recorded a win, which was also Jim Rudy's 300th career victory. As a junior last year, Luckey played every minute of every game, recording a 1.05 GAA, an .825 save percentage, and a 6-9-3 record. This year, Luckey was forced to split time in goal with Cota, but still put up impressive numbers. On a team reliant on their goaltending, Luckey recorded a 3-3-0 record with a 1.38 GAA and an .833 save percentage.

Like her senior teammates, Cristina Adams had never played in the tournament and is not taking it for granted.

"This is the highlight right here," Adams said. "The fact that we made the tournament is really big.

Adams' collegiate career also took flight as a sophomore in 2007, when she played in eleven games. She recorded three goals (one game-winner) and three assists which placed her amongst the team leaders in those categories. This year, she played in 16 games and had the biggest game of her career on Oct. 17, when her two goals guided the Minutewomen to victory against rival Rhode Island.

The contributions of all four players on and off the field have not been overlooked by UMass coach Angela Napoli who, in her first year as head coach, is in the tournament.

"The seniors are great players and great people," Napoli said. "It's always nice to have complete people around who are good players, people, and students. Their personalities have added so much to our team this year."

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

Jacquelyn Desjardins heads the ball away from a Richmond player in Sunday's 1-0 win. The victory extended the seniors career at UMass.

Victories keep season alive

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

on defense before Sunday's game.

"We played individually on defense," Sowry said. "We tended to jump to the ball as individuals rather than defending as a team."

Sowry referred to Sunday's game as the most important game since she has been here. The Minutewomen responded by shutting out a Golden Rams team that was also vying for a playoff berth. The Golden Rams needed to win on Sunday to obtain a spot in next weekend's festivities. However the Minutewomen let them know early that this game belonged to the home team.

Just 14 seconds into the game, Kim Young dribbled into the right side of the circle and scored on an unassisted goal to give UMass an early 1-0 lead.

"[Young's goal] certainly made a strong statement. We were able to build confidence from that," Sowry said.

The Golden Rams were never able to find a rhythm on offense as the Minutewomen controlled the ball for most of the match. UMass outshot West Chester 19-7 and held an 8-3 advantage in penalty corners.

The game featured a great deal of physical play as multiple players hit the turf hard from collisions, sticks to the head and clipping from behind.

"We're going to lay in a lot of ice over the next couple of days and rest up and then get back to the drawing board and try to put together a good game plan against Richmond," Sowry said.

The Minutewomen will face the Spiders on Friday for a chance to play in the A-10 conference championship game on Saturday. UMass defeated Richmond, 2-0, last year in the conference finals.

Pete Teague can be reached at pteague@student.umass.edu.

UMass coach Justine Sowry has won two A-10 Tournaments in the last two years since coming to UMass and hope to make it three straight.

UM loses first game of season, HEA play on a power play as sophomore Casey Wellman flipped the puck into the net for his third goal of the season, all coming by way of the man advantage.

HOCKEY from page 8

The Friars responded towards the end of the period, knotting the game at one on their second power play chance. Jordan Krenzyt took a pass from teammate Matt German and poured in his first goal of the season.

Though Providence controlled the puck for most of the period and out shot UMass, 13-7, it was unable to take a lead. The roles were reversed however, in the second period as the Minutemen led in shots, 15-7, while Providence was able to keep the contest tied at two apiece.

In the final period, the Friars took their second lead of the game, scoring just three minutes into the set. That marked the last score for Providence, though, as the UMass defense and Dainton were able to limit the Friars' opportunities while the offense went on a scoring charge.

The Minutemen scored twice in the span of 22 seconds, receiving the tying goal from Martin Nolet and the eventual game-winning score from Brian Keane. James Marcou capped the game off with an empty net score in the last 40 seconds to tally a goal in his second straight contest. Dainton finished the night with 35 saves and picked up his fourth victory of the season.

UMass will look to get back on track Friday when it hosts Niagara at the Mullins Center.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

WANT TO WRITE FOR SPORTS?
Contact Jeffrey R. Larnard at
SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass in danger of not making A-10's her final game at Rudd Field. She tallied two saves in 45 minutes of action, including a key stop on a two-on-one fast break. She also stopped a shot by sophomore Liza Koch near the four-minute mark.

SOCCER from page 8

Richmond came close to taking a 1-0 lead nearly 16 minutes in, but a shot by sophomore Emily Dale was high and hit the crossbar. The Minutewomen had several chances to increase their lead in the first half, but Sydney Stoll, DiOrio, and Yelinek sent open shots sailing over the crossbar. Junior Therese Smith attempted the only shot of the second half for UMass.

Freshman Emily Cota took over in net in the second half and finished off the shutout with two saves.

"It was one of the best, most complete games we've played all year," Napoli said. "It was nice to see (the seniors) come out well on the last day. Senior day is always tough. They were focused from beginning all the way to the end."

Luckey and fellow seniors Cristina Adams, Katie Ruggles and Jacquelyn Desjardins were honored with a pregame ceremony for Senior Day.

"It's usually hard to win both games on Friday and Sunday," Ruggles said, "but we did and it's a great way to leave Rudd Field, which is a home away from home."

In Friday's match up versus George Washington, Stoll came up big in crunch time and provided the game's only goal. With less than five minutes to play, the redshirt junior tucked a kick in behind the goal keeper off of a rebound. She was assisted by Smith and Yelinek.

Like yesterday's match up against Richmond, Friday's effort was dominated by defense. The Minutewomen attempted eight shots, with Smith and Stoll firing the only two that were on goal. The duo finished the regular season tied for the team lead with five goals apiece, with Smith also tallying a team-high 13 points.

"After our game on Friday, there was one thing I noted," Napoli said of her defense. "There were three or four chances in the box that honestly, at the beginning of the season, would have been goals. They fought hard and got on the end of loose balls and they definitely have picked it up."

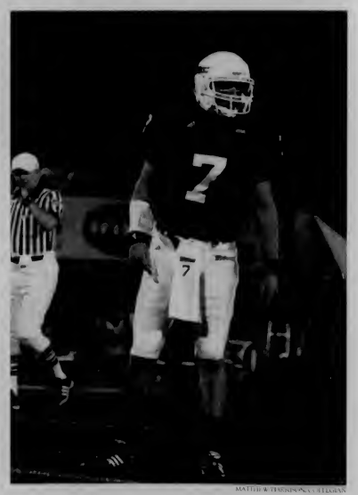
Luckey, Adams, Ruggles, Desjardins and the Minutewomen return to action on Thursday night against third-seeded Fordham to conclude first-round play. The Rams defeated the Minutewomen 3-2 in double-overtime on Oct. 11 and finished the season with a 6-4-0 conference record (7-11-1 overall).

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen remain winless on the road

FOOTBALL from page 1

gave UMass the lead halfway through the second quarter on a 1-yard run to end an 11-play, 77-yard drive, but Maine took the lead back after a Havens interception by Donte Dennis, his first of two picks in the game.



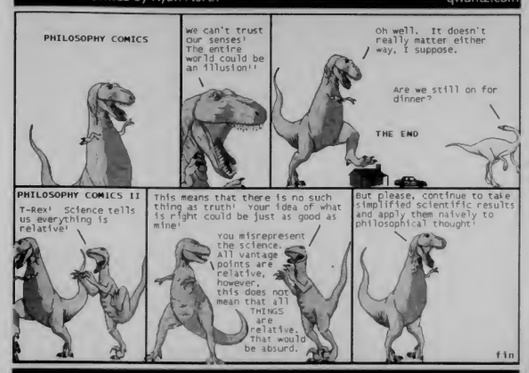
Quarterback Warren Smith found Terrell Jones with one minute, four seconds left in the first half on a fade route in the endzone a few plays later to put Maine back on top going into the locker room, 10-7.

Despite Woodward returning under center for the second half, UMass' offense still struggled against Maine's defense, turning the ball over four times in the second half for a total of six in the game. Early in the third quarter, Hernandez dropped a pitch from Woodward and the ball was recovered by the Black Bears on UMass 23-yard line. The fumble would lead to a 32-yard field goal and a 13-10 lead by Maine.

Smith rushed into the endzone from 5-yards out to extend the lead, but not by as much as the Black Bears wanted too. Maine attempted a two-point conversion to make the lead 14 and it a two-touchdown game, but instead Smith threw across his body and was intercepted by Ke'Mon Bailey who returned the ball the length of the field to give UMass the two points instead.

Woodward attempted to bring the Minutemen back, but threw two late interceptions to give the game to the Blackbears. Woodward was 14-of-27 for 134 yards in the game and Havens finished the first half going 7-of-12 for 99 yards.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.



Senior Scott Woodward calls out play against Albany earlier this year. The quarterback repalced Kyle Havens in the second half of Saturday's loss.

COMICS

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com

Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com

Wondermark by David Malki! — wondermark.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees — mnftiu.cc

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro — travisdandro.com

"How to Play Poker" Basic Instructions by Scott Meyer — basicinstructions.net

HOROSCOPES by Shom Tullivan

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
You can't build a house with flapjacks.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Six times a day; six glasses of milk.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Stasis is death.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
Charles Mingus wrote a pamphlet about conditioning his cat to mess in the toilet.

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
My sister does that, too.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
HV4708 .A25 1990

leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
Don't worry about your courage today, little cat.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
Don't let your meretricious desires impinge upon amorous practices.

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
A book burned is a book earned; a CD burned might not work in your Discman.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Tongues are merely for the ears.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
Horseshoes: play or trot.

capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Adjust the aperature of your new orifice if the discomfort continues.

Brewster Rockitt: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Leold www.leold.com
by Roger and Salem Salloom© 1997

I had this girlfriend for a short while but she was beyond me. She was more sensitive and more intelligent. I couldn't figure out what she was thinking.

I just couldn't keep up.

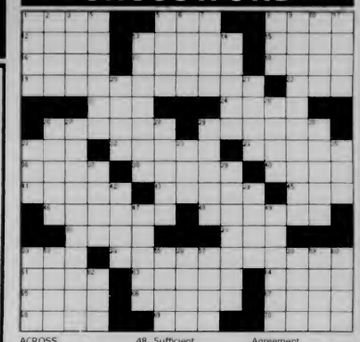
I did small-minded, narrow, stupid, mean things.

I'm ashamed of myself.

She was related to a famous classical composer, Mendelsohn.

It could have been a match if she was stupider and less sensitive.

I had a different girlfriend later on who pretended to be stupid and insensitive. I really appreciated that.



We stayed together a long time.

SUDOKU

			9			8	2
		6	4
5		1
	2		6			3	4
4				9			6
8	3					2
3			2		4	1
			5		7		8

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Suspend in the air
5. Bar bill
8. Basilica area
12. Away from the wind
13. Special Forces cap
15. Jump
16. Wander
17. Powerful light beam
18. Coastal raptor
19. Wayfaring
22. Golf ball support
23. Grandmother (British)
24. Distinctive atmosphere
26. Pranks
29. Skillful
31. Exist
32. Blabs
34. One who gives
36. Fluff from a dryer
38. Poisonous
40. Novice
41. An award, usually for bravery
43. Like some currents
45. Arrest
46. Angel
48. Sufficient
50. Nil
51. Horse of a dull brownish grey color
52. Actress Tyler
54. Ramshackle
61. Ancient Biblical kingdom
63. French for "Room"
64. A digestive juice
65. Chimney channel
66. S S S S
67. Loyal
68. Exam
69. Turf
70. Feudal worker

DOWN
1. Angelic instrument
2. Found in skin lotion
3. Close
4. A US spacecraft (1960's)
5. Nipple
6. Backside
7. Red vegetable
8. Beer
9. Concerning
10. Rational
11. Sword
13. Cover
14. Threesome 20. Agreement
21. Coagulated milk
25. Part of the plant in the soil
26. Attempts
27. Tryst
28. Indolence
29. Comment to the audience
30. Pentateuch
31. Donation
33. Sixty-one in Roman numerals
35. Steal
37. Container weight
39. Confections 42. Piecrust ingredient
44. Not quiet
47. Assuredness
49. Incapable
52. Departed
53. Doing nothing
55. Glasgow gal
56. As well
57. Begged
58. Neckwear
59. Flair
60. Expunge
62. Encountered

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Movie Extras, Actors, Models Wanted - Up to $300/day! All Looks Needed! Call NOW 1-800-458-9303

WANTED

Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers Wanted. Must be able to work 20 hrs/week including one weekend night. Apply at D.P. Dough, Downtown Amherst

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tournament bound

Cher King chases after a loose ball in a contest last season. The senior has battled injuries this season but exploded for four goals in UMass' 6-3 win over La Salle on Friday.

Junior Therese Smith settles a ball in UMass' 1-0 win over Richmond on Sunday. Smith's five goals are tied for the team high and her three assists and 13 points are the best on the team.

UMass snatches No. 4, final seed in A-10's

By Pete Vasquez
Collegian Staff

The No. 19 Massachusetts field hockey team claimed its seat in the Atlantic 10 Conference Championship this weekend by following a 6-3 victory over La Salle on Friday with a 6-0 win against West Chester on Sunday.

UMass 6	UMass 6
W. Chester 0	La Salle 3

After an offensive showcase secured the two wins that the Minutewomen needed to qualify, the defending conference champions will take the field next weekend when they host this year's conference championship at Garber Field.

"It's extremely satisfying [to make the conference tournament]. It's something that you need to do when you're hosting your own tournament," UMass coach Justine Sowry said. "Even though it was in the back of my mind, I just had to keep the team focused on one day at a time and what we needed to do to win each game. I thought it was some of our best hockey played yet."

Cher King and Katie Kelly each collected hat tricks over the weekend, with King scoring four goals against La Salle and Kelly scoring three times on West Chester. This is the third year that King and Kelly have commanded the forward positions together. UMass outscored its opponents 12-3 over the weekend.

The weekend did not begin well for the Minutewomen as La Salle scored one minute into Friday's contest. UMass proceeded to score the next four goals, all courtesy of King's stick, and eventually outlasted the Explorers. Sowry said she was pleased with the offense after Friday's win but the team still needed to improve their reward."

UMass and Richmond combined for 23 shots on Sunday, with only one proving to be the difference. Midway through the 36th minute, sophomore Lauren Yelinek scored her first goal of the season. Freshman Meredith Fox brought down a serve-in by sophomore Lindsey DiOrio, with Yelinek flicking it past the goalie and giving UMass the only goal it needed. The assist gave DiOrio the first point of her collegiate career.

Senior Lauren Luckey started her third consecutive game in net for UMass and had a strong showing in

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Weekend victories send UM into conference championships

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team surged into the Atlantic 10 Championship hunt after qualifying for the conference tournament for the first time since 2004, with a shutout victory over Richmond on Senior Day.

The Minutewomen (6-10-2, 5-6-0 A-10) entered the weekend as long shots to make the postseason, but used a pair of 1-0 victories to ascend from the cellar to the sixth seed in the tournament. The defense stepped up in the clutch and proved to be a deciding factor in the team's victories over George Washington (7-8-4, 4-5-2 A-10) and Richmond (8-10-2, 4-6-1 A-10).

UMass 1	UMass 1
Richmond 0	GW 0

"It's a great reward for these kids," UMass coach Angela Napoli said after earning a playoff berth. "They have been working hard since preseason and we've been pushing them hard. They've worked hard since the beginning and it's just great to see them get their reward."

Senior Lauren Luckey started her third consecutive game in net for UMass and had a strong showing in

See SOCCER on page 6

Junior James Marcou looks to fire a shot past a defenders stick against BU earlier this season. Marcou had a goal and two assists over the weekend.

Minutemen split 2 with PC

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

On Halloween weekend, the Massachusetts hockey team split a home-and-home series with Providence and had its hopes of remaining undefeated foiled by Friars' goalie Alex Beaudry.

Providence 2	UMass 1
UMass 5	Providence 3

The sophomore recorded a career-high 47 saves and outplayed the No. 17 Minutemen goaltender Paul Dainton who recorded 26 saves and allowed only two goals in Saturday's 2-1 contest.

After dropping the game the night before at home, the Friars came out of the gates strong, picking up a goal from Kyle MacKinnon six minutes, 15 seconds into the game. UMass (4-1-0, 3-1-0 Hockey East) outshot Providence (4-2-0, 1-1-0 HEA), 15-10 in the opening period, but Beaudry deflected every shot the Minutemen threw at him.

Midway through the second period, the Friars extended their lead to two goals with a score from Matt Bergland. Thanks to a Providence penalty, UMass received a chance to get on the board towards the end of frame, but had opportunities stopped by the unyielding Beaudry.

Finally breaking through, the Minutemen closed the gap to one on a power play in an attempt to make a comeback in the third period. Matt Irwin scored his second goal of the weekend series, giving him a score in seven of the previous eight games dating back to last season. This season, 11 of UMass' 19 goals have come through power-play situations.

The comeback would stop there, however, as Beaudry was unrelenting and stymied the Minutemen the rest of the game, almost singlehandedly serving UMass its first loss of the season.

"I thought [Beaudry] saw the puck extremely well, there were a lot of point shots," Providence coach Tim Army said after the win. "I think he found his way through traffic real well and I don't think he gave them a lot of second opportunities."

UMass coach Don Cahoon wasn't impressed with his team's effort and felt they didn't play tough enough to win.

"We weren't up to the task of meeting them head on and for two periods we floated around and played at the end of our sticks," he said. "We didn't play as hard and determined and gritty, as I like to say, as we need to."

Beaudry rebounded after allowing a season-high five goals, including three in the third period the night before in a 5-3 loss.

On Friday in Providence, the Minutemen overcame a 3-2 deficit heading into the final period by scoring three unanswered goals.

Schneider Arena's smaller ice surface proved to not be a challenge for UMass early on, with the first goal of the game coming seven minutes into the first period. With a crowd of players in front of Beaudry, the Minutemen were able to capitalize

See HOCKEY on page 6

Offense falters in loss to SBU

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

On Friday, sophomore Sam DeNormandie showed his offensive accuracy and timely play to avoid another overtime game while he gave the Massachusetts men's soccer team a 2-1 victory over Duquesne.

SBU 1	Duquesne 1
UMass 0	UMass 2

In their last home game of the year, there was nothing they could do to achieve (6-6-3, 3-4-0 Atlantic 10) a similar result as they lost to St. Bonaventure, 1-0, on Sunday.

The loss drops UMass to 10th in the A-10 standings and it is in jeopardy of missing the postseason entirely for the first time since 2006. This weekend's results put the Minutemen three points behind Rhode Island and means they have to win both games against George Washington and Richmond next weekend in order to advance.

The SBU attack overwhelmed the Minutemen in the first half with an 8-2 advantage in shots. The Bonnies (9-6, 5-2 A-10) eventually converted on one of those opportunities as the game-winning shot came in the 31st minute.

Sam Mahieu gave a pass to Joe Miller, who crossed the ball in the 18-yard box to Savarino, who put the shot in towards the center cross bar as it bounced over the goal line.

"We got beat to the ball, and that doesn't take skill to do that," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "That's effort, and I give them credit. They came to play today."

SBU finished the game outshooting UMass, 14-9, but the Minutemen gained momentum in the second half and nearly tied the game up. In the 80th minute, midfielder Ben Arikian had a shot hit the post, but came back to forward Chris Rowsess whose shot was blocked by a Bonnie defender.

"We did some good things to get ourselves in some good situations and unfortunately we didn't finish and we have to finish those chances to win games," Koch said.

Despite another disappointing 1-0 loss, UMass can at least look at Friday's win over the Dukes for some optimism, since that game still gives it some chance of making the A-10 Tournament.

Arikian got the Minutemen on the board in the 13th minute of play after Rowsess sent a cross towards the box to junior Matt Hess who got the ball to Arikian on a header. The goal is the junior's third of the season, tying him with senior Mark DeSantis as the team's leader in scoring.

However, Duquesne would not go away easily. After several close calls, the Dukes finished on an opportunity in the 74th minute when Alex Trujillo booted a shot from 10 yards outside the goal in the upper left hand corner to tie the game at one.

"We got beat to the ball, and that doesn't take skill to do that," UMass

Several Minutemen celebrate after a goal in UMass' 2-1 victory over Duquesne. UMass currently sits in 10th place in the Atlantic 10 standings.

closing minutes as the offense applied pressure on the Dukes' defense. Midfielder Chris Vaccaro sent a cross to DeNormandie who hit his second goal of the season.

DeNormandie had another opportunity at the net, but went down on a foul by the Dukes to give UMass a penalty kick with 11 seconds left.

Arikian took the free kick that would've given his team a two-goal advantage, but Duquesne goalkeeper Chris Torres prevented the Hermann candidate from scoring his fourth goal of the season.

UMass hits the road next weekend for two do-or-die matches as the regular season wraps up. Both teams, Richmond and George Washington, stand below the .500 mark.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com

Kellogg leads Super Sunday at Mullins

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

By the end of Super Sunday, Derek Kellogg wanted fans to become familiar with a team that has more fresh faces than veterans. The Massachusetts men's basketball coach used every chance possible to make sure that happened.

After the entire team was introduced, the Minutemen went into layup lines as Kellogg went into details about each one of his players. He commented on his expectations or explained a little bit about their backgrounds.

Kellogg stressed that he felt UMass wasn't only going to be a good basketball team, but also a team who would make the surrounding community proud.

"When you see them on campus and when you see them on the community, they really are a great bunch of guys," Kellogg said during his opening speech.

The afternoon also featured a dunk contest, which ended when freshman Raphiael Putney landed a dunk over a hunched over Javorn Farrell to beat out guard Freddie Riley.

Unlike Midnight Madness from previous years, the Minutemen held a competitive 20 minute scrimmage as Kellogg instructed his players on the microphone and at the same time tried to interact with the fans.

Kellogg made jokes about his players making mistakes, but also praised their work ethic and willingness to improve.

"What I know is I have is a great bunch of [players] who are working hard and really they're trying to do anything I ask them to do, which is all you can ask of a team," Kellogg said. "Now I have got to continue to push them and get them better."

As much as he is encouraged about his team for the upcoming year, he knows that even a closed scrimmage yesterday against Boston University was more of an indicator than he's had so far of how good UMass will be.

Out of 15 players currently on the roster, eight of them have never put on a uniform for the Minutemen. Another one (Trey Lang) hasn't played a Division I college basketball game since the 2007-08 season.

"I really don't know how good we are yet," Kellogg said. "We haven't been able to play against anyone besides ourselves."

The first time the 2009-10 Minutemen step on the court will be on Saturday against Dowling, although they don't start the regular season until Friday Nov. 13 against Central Florida.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@dailycollegian.com.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 57 LOW: 30 www.DailyCollegian.com TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2009

Speaker to explain life of disabled

By Christa Romano
Collegian Staff

In a speech to be held this week titled "A Life Beyond Compare: Disability, Normalcy and Transformation," Norman Kunc will discuss the habitual ways that society perceives peoples with disabilities. Kunc (pronounced Koonz) will be advocating that society needs to include people with disabilities as a part of human diversity so that they may begin to be recognized as valued and contributing citizens.

Kunc's speech will be held Wednesday, Nov. 4 at 7:30 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium at Mount Holyoke College. This free event is open to the public, is handicapped accessible and will have a sign language interpreter present throughout. The speech should run for about an hour and will include a question-answer session at the end.

Kunc will be speaking from his own personal experiences as someone who was born with Cerebral Palsy, a non-curable disease that inhibits physical body movement and muscle coordination, often resulting in stiff or tight muscles and exaggerated reflexes. Because of his disability, Kunc attended a segregated school until grade seven. It was upon his integration into a regular

See DISABILITY on page 3

Chalk art work of protestors, not pranksters

Graduate students protest their required gym fees attached to the new recreation center at the University of Massachusetts by drawing messages in chalk outside of Whitmore Administrative Building.

Mass. may gain public law school

University of Massachusetts talks about creating public law school

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts recently reentered discussions to add a public law school nearly four years after a similar proposal was approved by the Board of Trustees only to be rejected several months later by the state higher education board.

Trustees approved the addition of Southern New England School of Law (SNESL) to the UMass system in late 2004, a measure which would have removed Massachusetts from a list of six states in the country without a public law school. However, amid controversy, higher education officials voted against approving the plan the following spring.

Last month, the idea was revived when Dartmouth-based SNESL offered to discuss a potential donation of its assets to the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth.

Under the terms of the possible donation, expressed in an Oct. 5 letter from the law school's Board of Trustees Chair Margaret D. Xifaras to University President Jack M. Wilson, UMass would receive a total offer valued at $22.6 million between cash assets and the law school's campus that now houses 235 students, according to a statement from University officials.

Wilson said in the statement the University would launch a comprehensive review process of what he called "a very generous offer."

He said he has asked officials at UMass Dartmouth to review the relevant academic, financial and legal issues and to put forward a proposal based on SNESL's donation letter. Wilson added that UMass system officials would then engage in an extensive due-diligence review process.

UMass Dartmouth Chancellor Jean F. MacCormack, who described the potential donation offer as "extraordinarily generous," said in the statement, "We have a wonderful chance to expand higher education opportunity in Massachusetts by accepting this historic donation and

See LAW on page 2

Pasquerella appointed president

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Lynn Pasquerella, the current provost at the University of Hartford and a doctor of philosophy specializing in medical ethics, was named the 18th president of Mount Holyoke College at a specially convened Board of Trustees meeting on October 31.

Pasquerella was the unanimous pick of a 16-member search committee and will begin her tenure at Mt. Holyoke at the start of next July.

Pasquerella was introduced Monday at a Chapin Auditorium ceremony, marked by the school's tradition of ringing its historic Mary Lyon bells.

A Connecticut native, Pasquerella is a 1980 magna cum laude graduate of the all-women's college in South Hadley, making her return in this administrative role a personal one.

In a Monday release, Media Relations Associate Mary Jo Curtis described Pasquerella's appointment as a full-circle progression, calling the decision to name her president "the culmination of a career in higher education that began more than 25 years ago."

Pasquerella, a first-generation college student, followed her degree from Mount Holyoke with a Ph.D. in philosophy from Brown University.

Leslie Anne Miller, a 1973 Mount Holyoke graduate and the chair of the Board of Trustees, called Pasquerella the embodiment of Mount Holyoke's ideals and representative of a new generation of university presidents.

"Lynn represents the ideal of a Mount Holyoke education," said Miller in the school's statement.

"She embodies academic excellence, leadership and a deep-seated commitment to the liberal arts and educational access," she continued. "She is in the vanguard of a new generation of academic leaders who are taking the helm at a time of great challenge and opportunity for top liberal arts colleges."

Pasquerella's rise to a top position in academia has been swift. She served from 1985 to 2004 as a professor of philosophy at the University of Rhode Island before she was chosen to serve as the associate dean of URI's graduate school. In 2006, she ascended higher into URI's graduate programs, when she was named vice provost for research and dean of the graduate school.

In 2008, Pasquerella moved west a state, as she was tabbed to be the University of Hartford's provost and chief academic officer.

Pasquerella stayed in Hartford since her March, 2008 appointment at Hartford, and will now move north to South Hadley to lead her alma mater.

In addition to her work as a college administrator, Pasquerella has been published in various academic journals and publications.

In 2002, she co-wrote Ethical Issues in Home Health Care with Rosalind Ladd and Sherri Smith, and in 1986

See PASQUERELLA on page 3

UMass sweeps Stony Brook meet

By Daniel Herberholz
Collegian Correspondent

Both the men's and women's swim teams placed first and second in the 200-yard medley relay to open the day against Stony Brook on Saturday. The dual meet eventually resulted in victories of 193-101 for the men and 180-115 for the women.

The wins – the first sweep of the season – puts both teams at 2-1 on the year.

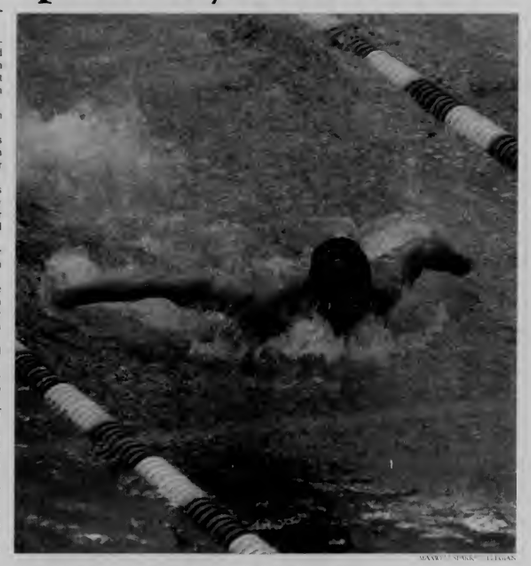
"This [win] was a step up for the team," women's coach Bob Newcomb said. Men's coach Russ Yarworth agreed, saying the men are "learning how to pace their races."

Juniors Max Butler, Brian Schmidt and Chris Howard joined senior Juan Moliere for the relay victory (1:35.84). Senior Mike Beethaume led Trevor Ziegler and freshmen Beau Garufi and Sasan Tehrani to second place (1:38.18).

Freshman Amina Meho anchored juniors Jennifer Corriveau, Jessica Staroselec and sophomore Sarah Kanellas to a first-place time of 1:50.73.

Junior Gillian Bank opened for the second-place team, followed by freshmen Lauren Mark and Erin Phinney. Junior Katie English out-touched Kelsey Straus at the wall to finish at 1:55.03 – just .20 of a second ahead of Stony Brook's first finisher.

Elizabeth Walsh joined Corriveau, Kanellas and Meho for the top 400-yard freestyle relay time (3:38.26).



Bank earned her first win of the season in the 100-yard backstroke, riding the fastest split of her career to beat junior Walsh, 1:01.17 to 1:01.68.

"That was a phenomenal swim," Newcomb said of Bank's win.

The women swept the 100-yard breaststroke, with Rachel Borden (1:07.78), Staroselec (1:08.62) and Meghan Nowak (1:09.78) taking first, second and third, respectively.

On Saturday, three other women took first in two races each.

Meho (53.41) out-touched Stony Brook's Darcy Heuser (53.76) for a 100-yard freestyle win and also won the 50-yard freestyle with a time of 24.34, followed by Corriveau at 25.10. Newcomb called Meho

The men's swimming and diving team defeated Stony Brook, 193-101, to move to 2-1 on the season. UMass will next take on Binghamton over the weekend in another home meet.

See SWIMMING on page 5

ARTS & LIVING

Breakfast with a side of Orange

The Breakfast scrambles up a savory musical feast for fans, blending jazz, funk and psychedelic rock in a style that is strictly appetizing.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

Cross Country places in top 3

The Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams performed well this weekend, placing second and third, respectively, in the Atlantic 10 Conference Championships.

SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Dan Rahrig takes a look at Chancellor Holub's plan to attract out-of-state students and raise $4 million by 2020.

SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com

Every week the Web site will be hosting a new poll for students to share their opinions about occurrences on campus.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 39

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief William McGuinness
Managing Editor S.P. Sullivan
Business Manager Daniel Jette
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kirsten Swenson
Advertising Manager Michael Tortorici
Advertising Production Max Dorner
Arts & Living Editor Shayna Murphy
Comics Editor Annie Keithline
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor Nick Bush
Sports Editor Jeffrey R. Larnard
Web Editor Brian Wood
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
IT Manager Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Nicole Jacinto
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Katelyn Tamilio
Asst. Arts & Living Justin Gagnon
Asst. Arts & Living Elyse Horowitz
Asst. Arts & Living Cal Sconnell
Assistant Comics Andrew Witts
Assistant Editorial Michael Phillis
Assistant Editorial Hannah Nelson
Assistant News Samuel Butterfield
Assistant News Alyssa Creamer
Assistant News Jenn Heshion
Assistant Sports David Brinch
Assistant Sports Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Sports Adam Miller
Assistant Photo Maxwell Spurr
Assistant Photo Samantha Webber
Assistant Multimedia Sara Cody
Assistant Multimedia Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Chelsea Whitton

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Dan Centola

Noveck explains 'open government'

By Angela Hilsman
Collegian Staff

The United States Deputy Chief Technology Officer for Open Government Dr. Beck Noveck, gave a lecture at the University of Massachusetts on Friday, Oct. 30, about President Barack Obama's Open Government policy.

On Jan. 21, Obama issued the "Memorandum on Transparency and Open Government," and Noveck presented information on his policy to a full audience in the Isenberg School of Management's room 108.

Noveck's presentation was titled "Open Government- Transparency, Participation, and Collaboration," and during her 40-minute lecture, Noveck expanded on the progress of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), which is represented on the Open Government Website found at www.whitehouse.gov/open.

The lecture began with Noveck defining what the Obama administration's meaning behind an "open government" is by saying that it allows information and ideas to shift openly between government and citizens, without the secrecy of previous administrations. "When we talk about transparency," she said, we mean "to engender greater and improved citizen involvement and participation."

Noveck explained that Obama's campaign for change is moving forward. She said that the government is ready to trust, collaborate and "[work] with the American public in new ways." To do this, Noveck stressed the importance of technology use.

Noveck reiterated at times that developed technology can be used to make government better. She added further details about how technology can improve government, and can be found in her book published in 2009 titled "Wiki Government: How Technology Can Make Government Better, Democracy Stronger, and Citizens More Powerful."

Within the lecture, Noveck dove into an explanation of the White House's new Website found at www.whitehouse.gov/open. Noveck explained that the Website will allow citizens to participate more in their government's decision making. Noveck says that the site is designed to "tap [the] intelligence and expertise" of U.S. citizens.

On the Website, citizens can leave commentary, review bills and get a first-hand look at the on-goings of the White House. Noveck says the government is aimed at serving the people, and there is no better way to do that than to have them participate in government.

Greater details about the progress of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) is also represented on this Web site.

The Open Government Web site is not fully finished, said Noveck, explaining that "what's new to government is old to industry." But, it does currently offer three phases for citizens to explore.

Phase One is "Brainstorming." According to the website, this area allows people to "share ideas and recommendations on how to make government more open." Phase Two, titled "Discuss," permits people to "dig deeper on the ideas and challenges identified during the Brainstorm phase." While Phase Three, "Draft," says "collaborate on crafting constructive proposals to address challenges from the 'Discussion' phase."

Each phase links to separate Websites. Phase One leads to "Open Government Dialogue," run by the National Academy of Public Administration. However, Phase Two directs citizens to a blog run by the Office of Science & Technology Policy (the OSTP Blog). Finally, Phase Three guides people to mixedink.com, which allows people to write and rate comments about listed issues.

The "Memorandum on Transparency and Open Government" was the Obama administration's first executive memorandum. According to Noveck, it works because there is an underlying belief that the government can trust the American people and that citizen input is essential to running a government that serves the people.

Noveck said the Website gives citizens the "ability to scrutinize information in ways that we've never been able to do before." She added that by giving the public access to raw data, mistakes are more likely to be found.

In addition, Noveck says that Federal IT Dashboard is "building a culture of accountability." By posting raw data, it forces chief information officers (CIOs) to improve what works and discard what doesn't.

This idea of Open Policy-making is crucial, said Noveck, because it is "trying to create a culture where citizen engagement becomes the norm." She adds that this notion is possible. "The tools are out there," said Noveck.

One main concern, says Noveck, is the possibility of sacrificing security. She stresses that sharing information is important in order to create open government, but once it's online, anyone has access to it. Therefore, progress can be slow. Noveck also says that "the more information you provide, the more information people ask for," proposing more questions and requests. This also can slow things down.

"You should be dumbfounded that work isn't done this way that could be done this way," said Noveck, referring to the newly designed government-citizen connection. "You should be even more dumbfounded that we still have a long way to go."

"You have to believe that change is a good thing," said Noveck. "Government's not going away. You can't get rid of it and replace it with something else. That's why we have to innovate inside out."

Noveck is the first to hold the recently created deputy chief technology officer for open government position.

Angela Hilsman can be reached at ahilsman@student.umass.edu.

Southern New England School of Law may donate its assets to the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth to create the first public law school in Mass.

Plans for UMass School of Law resurface for Board of Trustees building an innovative public law school that offers an excellent and affordable education for students."

LAW from page 1

According to the statement from University officials, Xifaras wrote in her letter, "Our aspiration and objective is to resource and empower the University to carry forward with our historic mission and commitment to provide affordable, accessible and excellent legal education to a diverse group of students who might not otherwise have this opportunity."

When the proposal to add a public law school was last being considered several years ago, Suffolk University Law School and New England School of Law, two private law schools, were among the idea's most-vocal opponents, and some accused members of the state Board of Higher Education – who voted 8 to 3 against adding a public law school – of conspiring with private law schools in Massachusetts to block the measure.

Under the terms of the proposal rejected in 2005, the University of Massachusetts School of Law – as it would have been called – would have been self-supporting, meaning that no state funds and no UMass revenue, with the exception of the funds generated by the law school itself, would have been used to support the law school's operations.

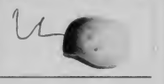
SNESL has state and regional accreditation, and the previous proposal said the school would have sought national accreditation from the American Bar Association.

In 2004, the law school's tuition was $19,000 a year and officials said that tuition level would not be lowered, had the measure been approved. SNESL students currently pay around $21,800 annually for tuition.

In the prior plan, Wilson had called for academic collaborations between the public law school and each of the University's five campuses, including Amherst.

Other states without public law schools include nearby Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont, along with Delaware. Alaska has no private or public law schools.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.



Foxtrotting at the FAC

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The University of Massachusetts Ballroom Dance Club practices various ballroom dance moves, such as the foxtrot, in the lobby of the Fine Arts Center every Monday at 7 p.m. The two dancers on the far right, clapping to the beat, are dance instructors Assaad Lynn and Jacquie Lachevre.

your week ahead on
MASSDAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEWS

VIDEO | Governor's Visit
UMass students prompted Governor Deval Patrick at Young Adult Community Meeting in the Student Union.

POLL | Swine Flu Skiiving
This week's poll question is 'Are students going to skip class by saying they have swine flu?'

APARTMENTS | End search
Hate your roommate? Hate your Resident Assistant? Move out of the dorms and into Amherst by using MDC's new apartment finder feature

SLIDESHOW| Jay-Z
Relive Jay-Z's performance in the Mullins Center by checking out Matthew Harrison's slideshow of the event

Follow Us!

Have a Twitter account? Then follow us at collegianews. Get breaking news updates and links to your news on MassDailyCollegian.com.

Facebook us!
While you're online, stop Facebook stalking your friends and friend us! Search 'Daily Collegian'

Want to learn multimedia tricks?
E-mail:
news@dailycollegian.com

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Mount Holyoke College will host a lecture by Norman Kunc, who sends out a message to the community to accept those with disabilities as contributing members of society.

Talk argues 'disabilities are not deficiencies' at Mount Holyoke high school that he realized his desire to change the general view society has of disabled people.

DISABILITY from page 1

Kunc is now a well-known advocate in the disability rights community worldwide. This year alone he has lectured on disability rights in many states all over the country from California to New Hampshire. He has gone as far Egypt and South Africa to speak at conferences on the matter.

"He has the ability to capture everyone in the audience. He really is an excellent and very funny storyteller," said Emma Fialka-Feldman, a Mount Holyoke student who proposed that Kunc speak to her five-college classmates after remembering a moving speech she had seen Kunc deliver years ago.

"There's a story that he told about going to a therapist," Fialka-Feldman said. "They made him exercise by walking up and down these stairs, and he thought, 'Why am I walking up these stairs? They don't go anywhere. Why don't I walk up some stairs that will be useful?' He evaluates how therapists should help people with disabilities and why are we trying to help them in the first place."

Kunc is not only a public speaker on the matter of disability rights but is also the founder of BroadReach, a company based out of western Canada with a mission statement to help individuals with disabilities and their families live rich and meaningful lives in their communities.

"The big idea is that disabilities are not deficiencies," Fialka-Feldman said about Kunc's message. "He says that it is something that people need to overcome and that there are ways of valuing people with disabilities. These are people that we can talk to, that we can build relationships with, and we need to start seeing them as people who do have huge contributions to make."

Along with his message of acceptance, Kunc will be promoting the idea that disability is just an element of human diversity, just as race and gender are elements.

"People with disabilities are everywhere. They are in our families, in classrooms and in residential buildings," Fialka-Feldman said. "I hope that the presentation will help others realize that these are people out there and to start seeing people with disabilities in a new way."

Kunc often likes sum up his view of disabilities by quoting playwright Neil Marcus who once said, "Disability is not a brave struggle or 'courage in the face of adversity.' Disability is an art. It's an ingenious way to live."

Christa Romano can be reached at cromano@student.umass.edu.

Mount Holyoke alum returns to the college as 18th president

PASQUERELLA from page 1

she helped to pen Ethical Dilemmas in Public Administration.

She has also done research on the ethical impact of the Human Genome Project and worked on the Day Kimball Hospital Ethics Board in Putnam, Conn.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

Lynn Pasquerella is the 18th President of Mount Holyoke College.

Pasquerella is presently working as a project leader on a research team for the Africa Center for Engineering Social Solutions, attempting to empower women in AIDS-afflicted parts of Kenya. She also served as an investigator on a National Science Foundation grant to promote careers in science and math for women. Pasquerella said she is gratified to be returning to her old school and looks forward to promoting women's education in the school's release.

"I am honored by this opportunity to return to Mount Holyoke as its 18th president," she said. "I look forward to joining the Mount Holyoke community in pursuit of our common objective: promoting the freedom that lies at the heart of women's education."

University of Hartford President Walter Harrison said that while losing Pasquerella deals a blow to the university's management, he is proud of her advancement.

"Lynn Pasquerella is a powerful intellectual force, a dynamic and compassionate leader, and a charismatic and wonderful human being," he said. "I am as fond of her as anyone I have ever worked with, and our whole community will be devastated that she is leaving after only a year and a half as provost," he continued. "But we are all so very proud of her," he added.

In addition to having attended Mount Holyoke, Pasquerella has present connections to the area; one of her twin 19-year-old sons attends Hampshire College.

Beyond serving as president, Pasquerella will also teach philosophy at Mount Holyoke, as she did at Hartford and Rhode Island.

Pasquerella takes over as president after Joanne Creighton, who had led the college since 1996, stepped down last spring.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sbutterfield@dailycollegian.com

Step it up!

UMass' Insanely Prestigious Step Team trains its newest members in the Hampden entrance. The team is preparing for their hip-hop show during the Black Mass Communication Project night in November.

Never Again: Genocide
from Cambodia to Darfur and Beyond

Three art exhibits and two panel discussions bring us face to face with the mass atrocities of the 20th and 21st centuries

Beyond Genocide, Ending the Silence, The Children of Darfur
Student Union Art Gallery, November 2-13
Opening Reception, Tuesday 11/3 at 5pm
followed by Artist Talks at 6pm

Interfaith Panel Discussion:
Genocide, Reconciliation, Forgiveness, and the Search for Meaning in the Face of Evil
Tuesday, November 3 at 7:30 pm
Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union

Other related events:
Genocide: From Justice to Prevention*, 11/10
Cambodia Remembered*, 11/15

More information at umass.edu/jewish or 413.545.9642

UMASS AMHERST
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Cambodian Students Association, STAND: Student Anti-Genocide Coalition, Western Mass Darfur Coalition, Student Union Art Gallery, GSS, SGA, UMass Arts Council, and the Harold Grinspoon Foundation

Frost your very own cupcake!

YOUR CHANCE TO BE CREATIVE

wednesday, November 4
All Dining commons from 5–9 pm

At worcester DC:
Meet DEDE WILSON,
local author,
tv personality
& pastry chef extraordinaire

UMASS DINING
UMassAmherst
umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

We can all just get along

Eric Magazu

I am a senator in the Student Government Association. Within our student government, there are divisions among various groups of students who represent different interests. Across campus, we have many student groups and organizations that cater to our individual tastes and interests.

What is remarkable to see is that among the groups that are most actively attempting to change hearts and minds, there is remarkable similarity in their end goals. Almost all of these groups are seeking to change humankind, or the campus at least, for the better. Why is it then that many of them seem to oppose one another so harshly? A major reason is that it is inevitable that many of these groups have agendas that point them in contradictory directions.

For one group, their ideal of a harmonious society requires that the goals of another group be halted.

When we interact with various people, we should not view them in the context of our lives but rather in the context of their lives

We know that both Republicans and Democrats want to remake the government and the laws to shape their own view of a productive and just society, but their respective agendas conflict.

The major stumbling block that many activist groups and student leaders face is that we seek to promote our own interests and agenda, but seldom actually go right to the level where it is important, hearing the views of not only students, but our opponents, too.

This is not the standard slogan that we ought to "listen to the voice of the students," but a proposal of a different sort. When we interact with various people we should not view them in the context of our lives but rather in the context of their lives. We should meet people at their level, and precisely where they are. This is the best way to form bonds and friendships, and the most productive way to begin to resolve many issues.

Instead of seeking to place ourselves in a position of an adversarial nature, we should seek to see things as a fellow student sees them. If we are able to do this successfully, we will realize that we are not seeking different things after all. We can begin to work together for the common good.

There is still a major impediment here: why is it that many of us have supposedly found solutions to improve society and humankind, but that our goals appear to conflict with each other? The reason is that most of our initiatives are not addressing our fundamental human nature.

We want to find a special solution that will fix all of our social and economic ills, but these solutions are how many of what today we consider evil ideologies began. These ideologies were honest attempts to improve humanity, but what happened is that they did not take into account the immutable form of human nature. I realize that I am making a strong assertion here, but this, along with the reality of the existence of truth, are two matters that I will stand by to the last.

As much as we hope to create a new world where people are in harmony with one another, the stark truth is that we are a selfish species, and this is not about to change all that quickly.

We may engage in occasional acts of altruism when it suits us, but have any of us truely lived for our fellows?

Doing so could easily bring harm upon us. We are built for self-preservation; there is nothing intrinsically wrong with this.

Before an objection is raised, we only have to take a look at children. As much as we like to think of children as pure and innocent, in reality they are often quite selfish. Even doing our best to minimize outside factors, it appears, at least anecdotally, that children will seek to possess toys. Without external forces, they will be reluctant to share. Children may be quite cute, but they seldom possess genuine altruism. Neither do adults.

The reason all of the ideologies fail is that they seek to transform things by an external means, by a legal code or a rulebook or by placing evil upon the other, but what is truly needed is a transformation from within, and a constant vigilance guarding against our underlying natures.

Even the Bible knows of this tendency, as Deuteronomy 30:6 teaches that it is the human heart that needs transformation, "And the Lord, your God, will circumcise your heart and the heart of your offspring, so that you may love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul, for the sake of your life."

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

Take a look at Holub's plan

Dan Rahrig

The University of Massachusetts has been abuzz over the past couple of weeks with Chancellor Holub's announcement of a new plan to enlarge the school's revenue by increasing the number of out-of-state students who attend each year. Since I'm from Stratford, Connecticut, I was initially very excited about this news. I have often wished that more people from out-of-state attended UMass because we are such a minority on campus. But then I began to think about the repercussions of this plan, and I started wondering if this would really be as economically beneficial to our school as we believe.

Out-of-state undergrads pay twice as much in tuition as in-state students and currently make up approximately 20 percent of the student population. Holub's plan aims to increase the number of out-of state students by 6,500 (to 30 percent) by 2020, while leaving the number of in-state students at approximately 16,000. The University plans to enroll an additional 300 out-of-state students each year, which they predict would bring in an estimated $4 million in additional revenue.

All of this sounds great on paper, but will such an increase in the out-of-state population really bring in as much revenue as the UMass administration is anticipating? It is true that out-of-state students pay more to go here, and it is true that increasing the number of out-of-staters who pay about $31,000 a year would create a lot of additional revenue for the University – but how can we predict that all of the 300 students added each year will be paying full tuition price? These are tough economic times, and the average student from out-of-state will probably not want to pay the additional $10,000 that he would be paying to go to UMass instead of his own state's public university.

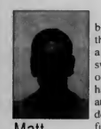
The University plans to enroll an additional 300 out-of-state students each year, which they predict would bring in an estimated $4 million in additional revenue.

The chancellor has already acknowledged that the university will be enticing out-of-state students to attend by offering them financial aid packages or scholarships, both of which would put a dent on the overall profit gained by this student increase, though probably not to the extent where this plan would not be worthwhile.

But then one has to consider the housing issue that will arise from such a significant increase to the student population. This year UMass already seems to have a housing shortage on its hands, with students currently occupying lounges in UMass' dorm buildings and others who were initially unable to get on-campus housing. If we're having this housing problem already, one can imagine the problems that will arise as the student population increases each year. Eventually UMass will have to build new dormitories to house this excess of students – a project that will inevitably cost millions of dollars (as a point of reference, UMass' new recreation center cost approximately $50 million). New dining commons will need to be built as well, since the dining commons UMass currently has can barely accommodate students during the dinner rush. Imagine how much more crowded they will be with thousands of more mouths to feed.

And then, of course, it would be hard to increase the size of the student population by 6,500 people without sacrificing the quality of education that students receive. Such a drastic expansion would make it more difficult for UMass undergrads to get into the classes they want to take – an already frustrating process. The solution, of course, will lie in hiring more teachers and building more academic buildings so that more classes and sections can be offered – even more expenses that the University will have to grapple with down the road.

I'm not trying to suggest that Chancellor Holub's plan to increase the number of out-of-state students at UMass is a bad idea – much to the contrary. I think that the addition of more out-of-staters will eventually make UMass more prestigious, appealing and competitive. As more out-of-state students attend UMass over the years, it will be seen as more of a viable and appealing option for prospective college students, a phenomenon that will undoubtedly increase the average SAT scores and other entrance statistics of applicants. These benefits and others will go a long way in improving UMass' already-impressive standing as one of top schools in the country.



However, I think that these positive effects are somewhat separate from the supposed financial gains that University's administrators are aiming for with this proposal. Though accepting more high-tuition paying students will increase UMass' revenue by millions, much of this gain may end up being spent on financial aid packages for these new students, new housing projects and the hiring of additional faculty.

I am sure that at the end of the day the University will be making a net profit of some sort, but I doubt these gains will be as significant as they are being touted to be, at least not in the short term. Before the University embarks on this ambitious mission, it should probably put in place some sort of plan to accommodate the influx of new students. If they don't, things could get pretty chaotic around campus throughout the next decade of growth and expansion.

Dan Rahrig is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at drahrig@student.umass.edu.

Who is a hero, who is a villain?

Matt Kushi

Heroism can be a strange thing. It's like a double-edged sword. Anything or anyone can have the word attached to their deeds and rightfully so. Yet, how it is perceived in the public eye and by those involved can vastly differ. Rarely is there a clean-cut case where the honor is unanimously bestowed on its recipient.

In January, we watched heroism right before our eyes as a passenger plane that had taken off from LaGuardia Airport in New York City was forced to do an emergency landing on the Hudson River. The pilot of that plane, Chesley Sullenberger, was hailed as a hero by all.

This past week former tennis great Andre Aggasi had excerpts of his upcoming autobiography released. In them, he admitted to taking crystal meth when he was playing professionally. Though he managed to kick the drug habit and become a tennis legend, his heroism in admitting as much has been met with both praise and harsh criticisms.

This past week, there was yet another heroic deed that occurred. However, much like Agassi's case, this action is being called both an act of heroism and an act of unnecessary violence.

On Tuesday, October 27, 2009, a very bizarre and tragic scene played out at Massachusetts General Hospital. The events unfolded this way, according to an article in the Boston Globe.

If you saw a 250-pound man in a rage, with adrenaline flowing, violently stabbing a doctor, what would you do?

The Globe said that Dr. Astrid Desrosiers was attending one of her patients in the Bipolar Clinic and Research Program on the fifth floor of the hospital. The patient, Jay Carciero, attacked Desrosiers with a knife, stabbing her multiple times. A colleague attempted to throw Carciero off of Desrosiers to no avail.

Paul Langone, an off-duty security officer, was on the same floor. A "Special Officer," licensed by the police and authorized to carry a gun and make arrests, but employed by a private company, he saw a situation that required immediate action. Langone allegedly ordered Carciero to stop, but was ignored. Then Langone fired at Carciero several times, hitting him in the chest and head. Carciero died of his injuries.

This is where heroism becomes a double-edged sword. To the hospital staff, Langone is clearly a hero. But for Carciero's family, Langone killed a sick man.

In his attorney's view, Langone acted "rashly", as the Boston Globe quoted him.

Is Paul Langone a hero?

I think he is. I understand that the patient in question had bipolar disorder. But that doesn't excuse attempting to murder someone.

In this case, it is clear that Carciero was a danger to others, attacking a doctor with a knife. Without intervention, Desrosiers would have been killed. As of Oct. 31, she is still in serious condition.

Now many will question the means in which Langone acted. Put yourself in his shoes? What would you have done if you were him? If you saw a 250-pound man in a rage, with adrenaline flowing, violently stabbing a doctor, what would you do? He ordered Carciero to stop, and he didn't.

If Langone had charged and tried to tackle Carciero, would it have done any good? The man was in a rage and that may have given him more time to deliver the fatal stab to Desrosiers. Additionally, a colleague of Desrosiers had already tried that without success.

Langone probably understood this. He did what he was trained to do. Sometimes, deadly force is necessary. Langone shot Carciero to halt the stabbings. He fired several times to make sure that the attacker was subdued.

In a situation like this, one does not have time to aim and go "Ok, a few in the chest and head should do the job." Langone may have known in the vicinity he was aiming, but he likely just fired at will at the man. Langone was trying to prevent a murder and used the force that he felt was necessary per his training to subdue the target.

It is tragic that Carciero died. But perhaps the situation called for it. Is Paul Langone a hero?

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

FIVE REASONS WHY:

Amherst wants to house two former Gitmo detainees

1) ESCALATING TOWN VS GOWN CONFLICT
2) WILL TRIGGER MICHEAL JACKSON'S RESSURECTION
3) NO SEA, NO PIRATES
4) JAY-Z A TOUGH ACT TO FOLLOW

And . . .

5) MEDIA CIRCUS=$$$

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

University of Massachusetts natives The Breakfast hit Northampton Thursday night in celebration of the 11th anniversary of the Fonghoulish Freakout Tour. Smiles abounded as members of The Breakfast performed such bass-driven jams as "Existential Funk," as well as a cover of Michael Jackson's "Billie Jean."

Breakfast with a side of Orange

By Christiana McDougal
Collegian Correspondent

The Iron Horse was abuzz with the sounds of The Breakfast on Thursday night as costumed fans waited outside for the show to begin. It was the 11th anniversary of both their annual Halloween inspired Fonghoulish Freakout Tour and the band's creation. Opening for The Breakfast was UMass' own funk/rock band, Orange Television.

Orange Television's lead singer and guitarist Howie Feibusch, bassist Miles Heffernan and drummer Alex Lombardi tore up the stage with their funk/rock sound. The trio has only been playing together since earlier this year but has quickly advanced to the status of opening for shows such as Sublime tribute band Badfish and The Breakfast. Playing their own original songs as well as a cover of Michael Jackson's "Billie Jean," they swayed the audience into a frenzy of dancing. They were the perfect opening band for The Breakfast, lulling the audience into a wonderful trance of funk-filled bliss.

As soon as The Breakfast set feet on stage, Tim Palmieri (guitar, vocals) modestly said, "It [The Breakfast] all started at UMass, in a dorm called Butterfield" to which a few assumed fellow Butterfielders whistled in approval. They then broke out into a hard-hitting, bass-driven jam. Keyboardist Jordan Giangreco joined in on the costume wearing by walking on stage with a blue afro wig, which was constantly moving throughout the show as he nodded and swayed his head to the music.

The Breakfast demonstrated their extreme talent through their ability to blend jazz, funk and psychedelic rock into various extended jams. They fit nicely into the jam band niche because they can stray from the song, fall into melodic and dreamlike playing styles and then bring it back to the original quick funk/jazz blend with which they had begun. Their effortless communication throughout their performance displayed the members' talent and dedication to their music.

They were able to break away from their solid, classic songs and move into smooth, liquid jams. Building up their songs until a point that it doesn't seem possible to go on before the height of the song was reached, they continued to play. This was unexpectedly but welcomingly done in one song which was suddenly merged into Jimi Hendrix's "Voodoo Chile."

Members of The Breakfast introduced a new song written by bassist Chris DeAngelis, entitled "Existential Funk." It was a powerful bass-driven funk piece that was exquisitely executed through the collaboration of all band members.

Constantly smiling throughout the performance, it was clear that all of the members were having as great a time as the ecstatic, dancing audience was. The positivity of the performance was present both on stage as well as off, and it was apparent that the band is truly happy with what they are doing. DeAngelis, Palmieri, Giangreco and drummer Adrian Tramontano all appeared to be one with their instrument, effortlessly tossing solos back and forth between one another.

Soon returning the focus back to the importance of the Butterfield dormitory, where the band first came together 11 years ago, they decide to dedicate a song to it. "We had a lot of fun [there] in 1998," said Chris DeAngelis. The song they played was just as high energy and funky as any other.

The Breakfast is just as famous for doing covers of entire albums at their shows as they are for creating their own form of music through fusing various genres together. At recent shows, they have played The Beatles' "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band," The Doors' "Morrison Hotel" and Phish's "Lawn Boy." They decided to end the show with The Doors' "Peace Frog," leaving the crowd in awe of their funk-influenced version of the classic song.

It was a tremendous show and demonstrated the talent UMass is capable of producing. The Breakfast will continue touring throughout New England to promote their new album, "Live As Is" until Jan 30th. Already together for 11 years, it appears that The Breakfast may in fact just be getting started rather than winding down, and it can only be assumed that they will continue on with their music just as successfully as they have been thus far.

Christiana McDougal can be reached at cmcdougal@student.umass.edu.

"Heathers" heartthrob Christian Slater enjoys a career resurgance with the new ABC drama, "The Forgotten," but finds that his most satisfying role is as a father and high school graduate.

Troubled actor wipes slate clean, gets GED

By Luaine Lee
McClatchy-Tribune News Service

Actor Christian Slater's long and successful career makes it seem like he never missed out on anything. But there is one thing that passed him by, he says: life.

When he was 27 he'd already worked 18 years. "My life about that time was working and stressing about working. That was pretty much what it was based on. I really didn't know there were other things to do. I had no concept or clue," says Slater in the commissary on the Warner Bros. lot.

"I would work and go home at night and live in this house behind gates, so I was very isolated, very closed off. And I didn't really know how to maneuver within society. I just didn't know how to do it. I felt very insecure and all these things," he says.

"I had other people doing things for me, so what did I know? You start to strip away a lot of those things, and you show up for life and be a little more present and have some adventures."

Slater's father was an actor and his mom a casting agent. He'd started working at 9. And though he's had some minor run-ins with the law, Slater is one child actor who managed to morph into an adult performer with validated credits like "Heathers," "Broken Arrow," "True Romance" and his new ABC drama, "The Forgotten."

The series is based on real American volunteers who devote their time to researching unknown murder victims, John and Jane Does, who end up in the morgue without identification. Once the police have exhausted their resources, the team takes over helping to identify these nameless souls, but also helping to solve the crimes.

It's another project in which Slater deeply immerses himself. But at 40, there's more to him than the next performance.

"I'm still shy and I get nervous," he ventures, "I'm definitely not walking around like Superman ... The pendulum swings to extremes. It's a process of finding out where you feel comfortable and where the balance is.

"I don't have a lot of friends. I have a few friends. I have people in my life I count on who are phenomenally loyal and have my back. When you have that, it helps you to feel safer, more secure and you're with people that think in a similar way that you do. That's a real gift. In the last few years I've been blessed with that kind of gift – to have people like that in my life."

One of his wake-up calls was the birth of his son and later, a daughter. "That was a huge eye-opening, shifting moment," he says, sipping from a Styrofoam coffee mug.

"Having kids, I think I started to look at my life and take some notice of it and started to ask myself, in a way maybe interviewing myself, 'What are the things you're insecure about, the things you don't feel good about in yourself?'"

One of those things was his education. "I always felt a little embarrassed about that because I dropped out of high school. I didn't take school seriously at all. I pretty much finagled and felt like I was getting away with murder my whole high school. And I always carried that around. And you can't escape certain things; it weighs on you, especially when you know there's something you can do about it."

So Slater hired a tutor and studied for the GED, which he earned. "Once you have kids, obviously I want them to get a good education and have a good foundation. It is important, a good foundation, and I don't think it was anything I took seriously because I was working. My kids are 10 and 8 now and I started earning a living at 9 so my focus was obviously elsewhere. It just was. But you can only run from things for so long."

As the star of several action movies, Slater also felt he was faking it. So he began to study karate. "My next test will be the brown belt test, so I'm getting closer and closer to the black belt test, but my schedule and the way it goes gets in the way now of things I enjoy doing for my life."

Divorced from his wife of six years, Ryan Haddon, Slater's social calendar has always been filled with beautiful and famous women. But there's no one right now, he shrugs. "I've no problems with marriage, it's all about the right person, the right chemistry and working it out. Right now I'm just taking it easy in that regard. Right now I don't really have time for that. I have crushes, but have no energy to take advantage of them," he smiles.

"We all have the opportunity to give ourselves our own happy endings if we're willing to take the action to show up and do it and participate and have that willingness."

Junior David Johnson runs past the competition in Saint Louis for the A-10 Conference Championships. The Minutemen, along with the Minutewomen, finished in the top five and will continue their season in the NCAA Regional Qualifiers in two weeks.

UMass places top 3 in A-10

CROSS COUNTRY from page 8

her performance garner her All-Conference Honors, but she also became just the second UMass runner ever to receive the A-10 Rookie of the Year award.

"She truly is the rookie of the year," Lafrieneire said.

Baldwin was a soccer player throughout high school and has made a remarkably smooth transition to collegiate cross country. In the three races she has run, she's lead the Minutewomen each time.

Several of Baldwin's teammates had noteworthy performances as well this weekend, including junior co-captain Shiyi Zan, who finished 17th overall.

Lafrienere noted that while other teams wore down due to the conditions, her athletes seemed to hold their own and come on strong. Zan was one of the runners who seemingly raced past her opponents during the final stretch.

Junior Karen Roa's time of 20:40 helped place her in the top three for the Minutewomen and 19th overall. Roa had been struggling with illness earlier this season but returned to form on Saturday.

"Every time that kid toes the line, she gives it everything she has," Lafrieneire said.

Freshman Danielle Allocco also came up big this weekend with her time of 21:09 and 38th overall finish in such a strong field.

Both teams will look to continue their successful seasons in two weeks as they compete in the NCAA Regional Qualifiers on Nov. 14.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen capture NERFU Championship

By Daniel Gigliotti
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts club rugby team toppled No. 1 Middlebury on Sunday to capture the New England Rugby Football Union Division II championship.

The No. 25 Minutemen, division bottom-dwellers in recent memory, avenged a 110-0 loss from last season in beating the Panthers, 34-3.

Middlebury (7-1) had been a giant in NERFU, winning seven of the last eight New England Championship trophies, but felt disappointment in defeat.

"We just didn't play well to our potential," Middlebury coach Blake Hinckley said to www.RugbyMag.com. "We look forward to having another match with them soon."

The Minutemen grabbed the lead 15 minutes into the game and would not let go. UMass moved the ball through Middlebury territory and inside the 22 meter line. The two teams collided in a scrum from five meters out in which UMass powered the pile over the goal line, revealing the ball for Scott Newman to dive on.

Five minutes later, the Panthers countered by penetrating the Minutemen attack. UMass yielded a 'not releasing the ball' penalty as it attempted to regain possession, and Middlebury knocked through a penalty kick that would turn out to be its only points of the game.

The Minutemen, persistent in their attack, continued to pressure the Panthers until the halftime whistle went off. In the final play of the first half, UMass strung together a long run downfield, swinging the ball quickly out to Seth Oliver and cutting through the Middlebury defense. Stopped just short of the end zone, the orb was moved to Brendan Daly who crashed in for a try and put the Minutemen up, 10-3.

Coming out of the half, UMass continued to play relentlessly. Six minutes into play, second row player Brian Jerome found the goal line for a try. Playing without their usual kicker, Josh Reid, who sat out with an ankle ailment, Idaun Pickholz followed the score up with a conversion. Up 17-3, UMass dominated the scoring column, cruising to three more tries.

While the Minutemen's offensive production is characteristic of how they have been playing this season, averaging 34.5 points per game going into Sunday, the Panthers' defensive effort slacked.

Middlebury had given up 10 points in its last five matches (all against Vermont on Saturday) and registered four shutouts. Over the seven games played this season, the Panthers have allowed 36 points (5.14 per game).

When asked how his team was able to create so many opportunities against a suffocating Middlebury defense, UMass coach Al Baker identified a pressing type of play from his ruggers.

"[We're] going forward – putting them under a lot of pressure," Baker said. "[There is] a good amount of support; no player is fending for himself."

On the other side of the ball, the Minutemen have worked hard on defense. Prior to UMass stifling the Panthers, they allowed 12 points in three consecutive games.

The Minutemen earned their spot in Sunday's final after besting Boston University, 22-12, on Saturday. Strong winds affected the match, as BU took an early halftime lead, 12-0. A lengthy try, however, by UMass 35 minutes into play sprung the Minutemen back into contention, toting in a triplet of tries for the win.

UMass has ascended far up in the club rankings and can see the summit in sight, yet it still has some climbing to do if it wishes to claim the title of National Champions.

"We want to be No. 1 in the country," Baker said. "Same way as we have, take it one day at a time. Stay with fundamentals and keep fitness up."

The Minutemen contend for the Northeast Regional title on Saturday and enjoys home-field advantage as Amherst welcomes in the eight-team field as hosts. The top-seeded Minutemen will take on eight-seeded Southern Connecticut at 1 p.m.

Despite the loss, Middlebury enters the tournament as the second seed.

Daniel Gigliotti can be reached at dgigliot@student.umass.edu.

Settles records hat trick to lead Temple

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

Freshman Rebecca Chylack scored with one minute, 46 seconds left in the game to give La Salle a season ending 2-1 victory over Bryant on Halloween. Chylack's 11th goal of the season was the most by an Explorer rookie in 19 years.

The first goal of the game was scored by junior Beth Carey off a pass form sophomore Lindsay Fry in the eighth minute of the game to give La Salle an early 1-0 lead. The lead held up until Bryant's Courtney Landi scored to make it a tie game in the second half.

The teams battled back and fourth and traded opportunities until the final two minutes of the game. The winning shot came on a penalty corner when Carey passed the ball to teammate Haley Froshour. Froshour stopped the ball at the top of the circle and Chylack was able to put the ball past the goalie to give La Salle a 2-1 win.

The Explorers had their Atlantic 10 Tournament hopes dashed a day earlier when they dropped a 6-3 contest to Massachusetts.

Andrew Morrison can be reached at ajmorris@student.umass.edu.

Temple goalie Sarah Dalrymple and the Owls' defense protect their goal. With the 6-2 victory, Temple gains a berth in the A-10 Tournament.

UM men and women swimmers earn wins the performer of the week.

SWIMMING from page 1

"She anchored both of the relays and had great swims [in her individual races]," Newcomb said.

Freshman Julie Magyar won the first and only 400-yard individual medley race of the regular season with a time of 4:37.50.

Magyar also took first for the second straight week in 1000-yard freestyle (10:38.72).

Sophomore Chelsea Downing won both the 500-yard (5:12.44) and 200-yard freestyle (1:57.33). She also finished second behind Magyar in the 400-yard IM (4:41.76).

Minutewomen diver Hannah Swift, a freshmen, earned her best score of the season in the one-meter (236.39) as well as a victory in the three-meter (213.30).

Without anyone to compete against, Jason Cook, John Clark and Adam Duffield placed first through third in both the one and three-meter event. Cook, who holds the school record in both, finished with a score of 289.50 in the one-meter and 322.50 in the three-meter.

The men's 400-yard freestyle relay also yielded a one-two finish for UMass. Howard, Ziegler, Tehrani and Moliere finished at 3:10.23, while freshmen Jorge Fortin and Pete Sacco joined sophomore Ryan Brooks and junior Julian McKean for second (3:12.79).

"This meet shows that we've got a nice, deep team," Yarworth said. "It's nice to have front line swimmers, but it's the second and third line that makes a championship."

Senior Juan Moliere, one of the front-line swimmers, won the 200-yard freestyle (1:45.55).

Beau Garufi – who Yarworth said has "potential to be an elite breaststroker" – earned first in 100-yard breaststroke (1:01.88) and out-touched Schmidt 2:16.53 to 2:16.78 in the 200-yard breaststroke.

Schmidt also won the 200-yard butterfly with a time of 2:01.27.

Howard (52.31) and Sacco (53.87) placed first and second in the 100-yard butterfly.

Yarworth highlighted the efforts of Ziegler, who "popped off a great time" in his 50-yard freestyle wm (21.41), followed closely by McKean (22.12).

Sophomore Joey Sbordon swam the maiden 400-yard individual medley of the year for a first-place finish (4:13.47).

"Our team answered the call," Yarworth said.

Daniel Herberholz can be reached at danielherberholz@gmail.com.

Banking for the EGeneration

We work here and bank here too!

eGeneration banking is delivered by eGeneration bankers like Cara and Mike.

Check out mycoolbank.com today!

Get great info, open accounts online and get awesome stuff like eChecking, eStatements, Online Banking and Bill Pay. It's easy for you to choose your style of banking. There's even online live chat.

*$10 minimum deposit to open eChecking Account. No minimum balance required to maintain account. Other bank's ATM surcharge fees that are charged to the account during current statement cycle will be refunded on the last business day of the current statement cycle. Accounts closed or changed to another product during a current statement cycle will not receive a refund of the other bank's ATM surcharge fees.

ESB SAVINGS BANK My Bank

mycoolbank.com | 413.527.4111
Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton | South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield

Find ESB on facebook

Member FDIC

FDIC deposit insurance temporarily increased from $100,000 to $250,000 per depositor through December 31, 2013. All deposits above the FDIC limit are insured in full by the Depositors Insurance Fund.

Campus to Career

Who's Got Your Number?

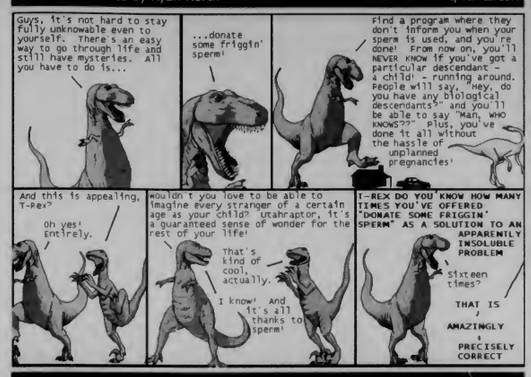
Tuesday, November 3
5:30 p.m., Memorial Hall

Don't let your credit or identity get swiped!

FREE FOOD • FREE BEVERAGES

Register at UMassAlumni.com/students

The first 10 students who bring their UMass Amherst Alumni Association coupon from the UMass Amherst coupon book receive a special gift.

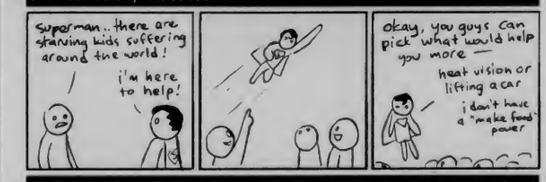


Student Alumni Association | Alumni Association | Liberty Mutual

Enter to win a UStore gift card.
Seniors can also enter to win a $1,000 cash prize from Liberty Mutual!
Drawing to be held at Commencement Ball on May 13, 2010

Sponsored by the Student Alumni Association & the Alumni Association in partnership with Liberty Mutual

COMICS



Dinosaur Comics by Ryan North — qwantz.com

Wondermark by David Malki! — wondermark.com

Chainsawsuit by Kris Straub — chainsawsuit.com

My New Filing Technique is Unstoppable by David Rees — mnftiu.cc

Mr. Gnu by Travis Dandro — travisdandro.com

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20 - Feb. 18
Yes, negative b plus or minus the square root of b squared minus 4ac over 2a.

pisces Feb. 19 - Mar. 20
Pull your pants up! You make your mama cry.

aries Mar. 21 - Apr. 19
Either I'm gonna reference an obscure band, or you are. Don't "MakeMe" choose.

taurus Apr. 20 - May. 20
The day ahead will help you make some progress - no backward glances allowed!

gemini May. 21 - Jun. 21
It's about time your politics got a little more progressive. I suggest weed.

cancer Jun. 22 - Jul. 22
Oh shit, that guy is totally staring at you. No no no don't look. OK, he's looking away.

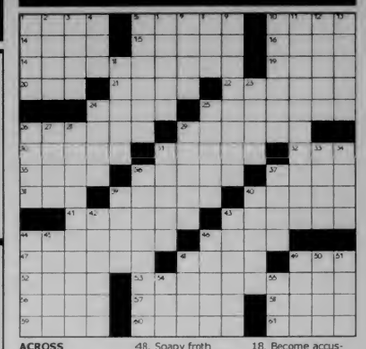
leo Jul. 23 - Aug. 22
If you wanna convince me, you're gonna have to provide some substantive evidence.

virgo Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
How old were you by the time you realized that "ellamennopee" isn't a single letter?

libra Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
This horoscope is judging you.

scorpio Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
How long has it been since you've played Bocci? That's too long for a healthy adult.

sagittarius Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
You didn't ask, so this horoscope's not telling.



capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 19
Six minutes before reading this, you reached your full potential. Yep, that was it. Congratulations.

WE WANT YOUR COMICS!
Put your comics in front of thousands of readers.
Questions? Comments? E-mail us: comics@dailycollegian.com

Basic Instructions by Scott Meyer
"How to Call Your Relatives"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Browse
5. Heaps
10. Pierce
14. Sword
15. Farewell
16. Murres
17. Stipulations
19. Tops of jars
20. Explosive letters
21. Midday
22. A portable platform
24. Legal action
25. Let go
26. Paramours
29. Renter
30. Without company
31. Rent
32. Earned Run Average
35. Sediment
36. Often was a white picket one
37. Lackluster
38. Former French con
39. Swivel
40. Interlace
41. An unmarried girl
43. Hammer
44. An adhesive label
46. Agitate
47. Call off
48. Soapy froth
49. 180° from NNW
52. Double-reed woodwind
53. A system of musclebuilding exercises
56. Person, place or thing
57. An English dynasty
58. Distinctive flair
59. At one time (archaic)
60. Desire strongly
61. Cast a ballot

DOWN
1. Religious offshoot
2. Once _____ a time
3. Apartment payment
4. Provided food
5. A regional dialect
6. Fool
7. King of the jungle
8. Poetic time of day
9. Apprehension
10. Moody
11. Involving three parties
12. Assistants
13. Sew together loosely
18. Become accustomed (to)
23. Wings
24. Dispatched
25. Respond
26. Glasgow gal
27. Mélange
28. Large in bulk
29. Part of a joint
31. A rigid bar pivoted about a fulcrum
33. Praise enthusiastically
34. Assist
36. Faithfulness
37. Hollow
39. A Medieval weapon
40. Midsection
42. A distinctive way of speaking
43. Contemporary
44. British biscuit
45. Small drum
46. Gossip
48. Fizzy drink
49. Fodder holder
50. Leave in a hurry
51. Slave
54. Take to court
55. Speed up an engine

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162.

Rent us your ears! $10/hr to participate in a listening experiment. Write to phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu. English must be your first language.

Drivers Wanted. Must be able to work 20 hrs/week including one weekend night. Apply at D.P. Dough, Downtown Amherst

WANTED

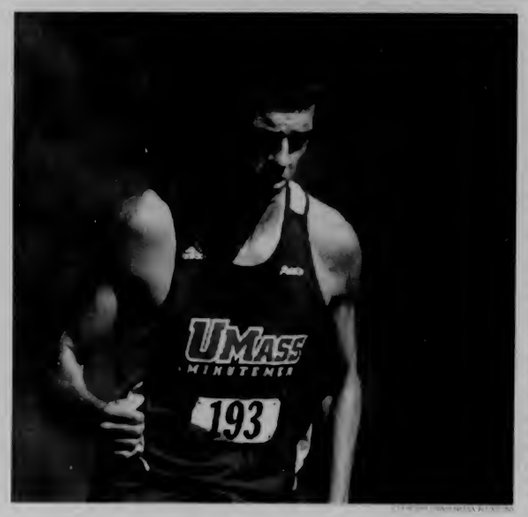
Volunteers needed for online-study of college students and antidepressant medication. $25 Gift Certificate for completed surveys. paselton@nursing.umass.edu

HOUSE FOR RENT

6BR/2BR adjacent to UMass. On bus route. Available immediately. $2000.00 plus utilities. Lease negotiable. No smoke/no pets. Huntie01@comcast.net. 413-478-6883.

SUDOKU

	7	1			3
8			7	4		9
6							8
7					4	3
		8	9	2
4				1				2
			5			7		1
							4
	3							6



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSTUESDAY

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Junior Kevin Johnson led the Minutemen to a 2nd place finish in the Atlantic 10 Conference Championship. Johnson finished 7th with a time of 26:57.8 and earned All-Conference Honors.

Adversaries outrun by UMass at Saint Louis

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

It's a mantra in sports that some teams live by: when things get tough, come together.

On Saturday, as the Massachusetts cross country teams headed to Saint Louis to compete in the Atlantic 10 Conference Championships, they knew they would not only face stiff competition but also adverse weather conditions. Their response to it, however, would prove that both teams were prepared.

The men's and women's teams turned in a gritty performance as they placed second and third respectively, in this weekend's conference championship. Coaches from each side expressed that they were proud of the way their team battled and came together in such a big race.

Massachusetts coach Ken O'Brien was pleased with his team's effort and mental tenacity on Saturday.

"In one word: it was muddy. [Bad conditions] can cause a physical and mental distraction, but I thought our team really didn't let it bother us," he said.

The course had undoubtedly been affected by the severe rainfall that had occurred in Missouri over the past week. The region, which tends to be relatively dry in October, received over ten inches of rain this month, including two to four inches just days preceding the race.

Although it did not rain Saturday, the course which is constructed on grasslands was wet, rough and muddy. UMass though, combated bad weather with several strong performances.

"I have nothing but positive feelings about this race. [The team] couldn't have raced harder," O'Brien said.

Five Minutemen runners placed in the top 20, and junior David Johnson came less than a half second to placing in the top fifteen and taking home All-Conference Honors. Three Minutemen earned A-10 Conference Honors by placing in the top 15. Junior Kevin Johnson led the Minutemen as he finished seventh, with a time of 26:57.8. Senior Andrew McCain stepped up in his last conference championship meet by placing 10th overall with a time of 27:06.3.

In just his sophomore year, Zachary Gordon was able to take home All-Conference Honors by finishing 14th in the meet, with a time of 27:13.8. It took a team effort to hold off Dayton, which finished in third place, just three points behind UMass.

The Minutewomen earned their highest finish in the A-10 Championship since 2000 with their third place finish.

"I was ecstatic. I was extremely happy," UMass coach Julie Lafrieniere said.

Prior to the race, Lafrieniere had hoped to place in the top five, which would have been an improvement for the Minutewomen program. UMass, however, was able to exceed her expectations.

Courtney Baldwin, who has been essential late in the season, turned in yet another impressive performance on Saturday. The freshman finished 9th overall with a time of 20:09. Not only did

See CROSS COUNTRY on page 6

Richmond earns No. 1 seed for A-10 Tourney

By Andrew Morrison
Collegian Correspondent

The Richmond Spiders field hockey team was able to lock up the Atlantic 10 regular-season championship with a 4-1 victory over Saint Joseph's on Friday. This is the team's sixth regular-season championship in the last eight years.

The scoring was started by Saint Joseph's (7-10, 4-2 A-10) when Hannah Rogers capitalized on a breakaway just five minutes into the game. The goal was the first that the Spiders (11-8, 5-1 A-10) had given up to a conference opponent this season. Richmond answered with 13 minutes left in the half when senior Sarah Blythe-Wood was able to knock a rebound into the cage to tie the game 1-1. After evenly matched, back-and-forth play, the half saw the teams still knotted at one goal apiece.

A-10 Field Hockey

The second half saw Richmond control the play and take the lead. Five minutes into the half, Blythe-Wood got her second goal of the game on a pass from senior Jess Weidner. This proved to be the eventual game-winner, but the Spiders were not done.

Senior Megan Thompson made it 3-1 fewer than four minutes later when she converted on a breakaway, and sophomore Katelin Peterson added another goal with 21 minutes left in the game on a pass from Blythe-Wood. Richmond goalkeeper Jacki Raithel recorded three saves in the game.

Owls' offense too much for Saint Louis

Bridget Settles recorded her second hat trick of the season to lead Temple past the Billikens on Friday. The win helped keep the Owls' playoff hopes alive and eventually gain them a berth in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Temple (8-11, 4-2 A-10) took a 3-0 lead into the half on goals from Settles, Kimmi Hanshue and Caryn Lambright. Settles began the scoring with 11 minutes left in the first half when she tipped in a shot from Taylor Musser. The assist was the first of Musser's career. Fewer than two minutes later, Hanshue put home a penalty stroke to make it 2-0, and with less than a minute to go in the half, Lambright tipped in a shot from teammate Arialle Hess.

Saint Louis (1-16, 0-6 A-10) came out with life early in the second half as sophomore Lauren Noe scored off a penalty corner just a few minutes after the break. The goal, however, was quickly answered by the Owls when Settles got her second goal of the game off of a penalty corner to make the score 4-1.

The Billikens cut the lead to 4-2 when sophomore Nicole Kent put home a pass from Noe, but that was as close as Saint Louis would get. Temple answered again when Charlise Young assisted on Mandi Ruth's fourth goal of the season. Settles added another goal late in the half to record her hat trick and cement her team's 6-2 victory.

Explorers end season with victory

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Freshman Catherine Ostoich attacks the defensive zone in a game earlier this season. Ostoich and Richmond won the Atlantic 10 regular-season championship with a 4-1 win over Saint Joseph's on Friday.

Dayton midfielder Colleen Williams goes for a header in one of the Flyers' 14 wins. Dayton completed its undefeated regular season with a 3-0 victory over Xavier on Senior Night.

Flyers finish unbeaten to end regular season

Michael Wood
Collegian Correspondent

Dayton women's soccer is on top again.

With Saturday's 3-0 victory over Xavier on Senior Night, the Flyers successfully completed their first-ever undefeated regular season, going 14-0-5 overall and 10-0-1 in Atlantic 10 play. A crowd of 917 fans came out to see their team take the A-10 title for the first time since 2004, which preserved the nation's longest win streak and broke the school record with 14 shutouts.

A-10 Soccer

Dayton came out on fire and didn't let up. Led by senior Lauren MacCormick and sophomore Emily Kenyon, the Flyers were able to outshoot Xavier 19-0 in the first 45 minutes alone. MacCormick tallied the first goal in the 15th minute off the leg of junior Kelly Blumenschein for her eighth goal of the season.

Stellar play from the supporting cast helped Dayton put away the Musketeers. Kenyon fired a goal in the 60th minute to put the Flyers up 2-0. Then, four minutes later, sophomore Kelsey Owen provided a little insurance as she ripped a shot past the Xavier goalie in the 64th minute.

Dayton currently owns the nation's longest unbeaten streak, and looks forward to a first round bye in the A-10 Tournament next weekend (Nov. 5-8) as the No. 1 seed in Charlotte, NC. The Flyers' first match will be at 8 p.m. on Friday.

Rams in top 3

Heading into the last game of the season, Fordham and St. Bonaventure split the season matchup, each coming out victorious on one occasion as both were deadlocked in the conference standings. The third and final game of the season series was played at St. Bonaventure on Sunday, with Fordham coming out on top.

With the win, the Rams ended their regular season at 8-11-1 overall, and 7-4-0 in the A-10, while the Bonnies ended their season at 10-10 overall and 7-4 in conference play. By virtue of the win, Fordham edged out the tiebreaker for the No. 3 seed at the A-10 Championship, with St. Bonaventure settling for the No. 4 seed.

The Rams got a late first half goal by sophomore Katherine Wah, as well as a score from senior Leah Loguidice in the second half to earn a 2-0 victory.

The Bonnies continued their recent scoring troubles, managing just 10 shots on goal through the entire game and failing to score. If it continues, it could spell an early exit from the A-10 Tournament next week.

Fordham matches up with No. 6 Massachusetts next week, while St. Bonaventure will take on No. 5 Saint Louis.

Champs battle to tie

The two-time defending conference champion and No. 24 ranked Charlotte 49ers (15-2-2, 9-0-2 A-10) tied Saint Louis, 0-0, to extend their unbeaten streak against A-10 competition to 26 games. The Billikens (7-8-4, 4-4-3 A-10) managed to hold the high-powered 49ers offense in check Friday night, preserving their chance to compete in the A-10 Tournament.

Defense and goalkeeping was clearly on display, with neither team managing more than 20 total shots, many of which were off-target.

While the tie extended Charlotte's unbeaten streak, it unfortunately cost it a fourth straight A-10 title, as Dayton went on to claim that honor Saturday.

Going into the tournament, the 49ers bring a 13-game unbeaten streak and sits as the No. 2 overall seed with a bye in the first round. The Billikens hold the No. 5 seed as they take on No. 4 seeded St. Bonaventure. Charlotte is hosting the A-10 Tournament which will be played at Transamerica Field, beginning Nov. 5.

Michael Wood can be reached at mewood@student.umass.edu.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 49 LOW: 31 www.DailyCollegian.com WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2009

Besides working to strengthen academic relations, the UMass-Springfield partnership aims to establish the city as a center for Green industries and to boost the local economy.

UM teams up with city of Springfield

Partnership seeks to better city, academics

By Hannah McGoldrick
Collegian Staff

In 2008, the University of Massachusetts and the city of Springfield formalized a partnership that will help to improve the quality of life in Springfield by stimulating a better economic environment.

Spearheading the partnership are incumbent Mayor Dominic Sarno, Chancellor Robert Holub and most recently, Dr. John Mullin. The trio manages the "partnership team," which consists of senior administrative officials from UMass, senior officials from the Mayor's office, a representative from the UMass System and a representative from the Commonwealth.

The team has worked towards completing four goals for the UMass-Springfield partnership. The missions of the partnership are to create an urban design center for research and scholarship, to position the city as a center for Green industries, boost Springfield's arts and creative economy and to create an academic pipeline between Springfield students and UMass.

In the spring, UMass and Springfield signed a memorandum of understanding which launched the partnership into the planning stages. Dr. John Mullin, who has a background as a regional economist, is the managing director of the partnership as well as the dean of the graduate school at UMass.

"There is no great region without a great center-city," Mullin said.

According to Mullin, the immediate goal of the partnership is to create a physical footprint of UMass in the center of Springfield. To do so, he said that he intends to have the design center running by the end of this year.

Karen Barshefsky, UMass Extension Educator for the 4-H program, is also

See SPRINGFIELD on page 3

Mock trial sets sights on Ivy league contest

By Jennifer Hesiton
Collegian Staff

Following a third place win at the Oct. 23-25 invitational competition held at the University of New Hampshire, mock trial team members of the University of Massachusetts are readying themselves for upcoming courtroom battles at Harvard University.

Known to the members of mock trial as "Hell Week," co-captain of the UMass team Joseph Mendes said this week the team will immerse themselves in nightly rehearsals every day for practice sessions before they travel to Cambridge on Nov. 7 for the Fourth Annual Harvard Crimson Classic Invitational.

Dressing the part of a lawyer or a witness, breaking down opening and closing arguments or just trying to get the witness to break down for the jury, are all what makes "Hell Week" essential for the team's preparation, Mendes said.

According to Mendes, the UMass mock trial team, which he had co-founded in 2007 with current co-captain David Chen, is still riding high on their third place win, also their highest ranked placement, two weeks ago in New Hampshire.

"The first place team was UNH, but they didn't have a perfect record because their only loss was to us," said Mendes, a junior legal studies major. "So to put it into perspective, we were kind of the underdog."

As part of the American Mock Trial Association (AMTA), which was founded in 1987 by Dean Richard Calkins of Drake Law School, the UMass team is in its third season as a registered student-run organization with the University.

AMTA provides each intercollegiate team with a case file for them to argue in an unscripted trial simulation for both invitational and national competitions.

After receiving the case from AMTA, each team member is then assigned a specific role to play throughout the duration of the trial based upon the individual's performance during a try-out session overseen by the team's captains.

Taking on the role of prosecutor, defense attorney or witness, the team members enter the competitions where they will be judged by active or retired lawyers and judges.

The mock trial teams across New England typically register themselves to participate in an invitational. This year UMass was personally invited to compete at Harvard, which Chen said is a real honor.

"Harvard is the top of the pyramid for all invitational mock trial tournaments," Chen said. "The Harvard tournament has the best teams period. I think we are at the point where we can stand toe to toe with them."

The invitational at Harvard fol-

See TRIAL on page 2

UMass mock trial co-captain Joseph Mendes, left, acts as prosecutor while he presents his cross-examination of a witness for the defense for acting judge Cory Carvalho, associate director of student legal services.

Due to the recent surge of swine flu on the UMass campus, University officials encourage all students who have flu-like symptoms to stay home from class and to seek out medical treatment.

Amherst receives the first of two H1N1 vaccine shipments

By Cameron Ford
Collegian Staff

The town of Amherst has received its anxiously-awaited shipment of H1N1 vaccine. As the cases of swine flu pile up amongst the student body of the University of Massachusetts, for most, the vaccine has come not a moment too soon.

The town has received two shipments of H1N1 vaccine, both consisting of one hundred doses. Another 200 doses are on the way, according to a release from Epi Bodhi, the Amherst Health Department director.

Though the Amherst residents will now have access to the vaccine, Bodhi said there is no way of telling how many cases of swine flu are present in the town.

"Since we are not testing for swine flu, we can only go by reports of influenza-like symptoms," she said. "They are mostly in school-age children, and the numbers go up and down."

Bodhi also said that of the 200 doses already received, most were sent to pediatric and obstetric clinics in the area, with a handful being administered to emergency responders in the town of Amherst.

"Since children and pregnant women are the highest priority, that is who we are trying to get the flu vaccine out to," Bodhi said. "We also sent out about 20 doses to first responders in town."

Despite having the vaccine available for the residents, Bodhi still insisted that preventive measures be taken by every resident. Bodhi offered several suggestions for the people who are or will become sick.

Bodhi cautioned that people should avoid hugging, holding, kissing or shaking hands with anyone who has a cold or the flu, as well as to avoid touching their noses, mouths or eyes. She said that everyone should be washing his hands often with soap and warm water or using an alcohol-based hand sanitizer, as well as cleaning items that are touched often such as telephones and door handles.

Should anyone get sick with the flu, Bodhi said it is important that they stay home and avoid contact with others. As the risk of swine flu has proven to be prevalent on a college campus, officials at UMass have encouraged those students who have fallen ill to skip classes, if only to avoid infecting others.

In an e-mail released to all UMass students by Dr. Jean Kim, vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life, students were promised that should they have to miss a class for an illness they would not be penalized as long as faculty members are informed.

For those who are sick, Bodhi said to drink plenty of fluids and to get plenty of rest. If severe symptoms still persist, Bodhi said to contact a healthcare provider.

Cameron Ford can be reached at cford@student.umass.edu.

ARTS & LIVING
The Bad Plus: Good
The musical trio found its way to Northampton to perform at the Iron Horse Music Hall last week.
SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
Carolina on their minds
The Massachusetts women's soccer team opens the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament on Thursday against Duquesne.
SEE PAGE 8

EDITORIAL & OPINION
With Governor Deval Patrick's announcement that the state will cut as many as 2,000 state employees, UMass must do everything to hold on to faculty and staff to prosper.
SEE PAGE 4

DailyCollegian.com
Log on and check out The Bad Plus photo slideshow, shot by Collegian photographer Matthew Harrison.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 40
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
413-545-3500
Fax 413-545-3699
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF William McGuinness
MANAGING EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
BUSINESS MANAGER Daniel Jette
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sirkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kirsten Swenson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Michael Tortorici
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Denner
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Shasna Murphy
COPIES EDITOR Annie Keithline
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS EDITOR Jeffrey R. Larnard
WEB EDITOR Brian Wood
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Harrison
IT MANAGER Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Nicole Jacinto
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Katelyn Tamiso
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Justin Gagnon
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Elyse Horowitz
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cal Scannell
ASSISTANT COPIES Andrew Witts
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Hannah Nelson
ASSISTANT NEWS Samuel Butterfield
ASSISTANT NEWS Alyssa Creamer
ASSISTANT NEWS Jenn Heshion
ASSISTANT SPORTS David Brinch
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Giffmester
ASSISTANT SPORTS Adam Miller
ASSISTANT PHOTO Maxwell Sparr
ASSISTANT PHOTO Samantha Webber
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Sara Cody
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Chris Shores

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1916 and the first Weekly Collegian in 1996. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

PRODUCTION CREW
on staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Elizabeth Tran

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sirkes

Crime Log for week of Oct. 25-31

WEDNESDAY

Karl W. Martin, of 21 Woodside Cir. Southwick, Mass., was arrested on University Dr. as a result of a traffic stop and charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

THURSDAY

Shawn A. Cameron, of 1122 Silver Lake St. Athol, Mass., was arrested in the Pierpont Hall and charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, assault and battery and aggravated disorderly conduct.

FRIDAY

Summer Moukalled, of 5 Meadow Ln. Bridgewater, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Massachusetts Ave. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Christopher J. Corrado, of 1135 Main St. Lynnfield, Mass., and Daniel Y. Kibanan, of 514 Main St. Lynnfield, Mass., were arrested in Lot 22 west of University Dr. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Caitlin R. Marscher, of 111 Sutton Dr. Needham, Mass., and John R. McKeon IV, of 9 May St. East Walpole, Mass., were arrested in Lot 44 south of Sylvan and charged with alcohol offenses. Marscher is charged with intent to sell/deliver liquor to a person under the age of 21. McKeon is charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Robert E. Danielson, of 24 Hillcrest Rd. Burlington, Mass.; James B. Meehan, of 12 Chestnut Ave. Burlington, Mass., Patrick Roy, of 7 Vale St. Brockton, Mass. and Robert F. Corriegan, of 22 Lincoln St. Canton, Mass., were arrested in the Dallas Mall on Dallas Dr. and all were charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Benjamin E. Gould, of 17 Stonefield Dr. East Sandwich, Mass.; John Ryan Moffa, of 5 Old Farm Ln. East Sandwich, Mass. and Zachary A. Wolfman, of 78 Fairview Way Amherst, Mass., were arrested in Lot 32 south of Massachusetts Ave. and all were charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Kevin J. Donis, of 35 Williams Ave Raynham, Mass., was arrested in Lot 21 west of University Dr. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Richard Douglas Graham, of 22 Herrick Dr. Milton, Mass., was arrested in Lot 32 south of Massachusetts Ave. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21 and possession of false identification.

Brian Neil Eisenhaur, of 2 Sixth Ave. Dudley, Mass., was arrested outside of the John Quincy Adams Hall and charged with disorderly conduct.

SATURDAY

John Michael Moore, of 20 Idlewood St. Southbridge, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop in Lot 21 west of University Dr. and charged with OUI, possession of liquor while under the age of 21 and speeding.

Brian Neil Eisenhaur, of 2 Sixth Ave. Dudley, Mass., was arrested outside of the Washington Hall for trespassing.

Marissa Rose Luciano, of 61 Lancaster Rd. North Andover, Mass., was arrested outside of the Thoreau Hall for disorderly conduct.

William J. Collins III, of 9 Winter St. Tyngsborough, Mass., and Adam J. Harrington, of 10 Autumn St. Tyngsborough, Mass., were arrested in Lot 33 west of University Dr. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Mackenzie R. Carpenter, of 86 Bates Rd. Brockton, Mass., John Miller, of 80 Garden St. Milton, Mass.; Zachary M. Reed, of 269 Mattfield St. Bridgewater, Mass. and Mark Sweeney, of 10 Edward Ave. Milton, Mass., were arrested in Lot 21 west of University Dr. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

The Halloween weekend proved a busy one for the Amherst Police Department who had arrested several University students on such charges as underage drinking.

Shelby D. Brimmer, of 61 Collins Rd. West Halifax, VT., and Kimberly Anne Runkle, of 7 Cobblestone Way North Billerica, Mass., were arrested in Lot 21 west of University Dr. and both charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Nicholas Fay, of 75 Edgelawn Ave. North Andover, Mass., and Ian Hardy, of 418 Massachusetts Ave. Andover, Mass., were arrested in Lot 33 west of University Dr. and both charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Stephane Gabriel Chassagnade, of 1 Lillian Rd. Westford, Mass., and Thomas Walter Phelps Jr., of 11 Long Sought For Pond Rd. Westford, Mass., were arrested in Lot 33 west of University Dr. and both charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Nicholas J. Franceschelli, of 10 Ashfield St. Roslindale, Mass., was arrested on Lincoln Ave. as a result of a traffic stop and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21, possession of an open container of liquor, operating a motor vehicle without a license, and failure to dim headlights.

Jimmy Pereira, of 577 Western Ave. Westfield, Mass., was arrested on Massachusetts Ave. as a result of a traffic stop and charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

Daniel Thomas Stevenson, of 14 Nautical Way South Dennis, Mass., was arrested in the McNamara Hall and charged with trespassing.

Compiled by Michelle Williams. She can be reached at mrwilli@student.umass.edu

SUNDAY

William John Garceau, of 103 Biltmore Blvd. Massapequa, NY, was arrested in the Patterson Hall and charged with domestic assault and battery.

Peter A. Grossi, of 18 Butterworth Rd. Holland, Mass., was arrested in the North Residential Building D and charged with domestic assault and battery.

Christopher James Ament, of 520 S. Shelburne Rd. Greenfield, Mass., was arrested in the Cance Hall and charged with malicious destruction of property worth over 250 dollars.

Compiled by Michelle Williams. She can be reached at mrwilli@student.umass.edu

Harvard is the next trial for UM team

TRIAL from page 1

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

While members present their arguments during dress rehearsals, the rest of the mock trial team analyzes the strength and weaknesses of the presentation.

lows three years since Chen, a senior legal studies and political science major, had said he had pitched the idea of establishing a UMass mock trial team to the head of the political science department. With the department's cooperation, Chen said that he sent out e-mails to everyone on the political science mailing list as well as through the legal studies department hoping for a positive student response.

"I did model U.N. in high school and I wanted to do something really pertinent," Chen said. "It just seemed like a natural thing to do."

According to Mendes, his decision to meet with Chen came after he had received one of the mass e-mails through the legal studies department. Adding that he had participated in mock trial in high school, Mendes said the main reason he wanted to join a UMass team was based on both his and Chen's mutual respect for the legal system and for the thrill of the competition.

"Once you get to a competition and see it in action it's really competitive," Mendes said. "People get really into it."

Since its establishment with the University back in 2007, membership has expanded from the original three members who had initiated the club to include both an A team and a B team of students, according to Mendes.

"Anyone can join mock trial whether you're legal studies or a neuroscience major," Mendes said. "It builds public speaking and writing skills. Its fun because like debate team it is almost like a sports team except our uniforms are business suits and shoes as opposed to skates and pads."

Chen added that, "The more we do this the more stimulating the arguments get. It hones these skills you need in everyday life. You have to analyze things sharply and know the other guy is doing the same thing. We went from having a knowledge base of zero and now we are at the level or near the level of the top-tier teams."

According to Chen, the UMass mock trial team is a good learning opportunity for students who are considering careers in the legal profession. Chen added that because the competitions are professionally conducted, it forces the teams to better their game and learn how to handle themselves in a courtroom setting.

"We had to learn things on the fly," Chen said. "We had to learn things to pass on to new members. A lot of what we do is to retain knowledge and pass that on. It's students teaching students."

Playing the part of a lawyer in one round of the UNH invitational two weeks ago and as a witness in the next round, Chen said he had learned the impact that emotions can bear on a case.

"As an attorney I have to exude confidence and act credible," Chen said. "On the other hand my witness is kind of a wimp. The trials alternate so I have to switch my mindset. You can be on the other side of the table. The attorney asks you questions and you can try to spoof them. You don't want to do it in a way that you are lying. You can control your emotions and your personality."

For his efforts as both attorney and witness, Chen was awarded the top witness prize at the UNH invitational.

"Hell Week," meanwhile, carries on until this Friday when the UMass mock trial team will head to Cambridge to compete with several prestigious Ivy League schools, including Brown University, Yale University and, of course, the Harvard Crimson team.

"It's been unbelievable," Mendes said. "It's gotten so much bigger and we have gotten so much support from the University. It can be pretty exhausting and it's hard to keep up with classes. It's a lot of commitment but it's worth it. We're ready."

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Presentation to raise awareness of sports environmental impact

By Timothy Jones
Collegian Staff

A presentation designed to raise awareness about the carbon impact that sports organizations are leaving will be held on Wednesday, Nov. 4 in the Isenberg School of Management at 7:30 p.m.

The event, "Challenges and Triumphs of Being Green in Sport," is being held in Room 210 of the ISOM and is hosted by Net Impact, which is a graduate organization focused on sustainability in business.

Two individuals will be speaking at the event: Dennis Robinson, the CEO and president of the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority (NJSEA) and John Wentzell, the President of TD Banknorth Garden and Delaware North Companies Boston.

Both of the presenters are University of Massachusetts Sport Management Alums.

Robinson is responsible for managing the Meadowlands Sports Complex. The complex consists of Giants Stadium, Meadowlands Racetrack and IZOD Center. Robinson also oversees the Sports Authority businesses, which according to NJSEA website, "hosts over 600 events and 7.5 million guests annually."

Wentzell oversees all of Delaware North Companies Boston operations, including those of the Boston Celtics and Boston Bruins' events at the TD Garden.

According to the Delaware North website, "With more than $2 billion in annual revenue and 50,000 employees, it is one of the largest privately held companies in the world."

Robinson and Wentzell will be giving their presentations on what their organizations are specifically doing in order to help the environment and going green. They will also speak on what they are not doing in their businesses.

When the presentations come to a conclusion, the floor will open up for a panel discussion.

According to Evan Olesh, the current vice president of Net Impact's chapter at UMass, Net Impact is a community of graduate students who join together and use the power of business to make an impact on economic, environmental and social aspects of the world.

The group was established in 1993 and includes over 15,000 members and over 200 chapters. Net Impact is working together with the UMass Sport Management Department to put on this public event.

Olesh, the current vice president of Net Impact at UMass said, "Even though it is only a small piece of the pie, it is still important to investigate this topic and really ensure that the future sport managers are aware of this important issue."

Olesh also wanted to give "a special thanks" to Lisa Masteralexis, the department head, Dr. Mark McDonald, Maureen Kocot and Janis Orr for assisting Net Impact with putting on this event.

Timothy Jones can be reached at timothy@student.umass.edu

SAMANTHA WEBBER/COLLEGIAN

The event, which is titled, "Challenges and Triumphs of Being Green in Sport," will focus on the carbon impact left by various sports organizations and on what these organizations can do to go green.

HASA auctions dates

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

At the UMass HASA date auction Oct. 22, volunteers auctioned off their time to the highest bidder in order to raise money for the HASA Fresh Start Scholarship.

UMass professor links pollution to obesity

Study has air pollution as one cause for obesity

By Angela Hilsman
Collegian Staff

An assistant professor at the University of Massachusetts concludes after a five-year study that high concentrations of air pollution increase health risks on obese people more so than on people who are not overweight.

Srimathi Kannan of the Nutrition Department at UMass found that Detroit residents who lived closest to heavy traffic and other sources of pollution had higher blood pulse pressure. Furthermore, those classified as obese undertook the biggest impact according to Kannan, especially within the first 48 to 96 hours of exposure to pollutants.

A team of five graduate students, six undergraduate students, eight phlebotomists, volunteers, three doctors and Kannan carried out the study, which started in 2000, as part of the Health Environments Partnership (HEP).

"I have always had an interest in conducting chronic disease research investigations around nutrition interactions with environmental exposures such as air pollution and its health effects on vulnerable populations," Kannan said.

She further explained that having grown up in an industrial township in India, her interest in the chronic disease-environmental factors connection sparked very early in life.

Having envisioned the Detroit HEP project with Dr. Amy Schulz, principal investigator for the project, Kannan directed her lab-student teams to organize nutrition and biomarker community clinics in Eastside, Northwest and Southwest Detroit. All three areas of the city are ethnically and economically diverse and within five kilometers of an air quality monitoring site. Kannan and other researchers collected data on air quality and biomedical measures to form their conclusion on the effects of air pollutants.

"My group collected biomarker samples [fasting blood, saliva and blood pressure] from the participants. After each batch of biomarkers data collection was completed, samples were transported from multiple study sites to my lab at the University of Michigan where the samples were further processed and prepared for assays," Kannan said.

From the three Detroit areas approximately 919 households were sampled. Just over half of the 348 participants who agreed to give biomarker samples, including blood samples, blood pressure, weight, height and waist circumference were obese. Approximately 57 percent of participants had waist circumferences above sizes indicative of high ill-health risk. Two thirds of the total sample had high blood pressure or were soon to be diagnosed with it. Another 36 percent had high blood cholesterol.

"The results suggest that, after accounting for proximity to point sources of air pollution measured by fine particles, individuals with central adiposity (fat) are more sensitive to increased BP (blood pressure) in response to PM (particulate matter) exposure," Kannan said.

Kannan added that the results were somewhat consistent with their hypothesis. Her research team was surprised to find evidence for increased health risk among the non-obese study group.

Overall, Kannan and the team concluded that "PM2.5 exposure increases risk among all segments of the population, with exacerbated risk among those with central adiposity."

Kannan said that central adiposity (belly fat) was measured using waist circumference. She also explains that the team was able to distinguish which high-risk persons were suffering from pollutants and which ones were suffering from obesity.

"How do we know that the high-pollution concentration causes it instead of obesity?" Kannan asked. "We undertook an effect modification approach in data analysis and we used models that include the interactive effect of obesity and community-level air pollution exposure."

This means that the research group compared the systolic pressure, diastolic pressure, pulse pressure and arterial pressure of an obese person to models incorporating sodium intake, physical activity, medication use and air particles.

"The observed effect of fine particles on multiple indicators of blood pressure was found to be enhanced by community proximity to point sources of fine particles and this effect is observed for those with elevated body mass index and waist circumference," Kannan said.

Kannan said that Southwest Detroit contains a high density of industrial facilities including iron and steel manufacturing, coke ovens, chemical plants, refineries, sewage and sludge incineration and coal-fired utilities relative to other areas of the city. Southwest Detroit also gets heavy car and truck traffic. Previous analyses found that more than 30 percent of the fine particles of the Southwest Detroit monitoring site was due to locally emitted particles from motor vehicles. Therefore, the particulate matter in Southwest Detroit is 20 percent higher than in the other Detroit locations.

Kannan has recently published her findings in the Journal of Epidemiology and Community Health. The study has also appeared in the Atlanta Journal-Constitution and Modern Medicine.com within the past week.

Kannan and other authors of the study said that their findings suggest that obesity and a midriff bulge boost susceptibility to changes in blood pressure. These changes in blood pressure are also associated with environmental air pollution.

High blood pressure increases the risk of heart disease and stroke. The authors said that obese people are already disadvantaged and that exposure to high pollution multiplies their risks of serious ill health.

Researchers from the University of Michigan, the Detroit Department of Health and Wellness Promotion and the Detroit Hispanic Development Corporation were also involved in the study.

Kannan has been an assistant professor of nutrition at UMass School of Public Health and Health Sciences for three years.

Angela Hilsman can be reached at ahilsman@student.umass.edu

UM-Springfield partnership aims to help academic relations involved in the partnership. According to Barshefsky, in the last few years 4-H has become less about farming and more about youth development.

SPRINGFIELD from page 1

"UMass is the land-grant university, and Springfield is just down the road," Barshefsky said. "For years, there hasn't been that much reciprocity among faculty and students doing much of anything in Springfield, and a lot of the young people in Springfield have never been to Amherst, never been to UMass and they don't know that is an option for them in higher education."

Barshefsky said she is working to increase the academic pipeline between UMass and Springfield.

"There's so much expertise here that the Mayor is finally utilizing the smarts of the college to build a stronger Springfield," she said.

Barshefsky said her goal is to work with the students in Springfield to give them an opportunity.

Barshefsky is working with middle school students in an after-school program at the South End and New North Community Centers to get them interested in science, engineering and technology.

"They are all very eager learners," she said.

She added however, "They don't have these opportunities or at least don't see the opportunities and don't have the exposure to college students."

Barshefsky believes that the presence of UMass students in Springfield is important for both the Springfield students as well as the UMass students.

It is an opportunity, she said for college students to do something different as well as encouraging more local students to go to Springfield and UMass.

She also said that she hopes with the opportunities presented by the partnership, more students will choose to settle in either Amherst or Springfield following graduation.

"The one thing that we have is our size and extensive amount of resources," Mullin said.

Mullin added that when Governor Patrick was looking for means to revitalize the economy in Springfield he had looked to the partnership because of the available research and the willingness of the students to work in the community.

Mullin said, "[Patrick] saw us as an opportunity, so he decided to ask us to do it."

Mullin said that he hopes to have UMass students experience what it is like to work in a city that is in transformation.

He said that he hopes that students will be able to take away meaningful experiences by working in Springfield.

"With helping [Springfield], we help ourselves," he said.

Hannah McGoldrick can be reached at hmcgoldr@student.umass.edu

MATTHEW HARRISON/COLLEGIAN

UMass Chancellor Robert C. Holub serves as one of the three members of the "partnership team" comprised of Springfield major Dominic Sarno and UMass' Dr. John Mullin.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. 'Free speech' is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Rec Center is a knockout

Nick O'Malley

I'll admit it. I was pretty mad about the new Recreation Center being delayed a month for vague inspection reasons. But you know what? People got pissed about the new Facebook too. Look at the travesty that turned out to be.

After actually entering the building and experiencing firsthand what it offers, though, it's kind of hard to remain angry. It seems, for the first time in a while, a project has been implemented on this campus and has actually met expectations.

In short, the new Rec Center is freaking awesome.

Specifically, the Rec Center is going to be a success because it's all of the things that a lot of people in this area can't stand (flashy, expensive, a pure luxury).

The glowing reviews have been pouring across campus since the building opened last Friday. It's really an impressive facility. It's almost like it doesn't belong here. The entire time I was in the Rec Center, the fear in the back of my mind was that Boston University was going to show up and say "Oh, that's where we left this. Sorry, we're taking this back."

Out of the many projects the University of Massachusetts administration has gone through to improve the campus, this is easily the most successful. Specifically, the Rec Center is going to be a success because it's all of the things that a lot of people in this area can't stand (flashy, expensive, a pure luxury). By being that, though, the Rec Center can be what the school really needs: a landmark facility to attract students.

In a sense, UMass is a campus of good – rarely great. It's considered a good school academically. The sports teams are good. The food is above average but taken for granted. Sure, the accumulation of good thing after good thing makes this campus a great place, but UMass has always lacked a knockout punch for recruiting students. There's rarely an aspect of this school that makes a student on a tour go, "Holy crap, that thing's awesome. I'm so coming here."

If it's really the intention of the administration to bring this school up to the standards of the Boston Colleges of the world, it has to do at least one thing that it can absolutely say it does better. The Rec Center is that thing that the University can just absolutely nail. It's what can make a high school senior that wants to go somewhere else say "but UMass has that."

The new Integrated Sciences Building was cool, but what all non-science majors can really do is walk through the lobby and be jealous while they wallow in Bartlett, Hefter or Machmer. The W.E.B. Du Bois library is a nice aspect, but the elevators are terrible and gets old after five tour guides talk about it. The Mullins Center is nice, but can't consistently serve students.

While there is an argument that we needed a fitness facility (we already have Totman and Boyden), the truth of the matter remains that those places aren't good – at all.

Boyden is always crowded, loud; it's impossible to get a machine. It's hot and looks like a sketchy basement. That's great if you're doing dead lifts and trying to make the varsity squad, but the athletic program already has an awesome gym in Boyden: students can't use. Totman meanwhile, isn't a gym. Seriously, take the 30-minute walk over there and look at it. No one wants to work out in a closet with four machines. And by machines, I mean a treadmill, some weights and a bench.

While it's a drain on precious funds during a time when the school doesn't have any, the Rec Center is beneficial to the school in the long run and the campus is better for it. For some, though, it kind of sucks.

As you may have noticed by the graduate student protests, the Rec Center's not free for everyone. According to the UMass website, to sign up today, a monthly membership to the facility is over $70 for registration until next September. For an annual membership? Grad students are expected to drop $323.53. If you plan on graduating, ever, that free Rec Center that just popped up is going to be a lot less free. For alumni, an annual membership, is $517.65 to sign up today.

While that sucks for non-undergrads, the Rec Center was made to cater people from the ages of 17-23. They pay the $20,008 ($31,005 for out-of-state), and they get a free gym and all the cool shiny things.

Unfair? Not really. College facilities should be marketed in the way that brings the campus the best recruits and servicing those students. That and every school comes around looking for money anyway. You can just say a gym membership is your pledge back to the school. That is, of course, for the small fraction of alumni who live in driving distance of the campus.

The point is, in the end, that the facility is spectacular and one of the best things that the University has going for it and will be for some time.

Is it expensive and essentially unavailable for a people outside of the undergraduate population? Perhaps. But that's part of the allure. It's the school saying to potential students, "We have this wicked sweet fitness center. Only you and other undergrads get to use it if you come here."

I'd buy it.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Making due with low funds

As Massachusetts sits mired in a $600 million budget deficit for fiscal year 2009, Gov. Deval Patrick announced plans over past weeks for dramatic cuts effecting state employees, with as many as 2,000 state jobs possibly on the chopping block and plans for mandatory furloughs. While it is too early to say exactly how many jobs will be affected at the University of Massachusetts' flagship Amherst campus, local labor leaders were clearly disturbed by the governor's announcement and with good reason.

Historically there has been a pitifully low level of spending on public higher education from Beacon Hill, and, despite pledging to change this in his campaign, Patrick admitted during his forum with UMass students last week that he will have his hands tied until state revenues return to their pre-recession levels. In the meantime, UMass Amherst now faces a grim situation.

The numbers are jaw-dropping. UMass Chancellor Robert Holub stares at a $38.2 million shortfall. His administration will be looking at suggestions from the University's Budget Planning Task Force to help make the tough decisions in the best long-term interest of the school.

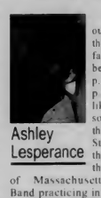
Holub has made a number of solid suggestions for how the Amherst campus can be more efficient, cost-effective and self-sufficient. But the chancellor has acknowledged that when federal stimulus monies expire in 2011, even more drastic measures could surface.

There is no doubt, at this point, that the recession will mean job losses, leaving the Amherst 250 plan to retain faculty an apparent victim of circumstance until the economic tide comes back up. The importance now lies in determining how to best balance the distribution of the University's modest resource pool.

In the context of the mid-year budget cuts, UMass Amherst Labor Coalition last week came out strongly against the demolition of the 60-year old University Apartments, which the school long ago deemed a public safety hazard. The building has sat empty for the past 15 years, and is in the process of being razed and turned into a 90-car parking lot, clearing the space for a future, modern building.

The situation offers an example of many such critical budget debates that will be occurring on campus in upcoming years. The Labor Coalition released a press release calling on the University to stop the $1.2 million project, along with other optional construction spending. Funding for the project came out of the school's capital construction budget rather than the operating budget that pays out salaries, and this particular project has been planned for probably as long as the building has sat vacant.

It would be foolish for the school to cease all capital spending on a campus that already has stacked up deferred maintenance during decade after decade of weak support from Beacon Hill. However, there is validity to the idea that the capital budget for building renovations and maintenance should be reduced in order to retain as many jobs as possible at UMass.



Clearly the global economic downturn has left both state and campus leaders struggling to make the decisions needed to balance the bottom line, while at the same time hoping to position the school to emerge from the recession with impressive, world-class faculty and facilities. Thanks to UMass' lack of dependence on its (small) endowment, it dodged the devastation sustained by most private college endowments in the past year of Wall Street turbulence.

If stabilized, UMass could improve its overall stature while most schools are still recovering. According to a recent Amherst Student article, Harvard's endowment is down 27 percent this year, and Amherst College's is down more than 20 percent.

Despite having its own unique set of problems, UMass has a good deal of upward institutional momentum at the moment, considering the new buildings opening across campus and a freshman class that is the brightest in school history. For this momentum to continue on though, it is imperative that the University does not forsake investing in what has been an increasingly precious resource: its faculty and staff.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

UMMB to finally be out of the rain

Ashley Lesperance

If you're ever outside during the week of a fall semester between 4:40 p.m. and 6:10 p.m., you are likely to hear, sometimes all the way to the Student Union, the sounds of the University of Massachusetts Marching Band practicing in the field next to the Mullins Center.

Unless of course it's raining. If it's raining, the marching band is forced to squeeze its couple hundred members into a room at the Fine Arts Center and practice music, but not marching, a rather essential part to the marching band.

All of this will change very soon though. On Oct.17, ground was broken for the $5.7 million Minuteman Marching Band Building. The energy efficient building will provide a home, after years of not having one, for the 300-plus member band since their old home, Old Chapel, was condemned in 1997.

Known as the "Power and Class of New England," the Minuteman Marching Band was awarded the Sudler Trophy for college marching band excellence in 1998 by the John Philip Sousa Foundation. It is one of only 27 bands in the country to win the award. It should be noted that it won this title while being a band that doesn't hold auditions. It is unique in that anyone can be a part of it.

Despite its prestige, the band has had some pretty rough conditions in recent years.

"First of all, students need a place to store their instruments. The people who play bigger instruments have to carry them back and forth from their rooms to practices," Michelle Droeske, a recent marching band alumna said of the band's homelessness.

"Also, on game days, we must do the same with our uniforms, shako [hat] boxes and anything else we need. The drum line and pit don't have enough space to store their equipment and instruments either.

The new location of the band building will make it easier for them to move their equipment to and from practices. With the practice area, the band will still be able to march, so it can continue progress on the show."

Our country and our school are obviously going through economic troubles. There have been major budget cuts across the state and across campus.

The rain and freezing cold is no place for a marching band – especially one of over 300 students and winner of a Sudler Trophy – to have to practice.

So why spend $4.5 million (the band raised $1.2 million on their own) of campus money on the marching band?

Last week, I was walking past the library around 5 p.m., my face stuffed into my scarf and my hands shoved deep into my pockets. As I attempted to defend myself against near-freezing temperatures and abrasive wind, I heard the marching band practicing off in the distance. The rain and freezing cold is no place for a marching band – especially one of over 300 students and winner of a Sudler Trophy – to have to practice.

According to an Oct. 17 release from the UMass Office of News and Information, this new building will provide the marching band with a warm and dry practice, storage and office facility.

It will be located adjacent to Dickinson Hall and will be attached to Grinnell Arena, which will be part of the project. The building will have a great view of campus, a large indoor practice and performance space that will hold the entire marching band, a percussion section and two smaller practice spaces. In addition to this, there will be an observational area on the second floor, room for the storage of instruments and uniforms, as well as much-needed offices and conference rooms.

This building, measured at 15,000 square feet, will be a significant benefit to the marching band, but it will also help non-band students and the campus as a whole. The building's construction will use energy reduction and sustainability strategies.

According to the release, when finished, it will be registered under the U.S. Green Building Council's Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) program.

"The building plan calls for landscaping using native plantings that don't require irrigation, use of non-heat-absorbent roofing and paving materials, tightly sealed and heavily insulated walls and roof, and high performance thermal-break aluminum windows, curtain walls and doorways," the release said.

An eco-friendly building like this helps our band, our environment and our reputation. According to a study done by the Princeton Review, two-thirds of university applicants now say that a school's environmental report card influence whether or not they would enroll. Our school continuing to bring in more students based on its green energy practices results in many advantages, such as more available scholarships and higher prestige in the post-graduate job market.

If our school commits to being green, especially during the construction of buildings, we can be proud of both our marching band and our campus. They are the highlight of every halftime show, keep us pumped up and cheering for the team even during games when the cold is too much to handle and are constantly stepping it up – did you see the revealing of their new Pirates of the Caribbean post-game show? It was incredible.

There will always be something else that money could go towards and I doubt we'll ever see a time when our school has enough money for everything it needs. Money will never stop being an issue and neither will the cold, rainy weather. We're reminded constantly to support UMass sports, but isn't it time we supported the marching band as well?

Ashley Lesperance is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at alesperance@student.umass.edu.

Amherst in a dream world with Gitmo detainee invitation

Alana Goodman

In the wake of wannabe-jihadist Tarek Mehanna's arrest in Sudbury, Mass., last week on terrorism charges, controversy has begun brewing over the Amherst Select Board's request to resettle Guantanamo Bay detainees right here in town. That's right – just when Massachusetts got rid of one violent terrorist, the town of Amherst had to go out and ask the federal government to send us some more.

According to an Oct. 21 article in the Boston Globe, the Amherst Select Board is specifically interested in welcoming detainees Ahmed Belbacha and Ravil Mingazov after they are released from the detention facility.

Department of Defense (DOD) records allege that Belbacha and Mingazov were both "defined as 'an individual who was part of or supporting the Taliban or al Qaeda forces, or associated forces that are engaged in hostilities with the United States or its coalition partners.'" While Belbacha was "cleared for release" in 2006 after three years of detention, Mingazov has remained a prisoner in good standing since 2002.

But anti-Gitmo advocates seem to believe that the detentions of Belbacha and Mingazov were just part of some big, unfortunate misunderstanding. Ruth Hooke, a member of the detainee advocacy group No More Guantanamos (NMG), insisted to the Select Board that Belbacha and Mingazov are actually harmless to society.

"One of the reasons for doing this is to change the popular view and make it clear these [detainees] are not hostile people; they haven't done anything," she said, according to the Amherst Bulletin.

Hooke and other NMG activists argued that Belbacha and Mingazov were wrongly detained at Guantanamo from the get-go and "never committed hostile acts against the U.S. military or government," reported the Amherst Bulletin on Oct. 23. According to the Amherst Bulletin, information given to Town Meeting members by the NMG "shows that Belbacha was vacationing in Pakistan when he was sold to the U.S. forces for a bounty, while Mingazov was arrested after he settled in a house for Muslim refugees in Pakistan."

This information was compiled by activist journalist Andy Worthington, and also appears on the NMG's website. According to Worthington's book, "The Guantanamo Files," the majority of his "facts" were actually gleaned from the personal accounts of detainees and their attorneys. So much for journalistic objectivity.

In reality, the widespread myth that many Gitmo detainees were just unlucky saps caught in the wrong place at the wrong time is pretty far-fetched – especially when you consider how difficult it is to qualify for detention at Guantanamo Bay.

In reality, the widespread myth that many Gitmo detainees were just unlucky saps caught in the wrong place at the wrong time is pretty far-fetched...

According to a 2005 U.S. Senate review, more than 70,000 al Qaeda and Taliban fighters were captured by U.S. troops. Out of these combatants, 99 percent didn't make the cut – an initial battlefield screening process determined that only 800 fighters were valuable enough to merit a trip to Guantanamo, reported a Feb. 13, 2004 DOD briefing.

Each of these potential detainees was then given legal representation and time to prepare a proper defense before facing a Combatant Status Review Tribunal (CSRT) hearing. The CSRT determined, by a majority vote and preponderance of evidence, whether the suspect was in fact an enemy combatant.

Each year, the detainees are also scrutinized individually by an administrative review board, which decides who is ready to be cleared for release. But "cleared for release" doesn't necessarily mean innocent. Many of these "cleared" detainees are actually unrepentant terrorists who step out of Guantanamo and walk right back onto the battlefield.

According to a June 7 article in the New York Post, the Pentagon confirmed that "at least 74 former Guantanamo detainees have resumed terrorist activities after claiming they weren't terrorists."

And even the DOD admits that their own interrogators have been duped by many of the prisoners. "[Former] detainees successfully lied to U.S. officials, sometimes for over three years. Many detainees later identified as having returned to fight against the U.S. with terrorists falsely claimed to be farmers, truck drivers, cooks, small-scale merchants or low-level combatants. Other common cover stories include going to Afghanistan to buy medicines, to teach the Qur'an, or to find a wife. Many of these stories appear so often, and are subsequently proven false that we can only conclude they are part of their terrorist training," the DOD reported in July 2007.

Prominent released terrorists who managed to fool the system include Mullah Shazada, a high-ranking Taliban leader who returned to terrorism, Abdullah Mehsud, a long-standing Taliban member who carried out a kidnapping and suicide bombing after leaving Gitmo and Muavi Abdul Ghaffar, who became one of the Taliban's regional commanders after his release.

Never mind the fact that Belbacha and Mingazov were part of the 1.14 percent of captured combatants considered dangerous enough to make it into Guantanamo, or the fact that Belbacha and Mingazov were both detained for years, even as the prison released hundreds of other prisoners. Technicalities like this don't seem to hold much sway over anti-Gitmo advocates, who are dying to see Belbacha and Mingazov relocated to Amherst.

"What I see is at the heart of this request is that people are suffering and we have a chance to alleviate that suffering," gushed Select Board member Gerry Weiss in the Amherst Bulletin.

Can anyone really be this gullible and naïve?

Only in Amherst.

Alana Goodman is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at angoodma@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Student psych-out: adventures at MHS

"So what's been bothering you?" inquires the therapist who I've just overheard in the lobby griping about having to fit another basket case into an already over-packed afternoon.

S.K. Murphy

So it goes at Mental Health Services: A place made known to me last semester after one of my friends had a crack-up of sorts and had to call upon their services to salvage both her livelihood and her status as a full-time student at the University.

After much mincing about, this friend dragged her tired soles to Hills, a dilapidated structure that sits at the mouth of Thatcher Road and houses – among other things – MHS and two classrooms where I once had discussion sections. After only two visits, they began to supply her with a steady stream of anti-depressants. For her part, she thought they went down better with gin and tonic.

And now here I am, in the hopes that I too may be cured of my hang-ups and calamities. Here I sit, with hands tucked neatly under legs that, in a tic I sometimes like to affect if I'm cold or nervous, have started to rap up and down on the floor. I'm wondering where to begin. I don't normally have a problem spewing my guts out to a total stranger. I don't have a problem doing it in general, really. I'm what you might call emotionally slutty. But here in this fine office, with its lovely view of a very fine, well-maintained lawn, I just can't conjure up the moxie.

Should I start by telling her about my innards which may one day explode? About the four-year relationship that already has? What about the stories I have bothered to neither write nor assign, or the classes I haven't attended in weeks? It makes sense that one of these items should go first, but I'm not certain which. Indecision has me in a sleeper hold.

"I'm having some problems... of a personal and – and academic nature," I say, stammering.

But she wants me to get to the core of the issues – stat – and this leaves me tongue-tied. I slip off the obnoxiously large Nicole Richie sunglasses I've been wearing this whole time, revealing a face smeared with red blotches. Her eyes widen.

Maybe it's the unblocked sunlight streaming in or her medical degree framed nearby that do me in, but for no particular reason my eyes start to cloud again with salty discharge. I sniffle and rub my balled-up fists against my eyes, apologizing quickly for being so impolite. Again she asks me what's wrong. This time I get more specific.

"I think I may need to take some time off from school. I can't seem to focus on anything at all," I say, except maybe for books about killing zombies. She says okay, so I go on.

"But I went to my academic dean today, and I found out that I can't leave now without having to leave for the whole year. So I came here."

Now I give her an overview of what has led me to this place. It's shallow, but I assume she'll get more out of me as we talk. I figure that I'll bare my heart and maybe soul. She'll tell me what to do to make it all copasetic again. All she has to do is listen.

But instead, she talks about what happens when one leaves school this late in the semester, and this becomes the focus of our conversation. She asks me what I'd do if I left now. I don't tell her that I'd want to be like David Carradine in "Kung Fu," wandering from town to town, kicking ass and spouting noble samurai tenets. I assume she'll find this impractical.

"Probably I'll watch a lot of VH1 marathons," I offer.

A silence, long and languid, falls over the room as she scribbles some indecipherable text onto a piece of paper – a casual gesture that shouldn't mean anything, but when I notice it's the back of something else (a flyer possibly) I suddenly feel affronted. She writes with the kind of haste that I might reserve for recording some snippet of pertinent information I'd been given offhand. A fast, furious jot on the first blank spot of paper I can get my hands on, but one that will likely end up crunched up at the bottom of my tote bag, only to be rediscovered several weeks later, it's pertinent information now smudged and unreadable, even to it's author.

Maybe this is why I've never liked therapy much. Forget the ease with which people decide pills are the only way to settle their problems – the real injustice comes from the fact that even in the best of settings, there's always someone jotting down your life history like it's something they'll eventually need to take an exam on. So they pluck out the facts they find relevant and discard those they figure won't turn up on it; all the while, your history turns into a series of talking points and factoids.

I decide it's better for the both of us (or maybe just me) if I stick with what she knows, so instead of airing all my woes like I intended, I just talk about the symptoms: insomnia coupled with a lack of appetite followed by too much of an appetite – for booze and hook-ups and class-skipping and all other sorts of ye ole college pitfalls.

She asks if I'm suicidal. She's the third person from MHS to do so today, and I'm starting to suspect they have a quota to fill. This time, though, I press my teeth down softly on my lower lip and consider the question seriously.

"Only with regard to my academic career," I finally reply.

She doesn't say as much, but I detect a certain sense of relief has settled over her. Academic apathy is something she's equipped to handle; life apathy is a whole other chest of drawers. With the single bead of sweat that's been coagulating on her forehead now lost and safely forgotten on the floor, she goes about setting me on a tried-and-true path toward recovery.

Firstly, I have homework. Wasn't she listening – doesn't she remember that this is one of my problems? No matter, I've got to research my city's job market. Is McDonald's a better fit for my mental health than Wendy's? These are the kinds of riddles I'll have to solve before we can move forward. She informs me that in order to withdraw for medical reasons I'll also need to prove that when I return, I'll be able to complete my studies. To my chagrin, this involves frequent counseling.

Secondly – and this is until I make up my mind about whether or not it's worth it to leave – I must try with all fury to apply myself in class and work. The zombies have got to go.

I leave the office a few minutes later, carrying business cards and a chip on my shoulder. As I make my way down Infirmary Way, I decide to give myself my own set of homework – a sort divorced from all the painstaking research and tender deliberation she has suggested.

My homework, quite simply, is to stop being a basket case.

S.K. Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@dailycollegian.com.

David King, drummer of The Bad Plus, performed impressive percussion pieces and kept time for the group's offbeat sound at last Thursday night's concert.

'The Bad Plus' trio captivates Iron Horse audience members

By Ben Silverman and Craig Holland
Collegian Correspondents

Last Thursday, the Iron Horse Music Hall was crowded, and nobody noticed as three men shuffled their way to the front of the room and ascended the stairs to the stage. The upright bass lay on its side, and a grand piano stood poised on the stage, its lid opened halfway with microphone cables streaming out in several directions from inside. The drums sat on the opposite side of the stage, the four tiny drum shells lying in the shadow of three ride cymbals.

There were no announcements, no applause, just the clatter of silverware on plates, the low, buzzing murmur of patrons talking over appetizers and waitresses taking orders. The lights dimmed as The Bad Plus arrived at its instruments. The audience quieted, turned their heads to the stage, and the show began.

Two clicks from the drumsticks, and the band launched into its first tune, a new piece by bassist Reid Anderson, "about a shy girl in high-school," entitled, "Beryl Loves to Dance." There was a burst of a fluttering, major melody, establishing the themes of the tune.

Anderson was hunched over his instrument from the beginning, striking octaves on the upper register, while Dave King, the drummer, was stooped over his set, laying down furious sixteenth notes on the hi-hats, grinning and laughing to himself as he played. Ethan Iverson was perched over his piano playing the melody, each hand shaped into a claw, banging wildly, yet remarkably controlled, on the keyboard.

